A shareholder may approach the company's registered office, up to 24 hours before the date of the general meeting and, after proving his identity to the satisfaction of the company's secretary, may withdraw his voting instrument and ownership authorisation, or cancel his vote; if so, the shareholder may vote only during the general meeting itself. The company may attach a notice of opinion of its board of directors to the form of the voting instrument.

A notice of opinion also may be received from a shareholder within the period prescribed in the Voting Instruments Regulations, in which case the company must deliver such notice of opinion to the Securities Authority and the stock exchange. The company may furnish the Authority with a notice of opinion which includes the company's board of directors' response.[120]

Trading Laws

Transactions between Public Company and Its Controlling Shareholder

In General. The issue of conflicts of interests between the controlling shareholder and the public company, within the framework of transactions of the public company with the controlling shareholder or with third parties in which the controlling shareholder has a personal interest, has been legislatively addressed within the framework of Securities Regulations and the Companies Law,[121] by means of extensive legislative arrangements and today this issue is regulated at the pre-event and pre-approval disclosure level, at the approval level, and at the post approval and post event reporting levels. In the chapter of transactions with interested parties in the Companies Law, the following requirements have been, inter alia, determined:[122]

121 Companies Law, 5759-1999.

- The obligation of disclosure of a personal interest which is imposed on a controlling shareholder as specified below;
- The obligatory mechanism of special approvals by the board of directors, by the audit committee, and sometimes also by the general meeting, with regard to certain transactions, as specified below; and
- Sanctions and remedies against the controlling shareholder and provisions regulating the validity of the transaction with him or with third parties in which he has a personal interest, in the event that such transaction has not been approved in accordance with the provisions of "the transactions with interested parties'" chapter.

The approval requirements with regard to transactions between a public company and its controlling shareholder are even more extensive, as detailed hereunder.

Disclosure of Personal Interest in a Transaction of Public Company. A controlling shareholder[123] in a public company or in a Debenture Company who is aware 122 The chapter also regulates the issue of the personal interests of directors and officers in the company.

123 The definition of a controlling shareholder changes in accordance with the legislative context. For the purposes of this Section, the appropriate definition of a controlling shareholder is the one contained in the Companies Law and it means a controlling shareholder as defined in the Securities Law, including a party who holds 25 per cent or more of the voting rights in the general meeting of the company in the event that there is no other person who holds more than 50 per cent of the voting rights in the company; for this purpose, two or more parties that hold a voting right in the company and each one of them has a personal interest in the approval of a transaction submitted for the approval of the company, will be deemed a sole holder. In accordance with the Law 'Control' is defined as follows: (i) the ability to direct the activity of the corporation, excluding the ability which arises only from the fulfillment of the function of director or some other position in the corporation, and (ii) the holdings of a person in a corporation in the event that he holds one-half or more of a certain category of means of control in the corporation. Each one of the following is deemed to be 'means of control' in a corporation: (i) the right to vote in a general meeting of the company or in a similar body of some other corporation, and (ii) the right to appoint directors or the general manager of the corporation. It should be noted that for the purpose of the definition of 'control' in accordance with the Law, it has been determined that for the purpose of securities or voting power 'holding' is either solely or together with others, whether directly or indirectly, by means of a trustee, a trust company, a registrations company, or in any other manner. Furthermore, it has been determined that in context of a holding or of purchase by a company, the holding is also deemed to be by its subsidiary or affiliate and, in the context of a holding or of purchase by an individual, the individual and the members of his family who reside with him or persons that are that he/it has a personal interest[124] in a current transaction or in a transaction which is proposed to the company, shall disclose to the company, without delay, and not later than at the meeting of the board of directors at which the transaction has been first discussed, the nature of his personal interest, including every material fact or document related thereto. This provision will not apply if provided by him with the livelihood income, shall be deemed one person for the purpose of calculation of the holdings. In addition, for the purpose of the examination of the control, the holding of securities or their purchase under collaboration between two or more parties in accordance with agreement, whether written or verbal shall be deemed to be the joint holding of securities. Furthermore, without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing, the following will be deemed to be the holders of securities or the joint acquirers of such securities: a corporation which holds or which acquires securities together with the holder of an interest in such corporation, or with one of its affiliated companies, and a person who is engaged in the holding of securities or trading in them on behalf of another party, together with his client or with a member of his family who does not reside with him, and in case one does not provide the livelihood of the other, for whom he holds and administers the securities in accordance with a power of attorney which grants discretion in use of the voting right.

124 'Personal interest' is defined in the Companies Law as a personal interest of a person in an activity or in a transaction of the company, including a personal interest of his relative and of other corporation in which either he or his relative are principal shareholders, excluding personal interest which derives from the fact of the holding of shares in the company, and including personal interest of a person voting under proxy granted to him by a third party who does not have a personal interest therein or voting by a person granted a proxy by a third party who has a personal interest therein, regardless of whether such voting is made upon the proxy's discretion.

In several cases which have recently been brought before the Israeli courts, certain public companies claimed that "personal interest" also includes a "negative personal interest"; that is to say that a denial by a minority shareholder, arising out of his personal interests, to approve certain transactions, alleged to be in the company's best interest, should be classified as a personal interest. Accordingly, if a certain shareholder opposes certain transactions between the company and its controlling shareholder, the company has full discretion to classify such shareholder as having a negative personal interest in such approval, and consequently, disqualify his votes (i.e. disqualify as a non-affiliated vote and count only as an affiliated vote). The Authority is of the opinion that the vote of a shareholder opposing the transaction should be disqualified, only in case he is misusing his voting power and votes on the basis of unlawful considerations, in violation of the obligations of good faith and fairness imposed on him as a shareholder; the company is not entitled to disqualify the vote of an opposing shareholder, even if the company believes that such shareholder voted on the basis of unlawful considerations; the determination whether a certain shareholder has a negative personal interest, should be made by a competent court only, which may, inter alia, invalidate the vote of an opposing minority shareholder; the company or its controlling shareholder are to apply to the court for the said remedy of disqualification.

the personal interest arises only from the existence of a personal interest of a relative[125] in a transaction which is not exceptional (as is defined below).

An interested party (a principal shareholder), or whomever will become a controlling shareholder as a result of a private placement, who is aware that he has a personal interest in the substantial private placement, shall disclose the essence of his personal interest to the public company without delay, including any material fact or document related thereto.

The controlling shareholder in a public company, who has not disclosed his personal interest, as mentioned, will be deemed to have breached his duty of fairness towards the company. Breach of the duty of fairness is deemed to constitute a breach of the fiduciary duty of an officer in the company, mutatis mutandis, and, accordingly, the laws which apply to the breach of contract will apply, mutatis mutandis, to the breach of the duty of fairness.

Transactions That Require Special Approval. In addition to the obligation of disclosure, certain transactions of the controlling shareholder with the company require specific approvals (hereinafter: "the transactions which require special approvals") as specified below:

- An exceptional transaction[126] of a public company[127] or a Debenture Company with its controlling shareholder;
- An exceptional transaction of a public company or a Debenture Company with any other person in which the controlling shareholder has a personal interest, including a private offer in which the controlling shareholder has a personal interest; and
- Engagement of a public company or a Debenture Company with its controlling shareholder, or his relative, directly or indirectly, including through a company controlled by him, concerning services received by the company and, in the event that he is also an officer in such company, with regard to the terms of his holding of office and his employment and, in the event that he is an employee of the company and not an officer in such company, with regard to his employment in the company.

The transactions which are mentioned above require approval as specified below, in the following very specific order, whereby approval of the board of directors and approval of the general meeting are subject to obtaining the 125 Spouse, brother or sister, parent, grandparents, descendant and also spouse's descendant, brother, sister or parent or the spouse of any one of such persons.

126 'Transaction' — a contact or engagement and also a unilateral decision of the company with regard to the granting of a right or some other benefit — the Companies Law, s 1.

approval which precedes each of them, and provided that these transactions do not adversely affect the benefit of the company:[128]

- Approval of the audit committee;[129]
- Approval of the board of directors; and
- Approval of the general meeting of shareholders, by which, either (i) the resolution is approved by at least a majority of the votes of the shareholders who are not holders of a personal interest in the approval of the transaction participating in the vote provided that the abstaining votes will not be taken into account; or (ii) the total of the votes of the objecting shareholders among those that are not holders of a personal interest in the approval of the transaction does not exceed two per cent of the voting rights in the company. The Minister of Justice is entitled to determine rates which are different than the rate which is mentioned. In case that the term of a transaction which requires special approval is above three years, the transaction will require such approval every three years.

Notwithstanding the above, an exceptional transaction of a public company with its controlling shareholder and an exceptional transaction of a public company with any other person in which the controlling shareholder has a personal interest, including a private offer in which the controlling shareholder has a personal interest, may be approved for a period longer than three years provided that the audit committee has confirmed that the term of such transaction is reasonable in the specific circumstances. In addition, approval of the audit committee and the board of directors are required in the event of certain extraordinary and other transactions between a Debenture Company and its controlling shareholder. Additionally, in each of the forgoing both the audit committee and the board of directors are required to determine whether the transaction includes a distribution, and if so, such transaction shall be approved, 128 Regarding such transactions that require special approvals, the approval of the audit committee and the board of directors, obtained in this order only, are sufficient in Debenture Companies.

129 The audit committee in a public company will not be entitled to approve interested parties' transactions, unless such committee includes at least three members, all incumbent external directors are members therein and the majority of its members are independent directors. The following officers are precluded from serving as members of the audit committee: (i) the company's controlling shareholder or its relative, (ii) the chairman of the board of directors, (iii) any director who is employed by the company or by its controlling shareholder or by a corporation controlled by such controlling shareholder, (iv) a director who provides services on a regular basis to the company, its controlling shareholder or a corporation controlled by such controlling shareholder, and (v) a director whose source of livelihood depends on the controlling shareholder. The chairmen of the audit committee shall be an external director which holds this position less than nine (9) years.

only after both of these bodies have approved that the provisions of any relevant laws regarding distributions have been fulfilled. With respect to a Debenture Company, if the audit committee and the board of directors have determined that the transaction does not include a distribution, both of them shall examine whether there is a reasonable concern that the transaction would prevent the company from meeting its existing and foreseeable obligations as they mature; the transaction cannot be approved in the event that either the audit committee or board of directors have stated that such reasonable concern exists.

A shareholder who participates in a vote at the general meeting as mentioned is obliged to give notice to the company prior to the vote at the meeting or, in the event that the vote is by means of a voting instrument, through the voting instrument, whether he has or does not have a personal interest in the approval of the transaction. In the event that the shareholder has not given such notice, his vote will not be taken into account.

Sanctions in Respect of Absence of Approval

Transaction Lacking in Validity. A transaction of a public company and a Debenture Company with its controlling shareholder requiring special approvals will not be valid towards the company and towards the controlling shareholder, in the event that:

- The transaction has not been approved in accordance with the provisions of the transactions with the interested parties chapter;
- A material defect has occurred in the approval process; or
- The transaction was performed in material deviation from the approval.

Furthermore, such transaction will not be valid towards a third party in the event that such third party was aware of the personal interest of the controlling shareholder in the approval of the transaction and was aware or should have been aware of the absence of approval of the transaction as required in accordance with the provisions of the transactions with interested parties chapter.

Revocation of Transaction. A company is entitled to revoke a transaction with any other person, which requires an approval as mentioned above, and it is also entitled to claim compensation from him in respect of the damage caused to it, also without revocation of the transaction, in the event that such person was aware of the personal interest of the controlling shareholder in the public company or in the Debenture Company in the approval of the transaction, and was aware or should have been aware of the absence of approval of the transaction as required in accordance with the provisions of the transactions with interested parties chapter.

Conflicts of Interests between Public Company and Its Controlling Shareholder. Within the framework of the regulations of the relief in transactions with interested parties,[130] a string of relief options, including relief in relation to exceptional transactions between a company and its controlling shareholder, have been added.

In accordance with these relief options, an exceptional transaction of a public company will not require the approval of the general meeting as mentioned above in the event that one of the following is fulfilled, and provided that the audit committee and the board of directors of the party, which is a public company, have approved such fulfilment:

- The transaction does not affect the company in any form other than benefiting the company, or the change has no effect other than to benefit the company;
- It protracts an existing transaction, provided that such transaction existing between such parties has been approved as mentioned above,[131] and provided that no material change has occurred in the terms of the additional transaction and in the remainder of the circumstances which are required for the matter vis-à-vis the existing transaction;
- It is a transaction of the public company with its controlling shareholder or with another person in whom the controlling shareholder has a personal interest, provided that it complies with the terms determined within the framework transaction which has been approved by the audit committee, the board of directors, and the general meeting as mentioned above,[132] permitting the company to enter, during its ordinary course of business, into transactions of the category determined in it, and determining in advance the period and the remainder of the terms for transactions as mentioned;
- It is a transaction of the public company with its controlling shareholder or with any other person, in whom the controlling shareholder has a personal interest, for the purpose of their transaction with any other party or for the purpose of the submission of a joint offer for engagement with any other party, and the terms of such transaction with regard to the public company are not materially different from the terms with regard to the controlling shareholder or a corporation under its control, taking into account their proportional share in the transaction;

131 Or in the event that it has been approved in the past in accordance with the Securities Regulations (Restrictions in the Matter of Conflict of Interests between a Listed company and the Controlling Shareholder), 5754-1994.

132 Or in the event that it has been approved in accordance with the Securities Regulations (Restrictions with Regard to Conflict of Interests between a Listed Company and the Controlling Shareholder), 5754-1994, or in accordance with a framework resolution which the audit committee, the board of directors and the general meeting of the company passed before May 23 1998.

- It is a transaction between companies which are under the control of the same controlling shareholder, inter se, or between a public company and its controlling shareholder or between a public company and any other person in whom the controlling shareholder has a personal interest, and the engagement is under market conditions and during the ordinary course of business and it does not adversely affect company's best interests; and
- When the transaction has been approved by the audit committee and by the board of directors, the rate of voting rights held by the company's shareholders who have no personal interest in the transaction, did not exceed one percent of company's total voting rights.

Furthermore, the entry into an engagement of a public company with its controlling shareholder who is also an officer in such company, or with a relative of the controlling shareholder who is also an officer in such company, with regard to the terms of his office and his employment, and in the event that he is an employee of the company and he does not hold an office in such company, with regard to the terms of his employment in the company as mentioned above, will not require the approval of the general meeting as mentioned above, in the event that one of the following are fulfilled, and provided that the audit committee and the board of directors have approved that:

- The transaction does affect the company other than benefiting it;
- The cost to the company does not exceed NIS 20,000; a relief in accordance with this section may be given to the controlling shareholder in the company only once every two years, either by a onetime payment or by installments, and provided that the rest of the terms of the office and the employment of the controlling shareholder were not approved according to the relief with regard to the monthly remuneration, as stated below, and the cumulative cost to the company during the course of two years does not exceed that which is stated;[133]
- The remuneration which is paid to the controlling shareholder or his relative, in their capacity as director of the corporation, does not exceed the lowest remuneration paid to another director in the company, and does not exceed the maximal annual remuneration and the maximal participation remuneration which is paid in accordance with the Regulations of remuneration of external directors;[134]

133 The amount determined under this relief changes annually, on 1st of January every year, in accordance with the rate of the change of the new index (the index which was last published prior to the day of the change) vis-à-vis the basic index (May 2000).

134 The Companies Regulations (Rules with Regard to Remuneration and Expenses for External Director), 5760-2000. The amounts of the annual remuneration and the partition remuneration contained in the charts in the second and the third supplement

- The monthly remuneration paid to the controlling shareholder or his relative does not exceed the average monthly remuneration in Israel, and it is reasonable considering the scope of employment, the nature of the office, and the skills of the controlling shareholder or his relative, to perform his office; provided no more than two persons can serve or be employed by the company at the same time under this provision; and
- The engagement is with regard to the terms of the insurance of the controlling shareholder or his relative, who is an office holder in the company, provided that the terms of the engagement are less favorable than or equal to the terms of the engagement of the rest of the office holders in the company, and are at market conditions and shall not adversely affect the company's revenues, assets or obligations.

Notwithstanding the aforesaid, the aforementioned possibilities of relief will not apply to a public company in the event that one or more of its shareholders, holding at least one per cent of the issued share capital or of the voting rights in the company, has given notice of his objection to the granting of the relief as mentioned, and provided that the objection has been submitted to the company in writing not later than 14 days from the day (i) on which the public company has submitted a report in accordance with the Law on the adoption of the resolution or from the day on which it has submitted an amending report to said report, or (ii) in case of a company which is not a reporting corporation as defined in the Law, from the day on which the company has reported to its shareholders of the resolution with regard to said transaction. In the event such objection has been submitted as mentioned, then the transaction will be subject to the approval of the general meeting.

Transactions between Public Company and Officer in Such Company. This matter is extensively referred in the chapter of transactions with interested parties, and part of the arrangements which apply to the controlling shareholder also applies, mutatis mutandis, to an officer in the company.

Disclosure of a Personal Interest of an Officer in a Transaction of a Public Company. An officer in a public company who is aware that he has a personal interest, as defined above, in a current transaction or in a transaction which is proposed by or to the company, will disclose to the company, without delay, and not later than at the meeting of the board of directors at which the transaction is first discussed, the nature of his personal interest, including every material fact or document.

This provision does not apply if the personal interest has arisen only from the existence of a personal interest of a relative, as defined above, in a transaction which is not exceptional.

to the said regulations are determined in accordance with the grading of the company in accordance with its equity capital.

An officer in a public company who has not disclosed his personal interest as mentioned will be deemed to have breached his fiduciary duty towards the company, and the laws which apply to breach of contract will apply, mutatis mutandis.

Transactions of Officer That Require Special Approvals. In addition to the obligation of disclosure as is mentioned, certain transactions of an officer with the company require special approvals as specified below:

- A transaction of the company with its officer; and
- A transaction of the company with any person, in which an officer of the company has a personal interest.

In the event that these transactions are not exceptional transactions, they require the approval of the board of directors. In the event that these transactions do constitute exceptional transactions, they require the approval of the audit committee of the company,[135] followed by the approval of the board of directors. Nevertheless, a person that is an officer both in a parent company and in its wholly owned and controlled subsidiary shall not be deemed to be the holder of a personal interest in a transaction which is carried out between the parent company and the subsidiary, only due to his serving as an officer in both of them or due to the fact that he holds shares or securities convertible into shares in the parent company. Furthermore, an officer in several subsidiaries wholly owned and controlled by the same person shall not be deemed to be the holder of a personal interest in a transaction which is carried out between such subsidiaries, only due to his service as an officer in the contracting companies. The following engagements of a company with its officer who is not a director, with regard to his employment and terms of service, including, inter alia, granting of an exemption, insurance, undertaking to indemnify or indemnification under an indemnity agreement, require special approvals, as follows:

- Officers' terms of employment and service;
- The grant of an exemption from breach of duty of care towards the company;
- The grant of liability insurance to an officer due to the liability imposed (i) in respect of a breach of the duty of care of an officer towards the company or towards any other person, (ii) in respect of a breach of the fiduciary duty towards the company and provided that the officer acted in good faith and had a basis to presume that the activity would not adversely affect the welfare of the company, and (iii) in respect of a financial liability imposed on the officer for the benefit of any other person; and 135 Under the Companies Law a public company is required to appoint an audit committee. If a private company, which is not a Debentures Company, does not have an audit committee, the transaction requires the approval only of the board of directors, provided that the office holder is not a director and, in case the office holder is a director, the approval of the general meeting is required as well.

- The grant of an undertaking for indemnity or indemnity in accordance with an indemnity agreement (i) in respect of a financial liability which has been imposed on the officer for the benefit of any other person in accordance with a judgement, including a judgement which has been given in a compromise settlement or in an arbitration judgement which has been approved by the court, (ii) in respect of reasonable litigation expenses, including lawyers' professional fees, which have been incurred by the officer or for which he has been found liable by the court, (iii) in respect of reasonable litigation expenses, including legal fees, expended by an office holder due to an investigation or a proceeding, conducted against him by a competent authority, and which was terminated without criminal charges filed against him (as defined in the Companies Law) and without a financial liability imposed on him as an alternative to criminal proceedings (as defined in the Companies Law), or which terminated without criminal charges filed against him but with a financial liability imposed on him as an alternative to criminal proceedings in an offence which does not require willful intent or in connection with financial sanction, as defined in the Law, (iv) in proceedings which were submitted against him by the company or in its name or by any other person, or in a criminal prosecution in which he had been acquitted, or in criminal proceedings in which he was convicted of an offence which does not require proof of criminal intent.

In a public company, such events require the approval of the audit committee, followed by the approval of the board of directors regarding the engagement of a company with its officer who is not a director with regard to the terms of his holding office, including the granting of exemption, insurance, undertaking for indemnity, or indemnity in accordance with an indemnity agreement as mentioned above. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this type of events may be approved by a special directors' committee for remuneration issues instead of the approval of the audit committee, provided that any and all provisions applicable to the audit committee under the Companies Law, shall apply to such special committee. Furthermore, in case the said transaction is actually a change of an existing transaction, such change requires only the approval of the audit committee stating that the said change in the transaction terms, is immaterial compared to the existing transaction.

An engagement of a company with a director with regard to his employment and service terms, including, inter alia, grant of exemption, insurance, undertaking to indemnify or indemnification under an indemnity agreement, and also with regard to the terms of his employment in other positions, require the approval of the audit committee, followed by the approval of the board of directors in private companies, and in a public company as well as in Debenture Companies, followed by the approval of the board of directors and then the approval of the general meeting, with the exception of certain circumstances further detailed in

The Regulations of Relief in Transactions with Interested Parties.[136] In the event that several issues of personal interest, requiring special approvals as detailed hereinabove, exist in a transaction (both with regard to the controlling shareholder and with regard to an officer), the events require accumulative approvals in accordance with the provisions which apply to each one of such issues of personal interest.

Abstention by Parties Having Personal Interest. A person who has a personal interest in the approval of a transaction (with the exception of a transaction of a company with its officer which is not exceptional or a transaction of a company with any other person, in which an officer in the company has a personal interest and which is not exceptional) which is submitted for the approval of the audit committee or of the board of directors will not be present at the discussion and will not participate in the vote in the audit committee and in the board of directors. However an officer having a personal interest is allowed to be present for the purpose of presenting the transaction, only if the chairman of the audit committee or the chairman of the board of directors, as the case may be, has determined that he is essential for such presentation.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, a director is entitled to be present at a discussion in the audit committee and to participate in the vote, in the event that the majority of the members of the audit committee have a personal interest in the approval of the transaction. A director is also entitled to be present at a discussion in the board of directors and to participate in the vote, in the event that a majority of the directors of the company have a personal interest in the approval of the transaction. In the event the majority of the directors in the board of directors of the company have personal interest in the transaction, such transaction also requires the approval of the general meeting.

Sanctions in Respect of Non-Approval of Transactions with an Officer. The sanctions which are mentioned above in relation to non-approval or improper approval of exceptional transactions with a controlling shareholder (a transaction which is invalid, and cancellation of transactions) will apply, mutatis mutandis, also to transactions of the company with its officers, which has not been approved as specified above.

Relief in Engaging Public Company with a Director with Regard to His Terms of Office. The Regulations of Relief in Transactions with Interested Parties[137] determine that the engagement of a public company with a director in respect of the terms of his office, including the grant of exemption, insurance, undertaking to indemnify, or indemnity, in accordance with an indemnity agreement as mentioned above, and also engagement of the company with a director in respect of the terms of his employment in other positions, will not require the approval of the general meeting as mentioned, in the event that one of the following is fulfilled, provided that the audit committee and the board of directors have approved such fulfillment: (i) the transaction does not affect the company other than benefiting the company; or (ii) the remuneration which is paid to the director does not exceed the maximal annual remuneration and the maximal participation remuneration paid in accordance with the Regulations of Remuneration of External Directors.[138]

Notwithstanding the above, the last relief with regard to the terms of the holding of office and the employment of a director in a company will not apply to a public company in the event that one or more of its shareholders, who holds at least one per cent of the issued share capital or of the voting rights in the company, has given notice of his objection to the grant of the relief as mentioned, provided that the objection has been submitted to the company in writing not later than 14 days (i) from the day on which the public company has submitted a report in accordance with the Law on the adoption of the resolution or from the day on which it has submitted an amending report to said report, or (ii) in case of a company, which is not a reporting corporation as defined by the Law, from the day on which the company has reported to its shareholders of the resolution with regard to said transaction. In the event that objection has been submitted as mentioned, then the transaction is subject to the approval of the general meeting of such company's shareholders.

Report on Transaction between Reporting Corporation and Its Controlling Shareholder

The Regulations of Transactions Between a Company and its Controlling Shareholder[139] address the requirements, actions, and reporting aspects applicable to a transaction between a reporting corporation and its controlling shareholder, including in respect of grant of a loan to the controlling shareholder[140] or from the controlling shareholder to a company or amending the terms thereof, payment of remuneration to the controlling shareholder, participation in the expenses of the controlling shareholder, and payment to the controlling shareholder in respect of his services, including management services. In addition, various details should be reported with regard to the following: an outline, clarifications of the annual financial statements, and clarifications for the interim period, as specified above

Corporate Governance

In General

In December 2006, the Securities Authority announced the approval of the final version of the Goshen Report addressing the proper structure and content of an Israeli corporate governance code which recommends the assimilation of a corporate governance regime, intended to constitute an additional layer of requirements above and beyond those applicable under the existing laws. The application and adoption of such regime by companies is not mandatory, but if not adopted by a public company, would require it to disclose its resolution not to adopt such regime.

In September 2008, the 8th Amendment to the Companies Law came into effect and became binding. The 8th Amendment introduced various arrangements designed to strengthen the independence of the board of directors of public companies, primarily relating to the creation of the independent directors concept as a part of the board of directors and the visibility of the company director qualifications.

This trend continued in later legislative amendments, and major parts of recommendations included in the Goshen Report and related to corporate governance regime was implemented in the 16th amendment to the Companies Law, which came into effect in September 2011 (the "Amendment"). The Amendment augments the following issues:

Independence of Board of Directors — Appointment of External Directors and Their Relationship with Company

The Amendment reinforces the power of non-controlling shareholders in public company as well as of shareholders that do not have a personal interest in the approval of certain corporate resolutions, by raising the percentage of votes of such holders required for approval thereof. Pursuant to the Amendment, an external director will be appointed by the general meeting, if his appointment is approved by (i) a majority of the shares voted at the meeting that are held by non-controlling shareholders or their representatives and shareholders who do not have a personal interest in such election (the "Non Interested Shareholders"),[141] or (ii) the total number of shares held by the Non Interested Shareholders that voted against the election of the external director does not exceed 2% of the aggregate voting rights in the company, even if the majority of shares held by the Non Interested Shareholders was not obtained.[142]

A person may not be appointed as an external director (i) if he is a relative of the controlling shareholder; (ii) if on the date of his appointment or during the two years that preceded the date thereof he, his relative, partner, employer or a corporate entity controlled by him had an affiliation with the company, company's controlling shareholder, controlling shareholder's relative, or a corporate entity, controlled by the company or its controlling shareholder at the date of, or during two years prior to, the appointment; and (iii) in case the company does not have a controlling shareholder or a holder of a controlling block of shares (25 per cent or more of the voting power), if he has, as of the date of such person's appointment, any affiliation with the then chairman of the board of directors, the chief executive officer, a principal shareholder (5 per cent or more of the issued share capital or voting power), or the most senior financial officer in the company.

The definition of the term "affiliation" has been extended in a manner that it includes business or professional relationship with the company or its controlling shareholders, even if such relationship is not maintained on a regular basis (but excluding insignificant relationship).

An external director may be elected for three consecutive terms of three years. However, while the initial term of director's office requires a majority vote as specified above and, effectively, the vote of the controlling shareholder, the extension of the external director's office for the two subsequent terms may be approved even if the controlling shareholder opposes the appointment, under either of the following: (i) (a) the external director is nominated by one or more shareholders holding at least one per cent of the company's voting power; (b) such extension is approved at the general meeting by a majority of shares present and voting, which are held by Non Interested Shareholders, provided that such shares represent at least 2 per cent of the total voting power in the company; or (ii) (y) the external director is nominated by the board of directors; (z) such extension is approved by the same majority as required for the election for the initial term of service, as specified hereinabove.[143] Companies are entitled to determine in their articles of association that their external directors will be appointed for two terms of office only (i.e., that the aggregate term of office may not exceed six years). To the extent such provision is adopted by a company, it will apply only to external directors who are appointed following such adoption.[144]

The Amendment broadens the prohibition on a company to employ an external director or engage his services (as well as his relatives). The company, its controlling shareholder or a corporation under controlling shareholder's control shall not grant any benefit, directly or indirectly, to a person who served as an external director of the company (and his spouse or children), including by way of his or their appointment as officer of the company, of a corporation under controlling shareholder's control, his employment or obtaining of his services, including the services of a corporation under his control, during a period of two years following the termination of his office.[145] The aforesaid limitation applies to an external director's relative, who is not a spouse or child, for a period of one year. Accordingly, the Amendment prevents external directors from favoring the controlling shareholders, arising out of their expectation to receive certain benefits in the future services.

Chief Executive Officer as Chairman of Board

The Amendment purports to reinforce the separation between the position of a company's chief executive officer and that of chairman of the board of directors in public and debenture companies. The appointment of a chief executive officer and a chairman of the board who are relatives shall require a special majority of votes at the shareholders' meeting,[146] as follows: (i) the majority shall include at least two thirds of the votes of the non-interested Shareholders who are present at the vote; abstained votes shall not be taken into account, or (ii) the total number of the opposing non-interested Shareholders does not exceed 2 percent of the total voting rights in the company.[147]

In addition, the authorities of the chief executive officer shall not be vested with the chairman or his relative (unless the approval of a special majority as specified above has been obtained) and the authorities vested with those subordinated to the chief executive officer may not be vested with the chairman of the board of directors. The chairman of a public or a debentures company shall not serve in any other position in the company or in a company controlled thereby, excluding his office as a director or chairman of the board of a controlled company.

Director's Discretion

The Amendment states that a person may not perform any function of a director if he was not duly appointed and that a director (i) shall exercise his voting rights in the board of directors based on his sole discretion only and (ii) shall not be a party to any voting agreement. Any voting agreement or non-exercising of his discretion shall be deemed a breach of the director's fiduciary duty.[148] The person affecting director's discretion in violation of the said provision shall be subject to the duties and liabilities that apply to directors (the duty of care and fiduciary duty).

Independence of Audit Committee

The board of directors of a public or debenture company shall appoint an audit committee, composed of the members of the board.

Audit Committee — Composition

Prior to the Amendment, the Companies Law determined that the audit committee should consist of at least three directors, including all of the company's external directors. The Amendment augmented the independence of the audit committee by adding requirements that (i) the majority of the members of the audit committee shall be unaffiliated directors,[149] (ii) the quorum for its meetings is to include a majority of independent directors[150] and (iii) the chairman thereof shall be an external director.[151]

Furthermore, the chairman of the board and any director employed by a company or by the company's controlling shareholder, directly or indirectly, or providing services to any of them on a regular basis, shall not serve as a member of the audit committee. Another provision intended to augment the independence of the audit committee is that any person who is not qualified to serve as a member of the audit committee shall not be present at its meetings and at the time resolutions are adopted thereby, unless the chairman of the audit committee determined that such person's participation is required in order to present to the committee a particular matter.

Audit Committee — Roles

The authorities and roles of the audit committee were significantly broadened in the Amendment. The audit committee is expected, inter alia, to identify irregularities in the management of the company's business and propose solutions for improvement thereof. In the event such material irregularity has been identified, the audit committee is required to convene to discuss same in the presence of the company's internal auditor or the independent auditors of the 149 Unaffiliated director means an external director or an individual serving as a director who meets all of the following: (i) he fulfills the requirements with regard to an external director set forth in Sections 240 (b) – (f) of the Companies Law and the same was approved by the audit committee, and (ii) he does not serve as a director in the company for more than 9 consecutive years (for this purpose a cessation of office for less than 2 years shall not be deemed as cutting off the continuance of the office).

A company's extraordinary transactions and material actions that involve conflicts of interests, or interested parties' transactions in accordance with Sections 255-268 and 275 of the Companies Law, are subject to the approval of the audit committee, as specified hereinabove.

The audit committee is also authorized to define whether a transaction is an extraordinary transactions and whether a transaction with company's officer is a material one, provided it specifies the reasons for its classification of a transaction as extraordinary or material, or as a non-extraordinary or non-material. The audit committee supervises the mechanism of the company's internal audit, and advises the board of directors with regard to the company's independent auditor and its compensation.

Procedures in Board Meetings

Boards of directors of public and debenture companies shall convene at least quarterly. The Amendment determined certain provisions regarding the procedures for convening board meetings. For example, a public and/or debenture company shall not impose any conditions or restrictions in its articles of association on the requirement to (i) provide the directors with reasonable prior notice on convening a meeting and (ii) provide in such prior notice reasonable details with regard to the issues on the agenda. Board committees shall submit their resolutions or recommendations, as well as the reasons therefore, requiring board approval at least a reasonable time prior to the contemplated board meeting.

Financial Statements Review Committee

The financial statements review committee is a board of director's committee established in accordance with Section 171(e) of the Companies Law and the regulations promulgated thereunder. In accordance with these provisions, financial statements of a reporting corporation (excluding a corporation which securities are listed for trade on a foreign stock exchange) shall be approved by a company's board of directors following: (i) the financial statements review committee has reviewed the estimates included in such financial statements, the internal controls related to financial reporting, and adequacy and completeness of the disclosures in the statements; (ii) the corporation's auditor was invited to all the meetings of the financial statements review committee; (iii) the committee delivered the board its recommendations regarding the approval of the financial statements within a reasonable time prior to the board's meeting and has specified deficiencies encountered therein, if any; and (iv) the board discussed the recommendations of the financial statements review committee.

The financial statements review committee should include at least three directors, provided that a director who is prohibited from serving as a member of the audit committee may not serve in the financial statements review committee.

Only an external director may serve as a chairman of the financial statements review committee, and the majority of its members shall be unaffiliated directors. The audit committee of a company can also serve as its financial statements review committee.

Monetary Sanctions

The Amendment empowers the Authority to impose monetary sanctions on a person that violates the provisions of the Companies Law with regard to a reporting corporation, inter alia, in the following cases:

- No minimum number of directors having accounting and financial expertise has been determined by a company;
- No chairman has been appointed to the board of directors for over 60 days;
- No audit committee has been established for over 90 days;
- No chief executive officer has been in office for over 90 days;
- No internal auditor has been in office for over 90 days;
- A director or an officer who has been disqualified from serving in such office by a committee for administrative enforcement, has been appointed by a company(no sanction shall be imposed if the director or the officer has not notified the company of such disqualification);
- Less than two external directors have been in office for over 90 days;
- No external director having an accounting and financial expertise has been in office for over 90 days; and
- No external director has been appointed to a committee that had been delegated any of the powers of the board of directors.

A monetary sanction may not be imposed in case an external director was not appointed due to the fact that the majority prescribed by the Companies Law was not obtained in the general meeting.

Proper Corporate Governance Code

The Companies Law recommends that companies (private or public, including debenture companies) adopt certain rules of proper corporate governance listed in Exhibit A to the Companies Law (a kind of voluntary ethical code) and further recommends to include them in the companies' articles of association.

The said list of recommended rules includes, inter alia, provisions with regard to appointment of unaffiliated directors and their percentage on the board of directors, diversity in the composition of the board of directors, limitations prohibiting service of a company's officers as directors, professional programs intended to improve qualification of new appointees to the board of directors and appointment of external directors. As aforementioned, although the adoption of such corporate governance provisions is voluntary, the Authority published its intention to impose an explicit requirement to adopt these provisions or, alternatively, to report the company's resolution not to do same within the framework of the Reporting Improvement Project.[152]

Debt Arrangements

Debt Payment to Controlling Shareholder of Reporting Corporation in Difficulty

Recent Law amendments determine that a controlling shareholder of a reporting corporation in difficulties, who holds debentures issued by the corporation under his control, shall not receive the amounts owed to him by the corporation unless the corporation has repaid in full all and any amount due and payable to other debenture holders, including interest and linkage accrued thereon.[153]

For the purposes of this provision "reporting corporation in difficulties" means a reporting corporation which has announced that it is unable to pay its obligations pursuant to debentures, a reporting corporation that has not paid its obligations pursuant to debentures or a reporting corporation undergoing liquidation proceedings or asset receivership; "holding of debentures" excludes holding (i) by means of a company whose shares are held by the reporting corporation in difficulties that has issued debentures, provided that the other shareholders in such company are not controlled by a controlling shareholder of the reporting corporation in difficulties; (ii) by means of certain classes of sophisticated investors; (iii) in trust for another party, provided that the other party is not a controlling shareholder of the reporting corporation in difficulties.

The aforementioned deferral provision shall not apply if: (i) a settlement or arrangement approved by a special resolution of the holders of the debentures of the same series provides otherwise, or a settlement or arrangement approved pursuant to Section 350 of the Companies Law provides otherwise; the votes of the controlling shareholder holding the debentures shall not be counted at such a meeting; (ii) the controlling shareholder has held the debentures since they were issued for the first time.

18th Amendment to Companies Law — Appointment of Supervisor

An additional 2012 amendment to the Companies Law was recently enacted by the Knesset, intending to protect the public interests in debt arrangements of debenture companies with their debenture holders. This amendment determines that immediately upon commencing negotiations for any debt arrangement implementing a material change in terms of repayment of any company's debentures series, including reducing repayable amounts, postponement of the repayment and repayment by means of issuance of other securities to the debenture holders, the debentures' trustee, or in case the same has not been appointed, the debenture company, shall submit an application to the competent court for appointment of a supervisor for such future arrangement. The trustee or the company, as the case may be, may postpone the said application in the event (i) the disclosure thereof shall adversely affect the negotiations, and (ii) the disclosure is not mandatory in accordance with the applicable law. The supervisor shall assist the parties to finalize an arrangement and shall provide the court with an opinion with regard to the agreed arrangement and alternatives thereto, addressing certain requirements and parameters specified in the amendment. The court shall not order the convening of general meetings of any series of debenture holders, prior to receipt of such supervisor's opinion. The amendment enables the court to examine and supervise the arrangement "on-line", and not ex post facto, and focuses upon the interests of the holders of specific debenture series.

Ownership Concentration

A new law, The Ownership Concentration Act, is undergoing legislative procedures and approvals. This act is intended to facilitate the eradication of business pyramids from the Israeli market place within six years. It prohibits a simultaneous control of a bank or other financial institution and a large non-financial company.

The privatization of government companies or state assets shall continue to be effected taking into account preventing concentration and increasing competitiveness. Rules for improving corporate governance to prevent conflicts of interest will also be enacted. It should be noted that the concentration related regulation is in its initial stage of implementation. Accordingly, it is reasonable to expect an extensive and effective regulation of this field in the seeable future.

Administrative Enforcement

In January 2011, the Law has been significantly amended by adoption of the Efficiency of Enforcement Procedures in the Securities Authority Law (legislation amendments), 5771-2011. The purpose of the amendment is to increase the efficiency of enforcement by the Authority of the laws regulating the Israeli capital market. These enforcement provisions apply to the Securities Law, as well as to the Law of Regulating Engagement in Investment Advice, Investment Marketing and Investments Portfolio Management and the Joint Trusts Investments Law. The effect of the amendment on the aforementioned laws is almost similar; the review hereinbelow focuses specifically on the effect on the Law. The major impacts of the amendment are (i) expanding the range of cases in which the Authority can impose administrative sanctions; (ii) the range of new administrative sanctions; (iii) shortening the time between a breach of the Law and the imposition of a punishment on the violator; and (iv) flexibility that enables the Authority to adjust the severity of the punishment to the significance and degree of the violation.

The main innovation of the amendment is the establishment by the Authority of a procedure for administrative enforcement through a special "Administrative Enforcement Committee" (the "Committee"), which is to investigate violations of the Law and, if required, take enforcement actions. The Committee may take the following measures, or any of them, as sanctions for administrative offenses: impose financial sanctions, instruct an offender to take actions to remedy the violation and to prevent its recurrence, prohibit offenders in certain cases from serving as a senior officer in a supervised entity for certain periods of time and suspend a license, approval or permit issued under the laws enforced by the Authority for certain periods of time.

The Committee's discussions are not adversarial, and the Committee may summon witnesses to appear before it. The required level of proof for imposing enforcement means is the same as required under civil law proceedings (more than 50 per cent). The Administrative Enforcement mechanism addresses most offenses under the Law, where the level of intent (mens rea) rises no higher than negligence.

Offences which are subject to administrative enforcement are listed in the Seventh Schedule to the Law and they include various classes of failures to make timely disclosure or provide information required by the Authority; breaches of disclosure requirements, including by way of misleading statements or omission of material information; acceptance of orders for securities being offered, prior to the commencement of the period defined for placing orders; non-repayment of the amounts paid on account of the securities and sale of securities underlying a specific offer at a non-uniform price. The Minister of Finance is authorized, upon the Authority's proposal or in consultation with it, and subject to approval of the Minister of Justice and the Knesset Finance Committee, to amend the Seventh Schedule.

A decision of the Authority to commence investigation is not subject to the right to a hearing prior to the decision, but hearing rights of a suspect or potential violator are built into the investigation process prior to indictment, and later in court proceedings.

Decision to Initiate an Administrative Enforcement Proceeding

If the Chairman of the Authority has reasonable grounds to believe, either based on an investigation of an alleged offence listed in the Seventh Schedule to the Law and made pursuant to Section 52QQ of the Law or otherwise, that a violation has been committed, he is authorized, by detailed decision made in accordance with the considerations stated in Section 52RR regarding such violation, to initiate an administrative enforcement proceeding and appoint a Committee panel to adjudicate the violation.

Committee — Composition

The Committee consists of six persons divided into two panels of three persons each. Two members, who are Authority employees qualified to serve as district court judges, are to be appointed by the Authority's Chairman. The Minister of Justice is to appoint the four other members, provided that two of them shall have expertise in the capital markets and two others shall be attorneys with expertise in securities and companies' laws.

Notice of Initiation of Administrative Enforcement Proceeding

The chairman of a panel shall deliver a notice to the panel and to the violator regarding the initiation of the administrative enforcement proceeding pursuant to the Law. Such notice must specify the following: (i) details of the act constituting the violation, and a summary of the facts and circumstances thereof; (ii) the enforcement measures which may be imposed on the violator in accordance with the provisions of the Law; (iii) the violator's right to receive all the violation-related data that has been submitted to the panel by the Authority; and (iv) the violator's right to present his or her arguments to the panel.

Right to Present Arguments

A violator who received notice of initiation of an administrative enforcement proceeding is entitled to present his arguments with regard to this matter to the panel (in writing), within 45 days of the date of delivery of such notice.

Proceedings before Panel

A violator has a right to be present at all the panel's discussions during the proceeding. The violator that presented his arguments to the panel in writing also will be entitled to present the arguments orally. In special circumstances, including upon the request of the violator, the panel is authorized to invite other persons to appear before it and provide it with the information required for the purpose of its ruling; the violator is entitled to be present during the discussion to which such person has been invited, to receive information and to present his arguments orally before the panel. The party affected by a violation shall not be a party to the proceeding, although the panel may invite the injured party to appear in accordance with the aforesaid provisions.

The Panel's Ruling

The panel's ruling must be in writing, shall detail the reasons therefore, and shall be presented to the violator; a ruling imposing administrative enforcement measures shall also (i) detail the reasons for choosing those specific measures, drafted in accordance with the considerations specified in the Law with respect to the violation; (ii) include the date on which the ruling will enter into effect (in any event may not be less than 60 days following the date of the ruling), provided that different effective dates may be determined with regard to different enforcement measures.

The Court is authorised to bring forward an effective date of any enforcement measure, upon the request of the panel's chairman, if the chairman believes that the circumstances of the case justify such a change.

Imposition of Administrative Enforcement Measures

If a panel finds that a violation has been committed, it may impose on the offender one or more of the administrative enforcement measures specified in the Law; the panel will choose the enforcement measure and the degree thereof, out of the enforcement measures specified in the Law, based on the following: (i) the facts that constitute the violation; (ii) other factual circumstances that have been proven during the panel's discussions regarding the violation, including the scope of the violation, the profit it produced or the loss it prevented, and the damage caused as a result of the violation; (iii) previous violations, if any; (iv) actions taken by the violator upon the discovery of the violation, including whether the offender ceased the violation by his own initiative and reported the violation to the Authority, and whether the offender took actions in order to prevent recurrence of the violation and minimize the damage resulting therefrom; (v) the violator's personal circumstances that caused him to commit the violation or other exceptional personal circumstances; (vi) the Authority's enforcement policy.

Financial Sanction

A panel may impose on a violator financial sanctions ranging between the following: (i) NIS 400,000–1,000,000 for an individual (depending on the specific violation); (ii) NIS 2,000,000–5,000,000 for a corporation (depending on the specific violation); (iii) up to NIS 25,000 on individuals who are not senior corporate officers. These amounts are the maximum amounts that the panel can impose.

Taking Measures to Correct Violation and to Prevent Its Recurrence

A panel has the authority to instruct the violator with regard to the actions he is required to perform in order to correct the violation and to prevent its recurrence, and to order him to deposit a guarantee in order to ensure that such actions are actually performed; the deposited guarantee shall be forfeited in the event the violator does not perform the prescribed actions.

Prohibition on Service as Senior Corporate Officer in Supervised Entity

If a panel determines that it is not advisable that a person who has committed any of the offences listed in Part C of the Seventh Schedule, shall serve as a senior corporate officer of any of the entities listed below (the "Supervised Entities"), it is authorized to prohibit the violator's service as such senior corporate officer for a period not exceeding one year or, subject to the Court's approval, for a period not exceeding five years from the date on which the panel's ruling comes into effect. The Supervised Entities include, inter alia, a reporting corporation and an underwriter.

Disclosure and Immediate Reporting of Decision to Impose Enforcement Measures

On the date on which a ruling becomes effective, the Authority shall publish it on its website. Upon the violator's request, the panel may in a reasoned written decision resolve not to publish the ruling, as detailed above, or may determine a delayed the date for publication thereof; however, the time that has passed since the violation has been committed may not be deemed a reason for non-publication or delay.

Unless otherwise resolved by a panel, immediately after the enforcement measures imposed by a panel on a reporting party (including, inter alia, a reporting corporation, a trustee for debentures and an underwriter) or on a senior corporate officer thereof, come into effect, such reporting party shall disclose the ruling to the public, by means of an immediate report.

Court's Authority on Appeal

A violator shall be entitled to submit an administrative appeal on a panel's ruling, provided such appeal is submitted within 45 days following the date on which the violator received the said ruling.

Responsibility of General Manager or Partner, Other Than Limited Partner

A general manager of, or a partner, other than a limited partner, in a corporation, shall supervise and take all reasonable measures in order to prevent the violation by the corporation or by the partnership, as the case may be, or by any of their employees. If a violation has been committed, excluding certain classes thereof expressly specified in the Law, the general manager of a company or a partner other than a limited partner in a partnership, as the case may be, will be deemed to have breached his aforesaid supervision duty and will be subject to the enforcement measures specified below, to the extent such measures could have been imposed on him if he were the offender, unless the opposite has been proven: (i) a financial sanction, in an amount that shall not exceed half of the maximum amount that could have been imposed on an individual for the same violation; (ii) with regard to a violation listed in Parts B or C of the Seventh Schedule — a suspension, for a period that will not exceed half of the period that could have been imposed on the violator pursuant to the applicable administrative enforcement provisions; (iii) with regard to a violation listed in Part C of the Seventh Schedule — a prohibition to serve as a senior corporate officer in a supervised entity, for a period that will not exceed half of the period that could have been imposed on the offender pursuant to the applicable administrative enforcement provisions.

If a corporation (i) has established procedures that are sufficient to prevent aforesaid violations, (ii) has appointed an enforcement officer in order to supervise compliance therewith, including provisions regarding the training of the corporation's employees for the purposes of such compliance, and (iii) has taken reasonable measures to remedy a violation and to prevent its recurrence, the general manager or partner, as the case may be, shall be deemed to have fulfilled his supervision duty.

Misleading Authority

If a supervised party has caused a misleading item to be presented to the Authority in any report, document or notice, required to be submitted pursuant to any law, the Authority's demand or demand of an authorized Authority's employee, provided such supervised party should have known that the presentation could mislead the Authority, such supervised party shall be deemed to have committed an offence listed in Part C of the Seventh Schedule.

Non-Prosecution Agreement

This mechanism was also introduced under the administrative enforcement reform described under Principle 8. It enables the Authority (and the District Attorney) to impose sanctions on securities offenses and administrative violations with the consent and cooperation of the offender.

Criteria for Recognition of Internal Enforcement Program in Securities and Asset

Management Field

In August 2011, the Authority published Criteria for Recognition of an Internal Enforcement Program in the Securities and Asset Management Field (the "Criteria"). The Criteria are intended to provide a certain balance and counter measure to the increased liability imposed on chief executive officers (CEOs) and other officers and directors.

Subject to certain requirements specified therein, the Criteria allows the Authority deem an internal enforcement program as a viable defense claim against potential enforcement procedures. The Criteria are relevant to all issuers and Authority's-regulated entities. An internal enforcement program is a voluntary mechanism adopted and implemented by a corporation on an ongoing basis in order to ensure that the corporation and its units comply with the provisions of the Law, the Mutual Fund Law, and the Investment Advice Law. The adoption of an internal program is not mandatory however, the Authority will examine whether such program was adopted by a corporation, and shall specifically review its effectiveness (i.e. its suitability for the specific circumstances relating to the specific corporation) in the event of suspected violations. The enforcement program is expected to promote the development of an environment of compliance within the company. While examining the efficiency of the program the Authority shall address not only the written procedures contained therein but also their effective implementation. In exercising its legal enforcement powers, the Authority may give credit to a company implementing an effective enforcement program or individuals within that company, in the event of a breach of the Law.

Dividend Distributions by Financially Unstable Companies.

International Financial Reporting Standard 9. As part of its effort to prevent unstable companies from making dividend distributions that could jeopardize their ability to meet their obligations to debenture holders, the Authority has recently imposed comprehensive disclosure requirements for early adopters of International Financial Reporting Standard 9 (IFRS 9), which is expected to increase profits deemed distributable through dividends.

Under the Companies Law, a corporation is entitled to distribute dividends from retained earnings reflected in the financial statements without court approval. Accordingly, companies may distribute a large part of their equity as a dividend, based on notional profits arising from adoption of the new IFRS 9 accounting rule.

Attributing the investment results to other comprehensive income, which is permitted under IFRS 9, can keep losses derived from financial instrument investments from being included in net income of a company, even after the investment is sold and the loss realized. Excluding the loss from the bottom line raises the company's dividend distribution potential.

The Authority is seeking to verify that dividend distributions are performed on the basis of real profits and to restore the profit test, set forth in the Companies Law as a basis for distribution,[154] to its original purpose of determining if the company's cash flow can sufficiently cover the distribution.

The Israeli Ministry of Justice has announced its plans for enacting new regulations under Section 302 of the Companies Law stating to the effect that a company's surplus in capital equity will also include losses arising from financial capital assets, thereby negating the effect of IFRS 9.

Expected Amendment to the Companies Law. Another element of the campaign to prevent financially unstable companies from distributing dividends that might prevent them from meeting their financial liabilities is the recently issued draft of Companies Law regulations intended to prevent the distribution of virtual profits based upon the implementation of IFRS 9.[155]

The Regulations are expected to determine that a company's retained earnings include losses from financial capital assets whenever such a loss was recognized due to a substantial and prolonged decline in the fair value of a financial asset under accounting standards in force prior to IFRS 9.

155 Companies Regulations (amounts included in capital equity for the purposes of determination of surplus) – 2012.

In addition, the Companies Law is expected to be amended to provide that tests set by the law on dividend payouts will relate to the company's overall earnings net of unrealized profits that consequently do not reflect any cash flow.

Companies that comply with IFRS 9 and designate any financial instruments to "other comprehensive income" are required by the Authority to show distributable retained earnings in their financial statements, at any time they resolve on a dividend payout. They are also required to disclose the balance of distributable retained earnings in the absence of IFRS 9, with a full breakdown and explanation of any adjustments between the two amounts.

The disclosure and explanatory obligation is also imposed on the board members of a company that distributes profits in case of compliance with the requirements of the test only by virtue of IFRS 9. In such case, the company is required by the Authority to disclose its board's reasons for the existence of distributable earnings in accordance with the dividend distribution tests as set out in the Companies Law. The board shall also disclose the major assumptions underlying its resolution to distribute the dividend, including a professional opinion, value assessment and the cash flow projections used as the basis for approving the distribution.

Insider Information

Definitions

Under Chapter H1 of the Law, regulating the issue of insider information, the following definitions apply:

- A ‘company’ is a corporation whose securities have been offered to the public under a prospectus or are traded on the Stock Exchange, and held by the public, including a subsidiary and an affiliate thereof;
- ‘Insider information’ is information on actual or expected developments in a company, changes in its state of affairs, or any other information on the company, which is not known to the public and which, if disclosed to the public, would cause a significant change in the price of the company’s securities or the price of other securities for which the company’s security serves as the basic-asset;
- An ‘Inside person’ in a company is (a) a director, general manager, principal shareholder, or other person whose status or position in, or relationship with, the company gives him access to insider information on the effective date (the date on which the insider information has been used) or within six months prior thereto, (b) a relative of one of those listed in item (a), and (c) a corporation controlled by one of those listed in items (a) and (b);

- A 'Principal shareholder' in the company is a shareholder holding five per cent or more of the par value of the company's issued share capital or of the voting power, or having the power to appoint one or more directors;[156] and
- A 'Transaction' encompasses the sale, purchase, or conversion of security, subscription to a security, or an undertaking to perform any of these, whether the person performing it acts for his own benefit or for the benefit of others, even if he acts by means of a proxy or trustee.

Use of Insider Information

In General

Whoever performs any of the following shall be deemed to have made use of inside information:

- Effects a transaction with respect to a security of a company, excluding a security of a subsidiary or an affiliate which has not issued securities to the public under a prospectus or whose securities are not traded on the Stock Exchange, or effects a transaction in other security for which the company's security serves as the basic-asset, while being in possession of inside information or while the company is in possession of inside information; and
- Delivers, while being in possession of insider information, insider information or an opinion on a security of the company or on other securities for which the company's security serves as the basic-asset to a person who he knows, or has reasonable grounds to believe, will use the insider information or the opinion for the purpose of a transaction or will transfer it to third party.

A corporation shall be deemed to have access to insider information, or to be in possession of insider information, if a director or employee of the corporation has access to or holds such information, unless:

- The corporation has established and properly disclosed directives, pursuant to which (a) a director or employee engaged by the corporation in transactions in securities or in providing opinions or advice in connection with securities shall not be employed by the corporation in a position providing access to insider information, (b) a director or employee which holds insider information shall not effect a transaction on behalf of the corporation, with regard to securities of the company or with regard to other securities for which the company's securities serve as the basic-asset, to which the insider

156 A 'holding' means alone or together with others, whether directly or indirectly, by means of a trustee, trust company, or registration company or in any other manner; in case of holding by a company, this also refers to holding by its subsidiary; in case of holding by an individual - holding by an individual and by his family members residing with him, or supporting one another, shall be deemed holdings of one person. 'Holding securities with others' means holding of securities by two or more parties pursuant to an agreement, whether written or oral.

information relates, and shall not provide an opinion or advice in connection therewith, (c) a director or employee as set forth in item (b) shall not transfer the insider information in his possession to a person who he knows, or has reasonable grounds to believe, will make use thereof for the purpose of effecting a transaction or providing an opinion, or will transfer to third party, (d) a director or employee as aforesaid in item (b) shall not transfer the insider information in his possession to any other person even if not included in item (c), unless it is necessary for performance of his duties in the corporation; and

- The required arrangements have been made by a corporation to ensure compliance with the directives set forth above, and there are internal controls guaranteeing fulfillment thereof.

Use of Information by Inside Person

An inside person in a company shall not make use of insider information. Violation of such prohibition by an inside person in a company is punishable by five years' imprisonment or a fine, provided that in the event the insider is a corporation, the fine imposed on it shall be significantly higher.

Use of Information Originating from Inside Person

A person may not make use of insider information which has been received, directly or indirectly, from an insider person in a company. Violation of such prohibition is punishable by imprisonment for two years or a fine, provided that in the event the insider is a corporation, the fine imposed on it shall be significantly higher.

Presumption as to Use of Inside Information

If a key insider in a company purchases securities of a company in which he serves as such, or other securities, for which the company's securities serve as basic-asset securities, within three months following the date on which he sold securities of such company, or sells such securities within three months following the date on which he purchased them, such purchase or sale will be prima facie evidence that he made use of insider information in his possession, unless he proves that he had no insider information in his possession on the date of the sale or purchase, or that, under the circumstances of the case, it is reasonable to assume that he had no insider information in his possession on that date.[157]

157 A 'company's key insider ' is (i) a director, general manager, assistant general manager, deputy general manager, comptroller, and internal auditor, and anyone fulfilling such position under any other title, as well as an individual who is a main shareholder in the company;(ii) a relative of any person listed in subsection (i) hereinabove; or a corporation under the control of any of person listed in subsections (i) and (ii).

Information Not Regarded as Inside Information

In General. Information shall be deemed not to constitute inside information if a report regarding the information has been submitted to the Authority or the Stock Exchange, and the Authority or the Stock Exchange published it, or the same has been published in any other customary way for the purpose of bringing such information to the knowledge of the public, and one trading day on the Stock Exchange has passed after the day of such publication.

If the Authority or the Stock Exchange does not publish the information within four days following the day it was reported, the information shall cease to be insider information at the end of that period. Whoever claims that the information was submitted or published as aforesaid, bears the burden of proof thereof.

Defenses. A person shall not be criminally liable or be liable to pay the fines as set forth above or to refund the profits gained from the use of insider information as set forth below, if he proves one of the following:

- The sole purpose of the transaction effected by him was to purchase qualifying shares which, under the company's articles, a director is required to purchase as a condition of his appointment;
- The transaction effected by him is a good-faith act performed in his capacity as liquidator, receiver, or trustee in bankruptcy or to exercise collateral;
- The transaction in question is a good-faith execution of an underwriting contract;
- The purpose of using the insider information was not, or was not primarily, obtaining of profit or prevention of loss for himself or another;
- The person entered into the transaction in connection with the company's securities on which he has insider information or with regard to other securities, for which the company's securities serve as basic-asset securities as third party's agent, without exercising his own discretion and without providing information or an opinion which could have led to entering into the transaction;
- The transaction was effected outside the Stock Exchange with a person who was also in possession of the inside information;
- The transaction was executed for an inside person by a trustee acting by way of a blind trust;[158] or
- Under the circumstances of the case, there was justification for performing the transaction.

158 A 'blind trust' is one exercised at the sole discretion of the trustee without intervention by the inside person.

A corporation will not be criminally liable and will not be liable to pay the fines as set forth above or to refund the profits gained from use of the insider information as set forth below, although its director or employee has access to the insider information or has possession of insider information concerning the corporation whose security or other securities, for which the company's securities serve as basic-asset securities is the object of the transaction or the opinion, if it proves that neither the director nor the employee holding the insider information decided to enter into the transaction or to provide the opinion, and there is a reasonable explanation for effecting the transaction or providing the opinion.

In 2010 the Authority published a 'Safe-Harbor' directive intended to reduce exposure to violations of prohibitions upon use of insider information in the event of a company acquiring its own securities. A corporation acquiring its own securities shall be deemed to comply with such safe harbor requirements if it complies with the following requirements: (i) the corporation's board of directors has approved in advance a detailed acquisition plan, in the form of an "automatic pilot" self-acquisition plan includes certain features, such as a fixed amount of securities to be purchased or aggregate sum to be used thereunder, prices and specific dates for their purchase or a formula for determining same; (ii) the plan shall be implemented by an independent stock exchange member, which has no material business relationship with the corporation; (iii) the performance of the plan is irrevocable; and (iv) the plan shall be implemented only after the second trading day following the publishing of the financial statements on the basis of which such plan was approved. The forgoing directive applies only to corporations and not to individuals, i.e. principal and controlling shareholders or officers. Furthermore, a corporation that fails to comply with the reporting requirements of the Law and has purchased its securities during the period of such incompliance shall not enjoy the said safe harbor defense.

Profits from Use of Insider Information. A company whose securities were the object of a transaction effected using the insider information, has the right to claim the profits accrued from the transaction by the person who made use of such information.[159]

Transactions with Securities by Stock Exchange Employee. An employee of a Stock Exchange member may neither purchase nor sell securities except during the ordinary course of trade on the Stock Exchange, pursuant to written instructions given at least one day prior to effecting the purchase or the sale.

An employee of a Stock Exchange member shall hold his securities in a portfolio in his name with the Stock Exchange member. A director or employee of a Stock Exchange member effecting transactions in securities on behalf of others shall give written instructions solely through that Stock Exchange member; if the Stock Exchange member has more than one branch, he shall give the instructions at the branch at which he is employed.

Any other Stock Exchange member's employee shall give all his instructions through a single Stock Exchange member only; if such Stock Exchange member has more than one branch, he shall give the instructions at one branch only, i.e., in which his securities portfolio is managed.

The Minister of Finance, after consultation with the Securities Authority and with the approval of the Knesset Finance Committee, is entitled to prohibit trading in securities by the employees of a Stock Exchange member, either generally or in respect of certain types of employees of Stock Exchange members or of securities or any other classification, as well as to define the term "trade" for this purpose.

Existence of Transaction. No transaction shall be void only because its execution constitutes violation of the abovementioned provisions.

Purchase Offers

In General

Purchase offers are regulated by the Companies Law, within the framework of two separate sections. The procedural and the reporting aspects related thereto are governed by the Purchase Offer Regulations.[160]

The Companies Law, sets forth detailed arrangements with regard to the execution of a special purchase offer in a public company,[161] a full purchase offer in a public company (and also in a private company), and various aspects which derive from the execution of each one of the purchase offers, as specified below.

Special Purchase Offers

Acquisition of Control Block

In a public company, an acquisition shall be exercised only by way of a purchase offer in accordance with the provisions set forth below[162] ('special

160 Securities Regulations (Purchase Offer), 5760-2000.

161 A company whose shares are registered for trading on the Stock Exchange or which have been issued to the public in accordance with a prospectus, within the meaning of such term in the Law, or which have been issued to the public outside of Israel in accordance with a public offer document, required by the local non-Israeli law, and which are held by the public.

162 These provisions will apply to a special purchase offer, in addition to the provisions of any law governing purchase offers, in so far as there is no contradiction between them and these provisions.

purchase offer') if (i) as a result of an acquisition a person becomes the holder of a control block of shares (25 per cent or more of all the voting rights in the general meeting), provided there is no other holder of a control block of shares in the company; and (ii) as a result of an acquisition the shareholdings of the acquirer will increase to 45 per cent of the voting rights in the company, provided there is no other person who holds more than 45 per cent of the voting rights in the company. The special purchase offer provisions shall not apply to:

- Acquisition of shares in the course of a private offering, provided that the acquisition was approved at a general meeting as a private offering intended to provide the offeree a control block of shares if there is no holder of a control block of shares in the company, or as a private offering intended to provide 45 per cent of the voting rights in the company if there is no other person in the company who holds 45 per cent of the company's voting rights;
- Purchase from the holder of a control block of shares, as a result of which a person becomes the holder of a control block of shares; or
- Purchase from a holder of more than 45 per cent of the voting rights in the company, as a result of which the purchaser's holdings percentage will exceed 45 per cent of the voting rights in the company.

Opinion of Board of Directors

In the event that a special purchase offer has been made, the board of directors of the company whose securities are to be purchased ('the target company') will provide the offerees its opinion with regard to the advantages of the special purchase offer, or it will refrain from providing its opinion in the event it is unable to do same, provided that it reports the reasons for refraining. Furthermore, the board of directors will disclose any personal interest any of the directors have in the purchase offer or arising therefrom.

Obligations of Officers

An officer in the target company who by virtue of his position performs an action (excluding negotiating with the offeror to improve the terms of his offer and negotiating with others for competing purchase offers) intended to cause the special existing or expected purchase offer to fail, or to adversely affect the chances of its being accepted, shall be liable towards the offeror and the offerees for their damages due to his activities, unless he acted in good faith and had reasonable grounds to believe that his actions are in the company's best interest.

Agreement of Shareholders for a Special Purchase Offer

A special purchase offer shall be addressed to all the offerees, and the offerees are entitled to give notice of their agreement or objection thereto.

A special purchase offer must be accepted by a majority of the offerees who have notified of their position in relation thereto. The vote of (i) the controlling shareholder in the offeror, (ii) whoever has a personal interest in accepting the special purchase offer, (iii) the holder of the control block in the company, or (iv) a party who acts on behalf of those stated in items (ii) and (iii) herein or of the offeror, including their relatives or corporations under their control, shall not be taken into account when counting the votes of the offerees. As mentioned above, each shareholder participating in the vote must notify the company prior to the vote whether he has a personal interest in the approval of the special purchase offer.

Late Response Option

In the event that a special purchase offer was accepted, the offerees who had refrained from announcing their position in relation to the purchase offer or had objected thereto, are entitled to agree to the offer, within four days following the last date for acceptance of the purchase offer, and they will be deemed to have initially accepted the offer.

Minimal Response

A special purchase offer will not be accepted unless shares which accord at least five per cent of the voting rights in the company have been acquired thereunder.

Consequences of Prohibited Acquisition

The shares of a public company which have been acquired in contravention of the provisions of the special purchase offer specified above, will not accord any rights whatsoever and they will be dormant shares for so long as they are held by the acquirer.

Without derogating from the above, in the event that the voting rights of any party increased to the rate (i) which provides him a control block if there is no holder of control block in the company, or (ii) which exceeds 45 per cent of the voting rights in the company if there is no other person who holds more than 45 per cent of the voting rights in the company as a result of the company's shares being dormant due to distribution, but excluding the increase in holdings resulting from purchase by means of a special purchase offer,[163] then voting rights will not be accorded to shares exceeding the rate of 25 or 45 per cent, as the case may be, for so long as such shares are held by such person. A shareholder will 163 The distribution of a dividend or an undertaking to distribute a dividend, directly or indirectly, and also purchase or the giving of financing for purchase, directly or indirectly, by the company or by its subsidiary company or by some other corporation which is under its control, of shares of the company or of securities which are convertible into shares of the company or which are capable of being realised in the shares of the company or redemption of redeemable securities, which are part of the company's share capital according to the Companies Law, and including an undertaking to carry out each one of these, provided that the seller is not the company itself or another corporation fully owned by the company.

inform the company of shares held by him, which do not convey voting rights, as soon as possible after he was informed of same.

Subsequent Purchase Offers and Subsequent Mergers

In the event that a special purchase offer was accepted, the offeror, the person that controlled the offeror on the date of the offer, and any corporation under their control will not make any additional purchase offers for purchase of the company's shares, for a period of a year following the date of the purchase offer, and they will not carry out a merger with the company unless they undertook to do so in the special purchase offer.

Regulations

Provisions regarding the procedure of a special purchase offer, including the ways for delivery thereof to offerees and receipt of their positions, voting instruments and dates are determined in regulations enacted by the Minister of Justice.[164]

Public Companies Whose Shares Are Traded on Stock Exchange Outside Israel

The provisions specified above will not apply to a special purchase offer, in the event that (i) in accordance with the law of the foreign country (the law of the country in which the securities were offered to the public or in which the securities are registered for trading on the stock exchange, including rules and assumptions which are practised in the said stock exchange) a restriction applies to the purchase of control in a company, at any rate, (ii) the purchase of control at any rate requires the acquirer to make a purchase offer to all public shareholders, (iii) it is a public company the shares of which have been offered to the public outside of Israel[165] only or they are registered for trading outside of Israel only, and (iv) it is a company which was incorporated prior to the 1st of February 2000 (the time Companies Law came into force), and its shares were registered for trading in Israel after this date.

Full Purchase Offer — Purchase of the Minority Shares

Full Purchase Offer. Purchase of voting rights, shares or a class of shares in a public company may not be performed if following the purchase the acquirer will hold more than 90 per cent of the shares of the company or of a class of shares, as the case may be, other than by way of a purchase offer for the entirety of shares or a class of shares ("full purchase offer"), which shall be approved in accordance with the provisions specified below.

164 Securities Regulations (Purchase Offer), 5760-2000.

165 Companies Regulations (Relief to Public Companies Whose Shares are Listed for Trading Outside Israel), 5760-2000.

In the event that a person holds shares at a rate higher than 90 per cent of the entirety of shares or the class of shares of a public company, he will not acquire additional shares for so long as he holds shares at the said rate (unless and to the extent otherwise detailed in the full purchase offer).

If, at 1 February 2000, a person held shares at a rate higher than 90 per cent of the entirety of shares or the class of shares of the public company, according to the applicable law prior to the said date, he will not purchase additional shares other than by way of a full purchase offer, to be accepted by the offerees, in a manner that the percentage of shares held by the offerees which did not accept the offer is less than one half of the company's issued share capital, or of the issued capital of the class of shares as to which the offer has been made. If a full purchase offer is accepted, the entirety of shares the offeror wishes to acquire shall be transferred to his possession, and the shareholders' register shall be amended accordingly.

Acceptance of Full Purchase Offer and Forced Sale of Shares. The execution of a full purchase offer is subject to obtaining the minimum statutory acceptance rate among the offerees, as determined in the Companies Law.[166] In the event that (i) the rate of the holdings of the offerees who did not respond to a full purchase offer constitutes less than five per cent of the company's issued share capital or of the issued capital of the class of shares with regard to which the offer was made, and (ii) more than one half of the offerees who have no personal interest in accepting the offer, have accepted it, then the entirety of the shares which the offeror intended to acquire will pass into his ownership and the registrations of the shares' ownership will be changed accordingly. As mentioned above, each shareholder participating in the vote must notify the company prior to the vote whether he has a personal interest in the approval of the full purchase offer. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the full purchase offer shall be deemed accepted if the holdings' rate of the offerees who voted against the offer is less than two per cent of the company's issued share capital or of the issued capital of the class of shares with regard to which the offer was made. In the event that the full purchase offer has not been accepted, the offeror will not acquire, from offerees who have accepted the offer, shares which will accord to him a holding of more than 90 per cent of the entirety of the shares in the company or of the entirety of the class of the shares with regard to which the offer has been made (unless and to the extent otherwise detailed in the full purchase offer). If a full purchase offer has been accepted, and the offeror had also offered to purchase any and all securities of such company, the provisions detailed above shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to any class of securities, with respect to the purchase offer of such securities.

Remedy of Valuation for Shares of the Company. The court is entitled, upon the request of any party who was an offeree in a full purchase offer which has been accepted, such request to be submitted not later than six months following the acceptance of the full purchase offer, to determine that the consideration for the shares was less than their fair value, and that the fair value, as determined by the court, must be paid.

An offeree in a full purchase offer is entitled to seek submission of an application for the remedy of valuation as mentioned in a class action, and he is also entitled to request the Authority to bear his expenses. In the event that the Authority has been persuaded that the action is of public interest and that there is a reasonable chance that the court will approve same as a class action, it may bear the expenses of the plaintiff, in such amount and on such terms as it will determine. In the event that the court adjudicates in favour of the plaintiff, the court may instruction to reimburse the Authority in respect of its expenses. In its full purchase offer the offeror is entitled to determine that an offeree who accepted the full purchase offer which has been accepted, shall not be entitled to remedies specified herein, provided that any information to be published under any law in connection with the full purchase offer, has actually been published by the offeror or by the company prior to offer's response date. If a full purchase offer has been accepted, and the offeror also had offered to purchase any and all securities of such company, the provisions of this paragraph shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to any type of securities, with respect to the purchase offer thereof.

Conversion of Public Company into Private Company. In the event that a full purchase offer has been accepted in accordance with the provisions specified above, and the offer was for the single class of the company's shares or for all classes of the company's shares, which are in the possession of the public, the company will convert into a private company.

In accordance with the provisions of Stock Exchange Regulations,[167] in the event that a full purchase offer has been duly accepted, the shares of the company will be de-listed from the Stock Exchange immediately after receipt of the notice that the full purchase offer was accepted. In this case, the securities which are convertible into a security which has been de-listed will be de-listed as well, with the exception of certificates of undertaking which are convertible into such security.

Termination of Reporting Obligations in Accordance with Securities Law. Section 36 of the Securities Law determines that obligations of reporting to the Authority are imposed on a corporation, securities of which have been offered to the public in accordance with a prospectus, for so long as its securities are in the possession of the public, and obligations of reporting to the Authority and to the Stock Exchange are imposed on a corporation for so long as its securities are traded on the Stock Exchange or are registered at the Stock Exchange for trading. Accordingly in the event that a full purchase offer has been accepted, the statutory obligations of reporting to the Authority and to the Stock Exchange in accordance with the Securities Law and the Regulations will terminate.

Consequences of Prohibited Acquisition. Shares which have been acquired in contravention of the provisions of a full purchase offer, as mentioned above, will not accord rights and they will automatically become dormant shares (that do not accord any rights whatsoever), for so long as they are held by the acquirer.

Breach of the provisions of a special purchase offer and the provisions of a full purchase offer specified hereinabove, constitute breach of the legal obligation towards shareholders of a company (which also constitutes a tort of damages in accordance with the Civil Wrongs Ordinance).[168]

Purchase Offer

The purchase offer regulations[169] determine the procedural aspects of a purchase offer, including, inter alia, the ways of its execution and acceptance, as well as the reporting aspects thereof, including the approach of the offeror to all the holders of the class of securities to be purchased, which should be made by means of written specifications.

The Regulations define an additional category of purchase offers — an ordinary purchase offer — in addition to those categories of purchase offers which have been defined in the Companies Law as specified above (special purchase offer and full purchase offer). The scope of the required disclosure in the purchase offer specification is quiet expansive, and includes provisions with regard to specifications of self-purchase of shares' offer.

168 The Civil Wrongs Ordinance (New Version), s 63 provides as follows: "Failure by any person to perform a duty imposed on him by any act of legislation other than this Ordinance shall be deemed a breach of a statutory duty, provided that (i) an act is, by a proper construction thereof, intended to be for the benefit or protection of any other person, whereby such other person suffers damage of a kind or nature contemplated by such act, and (ii) such other person will not be entitled by reason of such failure to any remedy specified in this Ordinance if, on a proper construction of such enactment, the intention thereof was to exclude such remedy." Introduction

Regulatory System and Legal Sources

Italian securities regulations are provided for by the Consolidated Text of the Rules on Financial Brokerage, approved by means of Legislative Decree Number 58 of 24 February 1998 (the 'Consolidated Text), as amended.

The Consolidated Text has replaced and repealed all the Italian rules on financial services and products previously in force. These rules include, without limitation, those governing:

- The regulated markets of transferable securities;
- The duties of the listed companies and the offers of securities;[1]
- The negotiation of unlisted securities;[2]
- The Italian investment funds and the offer in Italy of European Union (EU) undertakings of collective investment in transferable securities (UCITS);[3]
- The centralized administration of financial instruments made by Monte Titoli SpA;[4]
- The organization and the existence of Italian investment firms, denominated as 'securities brokerage firms'[5] and the operations in Italy of foreign investment firms;[6]
- The organization and the existence of Italian SICAVs;[7]
- The offer in Italy of non-EU collective investment schemes;[8]
- The tender offers for purchase and exchange and takeovers;[9] and

- Certain aspects of privatizations.

In addition, the Consolidated Text has regulated a number of matters for the first time, such as the proxy solicitation or the organization and the existence of certain companies, denominated 'savings management companies', which are entitled to manage investment funds as well as investment portfolios, ie, to carry out the asset management activity either on a collective or on an individual basis. The complete list of the matters regulated by the Consolidated Text is the following:

- Definitions and powers of the supervisory authorities;
- Entities qualified to render investment services (ie investment firms) and general provisions on the rendering of certain investment services;
- Asset Management companies;
- SICAVs and SICAFs;
- Master-feeder structures for collective investment schemes;
- EU management companies, EU Alternative Investment Funds Managers governed by the AIFMD (AIFMs) and non-EU AIFMs;
- Marketing in Italy of UCITS and Alternative Investment Funds (AIFs) managed by AIFMs;
- Powers of the regulators vis-à-vis intermediaries in case of violations by intermediaries;
- Regulated markets, multilateral trading facilities, and systematic internalizations;
- Centralized administration of financial instruments;
- Public offers of financial products, ie, notices to the supervisory authorities and prospectuses;
- Private placements of financial products and exemptions from the prospectus obligations;
- Tender offers for purchase and exchange;
- Disclosure of corporate information, including holdings in Italian listed companies;
- Proxy solicitations and powers of minorities;
- Insider trading; and
- Criminal and administrative sanctions.

The Consolidated Text was amended in August 2007 in order to implement in the Italian legal system Directive 2004/39/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 April 2004 on markets in financial instruments (MiFID).The method followed by Italian lawmakers and regulators in the implementation of MiFID strictly follows the 'level playing field' approach in the sense that MiFID has been transposed by reproducing to the widest possible extent the text of its provisions (and, where appropriate, those of Commission Directive 2006/73/EC of 10 August 2006, the 'Level 2 Directive').

Additional requirements, especially with respect to the provisions of the Level 2 Directive, can be introduced by Italian regulators only in exceptional cases in which such additional requirements are objectively justified and proportional on the basis of the necessity of managing certain specific risks — which are not adequately considered by the EU rules — related to the protection of the investors and the integrity of the markets. Such risks must be particularly relevant in consideration of the structure of the Italian market or which become evident after the issue of the EU rules governing certain matters. The Consolidated Text has been amended by:

- Legislative Decree Number 47 of 16 April 2012, in connection with the transposition in Italy of Directive 2009/65/EC on the coordination of laws, regulations, and administrative provisions relating to undertakings for collective investment in transferable securities (UCITS IV) in order to allow the regulator-to-regulator passporting procedure for UCITS funds;
- Decree Law Number 179 of 18 October 2012, coordinated with conversion Law Number 221 of 17 December 2012, concerning Regulation Number 236 of 14 March 2012 of the European Parliament and of the Council, on short selling and certain aspects of credit default swaps (the 'Short Selling Regulation); and
- Legislative Decree Number 184 of 11 October 2012, in connection with the transposition in Italy of Directive 2010/73/EC, amending Directive 2003/71/EC on the Prospectus to be published when securities are offered to the public or admitted to trading and Directive 2004/109 on the harmonization of transparency requirements in relation to information about issuers whose securities are admitted to trading on a regulated market.

The Consolidated Text also has been amended by Legislative Decree Number 44 of 4 March 2014, in connection with the transposition in Italy of Directive 2011/61/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council on Alternative Investment Fund Managers (AIFMD) and by Legislative Decree Number 53 of 3 March 2014, in connection with the transposition in Italy of Directive 2011/89 EU of the European Parliament and of the Council, amending Directives 98/78/EC, 2002/87/EC, 2006/48/EC, and 2009/138/EC, as regards the supplementary supervision of financial entities in a financial conglomerate.

This chapter will follow the structure of the Consolidated Text, as outlined above, to describe the system of the Italian securities regulations. Within this context, more details will be given on those aspects of the Consolidated Text involving 'transnational' elements, consisting of investment services or products being rendered or offered respectively in Italy by foreign entities, either on a crossborder basis or through the establishment of branches.

From a legislative technique standpoint, the Consolidated Text is a statute issued by the government on delegation granted by the Parliament. One of the characteristic features of the Consolidated Text is to establish general regulatory criteria in relation to the matters listed above, while the Italian regulators in the securities industry (mainly, the Bank of Italy, the Ministry of Economy and Finance, and the National Commission for companies and the Stock Exchange, but also, for pension funds, COVIP and, for insurance financial products, IVASS, formerly ISVAP) implemented, by means of administrative regulations, the rules of the Consolidated Text governing various matters.

The most important regulations which have been issued by the Ministry of Economy and Finance, the Bank of Italy, the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, or jointly by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange and the Bank of Italy for the implementation of the Consolidated Text include:

- The establishment of 'savings management companies' (as described above) and their internal organization;
- The requirements for Italian investment funds and SICAVs;
- The registration in Italy of the foreign 'harmonized' investment funds (UCITS) and AIFs;
- The requirements and the formalities for the services rendered by the investment firms, conflicts of interest, and inducements;
- The rendering of financial services in Italy by foreign investment firms, companies managing UCITS or AIFs, or banks, either on a crossborder basis or through branches;
- The offer of securities in Italy and the drafting of the prospectuses for the various types of financial products which are offered;
- The organization of the Italian AIFs and of other special investment funds;
- The disclosure of qualified holdings in listed companies or held by listed companies;
- The disclosure of shareholders' agreements;
- The placement 'at distance' of securities;
- The advertisements having as their object securities; and
- Proxy solicitations.

The Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange have the power to issue rulings, having as their object the interpretation and the enforcement of the securities regulations, in response to queries submitted by banks, investment firms, associations of intermediaries, such as the Italian Association of Asset Managers (Assogestioni), or by law firms. Even though the addressees of these rulings are the relevant applicants, such rulings provide guidance in relation to similar operations to be undertaken by all the other players.

Further to the implementation in Italy of the AIFMD, the above-mentioned second-level rules must be amended. In this context, the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange have launched a consultation procedure that ended on 26 August 2014 in order to amend the second-level regulations that will be affected by the implementation of the AIFMD.

Authorities

As mentioned, the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange have, within their respective competences, the power to issue regulations for the implementation of the Consolidated Text.

The competences of the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange are described by the Consolidated Text. As a general rule, the Bank of Italy is competent for those aspects concerning the reduction of the investment risks and the asset stability of the entities which provide investment services; the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange is competent for ensuring the correctness and the transparency of the actions of such entities.

Following the implementation of MiFID in Italy, and in particular the circumstance that in the system of MiFID the supervision by the regulators should be oriented towards 'objectives', the Consolidated Text, as revised, provides that the supervision activity of the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, each within the competences described in the preceding paragraph, have the following objectives:

- Confidence in the financial system;
- Protection of investors;
- Stability and the satisfactory operations of the Italian financial system;
- Competitiveness of the financial system; and
- Compliance with the rules governing financial matters.

The general principles to be followed by the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange in issuing rules for the implementation of the Consolidated Text (see text, below) and in their supervisory activity are also a consequence of the implementation of MiFID in the Italian legal system; these principles include:

- A relatively high degree of independence from regulatory constraints in the decisions of the intermediaries;
- The proportionality between a given regulatory action and the 'sacrifice' required for the intermediary to reach the objective of such regulatory action, in the sense that such 'sacrifice' should be the minimum possible;

- The recognition of the internationality of the financial markets and safeguard of the competitiveness of the Italian financial industry; and
- The facilitation of the innovation and competition.

On the basis of such general criteria, the regulations issued or to be issued by the Bank of Italy focus on:

- The capital adequacy of the intermediaries;
- The custody of assets held by intermediaries;
- The investment restrictions applicable to Italian investment funds and SICAVs;
- The rules for fractioning and reduction of risk; and
- The criteria for calculation of the value of assets of intermediaries.

With regard to the regulations issued, or to be issued, by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, they focus on transparency, including information to investors in rendering investment services and in managing collective investment schemes, requirements for advertisements and research concerning financial instruments/services, and reporting to clients, and correctness, including know-your-customer procedures in view of the assessment of suitability/appropriateness of the investment service for the relevant client, as required by MiFID, best execution, execution of orders, consistency of the management activity with the relevant investment objective, and inducements.

Changes introduced by Decree Number 47 to the Consolidated Text in connection with the implementation of UCITS IV have eliminated the supervisory powers of the Bank of Italy in connection with the marketing in Italy of foreign UCITS. Accordingly, the Bank of Italy is no longer involved in the new passporting procedure under UCITS IV so long as the 'Notification' (see text, below) is served by the home country regulator only to National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange; otherwise, the competence of the Bank of Italy in connection with the authorization of foreign non-UCITS not covered by the AIFMD (for the lack of a complete correspondence between the definitions of non-UCITs and Alternative Investment Fund subject to the AIFMD please see below) remained unchanged.

In addition to the above matters, for which either regulator is competent on an exclusive basis, the Consolidated Text specifies a series of matters governed by regulations to be issued jointly by the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. These matters include, with regard to investment firms, fund management companies, and investment companies, internal organization, continuance of the activity accounting, compliance, internal control, audit, record-keeping complaints of clients, personal transactions of employees and directors, outsourcing and delegation of management, conflict of interest, and procedures for checking the compliance with the applicable regulations of the payment and receipt of inducements.

According to the Consolidated Text, Italian regulators must cooperate with the correspondent regulators of the other member states of the EU. In particular, information received by the Bank of Italy or the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange cannot be forwarded to other regulatory authorities without the prior consent of the regulator which sent such information to the Bank of Italy or the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange.

On the domestic market, the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange must coordinate their activities to reduce the duties of the entities which provide investment services. With regard to this issue, the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange issued a Protocol in October 2007 which, based on the respective competence as shown above, clarified the duties to be actually carried out by each regulator in the regulatory and supervisory activity, as well as the exchange of information, also with regard to the irregularities found by either the Bank of Italy or the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange.

Definitions

The definitions given by the Consolidated Text are, in general, consistent with those given by the correspondent EU rules, in particular, MiFID and AIFMD. Moreover, additional definitions have been included, such as 'collective savings management' (see text, below) and those relating to various types of investment funds which can be established or marketed in Italy.

In this context, Law Number 122 of 30 July 2010, amending the Consolidated Text, has set out a new definition of 'common investment fund', ie, 'equity raised independently through the issue of one or more fund units from among a number of investors, with the aim of investing the equity raised in accordance with a pre-established investment policy; divided into units pertaining to a given number of investors; managed upstream in the interests of the investors and fully independent of those investors'.

The purpose of such definition is to introduce, different from the past, the principle of aim of the equity on the basis of a predetermined policy and the concept of management carried out in the interests of the investors and in full independence of those investors. In addition, Law Number 122 of 30 July 2010 has specified that 'commitments relating to bonds subscribed on its own account shall be met solely from the investment fund's own equity'. Following the implementation of the AIFMD, new or amended definitions have been introduced in the Italian legal system by Decree Number 44 in article 1 of the Consolidated Text.

One of the most important changes is related to the definition of 'management on a collective basis' (article 1, paragraph 1, letter n) of the Consolidated Text), which is now defined as the service which is carried out through the management of collective investment schemes and of the relevant risks. Therefore, in accordance with the AIFMD, the new definition of 'collective management' has overcome the duplication in the previous definition, which instead distinguished between the promotion and administration of a fund (the company carrying out this activity was called 'promoter SGR) and the actual management of the investments of the relevant collective investment scheme (the company carrying out this activity was called 'manager SGR'). The new definition considers as 'collective management' only the 'core' activities of the management of the fund and the risk management.

Decree Number 44 also provides a new definition of investment company with variable capital (article 1, paragraph 1, letter i), which is defined as '[. . .] the collective investment scheme established in the form of open ended investment company and with registered office and head office in Italy of which the sole purpose is the investment collective of funds raised through the offering of its share'.

Together with the new definition of SICAV, Decree 44 has introduced a new investment vehicle, the SICAF, which, according to article 1, paragraph 1, letter I bis of the Consolidated text, is a: '[. . .] closed-ended collective investment scheme incorporated as a joint stock company with fixed capital, with its registered office and head office in Italy which sole object is the collective investment of funds raised through the offering of its shares and other equity instruments'.

Moreover, Decree Number 44 has amended the definitions of 'investment fund' and of 'collective investment scheme', where the characteristics that the Consolidated Text previously ascribed only to the 'investment funds' of the 'contractual type' have been extended to the series of the collective investment schemes.

In particular, 'collective investment scheme' under the new article 1, paragraph 1, letter k, of the Consolidated Text is 'a scheme established for the provision of service of collective asset management, the assets of which have been collected from a plurality of investors and fully independent form those investors and invested in financial instruments, loans, investments, or other movable or immovable properties, according to pre-determined investment policies'.

Furthermore, other definitions have been introduced by Decree Number 44 in article 1, paragraph 1, of the Consolidated Text in connection with the new vehicles managed by entities subject to the AIFMD. Finally, letter o bis) of article 1, paragraph 1, introduces a new definition of EU UCITS management company. These companies were previously defined as 'harmonized management companies', but the fact that also the AIFMs are 'harmonized' (so long as they comply with a Directive) would have rendered inaccurate a definition of 'harmonized' limited to UCITS management companies.

Entities Qualified to Render Investment Services

In General

The Consolidated Text confirms the provisions of the MiFID governing the ability of an entity to provide investment services in Italy. In particular, the investment services and activities contemplated by the Consolidated Text are those detailed in the MiFID. These services and activities are the following:

- Dealing on own account;
- Execution of orders on behalf of clients;
- Underwriting and/or placing on a firm commitment basis;
- Placing without a firm commitment basis;
- Portfolio management;
- Reception and transmission of orders;
- Advice on investments; and
- Operation of multilateral trading facilities.

'Advice on investments' was added to the investment services following the implementation of MiFID. In particular, such investment service, which is now a regulated activity, consists of 'the provision of personalized recommendations to a client, on its request or on initiative of the intermediary, with regard to one or more transactions connected with a certain financial instrument. The recommendation is personalized when it is submitted as suitable to the client or takes into account the characteristics of the client. A recommendation is not personalized if it is divulged to the public by means of distribution channels'.

The ability to render investment services also qualifies for the rendering of relevant 'non-core' services provided for in the MiFID. According to the Consolidated Text, investment services can be rendered in Italy by investment firms (imprese di investimento) and banks. Furthermore, portfolio management, as well as the placing of third-party collective investment schemes, can be rendered by companies authorized to engage in the activity of 'collective savings management' (see text, below).

With regard to the definition and the categorization of the service providers, a regulation issued by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange defines 'intermediaries' or 'authorized intermediaries' as the entities carrying out investment services or activities which must comply with the rules of MiFID as transposed in Italy; accordingly, the legal status of the 'intermediaries' or 'authorized intermediaries' in the Italian legal system correspond to one of the 'investment firms' under MiFID. Under the regulation of the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, the following entities are 'intermediaries' (also known as 'authorized intermediaries):

- Italian SIMs (ie, Italian securities brokerage firms introduced by a statute of 1991, repealed by the Consolidated Text);[10]
- Italian banks authorized to carry out investment services and activities;
- Stockbrokers (Agenti di Cambio);
- Certain local financial intermediaries enrolled in a register kept by the Bank of Italy, which are authorized to carry out investment services;
- Italian fund management companies (SGRs) or fund management companies of other EU countries authorized to carry out portfolio management ('harmonized' management companies);
- The division of Poste Italiane SpA competent for the investment services and activities;
- EU investment firms and banks with branches in Italy; and
- Other EU or non-EU entities authorized to carry out investment services or activities in Italy.

With regard to the investment services rendered by non-Italian investment firms, there is a difference based on the place of incorporation of the relevant company. In particular, EU companies need not have an 'authorization' in Italy on the basis of the principle of mutual recognition of entities already authorized in another EU member state pursuant to EU regulations having as their object the harmonization of certain products or services.

Therefore, investment firms established in other EU member states can render Investment Services (which the Consolidated Text defines for this purpose as 'services liable to mutual recognition' by reference to the MiFID) in Italy, either from their home country or through a branch in Italy, on notice to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange from the supervisory authorities of the respective country of origin; the branches of EU investment firms can start their activities two months after such notice.

Services which require an authorization from the Italian authorities are financial services rendered by EU investment firms that do not fall within the scope of application of the MiFID and the services to be rendered by non-EU investment firms.

In particular, EU investment firms can be authorized by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange to render other types of financial services not included in the list of the services liable to mutual recognition of the MiFID.

To obtain such authorization, the EU investment firm must file with the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange an application accompanied by the documentation prescribed by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. The National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange will decide on the authorization within 120 days from filing; failure to render a decision within 120 days will be taken as authorization.

Non-EU investment firms can render investment services in Italy either on a crossborder basis or through the establishment of branches, which must be authorized by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange.

For this purpose, a non-EU investment firm must file with the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange an application accompanied by the documentation prescribed by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. The application will be examined by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange only if the following circumstances obtain:

- The Italian branch complies with certain requirements provided for by the Consolidated Text for the Italian securities brokerage companies;[11]
- The applicant is actually authorized in its non-EU home country to render those investment services for which it is applying in Italy;
- The rules of the home country of the applicant governing the investment firms are equivalent to the Italian rules on securities brokerage companies with regard to the authorizations, the organization, and the supervision by the regulators;
- Mutual assistance agreements are in force between the Bank of Italy and/or the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, on one side, and the regulators of the home country of the applicant, on the other side;[12] and
- The foreign home country applies the principle of reciprocity vis-à-vis Italian companies.

The National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange will decide on the authorization within 120 days from the filing; failure to render a decision within 120 days will be taken as authorization.

11 These requirements are that the stock capital of the applicant be above the thresholds determined by the Bank of Italy, that information be provided on the organization of the applicant and on its initial activities in Italy, and that the directors and the managers of the applicant do not have certain types of criminal records.

12 The National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange has stipulated such agreements with regulators for Albania, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China (PR), Czech Republic, Egypt, France, Germany, Guernsey, Hong Kong, Hungary, Jersey, Malaysia, Poland, Portugal, Principate of Monaco, Republic of Moldova, Romania, San Marino, Singapore, Republic of Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Taiwan, Turkey, United Kingdom, and United States.

Provisions on Rendering of Investment Services

In General

The Consolidated Text provides for rules on the rendering of some investment services, as well as general rules which apply to all investment services. These general rules include the separation of the sums entrusted by the client from the other assets held by the intermediary, and the general obligation to enter into written agreements in relation to the rendering of investment services, except the advice on investments, for which the written agreement is not mandatory.

As noted, the rules on the rendering of investment services in the Consolidated Text and in the regulations issued by the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange have been materially affected in connection with the implementation of MiFID and the Level 2 Directive. The Consolidated Text provides for general principles of conduct, according to which the intermediaries are required to:

- Act with diligence, correctness, and transparency to serve clients' interest;
- Acquire from the clients such information which are necessary for the purpose of rendering the Investment Services and assure that clients are always informed;
- Use in any advertisement or promotional message information which is correct, clear, and not misleading; have procedures, including those of internal control, liable to assure that the activity of the intermediary is carried out in an efficient manner; have procedures for the identification and the limitation of the cases of conflict of interest and to assure such conflicts of interest do not adversely affect the interest of the clients; and
- Where applicable, carry out the asset management activity in a safe and independent fashion and establish procedures for the protection of the clients' interest on the assets under management.

With regard to the investment services at a more specific level, the regulatory framework is based on the distinction between those investment services, ie, portfolio management and advice on investments, with a higher added value and which require a higher level of protection for the client, other investment services such as placing of securities, which require a normal level of protection for the client, and services consisting (entirely or partly) of the mere execution of the orders of the client (execution only services), for which the protection is progressively lowered.

Such different levels of protection for the client are reflected in the information on the client that the intermediary must gather before rendering the investment services (see text, above), so that, in the case of the services with higher protection, ie, portfolio management and advice on investments, the intermediary will be able to recommend the most 'suitable' service while, for the other investment services (other than the 'execution only' services), the intermediary shall be able to recommend the most 'appropriate' services.

In this context, the main difference between the determination of the 'suitability' (adeguatezza) and of the 'appropriateness' (appropriatezza) of an investment service for a client is that in the test of suitability the intermediary must determine the profile of the client — inclusive of its financial standing and investment objectives — and the client's knowledge and experience in the investment field relevant to the specific type of product or service, while in the test of appropriateness the intermediary has only to verify the client's knowledge of the relevant type of product or service.

Another difference is that failing a complete test of suitability, the investment services cannot be rendered by the intermediary, while in case of incomplete test of appropriateness, the investment service can be rendered, but the client should be informed of the potential adverse effects of such incomplete test. Furthermore, the applicable Italian rules exempt the intermediary from the assessment of suitability or appropriateness in connection with the investment services of reception and transmission of orders and execution of orders on behalf of clients (execution only services).

For the purpose of their protection, clients are divided in categories, according to the fact that they require the investment services in carrying out a professional activity or not; in addition, there is a further category (the 'eligible counterparties') which is determined on the basis of the investment service received by the client. To these three categories of clients correspond a difference in terms of applicable rules and, in particular, for the retail clients the regulation on intermediaries issued by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange provides for a higher level of protection than for the professional clients and the eligible counterparty.

Licensing Requirements for Italian Fund Management Companies Managing UCITS and/or AIFs, Delegation and Depositary

In General

With reference to Italian fund management companies (ie, 'SGR'), no new definition has been introduced by Decree 44, however, articles 34 and 35 of the Consolidated Text provide that SGRs must be authorized by the Bank of Italy, after consulting the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, '[. . .] in order to carry out asset management activities with respect to both the AIF and to the UCITS'. This means that the same SGR can be authorized for both UCITS and AIFs, although the two authorizations remain separated.

Italian SGRs continue to be authorized by the Bank of Italy. With reference to the thresholds, the Italian legislator has implemented the relevant provisions of the AIFMD. In particular, article 35 undecies of the Consolidated Text provides that with reference to Italian AIFMs, the Bank of Italy and National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, within their respective competences, may exempt licensed operators managing Italian Reserved AIFs, of which the total AUM do not exceed €100 million or €500 million if the managed collective investment schemes are not leveraged and do not allow investors to exercise the reimbursement right for five years after the initial investment, from the provisions implementing article 6, paragraphs 1, 2, and 2 bis of the Consolidated Text (ie, supervisory functions of the Bank of Italy and National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange). These are the so-called 'below-threshold' managers.

Before the AIFMD, Italian SGRs were authorized to carry out in addition to the collective management the investment services of management on a discretionary basis, advice on investments and placing, but not the reception and the transmission of orders; in compliance with the AIFMD, the Consolidated Text now provides that SGRs managing AIFs (but not those managing UCITS) can carry out the reception and the transmission of orders, in addition to the above-mentioned investment services.

As mentioned, the previous Italian model that contemplated a separation between the promotion and the management of CIS has been overcome as set forth by article 5, paragraph 1, of the AIMD Directive, which provides that 'each AIF managed within the scope of this Directive shall have a single AIFM, responsible for the 5 compliance with this Directive'. Article 4, paragraph 1, letter b, of the AIFM Directive defines the AIFM as 'Legal persons regularly engaged in the business of managing one or more AIFs'. Therefore, the new definition of collective management set out in article 1, paragraph 1, letter n, of the Consolidated Text is 'the service that is performed through the management of collective investment schemes and of the relevant risks'.

Retail Clients

Retail clients are the category of the normal individual clients. They are determined on a residual basis, in the sense that an entity/person who is neither a professional client nor an eligible counterparty is a retail client.

Professional Clients

Professional clients are those who have the necessary experience, knowledge, and expertise to take their decision with awareness with regard to investments and who, therefore, are able to assess correctly the risks they take. Professional clients are described in MiFID, and the description made by the Italian rules is consistent thereto.

There are either professional clients per se and professional clients on request, in the sense that a person who under normal conditions would be a retail client can ask the intermediary to be treated as a professional client through a procedure that requires that the intermediary expressly discloses to the applicant the higher risks related to being treated as a professional client; the reverse also is possible, and a professional client will be able to ask the intermediary to be treated as a retail client, but the intermediary will not be bound to allow such treatment.

Eligible Counterparties

Eligible counterparties are clients who receive from the intermediary the services of execution of orders and/or dealing on own account and/or receipt and transmission of orders. The rendering of investment services by an investment firm to a client must be governed by a written agreement; such requirement does not apply to advice on investments.

Agreements Concerning Investment Services

Italian regulations provide for the minimum contents of the agreements, which include the determination on the relevant investment service and financial instruments to be used, reporting to the client and procedures to allow the transmission of instructions from the latter to the intermediary, and inducements, if any, received by the intermediary in connection with the services/financial products which are the object of the agreement. When the relevant investment service is the portfolio management, the agreement also must specify the financial instruments to be used in the client's portfolio, the level of risk, the leverage, if any, the benchmark, and whether the management can be delegated to third parties.

The National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange have clarified that such delegation can be delegated not only to EU-authorized companies, but also to non-EU companies authorized to carry out management of investment portfolios in their home country, established in non-EU countries with whom the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange has stipulated agreements of mutual co-operation. In many cases, Italian asset managers do not actively manage the investment portfolios committed by their clients, but only insert into such portfolios investment funds or SICAVs managed by third parties, thus carrying out a de facto delegation in favor of the manager of the fund utilized in the investment portfolio.

With regard to the offer (placing) of securities outside the premises of the offeror or placing agent, the Consolidated Text confirms the previous rules thereon, according to which such type of placement can be effected only through 'financial promoters', ie, persons having passed an examination administered by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange and enrolled in a register kept by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. Pursuant to National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange Resolution Number 17581 of 3 December 2010, financial promoters must act with diligence, correctness, and transparency, by respecting laws and regulations pertaining to their activity as well as laws, regulations, and procedures relating to the authorized entity which confer them the mandate.

Decree Number 184 introduced in the Consolidated Text the description of those activities which have not to be considered an offer of securities outside the premises of the offeror or placing agent (for the purpose of the enforcement of the seven-day right of withdrawal). In particular, pursuant to article 30, paragraph 2, of the Consolidated Text, the following two activities need not be considered offers outside the premises:

- An offer to professional clients; and
- An offer of the issuer's own financial instruments addressed to the members of the board of directors, of the supervisory board, to employees and agents who are not employees of the issuer, of the holding company, or if its subsidiaries, made in the respective offices or branches.

In relation to this type of placement, the Consolidated Text also provides for a seven-day right of withdrawal in favor of the investor who has entered into an agreement having as its object the purchase of securities outside the premises of the offeror or distributor. The rule does not apply to public offers of certain types of securities. The Consolidated Text also provides for rules on the promotion and the placement 'at distance' of investment services or financial products. This expression means that the offeror and the addressee of the promotion or of the offer are not physically in the same place; the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange has issued regulations to govern these activities.

Marketing of UCITS and AIFs

UCITS. In relation to the UCITS, the principle of mutual recognition will apply. In particular, an EU member state, defined as 'host country', must 'recognize' the authorization granted by another EU member state, defined 'home country', in compliance with EU rules, such as an authorization to establish an investment fund based on national provisions implementing the UCITS Directive.

Therefore, a foreign UCITS need not be 'authorized' in Italy, but only 'passported' for marketing. Through Resolution Number 18210 of 9 May 2012, the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange has issued second-level provisions having as their purpose the transposition of the rules of UCITS IV concerning the passporting of foreign UCITS in Italy. In particular, Regulation Number 18210 amended National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange Regulation Number 11971 of 14 May 1999 on Issuers of Financial Instruments, in order to implement the new rules of the Consolidated Text.

After the implementation of UCITS IV, foreign UCITS can be offered in Italy after completion of the regulator-to-regulator notification procedure. The Italian competent regulator for receiving the notification from the home country regulator is the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange.

Article 19 bis of Regulation Number 11917 introduces requirements for the drafting of the Notification Letter. Such notification must be drafted according to Commission Regulation Number 584/2010 (and accompanied by the documents specified therein, including the UCITS certificate). The National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange requires that the Notification must expressly specify whether the offering in Italy also must be addressed to retail investors (thus involving additional requirements such as the Italian Application Form, and the appointment of the paying agent, of the entity in charge of the relationship with the investors and of the placement agent), or if the offer will be addressed exclusively to 'qualified investors' as defined by article 34 ter, paragraph 1, letter b, of Regulation Number 11917, with less requirements.

UCITS IV has replaced the Simplified Prospectus with the Key Investors Information Documents (the 'KIID'). In this context, article 98 ter of the Consolidated Text expressly states that the KIID and the prospectus are 'pre-contractual' documents. This means that their drafting must comply with those principles of good faith that under the Civil Code must drive the parties in the negotiation of an agreement. In addition, the new rules of the Consolidated Text on the subject matter, introduced by the Decree, provide that 'nobody' can be held liable 'exclusively' for the contents of the KIID, either in the original language or its Italian translation, unless these contents are misleading, inaccurate, or not consistent with the correspondent parts of the prospectus.

With regard to the KIIDs of foreign UCITS, the Consolidated Text provides that they can be 'published', ie, deposited with the Prospectuses Archives of the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange on the business day preceding that of circulation in Italy, only after completion of the regulator-to-regulator notification procedure. This provision is applicable to the KIIDs of share classes/sub-funds addressed to Italian retail investors and, together with the KIIDs addressed to retail investors, also the relevant bespoke application form for use in Italy must be deposited with the Prospectuses Archives of the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange.

Article 19 bis of Regulation Number 11971 also states that the only document to be translated in Italian is the KIID, while the other documents can be translated in Italian or left, at UCITS' option, in a language customary in the sphere of international finance, which, in the case of Italy, is English.

Furthermore, article 19 bis of Regulation Number 11917 provides that the units or shares must be capable of being sold in Italy after the home country regulator has communicated to the fund that the Notification letter has been transmitted to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, it being understood that in case of offering to retail investors, the final deposit with the Prospectuses' Archives of the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange of the Application Form, the KIID, and the prospectus must be made on the business day preceding that in which the retail offering will commence.

AIFs and Foreign 'Non-Harmonized' Investment Funds. The phrase 'foreign non-harmonized investment fund', as used herein, means any non-Italian collective investment scheme not organized in compliance with the UCITS Directive. In the pre-AIFMD system, a specific procedure administered by the Bank of Italy was in place for the authorization for 'non-harmonized' funds to be marketed in Italy. After the implementation of the AIFMD, the Italian legal system only considers UCITS and AIFs. Therefore, there is not, for the time being, the possibility of authorizing collective investment schemes which are neither UCITS nor AIFs covered by the AIFMD, such as, for example, vehicles managed by a company under the AUM thresholds provided for by the AIFMD (see text, above) or AIFs of non-EU managers not yet authorized in Italy or another EU member state.

Hedge Funds and AIFs. As regards hedge funds, the main second-level regulation is Ministry of Treasury Decree Number 228 of 24 May 1999, as modified. However, so long as Decree Number 228 does not consider AIFs, it will be replaced in the next few months by a new Decree of the Ministry of Economy and Finance, implementing article 39 of the Consolidated Text concerning the determination of the general criteria with which the Italian CIS must comply.

In particular, under article 39 of the Consolidated Text, the Ministry of Economy and Finance must issue a decree in order to determine the types and structures of Italian CIS in relation, to the object of the investment, the categories of investors at whom the offer of units and shares are aimed, the open or closed form, and the duration and the methods of transfer of the assets, where applicable. In relation to the Decree, the Ministry of Economy and Finance launched a consultation procedure that was concluded on 10 June 2014. Subject to what the Ministry of Economy and Finance will decide according to the outcome of the consultation procedure, which did not raise comments on the substantial structure of the forthcoming decree, the latter should provide the following types of Italian CIS:

- Harmonized collective investment schemes, ie, UCITS;
- Italian open-ended AIFs (non-harmonized CIS that may invest up to 20 per cent in unlisted financial instruments);
- Italian closed-end AIFs (form needed to invest in real estate, loans, and other assets for which there is a market and their value can be measured at least every six months);
- Italian real estate AIFs (ie, Italian close-end AIFs investing at least two-thirds of the assets (reduced to 51 per cent in some cases) in real estate property; and
- Italian reserved AIFs, normally reserved for professional investors and that can be open end or closed end, for which the Italian rules do not provide for the categories of assets in which they must invest, and are therefore subject only to the investment rules laid down by the respective regulations.

The last class corresponds to the 'hedge funds' referred to in the previous Decree 228 (defined 'speculative funds), also in view of the fact that the AIFM of an Italian reserved AIF can allow investments by retail investors subject to a minimum of €500,000, ie, the same as the speculative funds.

With regard to marketing in Italy, and consistent with the AIFMD, article 43 of the Consolidated Text, as amended, by Decree Number 44 provides that the marketing of AIFs is the offer, even indirectly, by initiative or on behalf of the AIFM, of the units or shares of the managed AIF addressed to investors resident or having their registered office in the EU. The marketing to professional investors in Italy of the units or shares of reserved Italian AIFs, EU AIFs, and non-EU AIFs managed by an SGR or by a non-EU AIFM authorized in Italy, and the marketing to professional investors in an EU member state other than Italy, of the units or shares of Italian AIFs, EU AIFs, and non-EU AIFs managed by an SGR or a non-EU AIFM authorized in Italy, are preceded by a notification to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. The National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange must promptly provide to the Bank of Italy all the information provided in the notification and the documents attached to it.

Otherwise, the marketing of units or shares of AIFs on the initiative of the investor (the so-called 'passive marketing') does not fall within the scope of the AIFM Directive. In this context, there are no 'private placement' rules in Italy, in the sense that authorization is required even where the offer in Italy is addressed exclusively to professional investors. Under National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange guidance, 'offering in Italy' means 'taking the initiative' to contact prospective investors situated in Italy. As a consequence, a foreign fund is not considered to be 'offered' in Italy if it is sold as the result of unsolicited requests from Italian investors.

In particular, a foreign fund (including a hedge fund) which is not authorized to market its units in Italy, which has not been passported in Italy, ie, which has not obtained the relevant Bank of Italy and National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange approvals, may sell its units or shares to Italian investors provided the first investment request is initiated by the Italian investor contacting the foreign fund outside Italian territory to buy its units. When this condition is met (and, for the fund's protection, capable of being adequately evidenced, such as through a written request for information submitted by the Italian investor), the sale is considered to be foreign and not Italian, because it occurs on an unsolicited basis.

On the other hand, an 'offer' is deemed to take place in Italy, with the consequent requirement for authorization, if the first initiative to offer the units to Italian investors is taken by the foreign issuer or offeror. The other rules of the Consolidated Text for the offering of foreign AIFs in Italy are also consistent with those set out in the AIFMD, and shall be actually implemented through specific regulations of the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. It should be noted that Italy also will allow the offering of AIFs to retail investors, albeit the authorization procedure will be more complex.

Exchange Traded Funds. Another class of funds has been admitted in the Italian regulated market. The company managing the Italian regulated markets issued a Resolution on 6 September 2001, approved by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, concerning the introduction of a segment of negotiation known as the Mercato Telematico dei Fondi (MTF). This segment allows the negotiation of Exchange Traded Funds (ETF).

The MTF was replaced, in March 2007, by a new market segment, ETFplus, where not only ETF are listed, but also another type of security, called 'Exchange Traded Commodities' (ETC). As a consequence, the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange has modified Regulation Number 11971 in order to allow registration in Italy of foreign UCITS organized as ETF. From September 2014, actively managed ETFs started the trades on the ETFplus market; from October 2014, also collective investment schemes not qualifying as ETFs shall be capable of being traded on the ETFplus market at the NAV instead of the market price (applicable to ETFs).

Powers of Regulators as to Intermediaries

In General

In case of violations of the rules of the Consolidated Text, the Bank of Italy, and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, each, according to its competence as described above, are empowered to order the relevant intermediary to discontinue such violation. The term 'intermediaries' means Italian securities brokerage companies and securities management firms, as well as SICAVs and Italian branches of foreign investment firms or banks.

With regard to violations imputable to Italian or non-EU intermediaries, the competent Italian authority may prohibit commencement of new operations related to one or more investment services, as well as order the closing of one or more branches, when the violation may adversely affect the general interest of the economy or, in case of urgency, to protect the interests of investors. The same measures can be adopted vis-à-vis EU intermediaries and, in this case, the Italian authority will address a copy of the relevant order to the supervisory authority of the country of origin of the intermediary.

Furthermore, the Bank of Italy or the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange also may order the interruption of the activity in Italy of EU intermediaries or the closing of one or more branches in case of violation of the Italian rules on investment services if, notwithstanding the notice of such violation given by the Italian regulators to those of the country of origin of the relevant EU investment firm, such entity continues the action in breach of the Italian rules.

In case of danger for investors or for the markets, the President of the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange can order suspension of the functions of the boards of directors of Italian securities brokerage companies, securities management firms, or SICAVs, or of the managing boards of Italian branches of non-EU investment companies, and appoint a commissioner who will replace the above boards.

Finally, the Bank of Italy or the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange may order suspension of the marketing in Italy of foreign UCITS or collective investment schemes for a maximum period of 60 days in case of alleged violation of the rules of the Consolidated Text on UCITS and collective investment schemes. Such marketing also may be prohibited should the violations be finally ascertained.

Discipline of Intermediaries

The Consolidated Text provides for two main procedures, ie, 'extraordinary administration' (Amministrazione Straordinaria) and 'compulsory administrative dissolution' (Liquidazione Coatta Amministrativa).

Extraordinary administration can be ordered by the Minister of Economy and Finance in case of material irregularities in the management of the concerned company or in case of serious losses suffered by the company. The starting of this procedure also may be requested by the board of directors or by the extraordinary shareholders' meeting of the company, or by the commissioner above described. The same procedure also is applicable to the Italian branches of non-EU investment companies.

Compulsory administrative dissolution, which is preceded by the revocation of the authorization to provide investment services, can be ordered by the Minister of Economy and Finance in case of 'exceptionally serious' violations of the rules of the Consolidated Text or irregularities in the management of the concerned company. This procedure also is applicable to the Italian branches of non-EU investment companies, as well as to the Italian branches of EU investment companies, in case of revocation of the authorization to provide investment services in the home country.

Compensation Schemes

Finally, the Consolidated Text provides that Italian investment firms must participate in compensation schemes which have been established by a Decree of the Minister of Economy and Finance. Italian branches of EU investment firms or banks can participate in compensation schemes recognized in Italy, with regard to the activity carried out in Italy.

Italian branches of non-EU investment firms or banks must participate in compensation schemes recognized in Italy, with regard to the activity carried out in Italy, unless they participate in foreign compensation schemes equivalent to those recognized in Italy and, in such case, the Bank of Italy will verify the adequacy of such compensation schemes.

Regulated and Multilateral Trading Facilities

Regulated Markets

The Consolidated Text provides that the regulated markets of financial instruments must be organized and exercised by joint-stock companies (the 'managing company). According to the Consolidated Text, as amended for the implementation of MiFID, a 'regulated market' is a multilateral system which, in accordance with its non-discretionary rules, brings together or facilitates the bringing together of multiple third-party buying and selling interests in financial instruments admitted to trading under the rules of the market, in a way that results in a contract, and which is managed by a management company and is authorized and functions regularly.

In this regard, article 62, paragraph 1, of the Consolidated Text, as amended by Decree Number 184, provides that the organization and management of a market shall be governed by rules approved by the ordinary shareholders' meeting or the supervisory board or, if appropriate, by the management body of the stock exchange. Moreover, the Consolidated Text provides general rules on managing companies, as well as on the holding of interest in such companies. The managing of the regulated markets is authorized by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange.

By means of a Resolution of December 1997, the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange authorized Borsa Italiana SpA, a company established for this purpose, to act as managing company of the Italian Stock Exchange. The managing company has issued a series of regulations governing the organization of the Italian Stock Exchange. These regulations cover the following items:

- Formalities for the admission to the listing and cases of suspension and exclusion from the listing;
- Formalities for the transactions on the Italian Stock Exchange and duties of the traders and of the issuers;
- Formalities for the determination, publishing, and circulation of the prices; and
- Types of contracts admitted to the listing and minimum orders thereof.

Once authorized, the regulated markets are included in a list which is maintained and updated by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. Such list includes Italian regulated markets and foreign regulated markets recognized by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. As a consequence of the implementation of MiFID, the distinction between 'regulated' and 'unregulated' markets provided for by Italian law until October 2007 is no longer effective. This is because the Consolidated Text implemented the provisions of MiFID on the abrogation of the obligation to concentrate the trades on regulated markets; the trading of listed securities is no longer carried out exclusively on regulated markets, but also on 'multilateral trading facilities' and/or is carried out by 'systematic internalizers'.

According to the Consolidated Text, a 'multilateral trading facility' is a multilateral system, operated by an investment firm or a market operator which, in accordance with its non-discretionary rules, brings together multiple third-party buying and selling interests in financial instruments in a way that results in a contract. According to the Consolidated Text, a 'systematic internalizer' is an investment firm which, on an organized, frequent, and systematic basis, deals on its own account by executing clients' orders outside a regulated market or an multilateral trading facility.

The Consolidated Text provides that the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange identifies the requirements for the operations of the multilateral trading facilities and systematic internalizers, monitors the regulations and the practices adopted by multilateral trading facilities to satisfy the EU regulations, and establishes the rules of transparency pre- and post-trade for the transactions of securities listed on multilateral trading facilities and/or by systematic internalizers. In particular, the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange sets out the obligations for the management companies of the multilateral trading facilities regarding:

- Dealing and completion of transactions;
- Admission to listing of financial instruments;
- Information for the public and the users;
- Access to the system; and
- Compliance by the users with the rules of the system.

To achieve the objective of transparency, management companies of regulated markets, market managers of multilateral trading facilities, and systematic internalizers have the obligation to disseminate the current prices of purchase and selling and the volume of trade. By means of Regulation Number 16191 of 2007, as amended by Resolution Number 18214 of 9 May 2012, the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange set forth the above obligations of notification of the operations and the rules of transparency for the multilateral trading facilities and systematic internalizers.

Centralized Administration of Financial Instruments

The Consolidated Text provides that the centralized administration of financial instruments must be effected by duly authorized companies having such activity as their sole purpose. These companies are under the supervision of the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange and of the Bank of Italy. Presently, the centralized administration of financial instruments is carried out by Monte Titoli SpA.

The regulation and terms of agreement for the services of Monte Titoli (the 'Regulation) have been approved by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange in 1997, as lately amended in 2010. The Regulation governs:

- The type and characteristics of the financial instruments which can be inserted in the system of Monte Titoli; and
- The formalities for the use of the services of Monte Titoli by depositaries or issuers of securities, including the reference to specific agreements to be used for that purpose.

Moreover, the Regulation disciplines the deposit and the transfer of financial instruments administered by Monte Titoli, as well as the clearing-house and liquidation services of Monte Titoli. The Regulation also provides an appendix with the fees for the services of Monte Titoli. The latest amendments to the Regulation approved in 2010 by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange aim at rendering more efficient the administration of the paid increase of capital transactions of companies having stocks centralized with Monte Titoli SpA.

Short Selling

In connection with the Short Selling Regulation, Decree Number 179 has introduced in the Consolidated Text some important rules on the identification of the national Authorities with competence on short selling and certain aspects of derivative contracts for hedging the credit default swap risk.

In particular, the Ministry of Economy and Finance, the Bank of Italy, and the National Commission for Companies and Stock Exchange are the national competent authorities pursuant to the Short Selling Regulation. In addition, the National Commission for Companies and Stock Exchange is the authority responsible for coordinating the cooperation and exchange of information with the EU Commission, ESMA, and the competent authorities of the other member states, pursuant to article 32 of the Short Selling Regulation.

Public Offers of Financial Products

In General

As a general rule, any public offer of securities in Italy must be preceded by the issue of a prospectus and by a prior notice to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. This notice must be drafted according to an outline provided for in a regulation issued by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange.

The offer can be launched on approval of the prospectus by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, and such approval is granted by means of the clearance to deposit the prospectus with the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange for the purpose of its publication.

Decree Number 184, in accordance with Directive 2010/73/EC, has introduced rules in the Consolidated Text in order to simplify the procedure for prospectus approval. The timing for approval of the prospectus of securities of Italian issuers by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange ranges between 10 and 40 days from filing, according to the type of financial instruments which are the object of the offer.

The above terms may be suspended if the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange requires the applicant to provide further information or documents. After the approval of the prospectus, the placement must be started within six months from such approval. Those issuers that have already published a prospectus are allowed, in connection with the promotion of any further public offer launched within 12 months after such publication, to use the same prospectus with the relevant information updated as appropriate by means of a separate note (integrative note), indicating the financial instruments which are the object of the new solicitation and the relevant information.

Filing of Italian Prospectuses

The prospectuses to be filed for the first time in Italy must be drafted according to the outline provided for by EU Regulation 809/2004/EC. If the offering must be carried out only in Italy, the prospectus must be drafted in Italian. In compliance with Directive 2003/71/EC, the Italian prospectuses must include a summary. Through Regulation Number 11971, as amended by Regulation Number 18210, the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange has determined the templates covering the prospectuses for the various financial instruments that can be offered.

The guidelines provided by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange cover the 'solicitation' accompanied by the listing on security markets. Therefore, in the case of a prospectus related to a 'solicitation' without listing or to a listing without solicitation, the guidelines provided by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange will be enforced only to the extent their provisions are applicable.

Filing of Foreign Prospectuses

Foreign prospectuses, drafted in compliance with Directive Number 2003/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2010/73/EC, can be freely circulated in Italy, provided the foreign regulator which approved the prospectus transmits to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange the following documents:

- A certificate noting that the prospectus has been drafted in compliance with Directive Number 2003/71/EC;

- A copy of the prospectus; and
- An Italian translation of the summary.

While the summary must be translated into Italian, the prospectus can be deposited and circulated in Italian or in a language 'commonly used in the world of the international finance', such as English. For the avoidance of doubt, the rules on the recognition of foreign prospectuses do not apply to the prospectuses of a UCITS, for which the registration procedure described in the previous paragraphs will apply.

Private Placements of Financial Products and Prospectus Obligation Exemptions

Situation Prior to Issue of Consolidated Text

The Consolidated Text does not provide for an express definition of private placement, while the public offers are expressly defined. Therefore, this definition should be taken as reference to determine which placements do not fall within the field of application of the rules on public offers and, therefore, can be considered as 'private placements'.

Thus, in the Italian regulatory system, a 'private placement' is an offer of securities for which the issue of a prospectus and/or its approval by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange is not required. The list of exemptions from prospectus requirements was established in a regulation issued by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange on the basis of the regulatory powers granted by Law Number 216/74. The relevant placements were the following:

- Offers of securities addressed only to 'professional investors', such term defining, among other entities, banks, insurance companies, securities brokerage companies, fiduciary companies carrying out asset management services, certain financial companies, closed-end investment funds, pension funds, and investment funds;
- Auction sales of securities effected pursuant to judicial or administrative proceedings;
- Offers of the entire capital, or of a controlling interest in, a company, addressed to one person only;
- Setting up of a company with the invitation to the public to subscribe for shares in such company pursuant to articles 2333 et seq of the Civil Code;
- Offers of securities addressed to the managers of the issuer, or of the companies controlled by, or controlling, the issuer;
- Offers of securities addressed to the employees of the issuer, individually determined, provided that the number of securities offered to each employee had been previously determined and the same securities could not be assigned to another employee; and

- Offers of shares of companies managing sport teams.

Any other placement of financial instruments required the issue of a prospectus. Therefore, certain exemptions recognized in other jurisdictions, such as offers addressed to a number of investors — either professional or non-professional — not exceeding the thresholds indicated by the foreign regulator, offers the value of which did not exceed a given threshold, or offers of financial instruments issued by entities with certain requirements of creditworthiness (eg, European central banks), were not applicable in Italy.

Furthermore, the language of the certain exemptions provided for by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange did not cover all the cases. For example, the exemption described above did not cover stock option plans addressed to the employees (not managers or directors) of the Italian subsidiaries of foreign issuers, thus generating a series of inconveniences and delays in many multinational stock option plans.

In particular, some of these multinational stock option plans required the issue of a prospectus and its approval by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange for the reason of having been addressed also to the employees of Italian subsidiaries, such category of addressees of the offer not being contemplated under the above exemption; on the other hand, the stock option plans addressed only to the Italian employees and managers of branches (not incorporated) of the mother company or to the managers of subsidiaries did not require the issue of a prospectus.

Finally, the most significant characteristic of the regulatory system preceding the Consolidated Text was that the exceptions to the obligation of issuing a prospectus were provided for by rules with an inferior rank in the hierarchy of the sources of the law (such as a regulation of the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange) and, for this reason, were more liable to changes or abolishment.

Effects of Consolidated Text

The rules of the Consolidated Text have been issued with the purpose of avoiding the inconveniences described in the preceding paragraph. Indeed, the Italian legislator improved both the legislative technique and the contents of the rules. In particular, the Consolidated Text itself provides for, or outlines, a number of 'solicitations for an investment' for which a prospectus is not necessary, which can be considered as private placements. This means that the Italian legislator paid to the private placements a greater attention than to the system of Law Number 216/74.

The expression 'outlines' has been used because some provisions of the Consolidated Text must be implemented by means of Regulations issued by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. For example, the Consolidated Text provides that the issues or offers of securities the value of which does not exceed a given threshold are exempted from the prospectus obligations; accordingly, the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange has determined such threshold by means of a Regulation.

In particular, Regulation Number 11971 has filled in the gaps left by article 100 of the Consolidated Text with regard to some details of certain issues or offers of securities exempted from prospectus obligations. Furthermore, the Consolidated Text granted to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange the power of determining types of placement for which the rules on the 'solicitation for an investment' apply only in part.

The National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange exercised such power and indicated in Regulation Number 11971 some classes of placements which, even though a prospectus must be issued and circulated among potential investors, need not be filed with the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange for prior approval. This means that the issuer or offeror must deliver to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange a copy of the prospectus when the securities will be actually placed, provided that the same prospectus is drafted in compliance with the general rules on the subject matter. As a consequence, the prospectus circulated for these types of placements is circulated under the issuer's or offeror's sole liability.

Exemptions from Prospectus Obligation

The list of 'solicitations for an investment' not subject to the obligation of issuing a prospectus directly provided for by article 100 of the Consolidated Text consists of the following offers:

- Offers addressed exclusively to 'qualified investors'; it should be noted that the current definition of 'qualified investors' as given in Regulation Number 11971 is now the same as the one of the 'professional investors' under the MiFID and the relevant Italian implementation rules;
- Offers addressed to a number of persons not exceeding the number determined by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange regulations (for the relevant figure, see below);
- Offers the overall value of which does not exceed the thresholds determined by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange regulations (for the relevant figure, see below);
- Offers consisting of securities issued or guaranteed by member states of the European Union, or by international public institutions of which one or more member states of the EU are parties;
- Offers consisting of securities issued by the European Central Bank or by central banks of member states of the EU;
- Offers consisting of securities issued by banks, other than shares or financial instruments, which allow the acquisition of shares or insurance products issued by insurance companies; and

- Offers consisting of money market instruments issued by banks with maturity not exceeding 12 months.

Another group of offers exempted from the issue of a prospectus and its prior approval by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange is provided for by Regulation Number 11971. These offers are the following:

- Being addressed to less than 150 persons;
- Amounting to less than €5,000,000, calculated over a period of 12 months;
- Amounting to less than €100,000 inside the EU, calculated over a period of 12 months;
- Involving securities with a total consideration of at least €100,000 per investor for each separate offer;
- Involving securities of which the denomination per unit is not less than €100,000;
- Involving securities issued with a view to obtaining the means necessary to achieve their non-profit-making objectives by associations with legal status or non-profit-making bodies, recognized by a member state of the EU;
- Involving shares issued in substitution for shares of the same class already issued if the issuing of such new shares does not entail any increase in the issued capital;
- Involving securities offered in connection with a takeover by means of an exchange offer, provided that a document is available containing information which is regarded by the competent authority as being equivalent to that of the prospectus, taking into account the requirements of Community legislation;
- Involving securities offered, allotted, or to be allotted in connection with a merger or a spin off, provided that a document is available containing information which is regarded by the competent authority as being equivalent to that of the prospectus, taking into account the requirements of Community legislation;
- Involving shares offered, allotted, or to be allotted free of charge to existing shareholders, and dividends paid out in the form of shares of the same class as the shares in respect of which such dividends are paid, provided that the company has its registered office in an EU member state and a document is made available containing information on the number and nature of the shares and the reasons for and details of the offer;
- Involving securities offered, allotted, or to be allotted to existing or former directors or existing or former employees by an issuer which has securities already admitted to trading on a regulated market or by the parent company, a subsidiary, an affiliate, or an undertaking subject to joint control, provided that the securities are of the same class as those already admitted to trading on the same market and that a document is made available containing information on the number and nature of the securities and the reasons for and details of the offer; and

- Having as the subject matter financial instruments which are different from the share capital issued in a continuous or repeated manner by banks and which are not subordinate, convertible, or exchangeable; do not confer the right to subscribe to or acquire other types of financial instruments and are not linked to a derivative instrument; give evidence of receipt of reimbursable deposits; and are covered by a system of deposit guarantees according to articles 96 to 96 quater of Legislative Decree Number 385 of 1 September 1993, related to deposit guarantee systems.

As mentioned, Regulation Number 11971 also provides for a 'third gender' of placements. In particular, even though the issue of a prospectus and its circulation among potential subscribers is required for these placements, the issuer or offeror need not obtain from the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange the prior approval of the prospectus; nor must it give prior notice of his intention of placing the relevant securities.

In any case, a copy of the prospectus must be delivered to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange when the relevant securities will be actually placed. Moreover, the prospectus must be drafted in compliance with the general rules on the drafting of prospectuses and, therefore, it is circulated under the issuer's or offeror's sole liability since there is not a prior control by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. The National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange remains vested with the power of suspending the placement in case of violations of the applicable rules. These placements are the following:

- Offers having as their object financial instruments offered in option to the shareholders of issuers of listed shares or convertible bonds, or of 'securities diffused among the public' (see text, above);
- Offers the overall value of which does not exceed the threshold of €5 million; and
- Offers addressed to the employees, retired employees, agents, and persons having regular business relationships with the companies indicated above.[13]

Private Placements of UCITS and Collective Investment Schemes

Offers Addressed to Italian Institutional Investors

Private placements in Italy of UCITS and collective investment schemes (as defined above) are subject only partly to Regulation Number 11971, since other rules, including specific rulings of the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange and the Bank of Italy, apply to the subject matter.

13 In such case, the results of the offer must be communicated to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange.

In particular, the offers only addressed to institutional investors will not be exempted from passporting requirements, thus involving that for such type of offers Italy does not allow the so-called 'private placement exception' but only an exemption from certain prospectus requirements.

Italian Institutional Investors Investing Abroad

According to rulings of the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, Italian asset managers acting on an individual and discretionary basis are allowed to insert in their investment portfolios units of UCITS or collective investment schemes not registered for marketing in Italy. This permission is grounded on the freedom of the Italian asset managers to approach directly the foreign issuer, or the foreign distributor, in the home country, to purchase units of UCITS or collective investment schemes not registered in Italy. Indeed, the 'initiative' is taken outside the national borders by the Italian entity and, therefore, there is neither a solicitation nor an offer directed by the foreign UCITS, nor its distributor, to Italian investors and, therefore, no registration requirements apply.

Both the Bank of Italy and the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange provide for a series of formalities to avoid that this facilitation be construed as an avoidance of the Italian rules on UCITS and collective investment schemes registration. In particular, the Bank of Italy estimates that an elusion may likely take place if the purchase of the unregistered UCITS and collective investment schemes by Italian asset managers does not have the characteristics of a genuine management of investment portfolios, which is 'personalized', 'customized', and 'dynamic'.

Accordingly, the elements which are in conflict with real asset management are a massive and virtually exclusive use of the unregistered UCITS and collective investment schemes, as well as the absence of sales (redemptions) of them, once they have been inserted in the investment portfolio. According to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, the Italian asset manager must acquire adequate information on the unregistered UCITS and collective investment schemes to advise the client on the risks of the investment. Moreover, the organization of the unregistered UCITS must allow the exercise of the rights of the Italian investor also in case of closing of the investment account managed by the Italian asset manager.

Voluntary Offers

With regard to tender offers, the Consolidated Text has repealed the existing regulations on tender offers, ie, Law Number 149/92. According to the Consolidated Text, the offeror must previously communicate its intention of organizing a 'voluntary' tender offer to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange. The National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange may request further information. The offeror must also publish a document, to be previously submitted to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange, containing information on the offer; this document will be circulated among the holders of the financial products which are the target of the offer.

National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange Regulation 11971 provides for an outline for the drafting of the document of the offeror, as well as the formalities for the launch of competing offers. Relaunches will be capable of being made by other offerors without price limits, provided they are made within the fifth day preceding the closing of the first offer.

The duration of the offer may range between 15 and 40 days, and the offer can start at least five days after the approval of the offering document by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock which, by means of a resolution, is entitled to postpone such term to 55 days in the interest of the investors. The Consolidated Text provides that, if the target company is an Italian-listed company, the same company cannot implement defensive tactics, unless these are authorized by the shareholders' meeting. The mere research of other offers is not considered a defensive tactic.

Compulsory Offers

Articles 105–112 of the Consolidated Text govern three cases of compulsory tender offers on Italian companies listed on Italian regulated markets. The first case is the 'subsequent' tender offer. In particular, the acquisition of at least 30 per cent of voting shares of the capital of an Italian-listed company, made either directly or through trust companies or nominates, involves the obligation of the purchaser to tender for all the remaining capital of the relevant listed company. The price per share in such compulsory tender offer is determined according to criteria set forth by the Consolidated Text.

The second case of compulsory tender offer is the 'partial-acquisition takeover bid'. It occurs when the above-mentioned shareholding exceeding 30 per cent is acquired as a result of a public offer to buy at least 60 per cent of the listed securities and the following conditions are satisfied:

- The offeror has not acquired shareholdings exceeding one per cent in the 12 months preceding the notice to be given to the National Commission for the Companies and the Stock Exchange;
- The effectiveness of the offer has been made subject to approval by the shareholders in possession of the majority of securities; and
- The National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange grants the exemption after verifying the compliance with the requirements specified in items 1 and 2, above.[14]

14 In such event, the obligation to acquire all securities does not apply.

Finally, the last case of compulsory tender offers is the 'mandatory squeeze-out', according to which, when as a result of a full takeover bid, the bidder holds at least 95 per cent of the capital represented by securities, the acquisition of the remaining securities is mandatory should any other party so request.

Furthermore, still within the context of a compulsory tender offer, any party becoming holder of a quota exceeding 90 per cent of capital represented by securities admitted to trading on a regulated market is obliged to mandatorily squeeze out the remaining securities admitted to trading on a regulated market by any holder thereof unless a float sufficient to ensure regular trading performance is restored within 90 days.

The obligations provided for in the first and the third cases of mandatory offers also apply to parties acting in concert when, as a result of purchases made by even only one of the parties, they come into possession of a total holding exceeding said percentages. Regulation Number 11971 provides for some circumstances in which, even though an acquisition would be subject to a compulsory tender offer, such obligation does not apply. These situations are the following:

- The majority of the voting rights is held by a shareholder or a group of shareholders different from the purchaser;
- The acquisition is made through a capital subscription within the context of an increase of the capital of the target company in connection with the restructuring of its debt following a situation of crisis;
- The participation is acquired through a transaction between companies the majority of which is held, directly or indirectly, by the same persons;
- The threshold is exceeded as a consequence of the exercise of option or conversion rights;
- The 30 per cent threshold is exceeded by no more than three per cent and the purchaser undertakes to sell the exceeding interest within 12 months and not to exercise the relevant voting rights during such period; and
- The threshold is exceeded as a consequence of a merger or of a spin-off approved on the basis of effective and motivated industrial needs and deliberated by a shareholders' meeting of the company the shares of which would otherwise be the object of the offer.

The Consolidated Text provides that a shareholder who is party to a shareholders' agreement can withdraw without prior notice from such agreement if he decides to sell his shares to the offeror in a compulsory 'subsequent' tender offer or in a 'partial-acquisition takeover bid'.

Disclosure of Corporate Information

The Consolidated Text provides for rules on the transparency and the disclosure of corporate information. These rules must be complied with by the entities which issue financial instruments dealt (or to be dealt) in the Italian regulated markets, with some exceptions for certain types of obligations. In particular, the rules on the issue of a prospectus and on the disclosure of circumstances which may affect the price of the financial instruments do not apply to those public entities for which no prospectus obligations exist (see text, above). Other rules of the Consolidated Text on the transparency apply to Italian listed companies. They concern:

- The existence and the characteristics of the shareholders' agreements (the existence of which must be communicated to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange and to the Register of Undertakings, as well as the object of a press announcement); and
- The disclosure of the proprietary arrangements in such companies.

In particular, the Consolidated Text has confirmed the rule of Law Number 216/74 according to which the two per cent of the capital represented by shares with voting rights of a company listed in Italy is the lowest threshold for the disclosure obligation to the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange and to the participated company.

Furthermore, by means of Regulation Number 11971, the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange provided that the disclosure obligation arises on the following thresholds of interest being passed: two per cent, five per cent, 7.5 per cent, 10 per cent, and subsequent multiples of five. The disclosure should be made within five days, during which period the markets are open, from the transaction which involved the passing of the threshold, and only special forms approved by the National Commission for Companies and the Stock Exchange should be used for the purpose of such communication.

Proxy Solicitations and Powers of Minorities

The Consolidated Text introduced for the first time in the Italian legal system rules on proxy solicitations. Pursuant to Legislative Decree Number 27 of 2010, amending the Consolidated Text, proxy solicitation can be carried out within 31 October 2010 by investment firms, banks, savings management companies, SICAVs, and companies having the proxy solicitation as their sole purpose.

For those meetings held after 31 October 2010, Legislative Decree Number 27 sets out that solicitation is performed by financial promoters through dissemination of a statement and a proxy form. The vote relating to shares for which proxy is conferred is exercised by the promoter, who may be substituted only by a person specifically indicated in the proxy form and in the solicitation statement. The information contained in the proxy statement or the proxy form and any sent out during a solicitation or collection of proxies must enable shareholders to make an informed decision.

The promoter is liable for the completeness of information sent out during a solicitation. The powers of minority shareholders of listed companies are regulated by the Civil Code, in particular by articles 2367, 2408, 2409, and 2393 bis. These articles cover, respectively:

- The directors' obligation to call a shareholders' meeting on request of the minority;
- Reports of irregularities to the board of statutory auditors and statutory auditors' obligation to promptly inspect and call a shareholders' meeting; and
- Corporate legal action against directors.

Insider Trading

Insider trading is punished with criminal sanctions. The Consolidated Text provides for an extraterritorial enforceability of the rules on insider trading and the circulation of notices which are apt to alter the price of financial instruments, when the above concern financial instruments dealt in Italian regulated markets.

Criminal and Administrative Sanctions

Articles 166–196 of the Consolidated Text provide a list of criminal and administrative sanctions for violations of various rules of the Consolidated Text. The Consolidated Text has introduced a new discipline based on non-criminal penalties (administrative pecuniary sanctions), rather than criminal sanctions, as was the case under Law Number 216/74 and similar provisions.

In this context, the lack of disclosure of a holding in an Italian-listed company, with a delay of more than 30 days, no longer is a crime. Legislative Decree Number 61 of 11 April 2002 introduced a new discipline for the criminal and administrative violations of companies, as set out in articles 2637 and 2638 of the Civil Code and article 622 of the Criminal Code.

Article 2637, in particular, governs the criminal sanctions to be applied to anybody who discloses false or tendentious information with the purpose to influence the price of the financial instruments. Article 2638 replaces articles 171 and 174 of the Consolidated Text, governing the criminal sanctions to be applied in case of obstruction of the supervisory activity by the disclosure of false or misleading information and data rendered to the Bank of Italy or to the National Commission for the Companies and the Stock Exchange.

Article 622 of the Criminal Code provides for sanctions against those professionals or officers who disclose or reveal confidential information gathered in connection with their professional activity or office, or use such confidential information for their own or third parties' profits. Furthermore, Decree Number 179 has introduced in the Consolidated Text fines for breach of the provisions of Short Selling Regulation.

Fines contemplated by the Consolidated Text will be increased when the maximum fine seems inadequate, because of the personal qualities of the offender, the entity of the profit gained, or by the effects produced on the market. Finally, the application of the fines contemplated by the Consolidated Text entails the confiscation of the product or profit gained through the illicit fact and, if the confiscation is not possible, sums of money, assets, or other benefits of equivalent value will be confiscated.

Introduction

Regulatory System

Japan is a Civil Law country. After the Meiji Restoration in 1868, when the feudal regime collapsed and the Emperor Meiji's government started modernising Japan, much legislation was introduced with influences from European statutes and legal concepts, such as those of France and Germany. After World War II, the influence from United States legislation was overwhelming during the post-war period. Much new regulatory legislation was adopted and modelled on the United States legislation. In such an environment, the Securities and Exchange Law[1] was enacted.

The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, formerly known as the Securities and Exchange Law, is a basic law of Japanese securities regulations and, when enacted in 1948, was modelled on the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 of the United States. The Securities and Exchange Law has been significantly amended more than 30 times since its enactment more than 50 years ago. It has been influenced by United States securities regulations to a large extent. The 2006 amendments to the Securities and Exchange Law, the principal portion of which became effective 2007, have changed the name of the law to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law.[2] The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law regulates the broad aspects of capital market activities, such as disclosures in the primary and secondary markets. It also regulates market participants, such as financial instruments firms and financial instruments exchanges. In addition to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, there are many special laws and regulations which govern particular areas of capital market activities or particular types of market participants.

1 Securities and Exchange Law, Law Number 25 of 1948, as amended.

2 The amendments also contain significant revisions to the former Securities and Exchange Law. The purpose of the amendments was to establish a legislative framework for investor protection covering a wide range of financial products which used to be regulated separately. Laws such as the Law Concerning Foreign Securities Firms, the Financial Futures Trading Law, the Law Concerning Regulation of Investment Advisory Business Relating to Securities, and the Law Concerning the Regulation of the Mortgage Business were abolished and incorporated into the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law.

Legal Sources

Source of Law

As described above, the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law is the basic law regulating the capital market activities and participants. The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law consists of the following chapters:

- Chapter 1 — General Provisions.
- Chapter 2 — Corporate Disclosures.
- Chapter 2-2 — Disclosures relating to Tender Offers.
- Chapter 2-3 — Disclosure relating to Substantial Holding of Shares.
- Chapter 2-4 — Special Treatments regarding Electronic Disclosure.
- Chapter 2-5 — Provision and Announcement of Specific Securities Information.
- Chapter 3 — Financial Instruments Firms.
- Chapter 3-2 — Financial Instruments Introducing Brokerage Firms.
- Chapter 4 — Securities Dealers Associations.
- Chapter 4-2 — Investor Protecting Fund.
- Chapter 5 — Financial Instruments Exchanges.
- Chapter 5-2 — Foreign Stock Exchanges.
- Chapter 5-3 — Financial Instruments Transaction Clearing Organisations.
- Chapter 5-4 — Securities Finance Companies.
- Chapter 6 — Regulations relating to Trading of Securities.
- Chapter 6-2 — Monetary Penalty.
- Chapter 7 — Miscellaneous Provisions.
- Chapter 8 — Penal Provisions.
- Chapter 9 — Investigations of Irregularities.

The Enforcement Order Concerning Financial Instruments and Exchange Law has been issued under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law. Numerous Ministerial Ordinances have been issued under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law and the Enforcement Order. There are laws which govern special areas of securities regulation of which, among others, particular attention should be paid to the Financial Instruments Investment Trust Law.[3]

Administrative Guidance

In addition to the laws and regulations described above, each of which has the force of law, officers of the competent authorities used to exercise their power of administrative guidance by issuing numerous circulars and notices, which did not have the force of law, but which expressed the authority's view on the interpretation of law or the policy of the administration which was expected to be complied with or, in certain cases, set forth the detailed procedures to implement the regulatory requirements.

Non-compliance with such administrative guidance did not necessarily result in the violation of law, but the compliance was expected by the authorities and, in fact, market participants complied with the administrative guidance to maintain good relationships with the supervisory authorities and conduct their business smoothly. Therefore, the administrative guidance also was very important for the market participants.

To enhance the transparency of government administration, the Ministry of Finance announced in June 1998 the abolition of its practice of publishing administrative guidance. In its place, the necessary procedures have been, or will be, incorporated into the appropriate laws and regulations, and internal procedures to handle matters within a particular jurisdiction have been compiled in the procedural guidelines. The procedural guidelines do not have the force of law, but remain important as in the case of the administrative guidance.

Rules of the Financial Instruments Exchanges

If an institution is a member or trading participant[4] of a financial instruments exchange,[5] or if securities are listed on a financial instruments exchange, such institution or the parties involved in the transaction of such securities must comply with the rules of such exchange.

Rules of the Japan Securities Dealers Association

In accordance with the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, the Japan Securities Dealers Association has been organised. Almost all securities firms registered pursuant to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law are members of the Japan Securities Dealers Association, and the Japan Securities Dealers Association serves as a self-regulatory organisation for securities firms. Therefore, any transactions involving a Japan Securities Dealers Association member are subject to rules of the Japan Securities Dealers Association.

Authorities

The Minister of Finance (and the Ministry of Finance) used to have strong and comprehensive power over the Japanese capital market. Some of the powers of the Ministry of Finance under the Securities and Exchange Law were transferred to the Cabinet Office and the Financial Supervisory Agency, which was newly established in 1998 under the Law Concerning Establishment of the Financial Reconstruction Committee.[6]

4 'Trading financial instruments participants' means financial instruments firms that are qualified to trade securities at the relevant financial instruments exchange in their own names.
5 The former stock exchange now falls into the category of financial instruments exchange.
6 Law Concerning Establishment of the Financial Reconstruction Committee, Law Number 130 of 1998.

The Financial Supervisory Agency was attached to the Financial Reconstruction Committee, which was established in 1998 under the Law to deal with the financial crisis in Japan resulting from the Japanese 'bubble' economy being over. Until the next reformation in 2001, the Ministry of Finance, the Cabinet Office, and the Financial Supervisory Agency had regulated the Japanese financial market. The administrative system in Japan was reorganised effective as of January 2001, pursuant to the Law Concerning Reform of Governmental Authorities.[7]

The reorganisation was made for the purpose of strengthening the power of the Cabinet Office and downsizing, and ensuring efficiency of, governmental authorities. The Financial Supervisory Agency and the Financial Reconstruction Committee were united to the Financial Services Agency that was attached to the Cabinet Office.

Prime Minister

All of the powers granted to the Ministry of Finance were transferred to the Prime Minister due to the establishment of the Financial Services Agency. Almost all of those powers are entrusted to the Financial Services Agency under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law.

Financial Services Agency

The Financial Services Agency is attached to the Cabinet Office and is in charge of:

- The supervision of the banking, insurance, securities, and other financial industries; and
- Surveillance to secure the fairness of securities and other financial transactions.

The Securities and Exchange Surveillance Commission, which was attached to the Ministry of Finance (and then to the Financial Supervisory Agency), is now attached to the Financial Services Agency. The supervision of the financial industries used to be within the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Finance, but currently it belongs to the Financial Services Agency.

Securities and Exchange Surveillance Commission

In General. The Securities and Exchange Surveillance Commission (the 'Commission') consists of three commissioners with supporting staff, and it performs a variety of duties.

Investigation of Irregularities. The officials of the Commission have authority to investigate irregularities. 'Irregularities' means offences which undermine the fairness of the securities transactions, which include the following:

- Filing of a securities registration statement which contains material misstatements;
- Market manipulation; and
- Use of unlawful devices or schemes in effecting the securities transactions.

7 Law Concerning Reform of Governmental Authorities, Law Number 103 of 2000.

Investigation of Securities Companies. In addition to the authority to investigate irregulatories, the Commission has authority to investigate the business and assets of securities companies, financial instruments exchanges, the Japan Securities Dealers' Association, and issuers of securities listed on financial instruments exchanges or traded over the counter.

Investigation of Other Institutions. Furthermore, the Commission has authority to investigate other securities-related institutions, including investment trust management companies.

Japan Securities Dealers Association

As a self-regulatory organisation, the Japan Securities Dealers Association promulgates numerous rules which regulate its members. Almost all the registered securities firms and certain other financial institutions are members of the Japan Securities Dealers Association. The Japan Securities Dealers Association rules must be referred to when a transaction is executed with the involvement of the Japan Securities Dealers Association member firm.

Financial Instruments Exchanges

The financial instruments exchanges, which include stock exchanges, also are self-regulatory organisations. When a transaction is executed with the involvement of a member or trading participant of a financial instruments exchange, the rules of such exchange must be referred to, whether or not such transaction is executed on the exchange.

Other Associations

There are other associations, such as the Securities Investment Trust Association, of which securities investment trust management companies and securities companies are members, and the Securities Investment Advisory Business Association, of which investment advisory and agency firms and investment management firms investment advisers are members. These associations also promulgate rules and guidelines addressed to their respective members, and these rules and guidelines also may need to be considered to execute transactions with such members.

Overview of Securities Regulations

In General

The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law regulates the issuance, trading, and other transactions of securities. For the purposes of the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, securities are defined to mean:

- Government bonds;
- Local government bonds;
- Bonds issued by a juristic person in accordance with a special law;

- Debentures provided for in the Law Concerning Securitisation of Assets;[8]
- Debentures;
- Investment certificates issued by a juristic person established under a special law;
- Preferred investment certificates or certificates representing subscription rights to new preferred investments provided for in the Law Concerning Preferred Investment to Financial Institutions in the Form of Associations;[9]
- Preferred investment certificates or certificates representing subscription rights to preferred investments provided for in the Law Concerning Securitisation of Specified Assets;
- Share certificates, representing share subscription warrants and certificates representing stock acquisition rights;
- Beneficial certificates (including foreign beneficial certificates) of investment trusts (including foreign investment trusts) provided for in the Law Concerning Investment Trusts and Investment Companies;
- Investment certificates (including foreign investment certificates) provided for in the Law Concerning Investment Trusts and Investment Companies;
- Beneficial certificates of loan trusts;
- Beneficial certificates of special purpose trusts provided for in the Law Concerning Securitisation of Assets;
- Promissory notes issued by a juristic person for raising funds necessary to engage in business and which are prescribed by a Cabinet Office's Ordinance (ie, commercial paper);[10]
- Mortgage Securities provided in the Mortgage Securities Law;[11]
- Securities or certificates issued by foreign countries or foreign juristic persons which are of the same nature as those mentioned in the preceding respective items (excluding beneficial certificates and investment certificates provided for in the Law Concerning Investment Trusts and Investment Companies);
- Securities or certificates which are issued by foreign juristic persons and which represent beneficial rights under trusts which hold the loan claims of banks or other persons engaging in the loan business, or other rights of the same nature prescribed by a Cabinet Office's Ordinance;
- Securities or certificates issued by a person who accepts deposit of securities or certificates mentioned in the preceding respective items outside a jurisdiction in which securities or certificates so deposited were issued and representing rights to securities or certificates so deposited (ie, depositary receipts);

10 Cabinet Office's Ordinance Concerning the Definition Prescribed in article 2 of the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, Ministry Ordinance Number 14 of 1993.

11 Law Number 15 of 1993.

- Securities or certificates which are prescribed by an Enforcement Order to secure the public interest or the protection of investors in light of their negotiability or other circumstances (currently, negotiable certificates of deposit issued by foreign juristic persons are prescribed by the Enforcement Order);[12]
- Beneficial rights (whether or not represented by certificates) under trusts;
- Rights (whether or not represented by certificates) which are issued by foreign juristic persons and which are of the same nature as those mentioned in the immediately preceding item;
- Equity interests in gomei kaisha, goshi kaisha (to the extent prescribed by the Enforcement Order), or godo kaisha, or equity interests of foreign juristic person which are of the same nature as those mentioned in this item;
- The right to receive dividends or distribution of assets arising out of the business that uses cash, securities, bills of exchange, and promissory notes contributed by equity owners (equity partners) to the extent that such right is not included in any one of the following (securities mentioned in this item and the immediately preceding three items (except for those involving issuance of certificates) are referred to as 'deemed securities'): (a) Other kinds of securities; (b) The right of an equity partner when all equity partners are involved in a business for investments; (c) The right with a condition that dividends or distribution of assets to an equity partner may not exceed the amount of his capital contribution; (d) The right based on an insurance contract, a mutual aid contract under the Agricultural Cooperative Law, a mutual aid contract under the Small and Medium-Sized Enterprise Cooperative Association Act, or a contract under the Real Estate Specified Joint Business Law; (e) The right based on cooperative associations in which participation is restricted to certified public accountants, lawyers, judicial scriveners, land and house surveyors, certified administrative procedures specialists, certified tax accountants, certified real estate appraisers, certified social insurance labour consultants, or patent attorneys, and those whose exclusive businesses for investment constitute the operation of such businesses; (f) The right based on a stock ownership plan; (g) The right relating to capital contribution for a corporation established in accordance with the laws and regulations of Japan (except for a limited-liability intermediate corporation); and (h) The right based on a contract relating to shared forest systems based on the Special Measures Law Concerning Shared Forest Systems;
- Monetary claims (whether or not represented by certificates) which are prescribed by an Enforcement Order to be necessary and adequate for the public interest or the protection of investors in light of their status of distribution or other circumstances (currently, there are no such claims prescribed by the Enforcement Order); and
- Securities or certificates representing options on securities or certificates mentioned in the preceding respective items (ie, covered warrants).

For the purposes of the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, the above list is restrictive and not illustrative. Accordingly, if an instrument does not fall within any of the categories listed above, such instrument is not a security under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law.

12 Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, Enforcement Order Number 321 of 1965.

Under the Securities and Exchange Law, 'securities business' means the business of buying and selling of securities (dealer), acting as broker, intermediary, or agent in connection with securities transactions (broker), underwriting of securities (underwriter), and/or selling or distributing of securities (distributor). Under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, 'financial instruments business' includes investment advisory business, investment management business, acting as broker or agent in concluding agreements regarding investment advisory or investment management agreements, custody of securities, and/or book-entry transfers for bonds, as well as securities business under the former Securities and Exchange Law. Financial instruments business can be conducted only by companies registered with the Financial Services Agency, except that banks may conduct securities business in accordance with the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law and other relevant laws.

The Financial System Reform Law has introduced a new definition for the 'over-the-counter securities derivative transaction', and 'business involving the over-the-counter securities derivative transaction' is included within 'securities business'. 'Over-the-counter securities derivative transaction' means a forward transaction on securities or over-the-counter securities indices, an over-the-counter securities option transaction, an over-the-counter swap transaction on securities, or an over-the-counter securities index. As for derivatives, the former Securities and Exchange Law used to be applied only to derivatives underlying assets of which were either securities or securities indices. The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law expanded the scope of underlying assets so that 'derivatives' should now include interest rate and currency swaps, credit derivatives, and weather derivatives. Derivative transactions are divided into three categories: market derivative transactions (traded at domestic markets), foreign market derivative transactions (traded at foreign markets), and over-the-counter derivative transactions (traded at other than financial instruments markets or foreign financial instruments markets). The business of buying and selling securities by means of electronic data processing devices based on a price of securities on financial instruments exchanges or in over-the-counter markets or a price determined by negotiation or acting as an intermediary in such transactions by means of electronic data processing devices have been included in the definition of 'financial instruments business'.

Corporate Disclosure

In General

The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law provides the disclosure requirements in connection with the public offering of securities and the ongoing disclosure requirements.

Public Offerings

The disclosure requirements of the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law apply both to public offerings in Japan of newly issued securities (primary public offerings) and to public offerings in Japan of previously issued and outstanding securities (secondary public offerings). Pursuant to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, solicitation of an offer to buy newly issued securities constitutes a primary public offering, unless it is made:

- In the case of securities other than deemed securities;
- Exclusively to qualified institutional investors and the securities are of a kind 'unlikely to be transferred to persons other than qualified institutional investors';
- Exclusively to professional investors by registered financial instruments business operators under entrustment from their clients and the securities are of a kind 'unlikely to be transferred to persons other than professional investors'; or
- To fewer than 50 persons and the securities are of a kind 'unlikely to be transferred to many persons'; and
- In the case of deemed securities, the number of purchasers of the financial instruments is less than 500 as a result of the offering of the financial instruments.

For the purposes of both of the exceptions above, 'private shares' are the only equity shares that will constitute securities that are 'unlikely to be transferred to many persons'. Private shares are shares of the same class as shares previously issued by the same issuer which are not:

- Listed on a financial instruments exchange in Japan;
- Registered with the Japan Securities Dealers Association as over-the-counter shares;
- Fungible with shares that were previously the subject of a public offering in connection with which a securities registration statement (or a supplemental document to a shelf registration statement, as the case may be) was filed with the Financial Services Agency; and
- Owned by 500 or more persons in Japan as recorded at the end of any of the most recent four consecutive fiscal years.

Since the last item is applicable only to Japanese entities, shares of foreign entities of which there are 500 or more shareholders in Japan, but that do not meet any of the first three requirements, are classified as private shares.

Debt securities accompanied by an option to convert into, exchange for, purchase from issuers, or subscribe shares that are not 'private shares' cannot enjoy any of the exceptions above. As provided in the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, a 'qualified institutional investor' is someone with expert knowledge of and experience in investment in securities. Only those institutions enumerated in the relevant Cabinet Office's Ordinance, such as financial instruments firms, banks, or insurance companies and certain foreign governmental agencies, qualify as 'qualified institutional investors'.

In addition, 'professional investors' are defined as qualified institutional investors, the government of Japan, Bank of Japan, and other juridical persons designated by the relevant Cabinet Office's Ordinance. A juridical person or an individual that does not fall in the category of a professional investor can be deemed to be a professional investor by their own request. In addition, a professional investor can be deemed not to be a professional investor by their own request, although an individual must generally satisfy the requirements provided by the Cabinet Office's Ordinance as equivalent to a professional investor, in light of his knowledge, experience, and state of property.

In the case of securities other than deemed securities, the number of offerees of the several primary offerings made within the last six months, other than:

- A primary offering in connection with which a securities registration statement or a supplemental document to a shelf registration statement, as the case may be, was filed with the Financial Services Agency; and
- A primary offering which enjoyed the first exception, above (ie, an offering made exclusively to qualified institutional investors) will be aggregated to the number of offerees of the primary offering in question to determine whether the primary offering in question will constitute a primary public offering.

Pursuant to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, a 'secondary public offering' is, with the same exceptions where an offering is made exclusively to professional investors, an offer to sell or a solicitation of an offer to buy previously issued and outstanding securities, in the case of securities other than deemed securities, where such offer or solicitation is made 'on uniform terms and conditions' to 50 or more persons in Japan, and in the case of deemed securities, where the number of purchasers of the financial instruments is 500 or more, as a result of the offering. According to the official interpretation, 'uniform terms and conditions' means the same offer price and the same delivery date. Since the legal requirements discussed below generally apply to both primary and secondary public offerings, the term 'public offering' alone will be used below to apply to both types.

Securities Registration Statement

Pursuant to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, to make a public offering in Japan, an issuer must file a securities registration statement with the Financial Services Agency with three exceptions. Subject to these exceptions, no public offering may be made after the filing of the securities registration statement.

First, for any public offering, no securities registration statement filing is required in the case where the aggregate offer price of the securities is less than ¥100 million (or its equivalent in other currency). In determining whether the ¥100 million threshold has been reached, the value of securities of a kind issued by the same issuer ('equivalent securities') which were offered in an offering (whether primary or secondary) made within the last two years (other than a public offering in connection with which a securities registration statement — or a supplemental document to a shelf registration statement, as the case may be — was filed with the Financial Services Agency and a public offering which was made before such filing) will be aggregated.[13] Furthermore, if an offering (whether primary or secondary) of securities with an aggregate offer price of less than ¥100 million is undertaken at the same time as an offering (whether primary or secondary) of equivalent securities with an aggregate offer price of less than ¥100 million and the sum of the 13 If the offering in question constitutes a primary public offering as a result of aggregation of the number of offerees in several primary offerings within the last six months, the amount of securities of such several primary offerings will be added to an amount of securities offered in the offering in question.

aggregate offer price of both offerings is ¥100 million or more, an aggregate offer price of each of both offerings is deemed to be ¥100 million or more.

Second, if an offering is made to persons designated by an Enforcement Order as persons who have already obtained or can easily obtain information with regard to offered securities, filing of a securities registration statement is not required. In this regard, when an offering of stock acquisition rights is made to the issuer's directors and/or employees, the issuer is not required to file a securities registration statement.

Third, filing of a securities registration statement is not required in a secondary public offering of securities if disclosure with regard to the securities has already been made where:

- The public offering of equivalent securities for which a securities registration statement was filed and became effective was made prior to such secondary public offering or where equivalent securities are listed on a Japanese financial instruments exchange or registered with the Japan Securities Dealers Association as over-the-counter securities; and
- The issuer has satisfied the Japanese continuous disclosure requirements.

Although the filing of a securities registration statement is not required, a prospectus must be prepared as if the securities registration statement were required to be filed.

Fourth, in the case of securities other than deemed securities, if the original offering of securities was made exclusively to qualified institutional investors and the securities are of a kind unlikely to be transferred to persons other than qualified institutional investors and the secondary public offering in question is made exclusively to qualified institutional investors, no securities registration statement filing is required.

The form and substance of the securities registration statement are stipulated in the relevant Cabinet Office's Ordinance. The securities registration statement should be prepared in Japanese. For Japanese private sector issuers which are not qualified to use a simplified securities registration statement, the form designated as Form 2 should be used for the securities registration statement. The securities registration statement on Form 2 consists of four parts. Part I provides information concerning the securities to be offered (ie, the timetable for offering, pricing, structure of underwriting, and similar matters). Part II includes information concerning the issuer, and Part III includes information concerning a guarantor (if any). Part IV should include certain additional financial information and the form of the certificates of the securities. Additionally, various documents or instruments (such as certified copies of the charter document and board resolutions) must be filed with the Financial Services Agency as exhibits to the securities registration statement. In the case of a public offering by a Japanese corporation with an aggregate offer price of less than ¥500 million (or its equivalent in another currency), such Japanese corporation is entitled to simplify the information to be contained in Part II of its securities registration statement in accordance with the relevant Cabinet Office's Ordinance, unless such Japanese corporation has already made the public disclosure without such simplification. In determining whether the ¥500 million threshold has been reached, the value of securities offered in other offerings will be aggregated in some cases.

As to timing considerations, one week or more before the official filing of the securities registration statement, a draft of the securities registration statement is to be submitted to the Financial Services Agency for its informal review. After the official filing of the securities registration statement, the offer to sell or the solicitation of offers to buy may commence, but the securities can actually be sold through the offering only after the registration becomes effective. The registration becomes effective on the expiration of a 15-day waiting period after its official filing. If an amendment to the securities registration statement is filed, the 15-day period begins to run again, but the Financial Services Agency has discretion to shorten the waiting period or to declare the registration immediately effective. In practice, the Financial Services Agency, at the request of the issuer and absent exceptional circumstances, regularly reduces the waiting period, as described below.

At least one amendment to the securities registration statement in fact should be filed, to disclose the pricing terms and other matters, which are not determined at the time of the original filing. After the filing of the final amendment and the request of the issuer, under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, the Financial Services Agency is authorised to shorten, and ordinarily in practice does shorten, the waiting period to a minimum of one business day after such filing, after which the registration becomes effective. In certain circumstances, the relevant financial authority allows the registration to become effective on the business day after such filing.

The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law has given the Financial Services Agency the authority to declare the securities registration statement effective immediately on the filing of the final amendment, and the Financial Services Agency exercises this authority in the case where the offering was conducted by way of book-building. If the following conditions are satisfied, an issuer is eligible to use a simplified securities registration statement for offering of shares:

- The issuer files an annual securities report continuously for one year or more;
- Shares of the issuer are listed on any of the Japanese stock exchanges or registered with the Japan Securities Dealers' Association; and
- (a) Either the average annual trading volume of the shares of the issuer on such stock exchange or over-the-counter market for certain years is not less than ¥10 billion and the average annual volume of the shares listed or registered on such stock exchange for certain years is not less than ¥10 billion; or (b) the average annual volume of the shares listed or registered for certain years is not less than ¥25 billion; (c) a credit-rating agency designated by the Minister of Financial Services has assigned a qualified credit rating to one series of bonds issued by the issuer and another such credit-rating agency has assigned a qualified credit rating to the same or a different series of bonds including those to be offered; or (d) the issuer has issued bonds (excluding bonds convertible into, or with warrants to subscribe, shares) assured by law of priority of payment.

For these purposes, a 'qualified credit rating' means a long-term credit rating of the BBB or higher. By amendments to the relevant Cabinet Office's Ordinance, a Japanese or non-Japanese corporation is entitled to use a simplified securities registration statement in the case of offering of bonds if:

- It files a securities report continuously for one year or more; and
- The issuer meets the criteria specified in (c), above.

Thus, with respect to bonds, the share listing or registration requirement has been lifted. In the case of a simplified securities registration statement, the issuer can incorporate its continuous disclosure documents (ie, an annual securities report, semi-annual report, and extraordinary report) into a securities registration statement by reference. As a result, Part II (information concerning the issuer) of the securities registration statement (which is the most voluminous) can be omitted. Furthermore, the 15-day waiting period is shortened to seven days. If the issuer satisfies only the first condition, above (ie, the issuer files an annual securities report continuously for one year or more), the issuer can qualify to use another type of simplified securities registration statement. In this case, the issuer can physically incorporate into a securities registration statement an annual securities report and its attachments and a semi-annual report.

Prospectus

An issuer subject to the securities registration statement is also required under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law to prepare a prospectus and, as indicated in the text, above, relating to 'Public Offerings', even if a securities registration statement filing is not required in the case of a secondary public offering of securities in which disclosure with regard to the securities has already been made, a prospectus must nonetheless be prepared. However, if the aggregate offer price of securities in such secondary public offering is less than ¥100 million, a prospectus need not be prepared.

The prospectus is substantially a reproduction of Parts I, II, and III of the securities registration statement.[14] A preliminary prospectus (similar to a 'red herring') may be used before the registration becomes effective for the purpose of disseminating information to the public, but the sale of securities cannot, in any event, be concluded before the registration becomes effective. A preliminary prospectus does not include such matters as the pricing terms. Thus, a final prospectus should be generally prepared, but the issuer may, in place of a final prospectus, attach separate printed updates to amend the preliminary prospectus. The delivery of this final pricing amendment to the preliminary prospectus can be omitted if the preliminary prospectus specifically states that the pricing information will be published in two daily newspapers or one daily newspaper and website of underwriting securities companies and such publication is actually made.

The 2004 amendment to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law has abolished the strict prohibition of the use of offering materials containing the different information from 14 The amendment to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, effective 1 December 2004, divides prospectuses into those to be distributed to all of investors and those to be distributed upon request of investors with regard to beneficial certificates of investment trusts and investment certificates. In sum, the first is more concise than the second.

that in the prospectus. However, offering materials may not contain untrue statements or misleading statements. Therefore, the 'roadshow' can be conducted shortly after the filing of the securities registration statement.

Shelf Registration

The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law provides for a 'shelf registration' system which is comparable to the shelf registration system in the United States. An issuer which meets the same criteria as that for the eligibility for using a simplified securities registration statement (ie, securities registration statement into which the issuer's information is incorporated by reference) and which intends to offer securities in an amount of ¥100 million or more during the effective period of shelf registration may utilise the shelf registration system.

A shelf registration is made by filing with the Financial Services Agency a shelf registration statement, which needs to state only limited information, such as the kind of securities to be offered under the shelf registration and the aggregate amount of the securities to be offered. The effective period of the shelf registration is one year or two years, as elected by the issuer. During such period, the issuer may undertake solicitations, and sell the securities one day after filing with the Financial Services Agency a 'supplemental document to the shelf registration statement' which states the details of the securities.

Specified Offerings

The registration requirements under Japanese law explicitly apply only to public offerings in Japan. Under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, a securities registration statement needs to be filed only in the event of a (primary or secondary) public offering, unless such public offering falls within one of the three exceptions discussed in the text, above, relating to 'Public Offerings', that exempt the issuer from filing a securities registration statement.

However, if a public offering falls within such an exception but the public offering constitutes a 'specified offering', the issuer must file a 'securities notice' no later than one day prior to the commencement of the 'specified offering'. A 'specified offering' is:

- A public offering in which the aggregate offer price is less than ¥100 million (but, if the aggregate offer price is not more than ¥10 million, the securities notice filing requirement does not apply); or
- A secondary public offering of securities with regard to which disclosure has already been made.

With respect to a specified offering as described in the second item, above, a prospectus must be prepared and distributed to investors as if a securities registration statement were filed.[15] In the case of other types of specified offerings, any offering documents can be used.

15 If the aggregate offer price is less than ¥100 million, the prospectus requirement does not apply.

Private Placements

The term 'private placement' means an offering of securities which do not constitute a public offering under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law. In other words, a private placement of newly issued securities is:

- In the case of securities other than deemed securities;
- A solicitation of an offer to buy securities made to fewer than 50 persons that are of a kind unlikely to be transferred to many persons (small private placement);[16]
- A solicitation of an offer to purchase securities made exclusively to qualified institutional investors that are of a kind unlikely to be transferred to persons other than qualified institutional investors (private placement to qualified national investor);
- A solicitation of an offer to buy securities made exclusively to professional investors by registered financial instruments business operators under entrustment from their clients and the securities are of a kind unlikely to be transferred to persons other than professional investors ('private placement to professional investors'); or
- In the case of deemed securities, a solicitation of an offer to purchase securities if the number of purchasers of the financial instruments is less than 500 as a result of the offering.

For the purpose of a private placement to be deemed 'unlikely to be transferred to many persons', the following arrangement must be ensured:

- In the case of shares, the shares are 'private shares' (see text, above, relating to 'Public Offerings'); and
- In the case of bonds (other than bonds accompanied by an option to convert into, exchange for, purchase from issuers, or subscribe shares), the bonds are exclusively in registered form, transfer (other than transfer of bonds purchased to another single purchaser) is restricted, such restriction is stated in the certificates of the bonds, the number of certificates of the bonds (plus the number of certificates of equivalent bonds newly issued within the last six months) is less than 50, the bonds cannot be divided into smaller denomination in nature or by terms of the bonds, and such restriction on the division is stated in the certificates of the bonds.

For the purpose of a private placement to be deemed 'unlikely to be transferred to persons other than professional investors', the following arrangement must be ensured:

- In the case of shares, the shares are 'private shares' and investors agree not to transfer such shares to persons other than professional investors; and
- In the case of bonds (other than bonds accompanied by an option to convert into, exchange for, purchase from issuers, or subscribe shares), the bonds are 'private bonds' and investors agree not to transfer such bonds to persons other than professional

16 Qualified institutional investors are not taken into account for the purpose of the calculation of this 50-person requirement if the qualified institutional investors is 250 or less and such institutional investors agree to the transfer restriction as provided for in the Enforcement Order Concerning Financial Instruments and Exchange Law.

investors. 'Private bonds' means bonds previously issued by the same issuer which are not listed on a financial instruments exchange in Japan, registered with the Japan Securities Dealer Association as over-the-counter bonds, fungible with bonds that were previously the subject of a public offering in connection with which a securities registration statement (or a supplemental document to a shelf registration statement, as the case may be) was filed with the Financial Services Agency, or owned by 500 or more persons in Japan as recorded at the end of any of the four most recent consecutive fiscal years.

For the purpose of a private placement to be deemed 'unlikely to be transferred to persons other than qualified institutional investors', the following arrangement must be ensured:

- In the case of shares, the shares are 'private shares' and investors agree not to transfer such shares to persons other than qualified institutional investors;
- In the case of registered bonds, the bonds are exclusively in registered form, transfer to persons other than qualified institutional investors is restricted, such restriction appears on the name of the bonds, and such restriction is stated in the certificates of the bonds; and
- In the case of bearer bonds, the bonds are exclusively in bearer form, transfer to persons other than qualified institutional investors is restricted, such restriction appears on the name of the bonds, solicitation is made on the condition that purchasers will agree to such restriction, and prospective purchasers agree to record the bonds under the Japanese bond recording system.

Persons who make a private placement of newly issued securities must give purchasers of securities a written notice stating that a securities registration statement is not filed in connection with the placement and that transfer of securities purchased in the placement is restricted as described above. The written notice must be delivered prior to, or at the time of, sale of the securities. Except for a private placement to professional investors, the notice requirement is not applied when disclosure under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law was already made with respect to securities equal to the securities placed or when the aggregate offer price is less than ¥100 million.

Unlike private placement of newly issued securities, resale restriction is not imposed in respect of private placement of previously issued and outstanding securities, with the same exceptions where the solicitation of an offer to buy securities is made exclusively to professional investors. However, in principle, the resale of outstanding securities issued outside Japan and purchased through a private placement is restricted to:

- A resale to non-residents of Japan; or
- A resale of the entire amount of securities so purchased to another single purchaser.

Persons who make a private placement of securities issued outside Japan must give purchasers of securities a written notice stating that disclosure under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law is not made in connection with the securities placed and that transfer of securities purchased in the placement is restricted as described above. The written notice must be delivered prior to, or at the time of, sale of the securities. Such resale restriction is exempted if:

- Disclosure with regard to the securities already has been made in accordance with the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law; or
- The aggregate offer price is less than ¥100 million.

All of the following requirements are met:

- The periodical disclosure is made in accordance with the laws of a foreign country or the rules of the relevant foreign stock exchange;
- In the case of placement by securities firms to persons other than qualified institutional investors, the securities firms deliver to investors a document explaining the securities in accordance with the rules of the Japan Securities Dealers Association and the securities firms which accept the deposit of the securities agree to deliver to holders of the securities on their request a document explaining the securities in accordance with the rules of the Japan Securities Dealers Association; and
- The offerees are securities firms or, as to placement of qualified institutional investors, such investors agree not to transfer the securities except for transfer to securities firms or non-residents of Japan, or solicitation is made by securities firms, and purchasers agree to deposit the securities with such securities firms.

Prospectus requirements do not apply to a private placement, and any offering documents can be used.

Offerings in Organisational Restructurings

Under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, issuance of new securities or delivery of previously issued securities, on the occasion of organisational restructure of corporations (ie, merger, corporate demerger, stock-for-stock exchange, and stock transfer), may be treated as public offerings if the number of persons who are delivered with such securities is:

- In the case of securities other than deemed securities, 50 or more; and
- In the case of deemed securities, 500 or more.

Continuous Disclosure. Various periodic and other disclosures are required of the issuers of securities which were offered to the public in Japan or which are listed on one of the stock exchanges in Japan or traded on the over-the-counter market in Japan in accordance with the rules of the Japan Securities Dealers' Association. Such requirements are generally founded on the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law and the ordinances promulgated thereunder, as well as on the financial instruments exchange rules.

Exempt Securities. The disclosure and filing requirements are not applicable to certain securities. Such securities include Japanese government bonds, bonds issued by Japanese local governments, beneficial certificates of loan trusts, bonds in respect of which repayment and payment is guaranteed by the Japanese government, and bonds which are issued by organisations established under treaties to which Japan is a party and the offering of which in Japan is subject to the consent of the Japanese government pursuant to such treaties. The World Bank, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and the Asian Development Bank are among such organisations.

The beneficial certificates of securities investment trusts used to be exempted from the disclosure and filing requirements under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law since securities investment trusts are governed by the Securities Investment Trust Law. The securities investment trust is a type of investment fund, but the subject of investment is limited to securities. Under Japanese law, investment funds in corporate form were prohibited.

The Law Concerning Securities Investment Trusts and Securities Investment Companies (formerly the Securities Investment Trust Law) has introduced investment funds in corporate form. In addition, the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, amended by the Financial System Reform Law, has subjected beneficial certificates on securities investment trusts and investment securities issued by securities investment companies to the disclosure requirement under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law described above. The Law Concerning Securities Investment Trusts and Securities Investment Companies was further renamed as the Law Concerning Investment Trusts and Investment Companies when the coverage of it was widened to include investment trust products for real estate and monetary claims as well as securities. All certificates and securities issued pursuant to this law, including investment trust products for real estate, are subject to the disclosure requirements of the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law.

Disclosure Relating to Tender Offers

If shares of a company which is subject to continuous disclosure requirements under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law are purchased outside the financial instruments exchange, such purchase must be made by way of a tender offer unless such purchase qualifies one of the exempted transactions. Exempted transactions include the following:

- Purchase effected in the over-the-counter market in accordance with the Japan Securities Dealers Association rules;
- Purchase where the total holdings of the shares by the purchaser and his specially related persons do not exceed five per cent of the total outstanding shares;
- Purchase from a small number of sellers where the total holdings of the shares by the purchaser and his specially related persons do not exceed one-third of the total outstanding shares;
- Purchase from his specially related persons; or
- Purchase by exercising warrants.

An amendment to the Securities and Exchange Law, effective 9 July 2005, added certain off-hour trading similar in effect to off-exchange trading to the scope of tender offer regulations. In addition, the new Financial Instruments and Exchange Law made it clear that the tender offer requirements applies to the following:

- Purchases of the shares outside the financial instruments exchange and at the financial instruments exchange, which results in a rapid increase of shareholding of one-third or more of the total outstanding shares; and
- Purchases by a shareholder who holds more than one-third of the total outstanding shares, during the period of another tender offer made by another bidder.

A 'tender offer' means the purchase of shares outside the stock exchange market by offering to unspecified and many persons to purchase shares or by soliciting them to offer the sale of shares. To protect the investors and to maintain the order of the securities market, the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law provides for the procedures of a tender offer and disclosure requirement. To commence a tender offer, the tender offeror must publish in a daily newspaper or through EDINET (see text, below) a public notice setting forth such information as the purpose of the tender offer, the purchase price, number of shares to be purchased, and the tender offer period. The tender offeror also must file the registration statement of the tender offer with the Financial Services Agency.

An issuer of shares also may use a tender offer to purchase its shares. The above requirements relating to tender offers also are applicable to foreign issuers whose shares are listed on a stock exchange in Japan. They are generally not applicable to a foreign issuer if the tender offer is made only in the market outside of Japan.

Disclosure Relating to Substantial Shareholdings

The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law requires any person who has become, beneficially and solely or jointly, a holder of more than five per cent of the total issued shares of a company listed on any Japanese stock exchange or whose shares are traded on the over-the-counter market in Japan[17] to file a report concerning such shareholding with the Financial Services Agency within five business days.

A similar report also must be made in respect of any subsequent change of one per cent or more in any such holding. For this purpose, the shares issuable to such person on conversion of convertible securities or exercise of share subscription warrants are taken into account in determining both the number of shares held by such holder and the issuer's total issued share capital. Copies of each such report also must be furnished to the issuer of such shares and all Japanese financial instruments exchanges on which the shares are listed.

Disclosure Relating to Private Placement to Professional Investors

Under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, a private placement to professional investors can be made only if the issuer of the securities provides or discloses the information that is specified by the relevant Cabinet Office's Ordinance as information regarding the securities and the issuer to the professional investors by a means prescribed by the Cabinet Office's Ordinance.

17 With the establishment of the JASDAQ Securities Exchange in December 2004, all shares registered with the Japan Securities Dealers Association for over-the-counter market trading were listed on the JASDAQ Securities Exchange.

In addition, the issuer of securities which are offered to or purchased by professional investors by way of a private placement to professional investors must periodically provide or disclose information as specified in the Cabinet Office's Ordinance.

Electronic Disclosure

In General

As of June 2001, the above-described disclosure may be made via internet. Though such electronic disclosure was permissible for only a few kinds of disclosure documents until May 2002, from June 2002 almost all disclosure documents other than reports concerning substantial shareholding can be disclosed using such electronic methods.

From June 2004, such an electronic disclosure will become a mandatory requirement for all kinds of disclosure documents except for some kinds of documents, such as reports concerning substantial shareholding and securities notices. This electronic disclosure system has been named the Electronic Disclosure Investors' Network, and is abbreviated as EDINET.

Companies Engaging in Financial Instruments Business

The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law has introduced the concept of financial instruments business, which includes securities business under the former Securities and Exchange Law. Financial instruments business consists of the first-tier financial instruments business, which is similar to the former securities business, the second-tier financial instruments business, the investment management business, and the investment advisory business. The first-tier financial instruments business includes:

- With regard to securities other than deemed securities, the business of buying and selling of such securities (dealer), acting as broker, intermediary, or agent in connection with transactions of such securities (broker), selling or distributing of such securities (distributor), and market derivative transactions on such securities (including acting as broker);
- Over-the-counter derivative transactions (including acting as broker);
- Underwriting of securities (underwriter);
- Proprietary trading system services; and
- Customer asset administration.

The second-tier financial instruments business includes:

- Self-offering (ie, primary public offering and private placement by the issuer itself) of limited kinds of securities;
- Acting as dealer, broker, or distributor on deemed securities, and market derivative transactions of deemed securities; and
- Non-securities market derivative transactions and foreign market derivative transactions.

Investment management business includes:

- Asset management of an investment trust or investment companies;
- Discretionary investment management business; and
- Asset management of a trust or collective investment scheme.

Investment advisory business includes:

- Investment advisory business; and
- Acting as a broker for the execution of investment advisory agreements.

Registration with the Prime Minister is required to conduct any kinds of these businesses, while specific requirements for registration, such as minimum capital requirements and net asset requirements, are different according to the kinds of the financial instruments business. The scope of business that can be conducted by registrants for the first-tier financial instruments business and the investment management business is restricted to financial instruments business and ancillary business, such as consulting business and money lending business, as specified by the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law.

Registrants may engage in other kinds of businesses when they obtain specific approval from the Financial Services Agency, although such approval may not be withheld unless the engagement by such registrants of the kind of the business in issue should be contrary to the public interest or deemed to be detrimental to protection of investors' interest. These restrictions on the scope of the business are not applicable to registrants for the second-tier financial business or those for the investment advisory business. The regulations on the financial instruments business generally apply to foreign firms in an identical manner. The Prime Minister is the competent authority to oversee the affairs of the financial instruments firms. Its authority to conduct investigation of business and assets of securities companies is delegated to the Financial Services Agency and the Securities and Exchange Surveillance Commission.

Financial Instruments Business by Banks. Under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, banks and other financial institutions are prohibited from engaging in financial instruments business, with limited exceptions, as was the case under the Securities and Exchange Law. Although this general prohibition still survives, the restrictions on financial institutions relating to the securities business have been relaxed in the past decade. Before such relaxation, the banks may, in principle, engage in securities business only with respect to public bonds (ie, national and local government bonds and bonds guaranteed by the government). The Financial System Reform Law and other subsequent changes have amended the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law to allow banks to engage in transactions involving beneficial certificates of investment trusts and investment certificates of investment companies and to enter into business involving over-the-counter securities derivative transactions. In addition, an amendment to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law which became effective as of 1 December 2004 permited banks and other financial institutions to act as securities brokers for registered securities companies.

Furthermore, banks may set up a subsidiary which may engage in securities business. Previously, the scope of permitted activities of such subsidiaries in Japan did not include the underwriting, sale and purchase, or brokerage of equity securities (ie, shares), while they may engage in the business involving equity-like securities, such as convertible bonds and bonds with equity warrants. However, the restrictions on the securities business of such subsidiaries have been lifted.

Financial Instruments Exchanges. Currently, the financial instruments exchange consists of the stock exchange under the former Securities and Exchange Law and the financial futures exchange under the former Financial Futures and Exchange Law. There are six stock exchanges in Japan. The Tokyo Stock Exchange is by far the largest exchange in Japan in terms of number of listed companies and the annual trading volume of the listed stocks. The Osaka Securities Exchange is the second largest exchange in Japan. Although the trading volume of listed stocks effected on the Osaka Securities Exchange is not large as compared to that on the Tokyo Stock Exchange, the trading volume of the stock index futures and options effected on the Osaka Securities Exchange is larger than that on the Tokyo Stock Exchange since the NIKKEI Stock Index futures and options are traded on the Osaka Securities Exchange. Members or trading participants[18] of the stock exchanges are limited to registered financial instruments companies.

Currently, stocks of foreign companies are listed only on the Tokyo Stock Exchange or the Osaka Securities Exchange. Although the listing criteria applicable to foreign companies are not the same as those applicable to Japanese companies, the former is not more onerous than the latter.

Regulations Relating to Trading of Securities. The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law sets forth various provisions to ensure the fairness of the securities transactions. For example, the following provisions are stipulated:

- Prohibition of use of unlawful devices and schemes;
- Prohibition of circulation of rumours;
- Prohibition of market manipulation; and
- Insider trading regulations.

Violation of these provisions will constitute a criminal offence. In addition, an amendment to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law which became effective as of 1 April 2005 introduced an administrative monetary penalty system. Under this system, the Prime Minister must impose a monetary penalty on violators of these provisions. Such monetary penalty is also applicable to cases where disclosure documents involving material misstatements are used in the public offering of securities. Furthermore, by 18 Until 2000, the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law required stock exchanges to be members of registered securities firms. This restriction has been relaxed and, currently, a stock exchange may be in the form of either a membership or a joint-stock company. Only the members (in the former case) or the trading participants (in the latter case) can trade securities directly at the relevant stock exchange.

amendment to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, effective 1 December 2005, such monetary penalty applies when continuous disclosure documents are filed with material misstatements. In addition, by amendment to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, effective in December 2008, such monetary penalty also applies to violations of the filing obligation for disclosure documents.

Market Participants

Domestic Exchanges. Only the compenies engaging in the financial instruments business and registered under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law may become members or trading participants of the stock exchanges in Japan. Some of the foreign securities firms are presently trading participants of the Tokyo Stock Exchange, the Osaka Securities Exchange, and the JASDAQ Securities Exchange.

Currently, the Tokyo Stock Exchange and the Osaka Securities Exchange admit the listing of shares of foreign companies. Set forth below is a brief explanation of some of the important listing criteria for listing of foreign stocks on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. The Tokyo Stock Exchange requires that foreign applicants meet the following criteria to be eligible to list their shares. More relaxed listing criteria may be applicable to certain venture companies.

Minimum Number of Shares Listed. Shares listed are likely to amount to the number corresponding to 4,000 or more trading units of such shares prior to the listing.

The trading unit is determined by the Tokyo Stock Exchange, such that the purchase price of the unit will not, in principle, exceed ¥500,000. The Tokyo Stock Exchange may change the trading unit for a listed foreign stock after taking into account the average per share price of the stock on the Tokyo Stock Exchange over a one-year period, the distribution of stock ownership in Japan, and other factors.

Number of Shareholders in Japan. The applicant must have at least 800 shareholders in Japan at or before the listing.

Share Distribution. A significant portion of shares may not be held by a limited number of shareholders. However, the Tokyo Stock Exchange criterion will be satisfied if the numbers of shares to be sold to the public will meet the listing criterion applicable to the listing of shares on a stock exchange of the applicant's home country.

Net Assets (Shareholders' Equity). The applicant must have net assets equivalent to ¥1 billion or more as of the end of the fiscal year ended immediately prior to the application for listing.

Profits. An applicant's profits in each of the last three consecutive years must satisfy the following requirements:

- Total over the last three years, ¥600 million or more;
- Most recent year, ¥400 million or more; and
- The third most-recent year, ¥100 million or more.

Otherwise, an applicant's profits in each of the last two years must satisfy the following requirements:

- Most recent year, ¥400 million or more; and
- Second most-recent year, ¥100 million.

Years Elapsed since Incorporation. The number of years elapsed since incorporation should be at least three calendar years as of the last day of the fiscal year immediately preceding the listing application date, and the applicant is required to have continuously conducted its business for the period.

Financial Statements. With respect to the consolidated and non-consolidated financial statements for each fiscal year ended during the last two (or three, as the case may be) calendar years, the independent certified public accountant issues an opinion that no false statements are included and issues, in principle, an unqualified fair opinion or an opinion expressly stating that useful information has been provided in financial statements for the latest full year and the first half of the latest year. Furthermore, there are no exceptional items in the opinion for the latest year and the first half of the last year.

Transborder Electronic Trading System. Transborder trading of securities by foreign securities firms is subject to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, whether or not an electronic trading system is used for the purpose of such trading. Under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, a foreign securities firm is defined as a person who is engaged in a securities-related business outside Japan in accordance with the laws of any country other than Japan. Under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, only foreign securities firms registered as financial instruments firms ('registered foreign securities firms') may, as a general matter, conduct related securities activities' ('securities activities') in Japan as a business.

In addition, the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law regulates, inter alia, the activities in Japan or directed toward Japan of foreign securities firms other than registered foreign securities firms ('unregistered foreign securities firms'). Pursuant to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, an unregistered foreign securities firm may not conduct securities activities directed toward persons in Japan except for certain securities activities enumerated in the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law. The following chart sets forth, by reference to the counterparty, the securities which an unregistered foreign securities firm may sell in Japan.

Counterparty and Securities Which May Be Sold in Japan by Unregisterd Foreign Securities Firm

Counterparty		Securities
The Government of Japan The Bank of Japan Registered securities firms Registered branches of foreign securities firm		No limitation
Investment trust management companies (for the account of the beneficiaries)		No limitation
Registered firms for the investment management business		No limitation
All Qualified Financial Institutions(1)	for the purpose of investment	No limitation for other purposes	National Government Bonds,(2) and Commercial Paper,(3) and so on
	Banks (for the account of their client and on written order)	No limitation
Certain Qualified Financial Institutions(1)	Long-term credit banks	Bonds issued under the Long-Term Credit Bank Law of Japan
	Trust banks	Beneficiary certificates issued under the Loan Trust Law of Japan

(2) 'National Government Bonds' means: (a) national government bonds of any government; (b) local government bonds of any local governmental body in Japan; and (c) debentures guaranteed by a national government.
(3) 'Commercial Paper' includes: (a) commercial paper with a maturity of less than one year; and (b) certificates of deposit issued by a foreign juridical person with a maturity of less than one year.

In addition, an unregistered foreign securities firm acting as broker-dealer may execute transactions with a person in Japan who places an order with it unless that foreign securities firm does not solicit it. In this connection, it must be noted that the following activities are deemed to be comparable to the solicitation for that purpose:

- Advertisements regarding investment in securities by means of newspapers, magazines, television, radio, or other similar media (excluding those mainly directed toward people outside Japan);
- Holding of explanatory meetings regarding investment in securities;

- Providing information regarding investment in securities orally, in writing, or by means of telephone or other methods of communication; and
- Activities similar to those listed above.

If the transborder electronic trading system is to be used to trade securities with the persons in Japan, compliance with the provisions of the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law outlined above must be ensured.

Off-Market Transactions. The Japan Securities Dealers Association has promulgated regulations applicable to over-the-counter transactions involving the Japan Securities Dealers Association member firms. No different treatment is made among the member firms, whether they are Japanese securities companies or branches of registered foreign securities firms.

Securities

National Treatment and Reciprocity. The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law is applicable for foreign issuers, as well as Japanese domestic issuers. The applicability does not require reciprocity. Foreign countries and their local governments are subject to filing and disclosure requirements under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, although the Japanese government and Japanese local governments are not subject to such requirements.

Furthermore, a Cabinet Office's Ordinance exists setting the details of filing and disclosure requirements specific to sovereign issuers such as governments, local governments, governmental corporations, and international organisations. Under such Cabinet Office's Ordinance, various requirements under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law are relaxed. As described in 'Exempted Securities' above, securities issued by certain international organisations are exempt from the public disclosure requirements under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law.

Issuer Requirement. The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law itself does not impose any issuer requirements. Though there used to be a credit rating requirement established by ministerial guidance, in which only an issuer with at least a credit rating of the BBB or its equivalent was permitted to enter into the Japanese market, it no longer exists.

Securities Requirement. The Financial Instruments and Exchange Law defines 'securities' which are the subject of the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, and does not impose any securities requirements. There were some securities requirements in the form of ministerial guidance with respect to commercial paper and certificates of deposit. Japanese dealers were obliged to offer commercial paper and certificates of deposit in accordance with the rules of the ministerial guidance. These requirements were abolished in June 1998.

With respect to foreign investment funds, there were securities requirements established by procedural guidelines of the Financial Services Agency of Japan. These requirements were also abolished.

Under the rules of the Japan Securities Dealers Association, in summary, the foreign securities which the Japan Securities Dealers Association member can deal with are limited. The Japan Securities Dealers Association rules also provide for the criteria for foreign investment trusts. Such criteria include:

- The foreign investment trusts were established in a country in which (a) a legal system for investment trusts has been well established, (b) a disclosure system for investment trusts has been well established, (c) there is an authority supervising issuers of investment trusts, and (d) purchase price, sales proceeds, and dividends can be transferred from or toward Japan;
- The net asset value of the trusts is ¥100 million or more;
- Japanese investors are entitled to take proceedings in Japanese courts in connection with the trusts;
- The trusts are prohibited from investing in more than 50 per cent of equity shares of a single company; and
- The financial statements of the trusts are audited by an independent accountant.

Prospectus Requirement. The same standard for Japanese domestic issuers is applicable to foreign issuers. In the case of public offerings and a certain specified offering, foreign issuers must prepare a Japanese-language prospectus in accordance with the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law.

Registration of Public Offerings. Basically, the treatment given to Japanese domestic issuers is applied also to foreign issuers. Form 7 is a form of a securities registration statement for a foreign corporate issuer. If the issuer is governed by laws of jurisdiction other than those of Japan, the legal system in the home country is required to be stated in Form 7. Furthermore, a legal opinion of local counsel as to the legality of the offering and the correctness of the legal matters stated in Form 7 is required. These requirements also apply to simplified securities registration statements.

As for sovereign issuers, the criteria for the eligibility for the simplified securities registration statement (ie, securities registration statement into which the issuer's information contained in the continuous disclosure document is incorporated by reference) and the shelf registration are relaxed. These include:

- The issuer files an annual securities report continuously for one year or more; and
- The issuer has already issued bonds in Japan and the aggregate nominal amount of the bonds is ¥10 billion or more; or
- A credit-rating agency designated by the Minister of Financial Services has assigned a qualified credit rating to one series of bonds issued by the issuer, and another such credit-rating agency has assigned a qualified credit rating to the same or a different series of bonds including those to be offered.

Registration of Placements. Except as described below, the same treatment given to Japanese domestic issuers is applied to foreign issuers. A legal opinion as to the laws of the home country is required to ascertain the legality of the placement. Under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, 'securities issued overseas' offered by way of a private placement are subject to certain resale restrictions. 'Securities issued overseas' means either securities which have already been issued outside Japan (except for securities for which a solicitation of an offer to buy was made in Japan at the time of issue) or securities which have already been issued in Japan but for which no solicitation of an offer to buy was made in Japan at the time of issue.

A notice must be given prior to the time of the purchase in respect of the resale restriction, ie, it must state that the owner may only transfer all the purchased securities to a single person, unless such transfer is made to non-residents of Japan. However, certain exceptions apply to the notice requirement. Specifically, notice is not required if:

- Disclosure with regard to the securities has already been made;
- The aggregate offer price of the securities is less than ¥100 million; or
- Certain conditions prescribed in the Cabinet Office's Ordinance are satisfied.

Appendix

(1) Continuous Disclosure

The descriptions below will focus on the requirements of the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law and of the Tokyo Stock Exchange.

(A) Disclosure under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law

(a) Periodic Disclosures under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law

Periodic disclosure required under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law includes the following Reports.

a. Securities Report

Within three months (in the case of the foreign issuers, six months) after the end of each fiscal year, the issuer is required under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law to file with the relevant financial authority three copies of a Securities Report in the Japanese language[19] for such year.[20]

b. Semi-Annual Report

Within three months after the end of the first six months of each fiscal year, the issuer without its securities being listed in any stock exchange in Japan is required under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law to file with the relevant financial authority three copies of a Semi-Annual Report in the Japanese language[21] for such six-month period.[22]

c. Quarterly Report

Within 45 days (or 60 days for banks and insurance companies) after the end of each three-month period of each fiscal year, the issuer with securities being listed in any stock exchange in Japan is required under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law to file with the relevant financial authority three copies of a quarterly report in the Japanese language.[23] for such three-month period.[24]

19 With approval by the Financial Services Agency, the issuer may file English-written disclosure documents used in other jurisdictions, but English documents must be accompanied by Japanese materials supplementing some items.

20 Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, arts 24 and 25.

21 As of 1 December 2005, the Securities Reports and Semi-Annual Reports can be prepared in English in connection with limited types of securities.

22 Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, arts 24-5 and 25.

23 With approval by the Financial Services Agency, the issuer may file English-written disclosure documents used in other jurisdictions, but English documents must be accompanied by Japanese materials supplementing some items.

24 Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, art 24-4-7.

d. Parent Company Report

An amendment to the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, effective 1 December 2005, introduced requirements for parent company reports. Under the amendment, a company not required to file the securities report, but shares of whose subsidiary are listed on a stock exchange or traded in the over-the-counter market in Japan, will be required to file with the relevant authority parent company reports in Japanese within three months from the end of its fiscal year.

(b) Extraordinary Reports

Under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, the issuer must file with the relevant financial authority three copies of a form called the Extraordinary Report on the occurrence of any one of the following events.[25]

a. A public offering of newly issued or outstanding securities, of which the issuer is the issuing company, having a total issue or sales price of not less than ¥100 million, is commenced outside Japan (please note that bonds and debentures, other than bonds with warrants (including convertible bonds), are excluded for the purposes of paragraph (a) and for paragraph (b), below; bonds with respect to which rights to purchase shares of stock are granted are deemed to be bonds with warrants for these purposes).

b. A resolution is approved by the board of directors of the issuer, or at a general meeting of shareholders of the issuer, authorising the issuance of securities, other than by means of a public offering, having a total issue price of not less than ¥100 million (or, if such an issue is to take place mainly outside Japan, such securities are actually issued).

c. A resolution is approved by the board of directors of the issuer, or at a general meeting of shareholders of the issuer, authorising an offering of share subscription warrants to directors and employees of the issuer that are exempt from the disclosure requirements, having a total issue price of not less than ¥100 million. For the purpose of share subscription warrants, the issue price means the sum of the offering price and the exercise price of such warrants.

d. Any change of a parent company (meaning cases where a company that has been a parent company of the issuer ceases to be such a parent company or where a company that has not been a parent company of the issuer becomes such a parent company) or any change of a specific subsidiary of the issuer (meaning cases where a company which has been a specific subsidiary of the issuer ceases to be such a subsidiary or where a company that has not been a specific subsidiary of the issuer becomes a specific subsidiary of the issuer). A specific subsidiary is defined as a subsidiary which satisfies any one of the following criteria:

(i) Total sales to, or the total purchases from, the issuer by such subsidiary equal to 10 per cent or more of the total purchases, or the total sales, respectively, of the issuer in the most recent business year;

25 Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, arts 24-5 and 25; Cabinet Office's Ordinance Concerning Disclosure of Contents of Companies, art 19.

(ii) Net assets of such subsidiary equal to 30 per cent or more of the net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year; or

(iii) The capital of, or the aggregate amount of investment by the issuer in, such subsidiary equals 10 per cent or more of the capital of the issuer.

e. Any change of principal shareholders (meaning cases where a person who has been a principal shareholder of the issuer ceases to be a principal shareholder of the issuer or a person who has not been a principal shareholder of the issuer becomes a principal shareholder of the issuer).[26]

f. A material disaster. A material disaster shall mean a disaster with respect to which the book value of the assets damaged thereby amounts to not less than three per cent of the total book value of the net assets of the issuer and such damage can be considered as materially affecting the business of the issuer.

g. Litigation is initiated against the issuer in which damages are claimed in an amount equal to 15 per cent or more of the total amount of net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year, or litigation against the issuer has been settled or otherwise concluded and the amount of damages payable in respect thereof is not less than three per cent of the net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year.

h. An agreement of exchange of shares under which the issuer will be the sole parent company of the other company or the issuer will be a wholly owned subsidiary of the other company is concluded (including cases where the conclusion of such an agreement is expected with certainty and a public announcement to that effect has been made). In the former case, the other company must be either a company whose assets amounted to 30 per cent or more of the net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year or a company whose total sales amounted to 10 per cent or more of the total sales of the issuer in the most recent business year. An exchange of shares means a corporate restructuring transaction under which equity shares of a company are mandatorily exchanged for the equity shares of another company, and the former thereby becomes a wholly-owned subsidiary of the latter.

i. A resolution is approved at a general meeting of shareholders of the issuer, authorising the establishment of a sole parent company through the exchange of shares.

j. An agreement of division of companies under which the issuer divides a portion of it or acquires a portion of another company is concluded, or a plan of such division is approved by the board of directors of the issuer or at its general meeting of shareholders, whereby it is estimated that the amount of assets of the issuer will be found to have increased or decreased by not less than 30 per cent of the net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year or it is estimated that the total sales revenue of the issuer will be found to have increased or decreased by not less than 10 per cent of the total sales revenue of the issuer in the most recent business year (including the case where the conclusion of such an agreement or the approval of such a plan, as the case may be, is expected with certainty and a public announcement to that effect has been made).

26 A 'principal shareholder' is defined as a shareholder who holds not less than 10 per cent of the total number of issued voting shares in such shareholder's own name or in the name of other persons (including fictitious persons); provided, however, pursuant to the relevant Cabinet Office's Ordinance, the shares held either by trust corporations as trust property or by securities companies as a result of their underwriting or selling business are not counted in the shares held for the purpose of determining share ownership.

k. An agreement of statutory merger is concluded whereby it is estimated that the amount of assets of the issuer will increase or decrease by not less than 30 per cent of the net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year or it is estimated that the total sales revenue of the issuer will increase or decrease by not less than 10 per cent of the total sales revenues of the issuer in the most recent business year, or whereby the issuer will be dissolved (including the case where the conclusion of such an agreement is expected with certainty and a public announcement to that effect has been made).

l. An agreement for an assignment or acquisition of business is concluded whereby it is estimated that the amount of assets of the issuer will increase or decrease by 30 per cent or more of the net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year or it is estimated that the total sales revenues of the issuer will increase or decrease by 10 per cent or more of the total sales revenues of the issuer in the most recent business year (including the case where the conclusion of such an agreement is expected with certainty and a public announcement to that effect has been made).

m. Any change in the representative directors (meaning cases where a person who has been a representative director of the issuer ceases to be a representative director or a person who has not been a representative director becomes a representative director, but excluding the case where such a change has taken place within the period from the closing of an annual general meeting of shareholders of the issuer to the filing of a Securities Report and the substance of the change is stated in the Securities Report). A representative director is a director of a Japanese corporation under Japanese law who is duly authorised to represent such corporation without any specific authorisation.

n. An application for bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Law, commencement of reorganisation procedures under the Corporate Reorganisation Law, or other similar bankruptcy proceedings is made in respect of the issuer.

o. Any bill or check is dishonoured by, or an application for the commencement of any bankruptcy proceedings is made by or against, or any event similar thereto occurs with respect to, any person who owes any debt to, or has been granted any guarantee on any of its debt by, the issuer (in this paragraph a ‘debtor‘) whereby any impossibility or delay in collection of receivables, advances, or any other credit against such debtor is threatened to occur in an amount not less than three per cent of the net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year.

p. Any event materially affecting the financial condition and business results of the issuer occurs. An event materially affecting the financial condition and business results of the issuer means any event which occurs after the date as of which the latest balance sheet is prepared and which will have a material effect on the financial condition and business results of the issuer in subsequent business years. The financial effect of such an event on the issuer must be not less than three per cent of the net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year and not less than 20 per cent of the average net profits of the issuer for the last five business years.

q. A material disaster to a consolidated subsidiary of the issuer. A material disaster to a consolidated subsidiary of the issuer shall mean a disaster with respect to which the book value of the assets of the subsidiary damaged thereby amounts to not less than three per cent of the total book value of the consolidated net assets of the issuer and such damage can be considered as materially affecting the business of the issuer.

r. Litigation is initiated against a consolidated subsidiary of the issuer in which damages are claimed in an amount equal to 15 per cent or more of the total amount of the consolidated net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year, or litigation against a consolidated subsidiary of the issuer has been settled or otherwise concluded and the amount of damages payable in respect thereof is not less than three per cent of the consolidated net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year.

s. An agreement of exchange of shares involving a consolidated subsidiary of the issuer is concluded, whereby it is estimated that the amount of assets of the issuer will be found to have increased or decreased by not less than 30 per cent of the consolidated net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year or it is estimated that the total sales revenue of the issuer will be found to have increased or decreased by not less than 10 per cent of the total sales revenue of the issuer in the most recent business year (including cases where the conclusion of such an agreement is expected with certainty and a public announcement to that effect has been made).

t. A resolution is approved at a general meeting of shareholders of a consolidated subsidiary of the issuer, authorising the establishment of a sole parent company of such a subsidiary through exchange of shares, whereby it is estimated that the amount of assets of the issuer will be found to have increased or decreased by not less than 30 per cent of the consolidated net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year or it is estimated that the total sales revenue of the issuer will be found to have increased or decreased by not less than 10 per cent of the total sales revenue of the issuer in the most recent business year.

u. An agreement of division of a company under which a consolidated subsidiary of the issuer divides a portion of it into another entity or acquires a portion of another company is concluded, or a plan of such division is approved by the board of directors of that subsidiary or at its general meeting of shareholders, whereby it is estimated that the amount of assets of the issuer will be found to have increased or decreased by not less than 30 per cent of the consolidated net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year or it is estimated that the total sales revenue of the issuer will be found to have increased or decreased by not less than 10 per cent of the total sales revenue of the issuer in the most recent business year (including cases where the conclusion of such an agreement or the approval of such a plan, as the case may be, is expected with certainty and a public announcement to that effect has been made).

v. An agreement of statutory merger involving a consolidated subsidiary of the issuer is concluded whereby it is estimated that the amount of assets of the issuer will increase or decrease by not less than 30 per cent of the consolidated net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year or it is estimated that the total sales revenue of the issuer will increase or decrease by not less than 10 per cent of the total sales revenues of the issuer in the most recent business year, or whereby the consolidated subsidiary will be dissolved (including the case where the conclusion of such an agreement is expected with certainty and a public announcement to that effect has been made).

w. An agreement for an assignment or acquisition of business of a consolidated subsidiary of the issuer is concluded whereby it is estimated that the amount of the assets of the issuer will increase or decrease by 30 per cent or more of the consolidated net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year or it is estimated that the total sales revenues of the issuer will increase or decrease by 10 per cent or more of the total sales revenues of the issuer in the most recent business year (including the case where the conclusion of such an agreement is expected with certainty and a public announcement to that effect has been made).

x. An application for bankruptcy, commencement of reorganisation, or similar bankruptcy proceedings is made in respect of a consolidated subsidiary of the issuer, and the net assets of such subsidiary or the amount by which the total debt of such subsidiary exceeds the total assets of such subsidiary is three per cent or more of the consolidated net assets of the issuer.

y. Any bill or check is dishonoured by, or an application for the commencement of any bankruptcy proceedings is made by or against, or any event similar thereto occurs with respect to, any person who owes any debt to, or has been granted any guarantee on any of its debt by, a consolidated subsidiary of the issuer (in this paragraph, a 'debtor') whereby any impossibility or delay in collection of receivables, advances, or any other credit against such debtor is threatened to occur in an amount not less than three per cent of the consolidated net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year.

z. Any event materially affecting the consolidated financial condition and consolidated business results of the issuer occurs. An event materially affecting the financial condition and business results of the issuer means any event that occurs after the date as of which the latest consolidated balance sheet is prepared which will have a material effect on the financial condition and business results of the issuer in subsequent business years. The financial effect of such an event on the issuer must be not less than three per cent of the consolidated net assets of the issuer as of the last day of the most recent business year and not less than 20 per cent of the average net profits of the issuer in the consolidated financial statements for the last five business years.

(2) Mandatory Procedures under the Tokyo Stock Exchange Rules

(A) Ordinary Procedures

The Tokyo Stock Exchange Rules require the issuer to follow certain procedures, including notifications to the Tokyo Stock Exchange and, in certain instances, to the shareholders and the public.

(a) Shareholders' Meeting

In connection with the convocation and holding of the annual shareholders' meeting (these requirements also are applicable to an extraordinary meeting), the issuer must take certain measures to enable beneficial shareholders to exercise their voting rights.

a. Notice of Record Date of Shareholders' Meeting:

On the adoption of a resolution fixing a record date for a shareholders' meeting, the issuer should notify the Tokyo Stock Exchange and the Agent of such resolution at least two weeks before the record date. The issuer must, in general, provide public notice of the record date in a daily newspaper in the Japanese language at the same moment. However, the issuer is exempt from this public notice requirement so long as the documents necessary for exercising the voting rights are delivered to beneficial shareholders as described in b., below. Therefore, virtually no foreign issuers provide this public notice.

b. Proxy Statement Materials:

In order that the voting rights of shareholders in Japan may be properly exercised, the issuer must provide the Agent with the necessary documents for exercising the voting rights, such as a proxy statement in the Japanese language. Simultaneously, a copy of each of the documents in the original and Japanese (and English, if available) languages must be submitted to the Tokyo Stock Exchange.

(b) Dividend Payment Procedures

On adoption of a resolution fixing the record date for dividend payment, the issuer must notify the Tokyo Stock Exchange and the Agent thereof at least two weeks before such record date.

(c) Brief Notice Regarding a Settlement of Accounts

a. Brief Notice of Annual Accounts Settlement:

The issuer must file with the Tokyo Stock Exchange a Brief Notice of Annual Settlement of Accounts in the Japanese language on the release thereof to the press in its home country and elsewhere. This Brief Notice also must be distributed to the Japanese press.

b. Brief Notice of Interim Accounts Settlement:

The issuer also must file with the Tokyo Stock Exchange a Brief Notice of Interim Settlement of Accounts in the Japanese language on the release thereof to the press in its home country and elsewhere. This Brief Notice also must be distributed to the Japanese press.

(d) Report Concerning the Number of Listed Shares

The issuer must file with the Tokyo Stock Exchange a Report of Status of Conversion of Securities and Issuance of New Shares, etc. soon after the commencement of each fiscal year. This report is used to calculate the annual listing fee. This report relates only to newly issued shares which are already covered by previous listing applications, and if the issuer issues new shares which are not covered by the previous applications (such as new shares issued under a public offering or newly established stock option plan), the issuer must file another listing application to list such new shares.

(e) Documents Filed with the Competent Authorities in Other Jurisdictions

The issuer must file with the Tokyo Stock Exchange a copy of each of the documents filed with the competent authorities in its home country and elsewhere (including the Securities and Exchange Commission of the United States) on the filing thereof (for example, Form 10-K).

(f) Annual Report to Shareholders

The issuer must distribute to shareholders in Japan, Japanese language versions (a summarised version is acceptable under the applicable Tokyo Stock Exchange rule) of business reports (including annual and semi-annual reports, if any) at the same time as such reports are distributed to shareholders in the home country and/or other jurisdiction; provided, however, that a listed foreign issuer is not required to prepare for delivery to its shareholders in Japan a Japanese language version of its annual report. A listed foreign issuer, instead, is required to deliver to its shareholders either: (i) information derived from the 'Changes in Major Business Indices', 'Description of Operations', 'Financial Statements', and 'Auditors' Report' sections of the Securities Report referred to above, or (ii) information derived from the 'Description of Operations' and 'Financial Statements' in the Securities Report, together with the English version of the annual report. Even in cases where the issuer prepares a semi-annual or quarterly report, the issuer is allowed to distribute the Brief Notice of Interim-Annual Accounts Settlement referred to above in lieu of the Japanese version of the semi-annual or quarterly report under the relevant Tokyo Stock Exchange rules so long as such Brief Notice contains certain information required under the Tokyo Stock Exchange rule.

(g) Other Documents

In addition to the foregoing, the issuer is, in principle, required to submit to the Tokyo Stock Exchange all documents which will be distributed to its shareholders before such distribution.

(B) Special Procedures

(a) Issuance of Securities

a. Issuance of New Shares

If the issuer issues additional ordinary shares, the issuer must file with the Tokyo Stock Exchange an Amendment Application for listed securities on each occasion unless the shares so issued have been already covered by previous listing applications.

(i) Public Offering of New Shares outside Japan. On the adoption of a resolution authorising a public offering of new shares outside Japan, the issuer must file with the Tokyo Stock Exchange a further application for listed securities describing the contents of such resolution. If the offering is made in the home country and/or other jurisdiction, and a registration statement is filed with the competent authorities in such country, a copy of such registration statement also must be submitted to the Tokyo Stock Exchange. The issuer also is required to file an Extraordinary Report as described above.

(ii) Public Offering of New Shares in Japan. On the adoption of a resolution authorising a public offering of new shares in Japan, the issuer must file with the Tokyo Stock Exchange a further application for listed securities describing the contents of such resolution. Furthermore, the issuer is required to file a Securities Registration Statement with the relevant financial authority under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law and to follow various procedures under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, the regulations of the Tokyo Stock Exchange, and other relevant regulations. Under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law, an offering of shares in a listed company always constitutes a public offering. However, an issuance of shares to any shareholders which does not involve any offering to the shareholders (such as a stock split or stock dividends) does not constitute a public offering.

(iii) Private Placement of New Shares. On the adoption of a resolution authorising a private placement of new shares both within and outside Japan, the issuer must file with the Tokyo Stock Exchange a further application for listed securities describing the contents of such resolution. The issuer also is required to file with the relevant financial authority an Extraordinary Report as described above.

(iv) Stock Dividend, Stock Split, and Consolidation of Shares. On the adoption of a resolution authorising a stock dividend, a stock split, or a consolidation of shares, the issuer must file with the Tokyo Stock Exchange a notice thereof. In addition, public notice of the record date must be made in a daily newspaper. The issuer also must file with the relevant financial authority an Extraordinary Report, as described above.

b. Stock Option Plan

On the adoption of a new stock option plan, the issuer must file with the Tokyo Stock Exchange a further application for listed securities.

c. Other Securities Issuances

On the adoption of a resolution authorising the issuance of convertible debentures which may be converted into ordinary shares of the issuer, or on offering stock subscription or purchase rights under which ordinary shares will be issued, the issuer must file with the Tokyo Stock Exchange a further application concerning the ordinary shares of the issuer. In addition, the issuer may be required to file with the relevant financial authority an Extraordinary Report as described above. If securities of the issuer are offered or sold in Japan or to Japanese residents, the issuer also may be required to follow various procedures under the Financial Instruments and Exchange Law and other relevant regulations.

(b) Notice to Tokyo Stock Exchange

In addition to the foregoing, pursuant to the relevant regulations of the Tokyo Stock Exchange, a listed issuer must promptly submit to the Tokyo Stock Exchange the following notices and reports when relevant (this information also must be distributed to the Japanese press):[27]

a. Material Corporate Information Regarding Management Decisions, including but not limited to:

(i) Issuance of Shares, Bonds with Warrants (including Convertible Bonds), or Warrants

(ii) Reduction of Capital, or Legal Reserve

(iii) Acquisition of Treasury Shares and Disposition of such Treasury Shares

(iv) Stock Split or Stock Consolidation

(v) Payment of Dividends

(vi) Merger or Transfer or Exchange of Shares (including establishment of a sole parent company)

(vii) Division of the Issuer

(viii) Transfer or Acquisition of All or a Part of a Business

(ix) Dissolution

(x) Commercialisation of a New Product or a New Technology

(xi) Entering into Business Affiliation, or the Termination of a Business Affiliation

(xii) Transfer or Acquisition of Shares or an Equity Interest Accompanied by a Change in the Composition of the Issuer's Subsidiaries

(xiii) Transfer, Acquisition, or Lease of Fixed Assets

(xiv) Suspension or Discontinuation of All or a Part of Issuer's Business

(xv) Application for De-listing from a Stock Exchange in Japan or Foreign Countries

(xvi) Petition for Bankruptcy, Revival Procedure, or Corporate Reorganisation

(xvii) Starting-up of a New Business

(xviii) Tender Offer or a Release of Opinion Regarding Tender Offer

(xix) Change of Representative Director

(xx) Corporate Restructuring such as Reduction in the Number of Employees by Layoff

(xxi) Change, Establishment, or Abolishment of Trading Unit of Shares

(xxii) Change of Issuer Name

(xxiii) Change of Accounting Period

(xxiv) Grant of Stock Option to Officers or Employees including Issuance of Stock Acquisition Rights to Them

27 The items that would be applicable only to Japanese domestic companies have been omitted from the following lists. As to the items described in paragraphs a., b., and c., below, the Tokyo Stock Exchange generally requires that it be notified of the corresponding items relating to a subsidiary of a listed issuer as well, subject to the materiality requirement stipulated in the Tokyo Stock Exchange rules.

(xxv) Redemption of All or a Part of Listed Bonds, Convocation of Bondholders' Meeting for Listed Bonds, and Other Material Matters Relating to Rights of Holders of Listed Bonds

(xxvi) Change of Auditor of a Listed Issuer

(xxiv) Any Other Event Having a Material Impact on the Issuer's Corporate Management, Financial Status, Business Results, Listed Securities or anything that Would Affect the Investment Decisions of Investors

b. Material Corporate Information on the Occurrence of Certain Events, including but not limited to:

(i) Damage Resulting from Natural Disaster, or Arising during Normal Business Operations

(ii) Change in One of the Major Shareholders

(iii) De-listing of Certain Securities

(iv) Commencement of a Lawsuit, Rendering of a Court Judgment or Settlement

(v) Petition for a Preliminary Injunction for Suspension of Business and the like or Rendering of a Court Decision or Settlement on Such Petition

(vi) Cancellation of Licence, Suspension of Business, or any Other Disciplinary Action Taken by an Administrative Agency or an Action Taken by an Administrative Agency Based on a Violation of Law or Regulation

(vii) Change in the Identity of the Parent Company

(viii) Petition for, or Notification of, the Commencement of Bankruptcy, Revival Procedure, Corporate Reorganisation, Winding-Up, or Foreclosure of Enterprise Mortgage by Creditors

(ix) Dishonour of a Negotiable Instrument, such as Promissory Note or Check, or the Suspension of Transactions by a Clearing House

(x) Petition for Bankruptcy or the Like with respect to the Parent Company

(xi) Default of a Debtor, or Delay in the Collection of Debts

(xii) Cessation of the Business Relationship with a Major Customer or a Supplier

(xiii) Financial Support by Creditors, such as the Discharge of an Indebtedness

(xiv) Discovery of Natural Resources

(xv) Petition by Shareholders for Injunction Suspending Issuance of New Shares or Stock Acquisition Rights (including Bonds with Stock Acquisition Rights)

(xvi) Request by Shareholders to Convene Shareholders' Meeting

(xvii) Unrealised Losses regarding Securities

(xviii) Occurrence of an Event of Default for Listed Bonds, Convocation of Bondholders' Meeting for Listed Bonds, and Other Material Events Relating to Rights of Holders of Listed Bonds

(xix) Change of Auditor of a Listed Issuer

(xx) Failure of Filing a Securities Report or a Semi-Annual Report

(xxi) Disapproval by Creditors of a Plan of Reorganisation under a Non-Judicial Reorganisation Negotiation

(xxii) Occurrence of any other Event Having a Material Impact on the Issuers, Issuer Corporate Management, Financial Status, Business Results, Listed Securities, or Anything that Would Affect the Investment Decisions of Investors

c. Material Corporate Information Concerning Account Statements, including but not limited to:

(i) Account Statements

(ii) Correction of a Projection concerning Business Operations

(iii) Correction of a Projection concerning Dividends

d. Other Information on Listed Foreign Companies, including but not limited to:

(i) Changes in the Laws regarding the Corporate System in the Home Country

(ii) Material Facts Affecting Negotiability or Distribution of Shares of a Listed Issuer, such as Delisting from the Stock Exchange in the Home Country

Generally, the Tokyo Stock Exchange takes the position that shareholders in Japan should have the same access to information regarding the issuer as shareholders in the home country of the issuer and elsewhere. Accordingly, it is recommended that all information released to the press in the home country or in any other country by the issuer be sent to the Tokyo Stock Exchange and, if the Tokyo Stock Exchange believes it is important, to the Japanese press. In addition to the disclosures and procedures described above, the Tokyo Stock Exchange may, from time to time, request that the issuer provide the Tokyo Stock Exchange with specific information requested by it as it is empowered to do under the relevant regulations.

(c) Disclosure of Information regarding a Parent Company

If a listed issuer is a subsidiary or an affiliate of another company (the 'Parent Company'), such listed issuer must disclose, together with its annual accounting settlement, certain information about the Parent Company, etc., such as corporate name, percentage of voting rights in the issuer held by the Parent Company, and name of stock exchange where shares of the Parent Company are listed. In addition, if the Parent Company is not listed on any stock exchange inside or outside Japan and in other particular cases, the listed issuer must disclose account settlement and material information regarding certain management decisions and occurrence of certain events regarding the Parent Company.

(d) Written Confirmation regarding Appropriateness and Accuracy of Securities Report and Semi-Annual Report

When a listed issuer files a Securities Report or Semi-Annual Report, it must submit to the Tokyo Stock Exchange without delay a document stating that the representative thereof acknowledges that there are no false statements in such securities report or semi-annual report at the time of filing, and explaining his basis for such statement. This document shall be available for public inspection as well as other disclosure documents filed with the Tokyo Stock Exchange.

Introduction

Regulatory System

The Latvian regulatory model of capital markets relies on the combination of governmental regulation and self-regulation. While the government remains the primary regulator in Latvia, it strongly relies on Nasdaq OMX Riga, a regulated market organizer, to exercise certain regulatory and surveillance powers in relation to market operation. The advantages of this model are apparent: self-regulation brings additional expertise and resources to the government in raising the standards of conduct and ensures closer supervision of the market participants.

Legal Sources

The following sources of Latvian securities law may be distinguished:

- Directly applicable European Union (EU) financial market regulations;
- Laws and regulations adopted under delegated legislation mandate;
- Regulations adopted by the Financial and Capital Market Commission (binding to the financial market participants); and
- Nasdaq OMX Riga and Latvian Central Depository self-regulations (binding to the member of the relevant entities and issuers of securities).

The Latvian statutory framework of securities markets has been largely harmonized with European law, in particular the Prospectus Directive,[1] the Transparency Directive,[2] the Market Abuse Directive, and the Markets in Financial Instruments Directive.[3]

The Financial Instruments Market Law is the main source of securities law in Latvia that regulates provision of financial services and ancillary (non-core) services, public offering, listing and admission to trading of financial instruments, and rights and obligations of participants of the financial instruments market.

The Financial Instruments Market Law provisions under the delegated powers are further detailed in the Financial and Capital Market Commission regulations, in particular regulations on contents and procedures for preparing a prospectus and admission of securities to trading on a regulated market. Corporate law aspects of issuing shares and corporate bonds are regulated by the Commercial Law and the Groups of Companies Law. Special provisions on issuing of mortgage bonds are provided in the Law on Mortgage Bonds.

Furthermore, brokerage companies and credit institutions providing investment services in respect of the financial instruments registered with the Latvian Central Depository and traded on a regulated market in Latvia are subject to the Latvian Central Depository regulations on holding, registering, clearing, and settling financial instruments and Nasdaq OMX Riga regulations on listing and trading of securities. The legal regime applicable to investment services applies to financial instruments that are defined in line with the Markets in Financial Instruments Directive, notably:

- Transferable securities, being shares and other transferable securities equivalent to shares that ensure a holding in the capital of a company, bonds and other debt securities, other marketable transferable securities whereto the right to acquire the shares or bonds by subscription or exchange are attached, and share certificates;
- Units of investment funds and other transferable securities that certify a holding in investment funds or collective investment undertakings similar to investment funds;
- Money-market instruments;
- Certain derivatives; and
- Structured financial instruments.[4]

Authorities

Financial and Capital Market Commission

The Financial and Capital Market Commission is the regulatory and supervisory authority of the financial markets in Latvia vested with the task of protecting the interests of investors, depositors, and the insured, and of promoting the development and stability of the financial and capital market. In doing so, the Financial and Capital Market Commission has authority to:

- Issue regulations and directives, governing activities of financial and capital market participants;
- Request and receive information from financial and capital market participants, as well as from other public institutions for execution of its functions;
- Impose restrictions on the activities of financial market participants, to ensure compliance with the financial regulation, and to penalize infringements of the financial regulations; and
- Cooperate and exchange information with foreign financial and capital market supervision authorities and carry out other activities prescribed by the law.[5]

Latvian Central Depository

The Latvian Central Depository is a subsidiary of Nasdaq OMX Riga. The Latvian Central Depository maintains accounts for, and book entries of, the financial instruments that are publicly held in Latvia and ensures settlement of financial instruments and cash in transactions on the regulated market, as well as settlement of financial instruments among custodians.

The Latvian Central Depository allows the custodians to hold financial instruments in a dematerialized form, and the rights to securities are evidenced with a book entry in the financial instruments account (shares in a publicly held company need to be in bearer and dematerialized form).

Nasdaq OMX Riga

Nasdaq OMX Riga is the only licensed market organizer in Latvia that operates two market segments: the regulated market and the First North. The market organizer is authorized to issue regulations to market participants and to supervise the issuers of financial instruments listed and admitted to trading on the regulated market.

Procedures

The Financial and Capital Market Commission is empowered, among others, to issue regulations under the delegated legislation powers, license, and supervise financial institutions. The Financial and Capital Market Commission adopts administrative acts according to generally applicable administrative procedure, subject to any exceptions prescribed by the Financial Instruments Market Law.

5 Law on the Financial and Capital Markets Comission, art 7.

In particular, the Financial and Capital Market Commission is responsible for vetting and registration of the prospectuses, licensing of financial market participants, and ensuring protection of depositors and investors. The Financial and Capital Market Commission is authorized to impose penalties for the violations of the financial markets laws (eg, operating without a license, failure to notify acquisition of substantial participation, insider trading, and market manipulation). Procedures for listing and admission of financial instruments to trading are set out in the Nasdaq OMX Riga regulations.

Legal Order and Regulatory Interests with Special Regard to Foreign Elements

Admission

Market Participants

Domestic Exchanges. Nasdaq OMX Riga is the only licensed organizer of a regulated market in Latvia that has extensive self-regulatory powers that may be exercised under the supervisory umbrella of the Financial and Capital Market Commission. Nasdaq OMX Riga is authorized to adopt binding regulations to its members and issuers and to supervise the operation of a regulated market.[6]

In particular, Nasdaq OMX Riga has issued regulations on listing, admission, and trading of financial instruments on the regulated market, settlement of financial instruments and cash, and identification and prevention of market manipulation. NASDAQ OMX Riga operates two market segments that are calibrated according to the regulatory requirements and the market needs: the regulated market (stock exchange) and the Baltic alternative market First North (multilateral trading system).

The regulated market segment targets large and well-established companies seeking access to capital markets. The issuers whose securities are included in the official list of, or admitted to trading on, the regulated market are subject to full scope of the EU regulatory and disclosure requirements.

First North is a second-tier alternative market specifically designed for fast-growing, developing companies that seek to access capital markets. First North is harmonized across the Nasdaq OMX exchanges in Tallinn, Riga, and Vilnius and utilizes the Nasdaq OMX trading, information, and distribution infrastructure, but as a multilateral trading facility has lower regulatory demands and admission requirements. There are no quantitative requirements for the admission of securities to First North.

Admission to trading on First North falls outside the mandatory EU disclosure regime, unless there is a public offering of the securities. There is no pre-vetting of admission documents by Nasdaq OMX Riga. Instead, the First

North Rules[7] require that companies applying to join First North appoint a certified adviser that is affiliated with First North and to retain at all times afterwards the admission to the market. It is the responsibility of a certified advisor to warrant that the applicant is appropriate for First North and advise the company about its obligations to ensure compliance on an ongoing basis with the First North Rules.[8]

Transborder Electronic Trading Systems. Nasdaq OMX Baltic market includes common Baltic securities lists, common and harmonized indexes, and access for investors to all Baltic listed financial instruments through any of the pan-Baltic members. NASDAQ OMX Baltic exchanges employ two trading systems:

- INET Nordic for trading in instruments in the equities market; and
- Genium INET for trading in instruments in the fixed-income market and for auctions and special procedures (tender offer, public share sale, and initial public offering) execution.[9]

Trading facilities of Nasdaq OMX Riga are accessible to authorized members of the market organizer, ie, brokerage companies and credit institutions entitled to provide investment services in Latvia and other EU/EEA member states that fulfill other statutory and Nasdaq OMX requirements. Nasdaq OMX may allow the State Treasury, the Bank of Latvia, and similar foreign institutions to accede a specific market segment without becoming a member of Nasdaq OMX. Orders are accepted from a broker who is authorized by Nasdaq OMX Riga and mandated by its member.

The transactions in financial instruments registered with the Latvian Central Depository are cleared and settled on delivery versus payment basis. Latvian Central Depository has established corresponding relationships with Estonian Central Securities Depository, Lithuanian Central Securities Depository, and Clearstream Banking Luxembourg, allowing Latvian Central Depository participants to act as custodians with regard to the financial instruments registered with a counterpart depository.

In the absence of a corresponding relationship between Latvian Central Depository and foreign central securities depositories, the issuers need to use depository receipts in order to cross-list on a foreign stock exchange (eg, a Latvian company seeking admission of shares registered with the Latvian Central Depository to trading on the London Stock Exchange might need to use depository receipts or CREST depository interest for settlement purposes).

Off-Market Transactions. The Latvian Central Depository clearing and settlement rules apply also to over-the-counter transactions in financial instruments registered with the Latvian Central Depository or central securities depositories having corresponding relationships with the Latvian Central Depository. Over-the-counter transactions are settled on gross basis (delivery versus payment).

Securities

National Treatment and Reciprocity. As a general rule, foreign issuers are subject to the listing and admission requirements set out in the Financial Instruments Market Law and the Nasdaq Listing Rules.[10] Limited mutual recognition has been achieved at the EU level through harmonization of mandatory prospectus disclosure requirements. In particular, the EU issuers benefit from a 'single passport' under which they may rely on a prospectus approved by the competent authority of the home state without registration of a prospectus with the Financial and Capital Market Commission.

In order to passport a prospectus to Latvia, an issuer must apply to the competent authority of his home member state for regulatory approval of the prospectus before it is published. Once a prospectus is approved it has EU-wide scope which means that is valid for pubic offers or admission of securities to trading on a regulated market in Latvia. The home state must inform the Financial and Capital Market Commission and the European Securities Market Authority that the prospectus has been approved in accordance with the Prospectus Directive and send a copy of the prospectus. Despite the EU 'single passport' regime, there has not been considerable activity from the part of Latvian issuers in taking in more liquid capital markets through international public offerings or cross-listing on foreign exchanges.

Official List. The requirements for the admission of shares, bonds, and other securities to an official list are set out in the Financial Instruments Market Law and the Nasdaq Listing Rules. Nasdaq OMX Riga is the Latvian listing authority, thus, listing and admission of securities to trading on the regulated market are viewed as being part of a single screening process.

Nasdaq OMX Riga operates different listing categories that are calibrated according to the market needs and regulatory requirements.[11] The primary listing is a market segment for shares and other equities of blue-chip companies subject to higher eligibility requirements. The second listing is a market segment with a lighter-version regime for smaller and younger companies with shorter business record and lower market capitalization requirements. In addition, Nasdaq OMX Riga maintains a special list for debt securities and investment fund units.

11 Nasdaq Listing Rules, s 2.4.

Issuer Requirements. Nasdaq OMX Riga regulations provide for the following issuer eligibility requirements:

- The issuer must be registered and operates according to the law of the state of registration, articles of association, and Nasdaq OMX Riga regulations;
- The issuer's articles of association comply with the respective laws and are publicly available;
- Nasdaq OMX Riga may reject admission of the financial instruments to the official list if the issuer is subject to legal protection proceedings (tiesiskās aizsardzības process), out-of-court legal protection proceedings (ārpustiesas tiesiskās aizsardzības process), insolvency proceedings, or the issuer has had solvency problems within two years prior to applying for listing; and
- The issuer's business activities do not harm the interests of investors.[12]

Nasdaq OMX Riga has considerable discretion in listing matters, in particular it may refuse to include financial instruments in the official list if the issuer and the financial instruments comply with the formal eligibility requirements, but listing would negatively impact smooth functioning of the regulated market and prejudice the investor's interests.

Nasdaq OMX Riga decides on listing having regard to the issuer's financial standing, market position, client structure, growth potential, business activity, reputation, future plans, and other criteria that are material for assessment of the issuer's business activity.[13]

Securities Requirements. Nasdaq Listing Rules provide for the following general listing requirements:

- The financial instruments are freely transferable and the issuer's articles of association do not restrict the right to alienate financial instruments (eg, pre-emption rights);
- The financial instruments are in a dematerialized form and registered with the Latvian Central Depository or in any other foreign central securities depository with whom Nasdaq OMX Riga and/or the Latvian Central Depository has an agreement on settlement of trades;
- The financial instruments are issued in accordance with the applicable laws and the issuer's articles of association and other regulations;[14] and
- The market for the respective financial instruments is sufficiently liquid. Nasdaq OMX Riga may require the issuer to enter into an arrangement with a market maker to support the liquidity of a given financial instrument.

13 Nasdaq Listing Rules, s 10.1.4.

Shares and equivalent transferable securities that ensure participation in a company's share capital are admitted to the Primary List if the following conditions are fulfilled:

- The issuer is carrying on business for at least three years and is engaged in its main business activity;
- The issuer's annual financial statement for the last year has been prepared in accordance with the international accounting standards (IAS);
- The expected market capitalization of the listed shares is at least €4 million;
- The issuer requests admitting all the shares of the respective share class to the primary list; and
- No later than on the day of commencing trading of the shares, a sufficient number of shares is held by the public.[15]

Quantitative and qualitative requirements for the admission of shares or equivalent securities to the Second List are set out in the Financial Instruments Market Law:

- The expected market capitalization for the listed shares is at least €1 million;
- The issuer's financial statements for the last three years are publicly available;
- The company requests admitting all the shares of the respective share class to the Second List; and
- No later than on the day of commencing trading of the shares, a sufficient number of shares is held by the public, this condition being fulfilled if at least 25 per cent of the shares the admission of which is sought on the stock exchange are held by the public or Nasdaq OMX Riga considers that there will be sufficient market liquidity for the respective shares.[16]

The issuer may apply for the inclusion of financial instruments in the Pre-List prior to listing on the Primary List or the Second List if the issuer cannot fully comply with the requirements for the admission to the Official List or the Second List. Nasdaq OMX Riga may transfer shares to another list if the issuer does not comply with the requirements of the respective list.

Financial instruments may be transferred to the Surveillance List with the purpose to alert the market on specific circumstances and measures associated with a given issuer. The Surveillance List is a part of the Official List, the Second List, and the Pre-List.

15 If it is impossible to forecast marker capitalization, shares may be admitted to the Second List if the paid-up share capital and reserves (including profit and losses) in the last financial year were at least €1 million.

16 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 42.

Baltic Alternative Market First North. The First North Rules do not impose requirements regarding the minimum percentage of shares to be held by the public, minimum trading records before admission, minimum market capitalization, or other quantitative requirements for the admission of securities to trading.

The Financial Instruments Market Law adheres to the principle of mandatory prospectus disclosure, ie, it is unlawful to offer financial instruments to the public in Latvia or to request that they be admitted to trading on a regulated market operating in Latvia unless an approved prospectus has been made available to the public before the offer or request is made. Thus, all initial public offerings fall within the scope of a mandatory prospectus requirement, including those where the financial instruments are admitted to trading on the First North. However, mere admission of financial instruments on the First North is not an admission to trading on a regulated market and therefore will not trigger the prospectus requirement in the absence of a public offer.

A public offer designates communication (information) by any means on the offer terms and the offered transferable securities that enable the investor to make a decision on the acquisition or subscription of such securities. A public offer may be made only on receipt of the Financial and Capital Market Commission decision on permission to make a public offer.[17] This definition is broad enough not only to cover newly issued shares but also secondary offers by shareholders. A placing of transferable securities through an intermediary also would be covered,[18] but communications in relation to trading on certain markets or trading venues fall outside the definition.

There are certain exemptions from the mandatory prospectus requirement that mirror the provisions of the EU Prospectus Directive that apply by reference to the number of investors, capital being sought, sophistication of investors, or the minimum purchase price of securities. The Financial Instruments Market Law distinguishes two types of prospectuses:

- A prospectus for the initial public offering; and
- A prospectus for admission of financial instruments to a regulated market.

The prospectuses are equivalent in substance; therefore, an issuer who intends to offer securities for subscription via a regulated market, or intends to request admission of securities to trading on a regulated market immediately after the initial allotment, may prepare and submit to the Financial and Capital Market Commission a single prospectus. The format and content of the prospectus is set out in the EU Prospectus Directive Regulations.[19] An issuer seeking admission to trading on the First North (without public offer of securities) must produce only an admission document (description of the company), the prescribed contents of which are less onerous than the prospectus requirements.[20]

The Latvian regulatory framework for corporate governance comprises a number of sources, these being the Commercial Law, the Financial Instruments Market Law, the Nasdaq Listing Rules, and Nasdaq OMX Riga Corporate Governance Principles and Implementation Recommendations (the 'Corporate Governance Principles').[21] The laws and regulations establish basic standards of conduct and transparency, while the Corporate Governance Principles rely on self-regulation as a means of maintaining good corporate governance.

The Nasdaq Listing Rules rely on the 'comply or explain' approach. Under this approach, a listed company must report to its shareholders on how it has applied the Corporate Governance Principles and, where it has not applied them as envisaged, provide an explanation as to why it has not done so. Shareholders can then decide whether they are satisfied with the company's corporate governance practices.

The Corporate Governance Principles recognize that 'one size fits all' approach may not be suitable for all the companies and, when making decisions on governance practices, the management board can make judgments, taking into account the size and complexity of the company and the nature of the risks and challenges it faces.

The 'comply or explain' approach relies on shareholders and boards to scrutinize their companies. The legal framework seeks to ensure that shareholders have the necessary information to judge the governance practices of the company, and the rights necessary to hold the board to account if such practices are found wanting. In particular, the issuer included in the official list must file a report on the implementation of corporate governance principles to Nasdaq OMX Riga together with an audited financial statement.[22]

This requirement, however, does not apply to issuers of the securities admitted to trading on the First North. Shareholders can then discuss the position with the company and may take action to influence the board using their voting powers. In particular, under the Commercial Law the shareholders have a right to appoint and dismiss individual members of the supervisory board of a public company,[23] to call an extraordinary general meeting,[24] to request the necessary information from the management board[25] and to approve the remuneration of the members of the supervisory board and the internal auditor and the principles and criteria for determining the remuneration of the members of the management board and supervisory board.[26] The Corporate Governance Principles contain principles which set out broad tenets of good corporate governance practice, and more specific provisions. The most important principles are summarized below.

The issuer should ensure the shareholder equality of the same class of shares (eg, right to information and dividends).[27] There should be a dialogue with shareholders based on the mutual understanding of objectives. The board should use the annual general meeting to communicate with investors and encourage their participation.

The management board and supervisory board should have appropriate skills, experience, independence, and knowledge enabling them to discharge their respective duties and responsibilities effectively.[28] It is recommended that at least half of the supervisory board should be made of independent directors.[29]

The board is responsible for maintaining sound risk management and internal control systems. The board should establish formal and transparent arrangements for considering how they should apply the corporate reporting and risk management and internal control principles, and for maintaining an appropriate relationship with the company's auditor.

The issuer should establish the management and supervisory board remuneration policies that should set out criteria and types of remuneration payable to the board members (fixed and variable remuneration, share options, and other incentives). There should be a formal and transparent procedure for developing policy on executive remuneration.[30]

Registration of Public Offerings. The issuer is allowed to make a public offering or apply for the admission to a regulated market, as the case may be, only after the approval of the prospectus by the Financial and Capital Market Commission. The issuer should file an application to the Financial and Capital Market Commission together with two originals of the prospectus and a decision of the issuer's executive body regarding the issuing and public offering of the securities.

The Financial and Capital Market Commission decides on granting or refusing permission to make a public offer within 10 days from the date of receipt of the necessary documents.[31] The Financial and Capital Market Commission may refuse to issue a permit if the information in the documents does not comply with the statutory requirements, the issue does not comply with the laws, or the issue may prejudice the investors' interests.[32] The Financial and Capital Market Commission publishes the prospectus and its decision on its website and sends the prospectus to the European Securities and Markets Authority. The issuer is allowed to make a public offering within one month from the date of receipt of a positive Financial and Capital Market Commission decision.

Registration of Placements. According to the Financial Instruments Market Law, the mandatory prospectus disclosure requirement does not apply to the following types of offers:

- An offer of securities addressed solely to qualified investors;
- An offer of securities addressed to fewer than 150 natural or legal persons per member state, other than qualified investors;
- An offer of securities addressed to investors who acquire securities for a total consideration of at least €100,000 per investor, for each separate offer;
- An offer of securities whose denomination per unit amounts to at least €100,000; and
- An offer of securities with a total consideration of less than €100,000, which limit shall be calculated over a period of 12 months.[33]

These exceptions seek to facilitate non-retail offers, including initial public offerings to institutions' investors. The above exemptions may be of a particular relevance in case of international offerings where a large tranche of securities is offered to foreign institutional investors outside the territory of Latvia, while a smaller tranche is offered to retail investors in Latvia. The exemption, however, applies to public offers only. If the issuer requests admission of securities to trading on a regulated market, an admission prospectus is necessary unless other exemption applies.[34]

Furthermore, the mandatory prospectus requirement does not apply to offers of certain types of securities to the public and admission of such securities to trading, e.g., shares issued in substitution for shares of the same class already issued, securities offered in connection with a takeover by means of an exchange offer, shares offered, allotted, or to be allotted free of charge to existing shareholders, and dividends paid out in the form of shares of the same class as the shares in respect of which such dividends are paid, or securities offered, allotted or to be allotted, to existing or former directors or employees by their employer which has securities already admitted to trading on a regulated market.[35]

35 Financial Instruments Market Law, arts 16(1) and 47.

Registration of Secondary Trade. The issuer may request admission of securities to the regulated market after initial subscription and allotment of securities. The issuer should file with Nasdaq OMX Riga an application for the admission of financial instruments to trading on a regulated market not later than three months from the date of registration of the prospectus with the Financial and Capital Market Commission.

The issuer registered in another EU member state may request admission of securities to trading on the regulated market only after the prospectus has been registered with the Financial and Capital Market Commission or the prospectus registered with the competent authority of the home state of the issuer has been passported to Latvia.

Periodic Disclosure

Periodic Financial Reporting

The Financial Instruments Market Law sets out requirements for publishing annual and interim financial reports that apply to issuers that have securities admitted to trading on a regulated market situated or operating within Latvia. A company registered in Latvia or in a foreign country whose transferable securities are admitted to the official list must prepare its annual financial statement according to IAS and International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS), as endorsed by the European Commission,[36] and it must file it with the market organizer.

The annual financial report must include an audited financial statement, a management report, responsibility statements, and corporate governance report.[37] The annual financial report must be disclosed in full to the public together with an audit report. The management report must provide all the material information that enables investors to assess the trends in the company's business and profit or loss, all specific circumstances affecting business, and future prospects of the company in the relevant period.

A company whose shares are admitted to trading on a regulated market must submit to Nasdaq OMX Riga quarterly reports (three, six, nine, and 12-month) that have been prepared in accordance with the laws of the country of origin and the regulations of the market organizer.[38] Half-yearly and 12-month financial reports must include a condensed financial statement, an interim management report, and responsibility statement. The interim management report must provide an explanation of material events that have taken place in the relevant period, the main risks and uncertainties in the forthcoming six months of the fiscal year that could affect the financial position and performance of the issuer, and a fair review of the major related-party transactions.[39] Quarterly three-month and nine-month reports consist of a condensed financial statement and interim management report, if there are substantial changes in the information provided in the previous interim report.[40]

38 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 57(3).

Companies whose securities are admitted to trading on the First North are subject to less onerous financial reporting requirements than those traded on a regulated market. The companies are allowed to prepare annual financial statement according to the standards of the issuer's registration country.[41] Furthermore, companies, instead of preparing quarterly financial statements, must prepare only half-yearly financial statements. The issuers admitted on the regulated market have to disclose all the mandatory information in Latvian and English,[42] whereas the issuers admitted to the alternative market may disclose the information only in Latvian.

Ad Hoc Disclosure of Information

An issuer whose financial instruments are admitted to trading on the regulated market must notify the market organizer of material events, ie, any events relating to the issuer that the issuer knows or ought to have known, and that are likely to influence the price of the issuer's financial instruments admitted to trading on the regulated market, or investors' decision to buy or sell financial instruments. The ad hoc disclosure requirements applicable to issuers admitted to First North are substantially similar to those of the regulated market.[43]

Material events include, among others, decisions of annual general meetings, preliminary financial results, dividend payments, changes in the company management, notification on financial developments, material agreements, court proceedings, mergers, acquisitions, reorganization, insolvency and similar proceedings, secondary listing, and changes in the shareholder structure.[44]

The issuer discloses the mandatory information via media and other information channels with a view to ensure, as far as possible, broad reach of the public and dissemination of information in the origin member state and other EU and European Economic Area (EEA) member states. Simultaneously, the issuer must post the information in the central storage system of regulated information,[45] ie, a publicly available web site devoted to publishing information on the issuers of securities.

Foreign Issuers

Domestic issuers and foreign issuers (ie, issuers with legal address in another country) are generally subject to the same set of the ongoing disclosure requirements. A foreign company whose transferable securities are admitted to trading on a regulated market in Latvia must prepare an annual report according to the IAS and IFRS and must file it to the market organizer in accordance with the procedure established thereby. In addition, quarterly and half-yearly reports must be submitted to the market organizer prepared in compliance with laws of the company's registration country.

Third-country issuers are exempt from Latvian law requirements regarding the preparation of annual reports and interim financial reports if the information provided, according to the law of the country, where the issuer's legal address is situated, is the same as prescribed by Latvian laws or the Financial and Capital Market Commission considers that such information is equivalent to Latvian law requirements. However, the information covered by the requirements of that third country must be filed and disclosed according to the same procedure as applicable to domestic issuers.[46] A foreign issuer also must disclose information that is disclosed in a third country which may be of importance to the public in Latvia, even if such information is not mandatory information, via mass media in Latvia and the Latvian central storage system of regulated information.[47]

Furthermore, Latvian law provides for a minimum set of equivalence criteria with respect to third-country management reports and financial reporting standards. If the issuer's legal address is in a third country and its management report has been prepared in accordance with the law of that country, it is considered to be equivalent to Latvian law requirements if it at least provides a clear overview of the issuer's business trends and financial results, as well as the main risks and uncertainties to which the issuer is exposed, information on any material events from the end of the previous fiscal year, and information on the expected development of the issuer.[48]

Latvian law extends the mandatory use of IFRS to third-country issuers in preparing consolidated financial statements. This approach is consistent with the endorsement of IFRS at the EU level,[49] and the EU attempts to facilitate convergence of international accounting standards at an international level on the basis of IFRS. Nevertheless, in certain cases, third-country issuers are allowed to use financial statements prepared otherwise than in accordance with IFRS provided that accounting standards, under which they have been drawn up, are recognized as equivalent by the European Commission. In particular, the

Financial Instruments Market Law recognizes the equivalence of the following accounting standards:

- IFRS provided that the notes to the audited financial statements that form part of the historical financial information contain an explicit and unreserved statement that these financial statements comply with IFRS in accordance with IAS 1 Presentation of Financial Statements; and
- GAAPS of the United States, Japan, China, Canada, South Korea, and India.[50]

If a third-county issuer does not use IFRS or equivalent international financial reporting standards, a consolidated annual report is considered to be equivalent to Latvian law requirements regarding consolidated annual reports in relation to securities admitted to trading on a regulated market, if it includes information on the calculation of dividends and ability to distribute dividends (share issues only) and liquidity and minimum capital requirements of the issuer, if such requirements are set out in the laws of the respective country.[51] Furthermore, under the Nasdaq Listing Rules, the issuers that are not registered (incorporated) in Latvia are allowed to disclose the information thereunder only in English.[52]

ADR Disclosure

Depository receipts can be admitted to an official list and to the Nasdaq OMX Riga regulated market,[53] in which case the continuing disclosure obligations will apply. Latvian law and Nasdaq Listing Rules do not differentiate between the ongoing obligations applicable to depository receipts and the securities represented by the depository receipts. In the case of depository receipts representing securities issued, the issuer is deemed to be the issuer of the securities represented by the depository receipts.[54]

Proxy Disclosure

Latvian commercial law provides for general rules on compensation disclosure, conflicts of interest and the shareholder right to request the necessary information from the management board. As noted above, under the Nasdaq Listing Rules, the issuer must file a report on the implementation of corporate governance principles to Nasdaq OMX Riga together with an audited financial statement and publish them on its web site.

53 Nasdaq Listing Rules, s 2.1.3(4).

Compensation Disclosure

The issuer should publish on its web site a report on the remuneration policies of its management bodies that should at least provide information on the application of remuneration policies in the previous fiscal year with respect to the management board and supervisory board members, proportion of a fixed and variable remuneration for the respective category of management and other bonuses and incentives (if the information is commercially sensitive and can prejudice the interests of the issuer, the issuer may invoke a disclosure exemption).

Furthermore, the issuer must disclose information on the total compensation of the management board and supervisory board members (but not the remuneration of other key employees having significant impact on the company).[55] Unfortunately, the rules suffer from formalism since there is no express requirement to provide information on how the company's compensation practices could impact the incentives of the board members to take risks and how that would affect the company's risk profile.

Disclosure about Directors

The issuer should publish information on its web site relating to the qualifications of the management board and supervisory board members and directorships they have held in other companies during the past three years, ownership of the issuer's shares or shares in subsidiaries or parent companies of the issuer, and term of the supervisory board member.[56] This requirement, however, does not apply to other key employees.

Oversight of Risks

The management board should introduce adequate corporate and accountability structures and shall confirm in the annual financial statement that internal risk control procedures are efficient and that internal control was performed in accordance with the respective procedures.[57] However, there is no express duty to provide reasons for the chosen leadership structure and the role of the management bodies in the oversight of various risks.

The issuer must establish an internal audit committee in charge of overseeing preparation of financial statements and consolidated financial statement (if any), efficiency of internal risk management and control system.[58] The issuer should publish information on the results of the internal audit committee on its web site. Additional business conduct and disclosure requirements apply to licensed financial institutions.

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

Offer to Public

Financial instruments that are admitted to trading on a regulated market are offered to investors on the sixth day after a positive decision by Nasdaq OMX Riga. Nasdaq OMX Riga uses the INET Nordic trading platform for Nordic and Baltic equities trading. Trades on the regulated market may be effected as automatically matched trades or manual trades. Nasdaq OMX Riga accepts orders only from authorized brokers in the form specified in the resolution of the Nasdaq OMX Riga.

Orders participate in the opening call auction at the beginning of the trading hours; automatic matching in the trading system during the continuous trading and in the closing auction conducted after the trading hours as a result of automatically matched trades could be concluded.

Listed Securities

Trades concluded on the regulated market are settled by the Latvian Central Depository on net basis (delivery versus payment). Settlement day for trades that are concluded on the central and continuous market is T+3, but for block trades it may be from T+1.

On the settlement day the Latvian Central Depository checks whether all trade confirmations have been received from custodians and calculates net positions for securities and cash. If securities positions are sufficient for settlement, the Latvian Central Depository sends to Bank of Latvia an instruction to transfer cash on the settlement day.

If cash positions are sufficient for settlement, Bank of Latvia transfers cash and informs the Latvian Central Depository about cash settlement, consequently the Latvian Central Depository transfers securities. Finally, on the settlement day, the Bank of Latvia transfers cash and the Latvian Central Depository transfers securities.

Unlisted Securities

Over-the-counter trades with the financial instruments registered with the Latvian Central Depository, the Estonian Central Securities Depository, Lithuanian Central Securities Depository, and Clearstream Banking Luxembourg are settled on gross basis (delivery versus payment).

A Latvian Central Depository participant can settle the cash leg of its cross-border delivery versus payment over-the-counter transactions through an intermediary that is eligible for cash settlement at the Central Bank of Lithuania or Central Bank of Estonia. Latvian Central Depository participants can choose settlement day from T + 0 (real time basis) till T + 360.

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Holdings

Shareholder Duties

Applicability of Latvian Law. The Latvian disclosure regime is concerned with control over or access to voting rights attached to issued shares, ie, it covers direct shareholdings, indirect interests (ie, access to voting rights) and certain financial instruments which give the holder an entitlement to acquire shares with voting rights attached. The substantial shareholder disclosure rules apply only to shareholdings in issuers that have their shares admitted to trading on a regulated market in Latvia.[59]

Thresholds. The thresholds for disclosure are when a person's holding of voting shares reaches, exceeds or falls below five per cent, 10 per cent, 15 per cent, 20 per cent, 25 per cent, 30 per cent, 50 per cent, and 75 per cent of all the votes represented by the shares issued by the issuer.[60]

Additional thresholds of 90 per cent and 95 per cent of all the votes represented are applied to the holdings in issuers who have Latvia as their member state of origin,[61] ie, where the issuer is incorporated in the EU/EEA and has its registered office in Latvia, or where the issuer is incorporated outside the EEA and Latvia was the first member state in which its shares were publicly offered (after 31 December 2003) or an admission for trading in a regulated market was made. Shareholders of securities of unlisted issuers, or issuers who are listed only on a non-regulated market (First North), are not caught by the Latvian substantial shareholder disclosure regime.

Further shareholding disclosures apply to all companies registered in Latvia, whether listed on a regulated market in Latvia or not. The Groups of Companies Law requires disclosure (to the issuer) of acquisition of a shareholding, in a company registered in Latvia, in total also exceeding or falling below (but not reaching) 10 per cent, 15 per cent, 20 per cent, 25 per cent, 30 per cent, 35 per cent, 40 per cent, 45 per cent, 50 per cent, 55 per cent, 60 per cent, 65 per cent, 70 per cent, 75 per cent, 80 per cent, 85 per cent, 90 per cent, and 95 per cent.

However, this obligation in practice is not widely applied and is rarely enforced. The disclosure obligation under the Groups of Companies Law requires disclosure by a shareholder to the issuer in case of exceeding applicable thresholds upwards or downwards. In practice, this disclosure obligation is relevant only if a shareholder is a nominee, or if the shares are bearer shares of a joint-stock company. The disclosure regime contains three main components:

- Disclosure of acquisitions or disposals of voting rights;
- Disclosure of indirect holdings of voting rights; and

59 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 60(1).
60 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 61(1).
61 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 61(2).

- Disclosure of entitlements to acquire voting rights under financial instruments.[62]

The following full or partial exemptions apply:

- Shares acquired for clearing and settlement purposes;
- Shares held by custodians or nominees;
- A collateral taker;
- Shares held by a market maker acting in that capacity, provided the holdings are below 10 per cent and subject to the market maker satisfying various criteria and complying with various additional requirements;
- A credit institution or investment brokerage company in their trading book where the voting rights do not exceed five per cent of all voting rights represented by shares issued by the issuer;
- Members of the European System of Central Banks; and
- A subsidiary is not required to make a disclosure because its parent (or the other company controlling the parent) has made the disclosure instead.

Notification must be made to the issuer and the Financial and Capital Market Commission as soon as possible, but in any event within four trading days. The notification is filed electronically using the electronic information system supported by the Financial and Capital Market Commission (the Central Storage of Regulated Information), and through this system the information is provided to the regulated market.[63]

Company Duties

A joint-stock company whose shares are admitted to trading on the regulated market must promptly make the share acquisition notification, received from a person who has acquired, directly or indirectly, a qualifying holding of shares with voting rights, publicly available in Latvia and each EU member state on whose regulated markets the shares of the joint-stock company are admitted to trading, but not later than within four business days of its receipt, in a manner that allows all shareholders to access the information.

In certain cases, the Financial and Capital Market Commission is entitled to exempt a joint-stock company from the obligation to publish information on shareholders who, directly or indirectly, acquired voting rights attached to the shareholding thresholds referred to in the Financial Instruments Market Law.

62 Where a person has holdings of voting rights in more than one of the above three categories, he will need to aggregate these holdings for the purposes of calculating whether a disclosure is required.

63 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 642(2).

Insider Trading and Fraud

Basis of Territorial Link

The Financial Instruments Market Law provisions on prohibition of market abuse closely follow the EU Market Abuse Directive. In particular, the Financial and Capital Market Commission must ensure that prohibition of insider dealing and market manipulation applies to:

- Actions carried out in the territory of Latvia or abroad concerning financial instruments that are admitted to trading on a regulated market in Latvia regardless of whether the transaction takes place on or outside a regulated market or for which the issuer has adopted a request to commence trading on a regulated market in Latvia; or
- Actions carried out in the territory of Latvia concerning financial instruments admitted to trading on a regulated market in another EU/EEA member state or for which the issuer has adopted a request to commence trading on a regulated market in another EU/EEA member state.[64]

The Financial Instruments Market Law provisions on the prohibition to use inside information apply also to financial instruments that have not been admitted to a regulated market in Latvia or another EU/EEA member state, but whose price depends on the financial instruments traded on a regulated market in Latvia or another EU/EEA member state.[65]

The inside information is defined along the lines of the Market Abuse Directive.[66] Persons who know or ought to have known that the information is inside information are liable for disclosing such information.

As concerns the prohibition of market manipulation, Latvian law goes beyond the Market Abuse Directive since the law prohibits not only market manipulation, but also unfair transactions, ie, transactions which do not comply with the general provisions of the Civil Law and that infringe the rights and legitimate interests of the counterparty and other parties.[67] The Financial and Capital Market Commission enjoys extensive powers to counter market abuse, including the right to:

- Request that any person provides information on his activities in the financial and capital markets;
- Request that participants of the financial instruments market cease any action that are contrary to the provisions of the Financial Instruments Market Law;
- Suspend trading in financial instruments; and

64 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 84(1)–(3).
65 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 84(4).
66 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 85(1) and (2).
67 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 88(2).

- Restrict the activities of a participant of the financial instruments market for up to six months.[68]

Under the Criminal Law, insider dealing and market manipulation that has resulted in material harm (the infringement has resulted in damages of five minimum wages and endangerment of other legally protected interests) may be sanctioned with a deprivation of liberty for up to three years. Qualified insider dealing and market manipulation (committed by an organized group or resulting in damages of 50 minimum wages) are sanctioned with the deprivation of liberty from two to 10 years.[69]

Extraterritorial Application

Latvian laws have extraterritorial effect where a party is engaging in market abuse outside the territory of Latvia with respect to financial instruments that are admitted to trading on a regulated market in Latvia regardless of whether the transaction takes place on or outside a regulated market or for which the issuer has adopted a request to commence trading on a regulated market in Latvia.

The enforcement of these Latvian anti-abuse laws, however, depends on the efficiency of cooperation between the Financial and Capital Market Commission and competent authorities of countries where the infringement has been committed. There are no publicly available records of cases when the Financial and Capital Market Commission or other investigative authorities had sought to enforce the Latvian anti-abuse laws outside the territory of Latvia.

Public Takeover Bids

Territorial Application (Foreign Bidder-Domestic Target)

Latvian law on takeovers closely follows the EU Takeover Directive[70] that establishes takeover mechanisms and safeguards the shareholders' rights. The Financial Instruments Market Law provisions on takeovers apply only to companies with shares admitted to trading on a regulated market in Latvia. There are no specific provisions relating to takeovers of companies the shares of which are held by the public, but are not admitted to trading on a regulated market.

Making of a takeover bid is supervised by the Financial and Capital Market Commission if the shares of the target company are admitted to trading on a regulated market in Latvia regardless of whether the target company has a registered office in Latvia or abroad.

69 Criminal Law, art 193.
70 Directive 2004/25/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 April 2004 on takeover bids (the 'Takeover Directive').

Where the shares of the target company are admitted to trading on regulated markets in Latvia and in one or several other EU/EEA member states, the making of a takeover bid is supervised by the Financial and Capital Market Commission if the shares were first admitted to trading on the regulated market in Latvia. Where the shares of the target company are simultaneously admitted to trading on a regulated market in Latvia and in one or several other EU/EEA member states, the target company may determine which of the supervisory authorities of the relevant member states will supervise the bid.[71] A mandatory takeover bid must be made by any person or persons acting in concert that:

- Have acquired, directly or indirectly, shares of the target company representing at least 50 per cent of the voting power in the company; and
- Have voted at the shareholders meeting of the target company in favor of excluding the company from a regulated market.[72]

A person has a right to make a voluntary takeover bid if, as a result of acquisition of the shares for which the bid is made, the person would have acquired at least 10 per cent of the voting power in the target company. As opposed to the mandatory takeover bid where the offeror is required to make the bid in respect of all of the shares of the remaining shareholders, a person making a voluntary takeover bid may fix the minimum or maximum number of shares that he is willing to purchase.[73]

Connecting Factors in International Private Law Aspects

Matters relating to the consideration for the bid and matters relating to the takeover procedure, in particular the information on the offeror's decision to make a bid, the contents of the offer document, and the disclosure of the bid, are governed by the law of the EU member state of the competent authority. Accordingly, the Financial Instruments Market Law will apply to such matters where the Financial and Capital Market Commission is the competent authority.

Matters relating to the information to be provided to the employees of the target company and matters relating to company law, in particular the percentage of voting rights which confers control and any derogation from the obligation to launch a bid, as well as the conditions under which the board of the target company may undertake any action which might result in the frustration of the bid, are governed by the law of the EU member state in which the target company has its registered office.[74]

Thus, these matters will be governed by Latvian law if the company's registered office is in Latvia. If, however, the company's registered address is in another

71 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 691.
72 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 66(1).
73 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 67(1) and (2).
74 Takeover Directive, art 4(2)(e).

country and the company's shares are admitted to the regulated market, these matters will be governed by the law of the country where the company has its registered address.

Procedural Requirements

The offeror must file with the Financial and Capital Market Commission a takeover prospectus within 10 business days from the occurrence of the circumstances triggering the obligation to make a mandatory takeover bid or the offeror's decision to make a voluntary takeover bid. The prospectus must be accompanied by an assessment of the offer price, the offeror's registration or identification document, and documents evidencing availability of funds in order to meet liabilities under the bid within the prescribed time period. Additional requirements apply if the takeover bid is made by persons who have voted in favor of the exclusion of the shares from the regulated market.

A takeover prospectus should provide a target company's details, detailed information on the offeror, the type of bid (mandatory or voluntary), price per share and methods for determination thereof, procedures and time periods for the payment and exchange of shares, validity of the offer, procedure whereby the shareholders of the target company are entitled to accept the offer, and any other relevant information directly applicable to the bid or to the offeror and considered necessary by the offeror or the Financial and Capital Market Commission.[75]

Upon receipt of the takeover prospectus, the Financial and Capital Market Commission must publish information on the offeror, price per share, and the validity of the offer in the official storage system and notify this information to Nasdaq OMX Riga, which must post such information on the website. The Financial and Capital Market Commission takes a decision on the permission to make the offer within 10 business days from the date of receipt of all the necessary documents.[76] The time allowed for acceptance of the offer may not be less than 30 days and more than 70 days from the date of making the bid.[77]

Exemptions

The mandatory takeover bid requirement does not apply to a person or persons acting in concert who has or have acquired shares in the target company reaching or exceeding the 50 per cent threshold if the acquisition is a result of a voluntary takeover bid that was made to acquire shares of the target company representing at least 50 per cent of the voting power in the company and was made to all shareholders of the target company in respect of all shares of the target company.

75 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 71.
77 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 69(3).

In such case, the offer price should be determined as in the case of a mandatory takeover bid. Furthermore, exemption applies where a person or persons acting in concert, when making the mandatory takeover bid as a result of voting for the exclusion of the target company from the regulated market, acquired shares of the target company representing at least 50 per cent of the voting power in the company during or as a result of such mandatory takeover bid.

Recognition of Foreign Take-Over Regulation

The offeror is allowed to make a takeover offer for shares in a company that are admitted to trading on the regulated market by filing a takeover prospectus approved by the competent authority of the member state where the company is registered (together with a notarized Latvian translation) without it being necessary to obtain approval of the Financial and Capital Market Commission. The prospectus, however, should be supplemented with information on the formalities for accepting of the offer and paying consideration to the target company's shareholders in Latvia.[78]

Jurisdiction Conflicts

Genuine and False Conflicts

Latvian securities laws are territorial in nature and they are applicable only where a nexus exists with Latvia. Under the Financial Instruments Market Law, such nexus is defined by a variety of criteria, such as registration of the securities with the Latvian Central Depository, admission of the securities to trading on a regulated market operating in Latvia, or trading on a market operating in Latvia.

Exterritorial effect of Latvian anti-abuse laws, which are applicable also to activities outside the territory of Latvia concerning financial instruments admitted to trading in the regulated market, is a notable exception from the general principle. This exception underlines the importance Latvian law attaches to safeguarding the integrity of the regulated market in Latvia and protecting the investor interests.

Multilateral Approaches

Substantive Law Solutions

Latvia is actively engaged in EU harmonization efforts of securities regulations to remove obstacles for international offerings of securities and cross listings. However, EU-wide harmonization has been achieved only with respect of mandatory prospectus disclosure requirements and financial reporting standards of consolidated financial accounts of some segments (see text, above).

78 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 72[1].

Given limited success achieved thus far at a global level in harmonizing securities laws, Latvia has followed the European approach by adopting the concept of equivalence of third-party standards in some fields to remove obstacles to international public offerings. In particular, the Financial and Capital Market Commission may register a prospectus that is prepared according to the laws of a third country if the prospectus is prepared in accordance with international standards (including IOSCO international disclosure standards) and the information (including financial information) disclosure requirements are equivalent to those set forth in the Financial Instruments Market Law.

In the field of financial reporting, Latvia is engaged in the European efforts in promoting convergence of international accounting standards at a global level, but in the meantime recognizes the limited equivalence of foreign accounting standards. In particular, if a third-country issuer does not use IFRS or equivalent international financial reporting standards, the issuer's consolidated annual report is deemed to be equivalent to Latvian law requirements regarding consolidated annual reports in relation to securities admitted to trading in a regulated market if it includes prescribed information that enables the investors to make similar assessment of the financial position of the issuer as under the reports drawn up in accordance with IFRS.

Recognition

Under Latvian law, mutual recognition of foreign standards is limited to areas where maximum harmonization has been achieved at the EU level (eg, mandatory prospectus disclosure requirements). In particular, under the EU 'single passporting' regime, Latvian companies may passport the prospectus approved by the Financial and Capital Market Commission to another EU/EEA member state in order to access foreign capital markets.

In addition, translation burdens have been significantly lightened. If an issuer registered in another EU member state intends to make a public offer in Latvia, only the summary prospectus needs to be in Latvian. If, however, the issuer makes a public offer in more than one member state, including Latvia, the prospectus needs to be prepared in a language that has been recognized by the respective competent authorities of the member states and the Financial and Capital Market Commission or a language that is used in international finance (eg, English). Only a summary prospectus needs to be prepared in Latvian.[79]

As regards non-EU issuers, the Financial and Capital Market Commission may register a prospectus that is prepared according to the laws of a third country if the prospectus is prepared in accordance with international standards (including IOSCO international disclosure standards) and the information (including financial information) disclosure requirements are equivalent to those set forth in the Financial Instruments Market Law.[80] Latvian law does not provide for mutual recognition of listing decisions on a regulated market. Admission to the official list of a stock exchange operating in another EU/EEA member state does not bring with it the right to list automatically on Nasdaq OMX Riga stock exchange.

80 Financial Instruments Market Law, art 23.

Procedural Solutions

Determination of court jurisdiction and recognition and enforcement of judgments of foreign court decisions is subject to generally applicable provisions on international civil procedure. The Brussels I Regulation,[81] as applicable within the EU, generally allocates jurisdiction on the basis of the defendant's domicile,[82] but in tort claims provides also for jurisdiction in the courts of the location of the harmful event.[83] The judgments delivered by the courts of other EU member states obtained in accordance with the Brussels I Regulation are recognized and enforceable in Latvia.

The enforcement of a judgment of a third-country court is possible only in accordance with the Civil Procedure Law. According to the Civil Procedure Law, a judgment (a court judgment that resolves the dispute on the merits or a court-approved settlement) of a foreign court will not be recognized if only one of the following bases for non-recognition exists:

- The foreign court that issued the judgment was not competent in accordance with Latvian law to adjudicate the dispute or such dispute is an exclusive jurisdiction of the Latvian courts;
- The judgment of the foreign court has not come into legal effect;
- The defendant was denied a possibility of defending his rights, especially if the defendant who has not participated in the adjudication of the matter was not in a timely and proper manner notified regarding the hearing, except if the defendant has not appealed such decision even though he had the possibility to do so;
- The judgment of the foreign court is not compatible with a court judgment already made earlier and effective in Latvia in the same dispute between the same parties or with already earlier commenced court proceedings in such dispute in a Latvian court;
- The judgment of the foreign court is not compatible with such already earlier made and effective decision of another foreign court in the same dispute between the same parties, which may be recognized or is already recognized in Latvia;
- The recognition of the judgment of the foreign court is in conflict with the public order of Latvia; or 81 Council Regulation 44/2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (the 'Brussels I Regulation').

82 Brussels I Regulation, art 2.
83 Brussels I Regulation, art 5(3).

- In the making of the judgment of the foreign court, the law of such state was not applied as should have been applied according to Latvian private international conflict of law norms.[84]

The Latvian Civil Procedure Law does not provide the possibility of reopening a case and enforcing a foreign judgment after re-trial on the merits.

Unilateral Approaches

Latvian law does not recognize the doctrines of comity of self-restraint. In the absence of an international agreement between the countries or directly applicable EU regulations, decisions of foreign courts and authorities are recognized and enforced in Latvia in accordance with the Civil Procedure Law.

Beirut, Lebanon

Introduction

In General

The Beirut Stock Exchange was established in 1920 immediately after World War I. The Beirut Stock Exchange was the first in the Middle East and, thus, it attracted investments from the entire region as well as from European countries, mainly France, of which Lebanon was a protectorate until 1946.

Trading on the Beirut Stock Exchange prospered in the 1950s and 1960s. However, it slowed with the beginning of the war in 1975. In 1983, the Stock Exchange Commission suspended its activities, as the whole economic activity in Lebanon was seriously disrupted. In September 1995, the Beirut Stock Exchange was officially reopened, and it began trading in January 1996.

Regulatory System

In General

Lebanon offers the most liberal investment climate in the Middle East, with no significant restrictions on investment, liberal trade, clear foreign investment policies, local investment guarantee coverage, bank secrecy and a free currency exchange regime with no control on capital flows, low taxes with a flat 15 per cent corporate tax, 10 per cent tax on dividends, and 7.5 per cent withholding tax, well-defined legal rights for property, business legal frameworks with different types of companies and legal structures, and a generally efficient and reliable judicial system operating on a clear set of rules pertaining to integrity and impartiality.

Foreign investors can virtually invest in any sector, except for certain areas related to national security. There are also certain restrictions on real estate ownership by non-Lebanese as well as on the ownership and management of public utilities.

In an effort to attract foreign direct investment, the government is currently considering privatising some of the public services and has resorted in many cases to BOT-type contracts. The government is also issuing dollar-denominated Euro bonds and, recently, for the first time, issued German mark-denominated Euro bonds to finance major projects.

In 2004, Lebanese Government Eurobonds were introduced on the stock exchange.

Stock Exchange Market

The Lebanese regulatory system aims at ensuring that companies have access to capital while preserving investors' confidence in the market. This has been achieved thus far by confining the performance of brokerage activities solely to duly licensed institutions. This will ensure that only qualified and financially sound institutions are involved in the trading of securities.

Furthermore, the requirement of a periodic disclosure of financial and administrative reports intends to enable investors to make decisions on an informed basis. It is important to note that the Lebanese 2000 Budget Law of 14 February 2000, in an effort to encourage companies to list their securities, has reduced the tax on dividends from 10 per cent to five per cent for companies listed on the Beirut Stock Exchange.

Legal Sources

Lebanon has a Civil Law legal system, similar to the French system, with minor differences. Prior to 1963, the banking and financial instruments sector was governed by very broad terms in the Code of Commerce.

The main legal text organising the above-mentioned activities is the Code of Money and Credit (1963), which organised banking and financial services. The Beirut Stock Exchange was organised by Decree-Law Number 120 (1983) and dealt with regulations pertinent to the dealings within the Beirut Stock Exchange.

Law Number 520 (1996) regulated for the first time the development of financial markets and fiduciary contracts. In an attempt to complete the legal framework of financial instruments and brokerage activities, Law Number 234 (Organisation of Brokerage Activities) was promulgated on 10 June 2000.

In addition to these regulations, there are a number of internal rules issued by the self-regulatory bodies that supervise the functioning of the Lebanese stock market. For instance, the Stock Exchange Committee has been empowered to issue Circulars serving practical ends as well as to prepare all Bills designed to amend the existing legislation relating, whether directly or indirectly, to the Stock Exchange. Furthermore, the Stock Exchange Committee is in charge of drafting and amending the By-Laws of the Beirut Stock Exchange as necessary, knowing that such By-Laws and related amendments will be ultimately promulgated by Government Decrees.

Additionally, a new capital markets draft law is being prepared, inspired by the IOSCO 2003 principles. The implementation of the reform will attract foreign institutional investors whose presence is necessary for development and to allow the Beirut Stock Exchange to have its place among emerging capital markets.

Authorities

The Beirut Stock Exchange functions according to the provisions of the Law under the supervision of the Central Board of the Central Bank of Lebanon, the Stock Exchange Committee, and the Ministry of Finance.

The Central Board of the Central Bank of Lebanon is the main authority regulating and controlling the functioning of banks, financial institutions, and brokerage firms operating on the Lebanese market. This is achieved mainly by requesting a licence before engaging in any operation.

Once a licence is granted, the control is exercised by imposing on these institutions an obligation of disclosure relating to financial and administrative information.

The Stock Exchange Committee is responsible for managing the affairs of the Beirut Stock Exchange and provides for the proper functioning of its activities. One of the major roles performed by this committee is to take decisions with regard to the listing of any security on the Beirut Stock Exchange as well as admitting brokerage firms. It also will issue Circulars serving practical ends that may be deemed necessary.

The Ministry of Finance exercises supervision over the management of the Stock Exchange Committee. The Government Commissioner is appointed by the government as a representative and member of the Stock Exchange Committee. He is responsible for attending to the enforcement of, and the compliance with, laws and regulations relevant to the Beirut Stock Exchange. He may object to all resolutions of the Stock Exchange Committee that he may deem in breach of the laws and regulations provided that he is able to justify such objections.

Procedures

The procedure for listing securities and periodic disclosure aims at ensuring protection for investors by providing accurate and clear information about the financial and administrative status of issuers. Such transparency is necessary for assessing the risks of their investment.

There are two major markets for securities within the Beirut Stock Exchange, with no real differences beside capital requirements. Indeed, the Official Market is only accessible by companies with a substantial capital (equivalent to approximately US $3 million), whereas the over-the-counter market is accessible to companies with moderate capital and/or which are planning to join the Official Market after a certain 'training' period.

Legal Order and Regulatory Interests

Admission

Market Participants

In General. The right to negotiate securities listed on the Beirut Stock Exchange, whether in the Official Market or in the 'over-the-counter market', is limited to banks and financial institutions listed with the Central Bank of Lebanon[1] and licensed brokerage firms. Therefore, only registered entities are entitled to perform as middlemen in the operations of purchases and sales on the Beirut Stock Exchange.

Prior to engaging in any brokerage activity, banks and financial institutions are required to obtain a decision of acceptance by the Stock Exchange Committee, whereas brokerage firms must follow a two-phase procedure. The first phase ends with the delivery of a licence by the Central Board of the Central Bank, which will allow the applying entity to be established as a brokerage firm. Once licensed, the brokerage firm, to be able to perform its activities, must apply for acceptance by the Stock Exchange Committee.

A brokerage firm must obtain a prior licence from the Central Board of the Central Bank of Lebanon before initiating its activities. Granting of such licence is subject to certain requirements, mainly:

- The applying entity must be a joint-stock company with a minimum capital to be determined by decision of the Central Board of the Central Bank;[2] and
- All shares of the brokerage firm must be nominative shares, at least one-third of which are owned by Lebanese nationals.

Any foreign company wishing to engage in brokerage activities shall establish a local branch according to the conditions set above.[3]

At the end of this procedure, the Central Board of the Central Bank will decide to grant or to refuse the licence on its own discretion. This decision cannot be subject to appeal.

Once licensed, any bank, financial institution, or brokerage firm must, to perform its activities on the Beirut Stock Exchange, obtain an acceptance in this respect by the Stock Exchange Committee. Such decision is subject to certain requirements, mainly:

- The applying entity must be a joint-stock company with a minimum capital of LBP 1 billion;[4]
- A proper bank guarantee must be issued exclusively in favour of the Beirut Stock Exchange by a bank operating in Lebanon, the value of which is set at LBP 200 million;[5] and
- The applying entity must submit to the Stock Exchange Committee an application for acceptance, which includes, mainly, a copy of the articles of incorporation of the company, financial reports and accounts for the last three years,[6] and a copy of all minutes of the company for the last three years.

2 In practice, the minimum has been set at LBP 1 billion.
3 Registration of Lebanese branches of foreign companies takes place at the Ministry of Economy and Trade without any prior examination.
4 This condition is automatically fulfilled by obtaining the Central Bank's licence.
5 This guarantee will serve as collateral for any liability incurred by the agent, noting, however, that this responsibility may extend to further amounts. This means that the value of this guarantee may not constitute any limitation as to the agent's liability.
6 This requirement applies only to banks and financial institutions, since brokerage firms could not have established any activity before their acceptance by the Stock Exchange Committee.

By the end of this procedure, the Stock Exchange Committee will decide, on its own discretion, either to grant or to refuse the membership application. The resolution of the Stock Exchange Committee can, however, be appealed before the Civil Chamber of the Court of Appeal of Beirut within a delay of 15 days as per the date of notification of the decision to the concerned party.

MIDCLEAR. To ensure the efficiency and effectiveness of operations in the capital market and to provide safeguards for members, traders, and investors, the Central Bank of Lebanon established MIDCLEAR SAL in June 1994 in Beirut, as the custodian and clearing center for financial instruments for Lebanon and the Middle East.

MIDCLEAR's members are the Central Bank of Lebanon, local and foreign banks, local and foreign financial institutions, the foreign central securities depository, clearing houses, and issuers.

MIDCLEAR was appointed Central Depository for Lebanon and Central Registrar for all Lebanese bank shares.[7]

MIDCLEAR performs clearing and settlement services for local and internationally traded securities. Whatever the market, trades between MIDCLEAR members are settled on a 'delivery versus payment', in keeping with international procedures.

All orders transmitted to MIDCLEAR for clearing and settlement are considered irrevocable. MIDCLEAR will not partially settle trades. Settlement takes place on the trade date, plus three days. Thus, stock journal entries for deposit, withdrawal, and transfer are done with a same-day value, and trades executed on the exchange are recorded three working days after the trade date.

MIDCLEAR was appointed by the Central Bank of Lebanon on 2 July 2003 as the sole National Numbering Agency for securities issued in Lebanon. MIDCLEAR is the sole organisation entitled to allocate international security (ISIN) codes for all Lebanese securities issued in Lebanon. On 14 November 2003, MIDCLEAR became a full member of the Association of National Numbering Agencies (ANNA).

Electronic Trading System. There are no specific regulations concerning transborder electronic trading systems in Lebanon. The Central Bank, in an effort to modernise the stock exchange, enacted Circular Number 1810 in 2000, relating to electronic financial and banking transactions. The Circular governs activities that are concluded, carried out, or promoted through electronic means by banks, financial institutions, and financial intermediaries.

Every financial institution must inform the Central Bank in advance of its intention to carry out, partly or entirely, activities through electronic means. As regards transfers in Lebanon, a financial institution must:

- Have a capital of LBP 2 billion or, in the case of a foreign institution, allocate a similar amount to the operations of its branch in Lebanon;

7 Law Number 139 of October 1999; Law Number 308 of April 2001.

- Inform the Central Bank about the number and addresses of branches opened in Lebanon and the transfer equipment in use in each location and comply with the content of any objection by the Central Bank concerning these branches, at the risk of losing its license to operate in Lebanon;
- Comply with professional confidentiality;
- Buy insurance on its operations; and
- Provide evidence as to the effectiveness of its electronic protection system.

As regards transfers abroad, a financial institution must be connected to an international transfer network and comply with the requirements indicated above.

Off-Market Transactions. The by-laws provide that brokers admitted to the Beirut Stock Exchange may conclude among them 'direct transactions' outside the Stock Exchange according to the following rules:

- The Stock Exchange Committee must set a specific value for each security without which no 'direct transactions' may be concluded outside the Stock Exchange, and it must set the cost variance for each security; and
- The direct transactions concluded outside the Stock Exchange must be declared, by each party, according to the date set by the Stock Exchange Committee and in any case before the next session.

In addition, the Stock Exchange Committee may authorise, at any time, the conclusion of direct transactions inside the Stock Exchange, if the value of the operation does not exceed the amount indicated by the Stock Exchange Committee. The Stock Exchange Committee will specify the practical details for the conclusion of such transactions.

Securities

National Treatment and Reciprocity. Generally, Lebanese law makes no discriminatory or excessively onerous requirements inhibiting foreigners trading in securities. However, some restrictions exist on foreigners willing to acquire nominative equity shares related to companies owning real estate (ie, nominative shares representing property in real estate in Lebanon) and corporations involved in the management and running of public utility projects, where foreigners will be allowed to own a maximum of 66 per cent of such company's shares.

In addition, foreign investors are required to be cautious while investing in Lebanese companies holding exclusive representations and agencies for foreign trade marks or franchises.

It should be noted that Lebanese law is very protective[8] of such companies, provided that shareholders detaining at least 51 per cent of the total shares are Lebanese (obviously, those shares will be nominative). Therefore, it will be in the best interest of foreign investors to avoid the acquisition of more than 49 per cent of the total shares, even if exceeding this barrier is not sanctioned by the annulment of the transaction.

Reciprocity is not required as a condition to allow foreigners the ownership and trading of securities in Lebanon. However, bilateral treaties have been conducted between Lebanon and other countries to facilitate the exchange and trading of securities (ie, Kuwait, Jordan, and Egypt).

Issuer Requirements. Some common conditions must be satisfied for the issue in both the Official Market and the over-the-counter market. Required documents are:

- A certified copy of the articles of incorporation and all their amendments, which should include an explicit text providing for the pricing of the issuer's securities in the Stock Exchange;
- All copies of the minutes of the general meetings and the board of directors registered in the Register of Commerce for the last three years or for the period between the date of incorporation and the date of submitting of the application;
- A detailed statement describing the nature, kind, and value of the securities meant to be listed;
- All of the balance sheets, profit-and-loss accounts, inventories, and consolidated annual accounts in the event the issuer has subsidiary companies;[9] and
- A general descriptive statement of the issuer's activity and markets.

Engagements

On filing the application for admission, the issuer must sign an engagement in the due form indicated by the Stock Exchange Committee, including mainly the obligation for him to provide periodically the Stock Exchange Committee and the public with financial statements and reports of various kinds and generally disclose any information that would have an impact on the financial or administrative state of the issuer.

The same conditions and commitments applying to the Lebanese issuer and stipulated in the by-laws apply similarly in their form and content to a foreign issuer wishing to apply for listing. The foreign issuer should present all of the documents required for Lebanese issuers, or their equivalent in the country of registration. The financial documents presented should necessarily conform to Lebanese or International Accounting Standards. The Stock Exchange Committee may request official Lebanese or foreign authentication of the documents constituting the file represented by the foreign issuer. This authentication should demonstrate the conformity of the documents presented to the laws and regulations in force in the country of registration.

9 This requirement is in addition to the reports of the board of directors and the auditors for the last three years or the period between the date of incorporation and the date of submitting the application.

For the Official Market, the capital of the issuer must be equivalent in Lebanese pounds to US $3 million. In the over-the-counter market, the capital of the issuer must be equivalent in Lebanese pounds to US $1 million.

Securities Requirements. The issuer's application for admission may cover:

- All categories of shares and all rights authorising their purchase, subscription, or allocation of rights;
- Bonds, including convertible bonds, provided the securities resulting from this conversion are traded on the Beirut Stock Exchange; and
- Bonds issued by public institutions or Lebanese joint-stock companies where the state is a shareholder.

The success of a security within the Stock Exchange's markets will depend essentially on the volume of transactions relating to it. Therefore, the by-laws have set a minimum diffusion threshold of 25 per cent. Consequently, any issuer who wishes to join either the Official Market or the over-the-counter market must have distributed, on the first date of the pricing at the maximum, at least 25 per cent of the shares of its capital among the public. Although the term 'public' has not been defined, one may imply that securities detained by members of the board of directors will not be considered as publicly held, whereas securities owned by the issuer's employees would be considered as such.

It is important to note that the by-laws provide that the number of shareholders owning the above-mentioned 25 per cent of the company's capital must be at least 50. If the Stock Exchange Committee has listed an issuer of bonds in the Official Market, the value of the issue must be the equivalent in Lebanese pounds of at least US $2 million. In case the listing took place in the over-the-counter market, the value of the issue must be the equivalent in Lebanese pounds of at least US $1 million.

Prospectus Requirements. In a clear distinction from most regulations, Lebanese laws do not give much emphasis to the prospectus issue.

Nevertheless, the Beirut Stock Exchange By-Laws provide that the issuer must publish a briefing of his admission file (Briefing Memorandum) immediately on the publication of the Stock Exchange Committee's decision in the Beirut Stock Exchange Official Bulletin. The intent of the Briefing Memorandum is to keep the public informed as to the issuer's financial and administrative status.

The Central Bank enacted in 1999 Basic Circular Number 7493, relating to 'trading in derivatives and other financial products and instruments'. The Basic Circular states that any bank or financial institution wishing to sell to the public any financial products or instruments in Lebanon must apply for the Central Bank approval.

Financial institutions should adopt transparency while dealing with the investors and a prospectus should be published, containing a full description of the proposed financial instruments. By 'selling to the public', the Central Bank means all marketing approaches, directly or indirectly, intended for a group of 20 or less persons.

Corporate Governance. As noted, only joint-stock companies are allowed to apply for the listing of their securities on the Beirut Stock Exchange.

Lebanese regulations stipulate that a specific provision must be included in the articles of incorporation of the issuing company, allowing the listing of its securities. Alternatively, and in the absence of such provision, a resolution by the general 'extraordinary' assembly of shareholders would be required.

The chairman of the board of directors must lodge the application for admission, after its approval by the board of directors. However, the need for prior approval by the company's general 'ordinary' assembly of shareholders will depend on the type of security to be listed, as follows:

- As to shares, the decision for the listing of shares falls within the competence of the board of directors, given the fact that it does not qualify as a 'day to day activity' falling, according to the Code of Commerce, within the President of the board of directors' competence;[10] and
- As to bonds, listing requires the approval by the board of directors and prior approval by the general 'ordinary' assembly.

In addition, in some cases, the decision of the general 'ordinary' assembly and the board of directors will not be sufficient. For instance, if the listing involves the modification of the company's capital, the approval of the general 'extraordinary' assembly of shareholders will be required.

Registration. There are no differences between the Official Market and the over-the-counter market with respect to the procedure for admission.

The application for admission of securities in the Official Market or Secondary Market is addressed to the Stock Exchange Committee by a broker appointed by the issuer to follow the listing procedures. The name of the broker must be indicated in the Briefing Memorandum that is delivered to the public. However, the broker may represent the issuer and inform the Stock Exchange whether he wishes subsequently to sign a cash-flow arrangement with the issuer.

The Stock Exchange Committee may refuse any security registration, even if the application was in due form and in compliance with all required terms. The Stock Exchange Committee also may postpone its decision concerning the application while reserving the right to reconsider it in case of changes in the issuing company's standing which may justify such act.

The Government Commissioner may object to a resolution of the Stock Exchange Committee if he deems such decision as being in breach of laws and regulations. The Government Commissioner must justify his objection and provide the Stock Exchange Committee with an explanation supporting his position. In this case, he may request that the Stock Exchange Committee reconsider its resolution, suspending its application and entry in force, or suspend its execution for one week, during which such resolution will be referred to the Ministry of Finance for final decision.

If a licence was granted, the Stock Exchange Committee must publish its resolution in the Beirut Stock Exchange Official Bulletin, and it must specify the terms of exchange as well as the first pricing of the listed securities. In addition, the issuer falls under the obligation to publish the above-mentioned Briefing Memorandum pertaining to his application file.

It is important to note that resolutions of the Stock Exchange Committee may be appealed before the Civil Chamber of the Court of Appeal of Beirut within 15 days as from the date when the concerned party was notified.

Any issuer who applies for a transfer from the Secondary Market to the Official Market must submit, through an appointed broker designated specifically for that purpose, a file including the following documents:

- An official letter of transfer, stating in details the motives of the issuer;
- A copy of the minutes of the general assembly authorising such transfer; and
- Any document, in general, that might update the file of the admission that was previously lodged.

The issuer must then publish in the Beirut Stock Exchange Official Bulletin a memorandum summarising the transfer's file.

Periodic Disclosure

Issuer's Reporting Duties

In General. Once the securities of the applying entity are admitted for listing either on the Official or the Secondary Markets, the issuer becomes subject to some reporting obligations, namely to:

- Provide the Stock Exchange Committee with all minutes of the meetings of the ordinary and extraordinary general assemblies and those of the boards of directors, which are lodged at the Secretary of the Trade Register within a delay of two weeks as per the day of deposit;
- Inform the Stock Exchange Committee and the public of any new element or development that may affect the financial situation or the activity of the issuer;
- Publish the budgets and the final annual consolidated accounts, as ratified by the general assembly in the Beirut Stock Exchange Official Bulletin within six months as per the day of closing the accounts;
- Publish the components of the financial results every six months in the Beirut Stock Exchange Official Bulletin; and
- Provide the Beirut Stock Exchange with all information and documents detailed hereinafter, whether relevant to the company or to any of its branches,[11] within 15 days

11 'Branch' is understood to encompass any joint-stock company that is owned by the issuer, directly or indirectly, by more than 50 per cent and that represents more than 10 per cent of the consolidated net value of the whole assets.

as from the date of publishing the documents or as from the date of their enforcement relating to (a) any fundamental change in the nature of the business carried out by the company, (b) any total or partial change in the management of the company, whether in respect of the general management or the board of directors, (c) any appointment of a new auditor for the company, (d) any sale or transfer of property of the issuer's company's assets if the transaction involves more than five per cent of the investment value in the Beirut Stock Exchange, and (e) anything that might affect, positively or negatively, the price of the issuer's securities.

If the issue involves bonds, the issuer is subject to an obligation of annual reporting as to the exact number of outstanding bonds.

Sanctions. In general, any issuer who fails to meet the regulatory requirements is subject to a wide range of sanctions that could vary from a simple warning or blame to a suspension, transfer from the Official Market to the Secondary Market, and even a possible cross-out.

In case of infringement of the above-mentioned reporting obligation, the issuer will be liable to a fine that is equivalent to two per cent of its capital.

Foreign Issuers with Secondary Admission

Every issuer, foreigner or Lebanese, who was previously admitted in the Official Market or Secondary Market and wishes to carry out an additional issue of its securities, must submit through its broker an additional admission application according to the procedures set by the Stock Exchange Committee. The application must include the following documents:

- A statement indicating the kind and value of the offered securities; and
- A copy of the minutes of the general assembly and the board of directors that specified the terms of the eventual transaction.

The Stock Exchange Committee may reject the above-mentioned application, even if it was in due form and in compliance with all required terms. The Stock Exchange Committee may postpone its decision in respect of the application reserving the right to reconsider it in case of any changes in the issuing company's standing, which may justify such act.

The admission of the application by the Stock Exchange Committee, along with the details of the transaction's procedures, must be published in the Beirut Stock Exchange Official Bulletin.

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

Securities offerings at the Beirut Stock Exchange cannot take place unless all necessary steps are completed. This means that the issuer must first apply for his admittance and, in case of favourable decision, he must publish the above-mentioned Briefing Memorandum.

Since this procedure aims at protecting investors, any misrepresentation of information in the issuer's application would normally be sanctioned. Indeed, the Penal Code prohibits such acts.

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Holdings

Every issuer is subject to an obligation of reporting any modification involving the number of votes entitled to any of the shareholders if he knew about it and such modification was more than:

- Two per cent for the general manager or the deputy general manager or a member of the board of directors; and
- Ten per cent for any other shareholder having, directly or indirectly, more than 10 per cent of voting rights in the company which securities are priced on the Beirut Stock Exchange.

In addition, the issuer must include in the by-laws of the company a clause limiting the voting rights to 10 per cent for every shareholder who had not previously declared to the board of directors that he has reached or exceeded the said percentage. The shareholder also must declare to the board any change over 10 per cent in respect of the number of voting rights.

Insider Trading and Fraud

Insider Trading. There are no specific requirements pertaining to insider trading in Lebanon. However, certain stipulations of the Penal Code would incriminate these acts and consider them similar to the French concept of délit d'initié.

Local courts may, under certain circumstances, address these issues and therefore render a judgment incriminating insider trading.

The new Capital Markets Draft Law addresses this issue and considers insider dealing as a special offence subject to a fine and criminal prosecutions.

Fraud. The Penal Code specifically prohibits the use of any fraudulent means that would lead, by any means, to influencing the functioning of the securities markets, ie, the spreading of false allegations and buying and selling with the intention of disrupting the market.[12]

Money Laundering. Parliament adopted the Fighting Money Laundering Law in 2001, and the Central Bank has played a major role in enforcing this law by issuing several Basic Circulars, primarily Basic Circular Number 7818 of 18 May 2001 regarding monitoring financial operations and fighting money laundering. The basic guidelines of the law and the Central Bank Circulars are:

- Financial institutions must certify and periodically verify the client's and the beneficiary's identities;[13] and
- Financial institutions must have an investigation committee and a compliance unit to prevent money laundering.

Public Take-Over Bids

It is important to note that regulations pertaining to take-over bids are very basic and simple. This is due to the fact that the Stock Exchange in Lebanon was closed during the civil war and that the size of the market is relatively small.

As mentioned above, the existing regulation provides for a straightforward procedure concerning take-over bids.

The procedure is initiated when an investor (or group of investors) wishes to own a bloc that is more than 10 per cent of the voting rights in a company which securities are priced in the official market or secondary market, or wishes to acquire the absolute or described majority in this company.

In this case, such investor must submit a draft of a public offer for purchase or exchange, through a broker, to the Stock Exchange Committee, with the following supporting documents:

- A description of his intentions in regard to the target company and the number of securities he owns, as well as the voting rights;
- The minimum and maximum number of securities and the voting rights that he wishes to acquire through this operation;
- The suggested price in cash and the terms of exchange; and
- An engagement not to breach the above-indicated terms along with the financial guarantees related thereto.

Once it has received the file and a decision is taken as far as the public offer, the Stock Exchange Committee will suspend the pricing of the security forming the object of the offer. Thereafter, the Stock Exchange Committee will issue its decision by approving or rejecting the terms of the offer. In case of approval, a statement will be published in the Beirut Stock Exchange Official Bulletin, indicating in details the terms of the operation. Once the decision of the Stock Exchange Committee is published, the security is re-priced according to ordinary rules.

If an investor or a group of other investors have submitted a counter offer, the offer may not be taken into consideration unless the counter-offered price is five per cent higher than the current price.

13 In case of any suspicion of money laundering, a financial institution must report the matter immediately to the Central Bank.

The offering party or his employees may not, within the period of his offer, and even until the final statement for closing of the offer, interfere directly or indirectly in the market of the company's securities, object of the offer and, in general, in any security market for any company indicated in the offer.

At the end of the offer period, the Stock Exchange Committee will publish the decision of the party that submitted the offer in the Beirut Stock Exchange Official Bulletin as to whether he intends to maintain or withdraw his offer. If he intends to withdraw his offer, the Stock Exchange Committee must set a date to return the securities to the investors. However, if he intends to maintain his offer, the Stock Exchange Committee shall determine the number of securities acquired by the offering party.

Jurisdictional Conflicts

Lebanon is not yet part of any multilateral or bilateral solutions to jurisdictional conflicts in international securities regulations, given the fact that the Lebanese market is relatively small and young.

However, it is important to note that Lebanese regulators, in an effort to facilitate foreign issuer access to the Lebanese market, are easing some of the admission and reporting requirements mentioned above. This policy is reflected in the fact that Lebanese regulations recognise other accounting standards with respect to financial statements and other documents provided they are equivalent to those required from Lebanese issuers.

Introduction

Legal Sources

The first steps in the regulation of the securities markets were made by the Lithuanian authorities in August 1992.[1] In principle, the initiative was part of Lithuania's overall movement towards the creation of essential modern market institutions. In particular, it was thought that it was time to reap the harvest of the original reform laws directed to create a free-market economy.

Since the adoption of the first privatisation laws in 1991, massive privatisation of state property has accelerated and has achieved relatively large volumes. At the aftermath of the opening of the National Stock Exchange of Lithuania (1 July 1993), currently the Vilnius Stock Exchange, 3,672 former state enterprises had been privatised; their total value was reported to be LTS 344.1 million.[2]

Vested with the framework of the first Companies Act of 1990,[3] privatisation created vast numbers of individuals increasingly owning small numbers of shares in privatised enterprises. As a result of this process, nearly 1.5 million Lithuanian residents (nearly 40 per cent of the population) became shareholders.[4] It was understood that the need had arisen for an effective and concentrated securities market that could be adequately supervised and regulated.

On 3 September 1992, the government adopted Resolution Number 646,[5] which launched the securities market and its supervisory authority in Lithuania. Without approaching the legal or regulatory aspects of securities transactions, Resolution Number 646 merely set out a few provisions regarding the procedure for the establishment of the National Stock Exchange and approved the statutes (in particular, functions and organisation) of the Securities Commission.[6]

On 30 October 1992, the government adopted Resolution Number 815, the Temporary Provisions on Issue and Public Trading in Securities and a Stock Exchange.[7] It was the basic legal source governing them until the adoption of the Public Trading in Securities Act in 1996. In particular, Resolution Number 815:

- Defined the meaning of a security;[8]
- Established the requirement of the prior registration of an issue of securities with the Securities Commission and laid down procedural rules for registration;[9]
- Set out several provisions on a primary transfer of securities, such as prohibition to advertise securities prior to registration;[10]
- Established the requirement of, and the procedure for, the prior authorisation of intermediaries, defined their activities, and fixed some rules of conduct;[11] and
- Described a stock exchange, its functions, organisation, and membership, and introduced some principal rules on the trade and the listing of securities on an exchange.[12]

On 20 May 1993, Resolution Number 815 was amended[13] with a view to introducing the book-entry trading system and the concept of dematerialised securities. Amendments laid down the principles of setting up and defining the functions of the Central Depository of Lithuania, as well as the principles of accounting for securities and securities transactions.

The Resolutions had been intended to be an initial and provisional substitute for the solid legal framework of the securities market. Loosely drafted, in ignorance of the wider consequences of their effect, some of their provisions interfered with essential legal concepts[14] and provisions of other laws.[15]

On 16 January 1996, the main statutory instrument regulating securities in Lithuania was adopted, the Public Trading of Securities Act.[16] Although it was largely based on earlier rules, it also introduced some innovations. In particular, it expressly spelled out objectives of the law (and, hence, regulation) with reference to the safety, transparency, and efficiency of the market to protect the interests of investors and ensure competition between market participants.[17]

The Public Trading in Securities Act has liberalised the regulatory regime (eg, by implying the possibility of the over-the-counter market), but rules on reporting and disclosure have been made stricter (eg, disclosure of the acquisition or disposition of the qualifying holdings, and reporting of the material events). The Act also introduced rules on mandatory tender offers and insider dealing, as well as the concepts of investment management and consulting firms. The Public Trading in Securities Act has made the Securities Commission independent of the government, has increased its powers, and has introduced the concept of liability for breaches of the regulatory regime.[18]

The Public Trading in Securities Act was significantly revised on 19 March 1998.[19] Further, on 17 December 2001, Parliament adopted a new version of the law with the new title 'Securities Market Act',[20] effective as of 1 April 2002 (except for the EU single passport for securities firms provisions).

The main purpose of the reform was to finalise the implementation of the European Union (EU) Directives in the field, harmonise the legislation with the IOSCO Objectives and Principles of Securities Regulation and with the New Lithuanian Civil Code which took effect on 1 July 2001,[21] as well as, as stated in the Explanatory Submission to the Parliament, to reflect the modern trends in the globalisation of the investment services fields and convergence of securities markets.

14 For example, any transfer of securities was formally described as public trading and subject to the same regulatory regime. It appears that, in practice, this provision was disregarded.

15 For example, the provisions established the grounds for invalidation of transactions which, according to legal doctrine, is the sole domain of legislation.

The Securities Market Act revised the objectives of the law by placing an emphasis on the principles of fair, transparent, and effective securities markets, as well as investor protection and introducing new objective protection against systemic risk.[22]

A significant movement towards the recognition of the international nature of the securities markets is noticeable in the Act. The Act, for the first time, introduced a long-awaited delineation of the territorial scope of its application. Thus, for example, the share would be registered with the Lithuanian Securities Commission if the issuer is a company (as described in more detail later) of the Republic of Lithuania; or a person intends to publicly offer the securities in the Republic of Lithuania.[23] The licensing function of the Lithuanian Securities Commission was limited to the companies registered in the Republic of Lithuania.[24] The Act laid down conditions upon which a Lithuania-based securities firm could provide investment services abroad.[25]

Secondly, the Securities Market Act introduced single passport provisions for the EU securities firms,[26] which became effective upon Lithuania joining the EU.[27] Following the concept established by the Investment Services Directive,[28] an attempt was made to divide the supervisory rules applicable to investment firms into the so-called prudential rules[29] and rules of conduct.[30] With respect to the cross-border activities of investment firms, the Securities Market Act established the principle of home country control of Lithuanian investment firms in terms of drawing up and enforcement of prudential rules[31] and the principle of host country control of the foreign investment firms in terms of rules of conduct.[32]

Finally, in the field of international co-operation, the Securities Market Act introduced channels of communication for the exchange of information between Lithuanian supervisors and those of EU member states, as well as those of other countries on the basis of mutual co-operation agreements.[33]

Some reformatory changes were made in the field of trading rules and prospectus requirements. The offer of securities through an intermediary was not an element qualifying the concept of a public trading in securities[34] anymore.

Hence, the mere fact of an offer of securities through an intermediary does not invoke the requirement of registration of securities with the Commission. In the original version of the draft Securities Market Act, a proposal was made to discard the market concentration principle: a prohibition of over-the-counter trades in listed securities. However, when the bill was going through the parliament, the proposal was rejected. Consequently, the sale and purchase transactions with listed securities still need to be carried out on the stock exchange.[35]

The Securities Market Act continued to use the Lithuanian concept of registration of securities rather than registration of the prospectus for the purposes of public offering. To avoid unnecessary private law consequences experienced in the legal practice in the past, an attempt was made in the Act to clarify this concept so that such registration means a registration of the issue of securities rather than registration of particular securities.

The Securities Market Act draftsmen found the long-existing prospectus registration requirement with respect to any issues as impracticable and cumbersome. A reference was made to EU Directives, such as the Selling Prospectus Directive[36] and Listing Particulars Directive,[37] providing exemptions from such registration requirements, as well as the EU mutual recognition of the European prospectuses. Accordingly, the revised legislation then authorised the Lithuanian Securities Commission to set out the rules when the registration of the securities was not required,[38] when the registration could have been granted without the submission of the prospectus, as well as registration rules where the prospectus had been scrutinised by the competent authorities of the EU member states.[39]

The Securities Market Act significantly revised the definition of the security by dividing it among the lines of the Investment Services Directive into two concepts: securities and investment instruments.[40] Regulatory rules applied to these two categories to a different extent; thus trading rules, prospectus, disclosure and reporting requirements, rules on acquisition of qualifying holdings, and tender offers applied to securities in the strict sense, whereas the rules applicable to the intermediaries, stock exchanges, the Securities Commission, and liability for contraventions applied in connection with both securities and investment instruments.[41]

- Reduced the threshold triggering the mandatory tender offer from 50 per cent to 40 per cent shareholding and modified the mandatory tender offer pricing mechanism (weighted average price paid over the last 12 months was replaced by the highest price paid);[42]
- Introduced the concept of investment services,[43] defining them in line with the Investment Services Directive, and the licence requirement for provision of such services;[44]
- Slightly revised the rules on reporting of acquisition/disposal of qualifying holdings[45] to make them more compatible with the Transparency Directive;[46]
- Revised the rules on insider dealing[47] to make them more compatible with the Insider Dealing Directive;[48]
- Eliminated the difference between financial brokerage firms and investment management and consulting firms and introduced single conditions for authorisation;
- Revised the conditions for authorisation of investment firms (eg, introduced requirements of 'fit and proper' owners, and the like);[49]
- Introduced an obligation of auditors of an investment firm to report contravention of regulatory standards;[50] and
- Since 1 January 2005, implemented rules as to squeeze-outs and mandatory sell-outs.[51]

Apart from legislation, other legal regulatory sources in the securities field include regulations passed by the Securities Commission, the Central Depository, and the Vilnius Stock Exchange. The regulations of the Securities Commission deal with matters such as:

- Public offers of securities and prospectus requirements;[52]
- Insider dealing;[53]
- Tender offers;[54]
- Reporting;[55]
- Licensing of intermediaries;[56] and
- Capital adequacy.[57]

Most of the regulations adopted by the Securities Commission implement EU Directives in the field. Additionally, certain legislative initiatives aimed at approximation of Lithuanian laws with EU legal requirements demonstrate the trend of the unification of the regulatory regime applicable to different types of financial services and their providers.

In particular, on 10 September 2002, Parliament adopted the Financial Institutions Act,[58] which came into effect on 1 July 2003 (except for provisions relating to the EU single passport for credit and financial institutions, as well as provisions excluding the application of the financial institutions' regulatory regime for undertakings rendering services listed in items 8–9 of Annex I of Directive 2000/12/EC,[59] which came into effect on 1 May 2004).

59 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 20 March 2000 relating to

As stated in the Explanatory Submission to the Parliament, the main purpose of the Financial Institutions Act is to define financial services, to determine requirements for the founders, participants, and directors of financial institutions and the incorporation, carrying out, termination, and restructuring of activities of financial institutions, as well as to lay down the rules for the supervision of financial institutions rendering licensed financial services.

The Financial Institutions Act sets out the same conditions on which a Lithuania-based financial institution may provide financial services in the EU member states,[60] as it was prescribed by the Securities Market Act.[61] Furthermore, both Acts contained identical single passport provisions for the EU financial institutions,[62] due to come into force on Lithuania joining the EU.[63] However, with regard to cross-border activities, the Financial Institutions Act does not clearly stipulate the principle of home country prudential supervision.[64] The Act provides that instruments of prudential supervision enshrined in Lithuanian laws are applicable to financial institutions.[65] By definition it includes Lithuanian enterprises and subdivisions of foreign enterprises rendering financial services in Lithuania.[66] Thus, it remains to be seen if a host country's prudential supervision applies to branches of foreign financial institutions. It is quite obvious that regulatory acts implementing the Financial Institutions Act, together with the Law on Banks and new Securities Law, rectify the inconsistency.

In general, the list of activities within the definition of financial services under the Financial Institutions Act[67] reflects the provisions of Directive 2000/12/EC.[68] However, the regulatory consequences from certain services being included in the list are subject to criticism.

First, the Financial Institutions Act automatically applies the financial institutions regime to any undertaking rendering services which are included in the financial services list, provided that such an undertaking renders said services in accordance with its corporate documents and the 'main portion' of its income is derived from such services.[69] The Act fails to exempt from its regulatory regime undertakings to which supervisory requirements in the field of investment services are not applicable pursuant to the Securities Market Act[70] and the Investment Services Directive.[71] Therefore, it seems that the Financial Institutions Act attempts to debar persons of regulated professions (such as auditors, attorneys at law, notaries, and the like) from rendering consultancy services relating to mergers and acquisitions.[72] On the other hand, the Act does not include insurance services in the financial services list, thus debatably excluding insurance undertakings from the regulatory regime applicable to financial institutions.[73]

Notably, the Lithuanian Securities Commission some time ago prepared the initial draft amendments to the Securities Market Act aimed at co-ordination of provisions of the Securities Market Act with the Financial Institutions Act.[74] However, the draft amendments to the Securities Market Act left the exceptions from licensing requirements to persons rendering investment services as part of their regulated professional activity, as well as to other undertakings specified in the Investment Services Directive,[75] untouched. Thus, it may be implied that the Financial Institutions Act should be interpreted in the light of the exemptions stipulated in the Securities Market Act (currently the Securities Act). Nevertheless, the actual consequences of the unified regulatory concept introduced by the Financial Institutions Act remain unclear.

Furthermore, the Financial Institutions Act applies basically the same legal requirements to all undertakings rendering financial services as to credit institutions. Thus, the Financial Institutions Act implies the necessity to revise certain other legal acts governing separate types of financial activities including the Securities Act. The amendments to the Securities Market Act, as prepared by the Lithuanian Securities Commission, mainly intended to introduce certain additional management-related provisions:

- Compulsory management bodies of securities firms are supplemented by the administration in addition to the board;[76]

76 Financial Institutions Act, art 19; notably, the Financial Institutions Act provides for a mandatory position of the deputy to the head of the administration, who will act

- Regulation of audit of securities firms, as well as duties of auditors of securities firms, is delegated to the Audit Act[77] and the Financial Institutions Act;
- Definition of the director of a securities firm, stock exchange, and central depository is referred to the Financial Institutions Act;[78] and
- General permission to render investment services in foreign currency is provided,[79] although its compatibility with the Foreign Currency Act[80] is debatable due to the fact that the Foreign Currency Act authorises settlements in foreign currency (other than in Euros) only in non-cash payments.[81]

Additionally, the amendments to the Securities Market Act reflected the recommendations of the EU expert 'peer review' mission, as well as comments of the European Commission experts with respect to the compatibility of the Securities Market Act with the EU legal acts. It is thus intended to:

- Add a threshold of five per cent triggering the obligation to notify the supervisory authority of the acquisition or disposal of the qualified holding;
- Revise the rules on reporting of the issuers' directors' transactions relating to the securities of the issuer by stipulating that information on such transactions is to be disclosed publicly;
- Unify the requirements applicable to directors of securities firms, stock exchanges, and central depositories;
- Repeal the statutory presumption that the acquisition of treasury shares by a listed company may not be considered as market manipulation;
- Provide rules for the calculation of the mandatory tender offer price when shares have been acquired free of charge;
- To stimulate voluntary tender offers, provide the obligation to refund persons having accepted a tender offer the balance between the price of securities acquired in one year after the implementation of the tender offer and the tender offer price only in the case of a mandatory tender offer; and
- Authorise the securities market supervisory authority to publicly disclose information which may be necessary for the protection of market interests.

On 20 June 2002, the Deposit and Investor Liabilities Insurance Act was adopted and came into effect on 1 July 2002.[82] The Act incorporated the Deposit Insurance Act[83] and the Investor Liabilities of Commercial Banks and Financial Brokerage Firms Insurance Act,[84] and aimed at implementing the Deposit Guarantee Directive[85] and the Investor Compensation Directive.[86] The Act provides for a single deposit and investor-compensation scheme consisting of the Deposit Insurance Fund and the Investor Liabilities Insurance Fund administered by the State Enterprise Deposit and Investment Insurance.[87]

Pursuant to the Act, only Lithuania-based credit institutions and investment firms, as well as branches of foreign credit institutions and investment firms not belonging to a deposit/investor compensation scheme in their home country or belonging to a scheme which does not offer protection equivalent to that prescribed by the Act, must belong to the compensation scheme provided in the Act.[88] Hence, the Act implements the principle of prudential supervision with respect to investment firms and credit institutions in line with Directive 97/9/EC and Directive 94/14/EC.

The maximum coverage and the percentage of coverage is as follows: (1) for deposits: 100 per cent of the deposit not exceeding the equivalent of €100,000; (2) for obligations to investors: 100 per cent of the obligation to investors (securities and/or cash) of up to €3,000 and 90 per cent of the obligation to investors (securities and/or cash) within the range of €3,000 to €22,000.[89]

Parliament, it is intended to supplement the earlier collective investment scheme, which comprised investment companies only, by introducing the concept of investment funds.[92] Accordingly, the Securities Market Act was changed to reflect the conceptual change, ie, the replacement of the term, 'investment companies' by the terms 'collective investment undertakings' and 'investment funds'.

The Settlement Finality in Payment and Securities Settlement Systems Act[93] implemented the Settlement Finality Directive.[94] The Settlement Finality Act seeks to ensure the safe and reliable functioning of payment and securities settlement systems, reduce system risks, secure the interests of participants in a system in case of insolvency and bankruptcy (restructuring) proceedings against a participant to such system, as well as to secure the interests of the central banks prescribed in the Act.

The Settlement Finality Act[95] lays down legal requirements for the proper operation of each system. Firstly, the Act requires registration with the Bank of Lithuania of the payment and securities settlement systems, which are, by the choice of participants in such systems, governed by Lithuanian law. The Act further requires each system to have its operator responsible for the safe and effective functioning of that system.

Only the Bank of Lithuania, the Central Depository of Lithuania, a Lithuanian or EU/EFTA member state's financial institution (or its subsidiary), or an operator of a system which is governed by the laws of Lithuania or of the EU/EFTA member state may be appointed as an operator of a system.[96] Each system operates under the rules of that system adopted in accordance with the Act.[97]

The Act incorporates provisions of the Settlement Finality Directive aiming to minimise the disruption to a system caused by insolvency proceedings against a participant in that system, and stipulates the principle of priority of the settlement of the participant's liabilities arising out of his participation in a system over any other liabilities prescribed by the law.[98] The Act also stipulates provisions insulating collateral security from the effects of the applicable insolvency law in line with the Settlement Finality Directive[99] and lays down certain rules on the applicable law.[100]

However, the proper implementation of the Settlement Finality Act was subject to the adoption of a law governing financial collateral arrangements in line with Directive 2002/47/EC.[101] The Act came into effect on 1 May 2004.[102]

Other main EU Directives, including the Directive on Insider Dealing and Market Manipulation (Market Abuse),[103] were implemented into national legislation by way of amending the Securities Market Act and issuing other new acts.

On 18 January 2007, the former Securities Market Act was replaced by two new laws: the Securities Act[104] came into effect on 8 February 2008, and the Financial Instruments Markets Act came into effect on 8 February 2008.[105] Following adoption of the new laws, the Securities Commission issued a number of consorted legal acts determining rights and duties of the issuers and relations of securities market participants. The new laws and the subordinate legislation are the outcome of final implementation of the EU Takeovers, Transparency, and Markets in Financial Instruments Directives. The new laws finally introduce a new disclosure system and requirements, expand the scope of the publishable information, and regulate the access to information at the EU level.

Following a series of legislative revisions, as from 1 January 2012, the competent supervisory authority with regard to securities and their markets is the Bank of Lithuania, which took over the functions of the Securities Commission. The Bank of Lithuania is in the process of revising and releasing new wordings of previous Resolutions of the Securities Commission regarding such matters as public offers of securities, prospectus requirements and reporting,[106] tender offers,[107] licencing of intermediaries,[108] and others. new versions have been adopted to correlate to the changed supervisory regime under the rule of the Bank of Lithuania.

An incentive to finance small and medium-sized businesses was presented with the introduction of the Collective Investment Undertakings Intended for Informed Investors Act.[109] The Act allowed the functioning of investment undertakings managing funds through partnerships instead of a joint stock or close joint stock companies. Broader choices as to investment possibilities and the diversification of risks were also introduced resulting in an overall more flexible legal regulation as to the activities of collective investment undertakings.

Authorities

Bank of Lithuania (Supervisory Department of Bank of Lithuania)

The Securities Commission of Lithuania was the major regulatory and supervisory authority with respect to securities and their markets up until legislative revisions that took part in the end of year 2011. Its functions have been overtaken by the Supervisory Department of the Bank of Lithuania. The Financial Instruments Markets Act provides that markets in financial instruments shall be regulated and supervised by the Bank of Lithuania.

A newly established unit of the Bank of Lithuania, the Supervisory Department, oversees commercial banks and other credit and payment institutions, securities and insurance markets, and investigates disputes between consumers and financial institutions. The Supervisory Department was authorised by the Board of the Bank of Lithuania to carry out almost the entirety of supervisory functions, with certain exceptions as to licensing and enforcement measures of banks, branches of foreign banks, insurance undertakings, credit unions, and others.[110] These functions are still vested with the Board of the Bank of Lithuania. The main functions of the Bank of Lithuania in the ambit of its supervisory authority regarding markets in financial instruments include:

- Adoption of regulations on authorisation and activities of intermediaries and stock exchanges and the issues of securities and trading in them;
- Approval of the forms of prospectuses and other disclosure documents and determination of the procedure for the submission and publication of those documents;
- Issuance of official interpretations and recommendations on the matters of trading in securities;
- Authorisation of intermediaries and exchanges;

110 Resolution of the Board of the Bank of Lithuania on 15 March 2013 in effect as from 23 March 2013, Zin (2012), no 34-1693.

- Supervision of intermediaries, stock exchanges, and the Central Depository; and
- Application of sanctions for contravention of the Securities Act and other regulatory rules.[111]

After combining all the provisions of the Markets in Financial Instruments Act, it is clear that the Bank of Lithuania is essentially authorised to determine more detailed rules, but not to modify rules laid down by legislation. However, the Bank of Lithuania is, under the circumstances expressly stated in the Securities Act, authorised to lay down exceptions to certain rules prescribed by the Securities Act.

By the 1998 revision of the Public Trading in Securities Act, the Securities Commission has arguably been granted a power to file class actions, ie, 'to bring an action to court regarding protection of the rights of investors, if interests of many investors have been violated' by issuers, intermediaries, or other entities.[112] Such right of the Securities Commission has been slightly modified by virtue of the Securities Market Act, which authorised the Securities Commission to file an action on behalf of investors for the protection of public interest only. This right is now granted to the Bank of Lithuania.[113] As defined in the Commentary to the Lithuanian Civil Code, public interest means a benefit to the society or a part thereof, as well as common welfare. Public interest may also include group interests.[114]

The Securities Market Act, and later the Financial Instruments Markets Act has further extended the scope of the Securities Commission's (now the Bank of Lithuania) cross-border activities by granting powers to make arrangements with appropriate foreign authorities for the purpose of co-operation and exchange of information,[115] as well as for certain supervisory activities with regard to the branches of Lithuania-based investment firms.[116] capital and investment fund management companies, pension fund management companies, operators of a regulated market, central depositories, and central counter parties.[117]

The functions of the Central Depository of Lithuania include adoption of regulations on the bookkeeping and accounting of securities and laying down details for separate procedures provided for by the general accounting rules. By Resolution Number 03-161 of 12 July 2012, the Bank of Lithuania approved Rules on Accounting of Financial Instruments and Transactions (the "2012 Accounting Rules"), which took effect as of 22 July 2012. The Central Depository of Lithuania must control compliance by account operators with the securities accounting rules and regulations.

The 2012 Accounting Rules set forth principles for accounting of securities and for circulation of such securities. All such accounting in Lithuania is to be conducted by the Central Depository and account managers in a two-tier securities accounting system, of which (i) the first tier includes general (omnibus) securities accounts opened and managed by the Central Securities Depository, also securities issue accounts registered with the Central Securities Depository, and accounts of foreign securities depositories for accounting of securities of clients/participants of these foreign securities depositories, as well as personal accounts opened in the name of the Bank of Lithuania and accounts for pledged securities to the European Central Bank or Central Bank of EU Member States as well as securities allocated for the repo transactions with those latest subjects; and (ii) the second tier comprises personal accounts opened in the name of the securities owner or holder of financial collateral (without transfer of title), or pledges. In case the securities broker acquires securities abroad in its name but for the client's cash, the securities broker is obliged to open a personal securities account in the name of the owner (client) as soon as confirmation of securities acquisition is received.

All securities accounting operations are based on the delivery versus payment principle. The Central Depository of Lithuania must ensure timely clearing of the securities transactions between different account operators and control the circulation of registered securities.[118] It is explicitly provided by the Financial Instruments Markets Act that the regulations and orders of the Central Depository of Lithuania in this area are mandatory for all account operators.

Stock Exchange

The Vilnius Stock Exchange of Lithuania (the former National Stock Exchange) is the only stock exchange in Lithuania. It was established pursuant to Resolution Number 646, and it was registered with the Securities Commission on 11 May 1993. The first trading session took place on 14 September 1993. At that time, 19 issuers were listed on its current trading list.[119] The Stock Exchange model initially was based on that of the French exchanges. It has been implemented in close cooperation with the Paris Bourse.[120]

Pursuant to the Financial Instruments Markets Act,[121] the Stock Exchange is a specialised stock company. An entity may operate as a securities exchange only with prior authorisation by the Bank of Lithuania.

Historically, the Public Trading in Securities Act limited the right of entities other than the Central Bank and the Ministry of Finance to hold more than five per cent of votes in the general meeting of an exchange.[122] Furthermore, the Public Trading in Securities Act made the establishment of stock exchanges subject to a resolution of the government.[123]

By revoking the requirement of the government authorisation, as well as restrictions on the holdings in an exchange,[124] the Securities Market Act (which was replaced by the Financial Instruments Markets Act) has thus removed the main legal obstacles for setting up other stock exchanges besides the Vilnius Stock Exchange of Lithuania. However, as a practical matter, no other stock exchanges yet operate in Lithuania.

Starting from 30 May 2005, the Vilnius Stock Exchange became a member of OMX group, together with stock exchanges in Copenhagen, Helsinki, Riga, Stockholm, and Tallinn. OMX, operating in three Baltic States (Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania), offers a single list of securities in trade at the same time implementing a safe and smooth trade measure under the best trade practice in stock exchanges. Pursuant to the Financial Instruments Markets Act, a stock exchange is obliged to:

- Organize trade in securities, and their listing, quotation, and safe and efficient transactions and settlements;
- Promote fair trading in securities and prevent manipulation of prices and other unfair actions;
- Publish unified information on listed securities and transactions; and
- Ensure the protection of confidential information and carry out internal control.[125]

Although a stock exchange is organised as an enterprise, it is an important securities regulator. The stock exchange adopts trading rules, which are subject to the approval by the Bank of Lithuania. It may establish conditions for listing of securities and suspend trades in some securities, according to the securities trade rules. The stock exchange may request disclosure by its members on their financial and commercial activities, and it has the power to examine compliance by its members of the exchange regulations and apply sanctions for violations of such rules.

Nature of Lithuanian Securities Market

The need to discuss the dematerialised nature of securities arises because this has specific implications for Lithuanian securities law. Dematerialised securities trading is an essential feature of the Lithuanian securities market. Indeed, all trades on the National Stock Exchange of Lithuania are completely dematerialised. Material instruments cannot be listed there. However, this concept goes far beyond the mere technicalities of transacting and the rooms of the stock exchange. It has wider legal implications relating, for instance, to the transferability of the instruments, and private law matters, and it may even affect the regulatory regime.

The idea of dematerialisation can be traced to the times of initial privatisation of state property when nationals of Lithuania were granted investment vouchers to be used in the process of privatisation. The vouchers were never printed and only existed in book-entry form. This concept was implemented in the context of the emerging securities market in May 1993 by way of amendments to Resolution Number 815.[126]

According to the amendments, all publicly issued securities had to be accounted in special securities accounts to be managed by the issuers or intermediaries.[127] It was thought that dematerialised trading was more efficient, inevitably resulting in the decrease of transaction costs (no printing, storage, or transportation costs), and helped to ensure a higher level of safety (eg, against risks of forgery, loss, and theft) and prompt and less cumbersome execution of transactions.[128]

Thus, in the context of stock exchange trading, Lithuania is not far behind the countries of Western Europe, which introduced the dematerialised trading system in the late 1980s and early 1990s.[129]

The law had to cope with the emerging concept. The second Companies Act of 1994, for the first time in legislation, explicitly recognised the possibility for companies to choose the form of securities. Where the dematerialised form is chosen, securities must be evidenced by records in the securities accounts.[130] The Public Trading in Securities Act, as amended by the Securities Market Act, laid down more detailed rules on the accounting and the securities and operation of their accounts.

Prior to the coming into effect of the New Civil Code, private law was silent on the legal aspects of dematerialised securities. The New Civil Code expressly recognises and includes dematerialised securities into the regulatory regime of private law and applies the general rules on safekeeping to the safekeeping and administration of dematerialised securities.[131]

As a result of such legislative and regulatory initiatives, the system of dematerialised securities, existing only in book-entry form, has been created. It consists of two levels of accounts and their operation, namely:

- The lower (intermediaries or specific) level, where intermediaries accounts of particular securities are owned by particular investors; and
- The higher (Central Depository, or general) level, where general securities accounts of account operators with the Central Depository of Lithuania represent aggregate amounts of securities accounted by particular account operators (omnibus accounts).[132]

Securities, as such, are recorded by way of the entry in the securities account of an investor (so-called 'personal securities account') maintained at the lower level. Typically, personal securities accounts are opened in the name of an owner of such securities.[133] The Companies Act of 2000 even laid down a presumption that an owner of dematerialised shares is a person in whose name a securities account is opened.[134] Such presumption was fully in line with the concept enshrined in the Public Trading in Securities Act prior to its amendments of 25 September 2001.[135] However, amendments to the Public Trading in Securities Act of 25 September 2001, as well as the Securities Market Act, have introduced certain exceptions to this rule.

Amendments to the Public Trading in Securities Act of 25 September 2001, as a practical matter, removed formal obstacles to the possessory pledge of securities by stipulating that personal securities accounts may be opened in the name of a pledgee of securities. In this case an owner of pledged securities is also recorded in the securities account. Recording in the securities account opened in the name of a pledgee is automatically deemed as the delivery of possession but not the title (ownership) to the pledgee.[136]

Furthermore, the Securities Market Act provided that client accounts of account operators registered in foreign countries may be opened in the name of such account operators by indicating that they act as account operators (omnibus accounts).[137] A Lithuanian account operator is obliged to ensure that, in case an omnibus account is opened in the name of a foreign account operator, the latter's clients can be identified upon request of the supervisory authority (the Bank of Lithuania) or the Central Depository.

The Companies Act grants an opportunity for private limited companies to manage securities accounts by themselves.[138] Prior to the amendments to the Public Trading in Securities Act of 13 July 2000,[139] public limited companies which were not licensed as securities brokers could trade in securities issued by them. However, the amended Public Trading in Securities Act revoked such rights of issuers.[140]

This rule was changed again in 2007 by the Financial Instruments Markets Act and the Securities Act; these provide that only securities of public limited companies being market participants, ie, issuers in the sense of the Securities Act, must be recorded by securities brokers.

In practice, the situation remains the same, ie, no one has asked to revoke earlier securities accountancies operated by intermediaries and most likely neither the the Bank of Lithuania nor market participants will initiate such change, except for some individual case-by-case applications.

Unless the investor has ordered otherwise in writing, an intermediary authorised by the issuer serves as the account operator for securities of such an investor.[141] An account operator maintaining a personal securities account is obliged, at the request of the shareholder, to issue a statement of the securities account.[142] Such a statement is not the security, and is not transferable. The account statement, for example, is necessary for the purposes of the participation and voting at the shareholders' meetings in case of bearer securities.[143]

The issuer, too, has the right to require, at any time, an intermediary to provide the lists of the owners of its securities by way of request addressed to the Central Depository.[144] The Companies Act since 2003 grants such a right to issuers with regard to registered shares only,[145] not with regard to bearer instruments.

Significantly, it is assumed that the title to securities never passes to the account operators. They are not allowed to pool similar securities owned by different clients and/or by themselves. Securities must be segregated (each account identified), not only by the owner, but also by the particular issue of securities. For each investor, separate accounts must be opened with regard to different issuers and issues. Each issue must be accounted in a separate book. The securities of each client and of the intermediary must be recorded in a separate division of the book.

At the higher level, there are the accounts of account operators with the Central Depository (so-called 'general securities accounts'). To ensure efficient functioning of the system and regulatory surveillance of the accounting of securities, every account operator, before starting the operation of personal securities accounts, must have become a member of the Central Depository of Lithuania.[146]

The general account represents the aggregate number of securities accounted by a particular account operator (for the benefit of investors). By means of this arrangement, the Central Depository of Lithuania is able to control the correspondence of the total amount of dematerialised securities in circulation with that of the issued and registered ones.

Any transfer of dematerialised securities is performed by means of crediting and debiting the relevant securities accounts. Where the transfer is between investors who keep their securities accounts with different account operators, it must necessarily be cleared through the Central Depository since this involves debit entry on the transferor's account, the operator's general account with the Central Depository, and corresponding credit entry on the transferee's side.

Each account operator, in turn, makes appropriate entries in his clients' accounts (credit on the transferee's account and debit on the transferor's one). Where the transfer is between clients of the same account operator, in principle, it is possible to avoid clearance through the Central Depository because, in this case, the change in the general account of the account operator is not involved. However, in the latter case, market concentration and transparency considerations are relevant. Brokers may, nonetheless, be required to register the transaction with the Stock Exchange and report its volume and prices.

The concept of dematerialisation has been introduced by means of administrative measures not preceded or followed by public legal discussion of its implications. No concerns have been expressed in relation to private law. The Civil Code effective at that time, with its traditional concepts of property and obligations, remained untouched. Because Lithuania has skipped over the phase of physical securities' market, the legal concepts and rules applicable to material securities trading, which could be used as a basis for construction of new concepts by analogy, have not been developed. Thus, prior to the coming into effect of the New Civil Code, there was a legal vacuum in private law relating to securities regulation.

The New Civil Code, however, already deals with dematerialised securities. For instance, it expressly prescribes the application of general rules on safekeeping to account operators of dematerialised securities,[147] and provides exemptions from the general regulation of sale and purchase agreements to stock exchange transactions,[148] securities sale and purchase,[149] and repurchase agreements.[150]

The Lithuanian system virtually abolishes the idea of a bearer security, despite attempts of the Companies Act 2000 to remove the inconsistencies with its underlying concept. Pursuant to the relevant Securities Commission rules, the identity of the holder of the security must always be known to the account operator and the Central Depository, regardless of whether the security is the registered or the bearer instrument.[151] This information may presumably be subject to the state authorities, such as the Tax Inspectorate. In addition, the Companies Act 2003 provides that all shares must be registered.[152]

Intermediaries. The term 'intermediary' is defined in the Markets in Financial Instruments Act by way of enumerating institutions which are considered as intermediaries. In practice, this includes two kinds of entities, namely:

- Brokerage firms; and
- Authorised commercial banks.

A commercial bank is defined by the Law on Banks and is vested with the status of an intermediary by virtue of law (unless its banking licence is restricted). A brokerage enterprise is defined by the Financial Instruments Markets Act as a legal person whose regular business is the provision of one or more investment services to third parties and/or the performance of one or more types of investment activities on a professional basis. It may be possible that financial brokerage firms established in other member states do not have the status of a legal person.[153]

153 Financial Instruments Markets Act, art 3.7.

Only financial brokerage firms holding the licence of a financial brokerage firm issued by the Bank of Lithuania or the supervisory institution of another member state and credit institutions licensed in Lithuania or another member state where the licence of a credit institution grants the right to provide investment services, and the financial adviser undertakings holding the licence of a financial adviser undertaking as issued by the Bank of Lithuania, may provide investment services in Lithuania as a regular occupation or business on a professional basis.[154] This provision will not apply to a market operator operating a multilateral trading facility and not proposing to provide other investment services.[155]

Previously, commercial banks were allowed to engage in the securities business but, in principle, they were subject to double authorisation. The general banking licence was issued by the Bank of Lithuania. Normally, it included the authorisation to engage in the securities business. However, such authorisation was subject to the consent of the Securities Commission. Having regard to the fact that the Bank of Lithuania overtook the functions of the Securities Commission, the double authorisation procedure was simplified and commercial banks are now allowed to engage in the securities business upon obtaining a consent of the Bank of Lithuania at the time of issuance of the general banking license.

In line with the Investment Services Directive,[156] intermediaries are, pursuant to the Financial Instruments Markets Act,[157] authorised to render the following investment and non-core services:

- Reception and transmission of orders;
- Execution of orders on behalf of clients;
- Dealing on own account;
- Management of a financial instrument portfolio;
- Provision of investment advice;
- Underwriting and/or placing of financial instruments on a firm commitment basis;
- Placing of financial instruments without a firm commitment basis; and
- Operation of a multilateral trading facility.

Brokerage enterprises are not allowed to engage in other business activities. Brokerage firms are subject to initial capital requirements under the threat of refusal or withdrawal of authorisation.[158] Apparently, following the example of the EU Capital Adequacy Directive,[159] the Securities Commission has classified all brokerage firms into three groups — A, B, and C.[160]

Group A comprises brokerage firms intending to conduct all activities set out in the Financial Instruments Markets Act.[161] Group B consists of firms that do not engage in the trade in securities for their own account, or underwriting of securities issues on a firm commitment basis and managing multipurpose trade systems.[162] Group C consists of firms that render only the following investment services:[163]

- Reception and transmission, on behalf of investors, of orders in relation to securities;
- Placing of securities issues without an underwriting obligation;
- Investment advice concerning securities; and
- Managing securities portfolios in accordance with mandates given by clients, provided that execution of orders to buy and to sell securities and safekeeping and administration of securities is transferred to another brokerage firm of level B or A.

The Bank of Lithuania has established requirements on the minimum capital of the firms of each group in line with the amounts enshrined in the Capital Adequacy Directive. In particular, the own capital of Group A firms must be at the minimum level of EUR 730,000. The level required for Group B firms is EUR 125,000. The level for Group C firms is EUR 50,000.[164]

In addition, brokerage firms are subject to capital adequacy requirements, position risk, counterparty and settlement risk, and large exposure requirements.[165] For example, the capital adequacy of a financial brokerage firm is expressed by the ratio of liquid own capital and capital adequacy requirement. A firm is said to meet the capital adequacy requirement when this ratio is higher than one. Some of the other requirements apply to a firm depending on its category (ie, Group A, B, or C). For instance, position risk must be calculated only by Group A financial brokerage firms with respect to all their trading book items.

License for financial brokerage enterprises are issued by the Bank of Lithuania. To obtain a license for a financial brokerage firm, the following information must be submitted to the Bank of Lithuania:

- The operating plan;
- The documents of the firm (including most recent annual financial statements and auditor's report);
- Information about the owners;
- Information about the management members;
- A calculation of capital adequacy and documents certifying the formation of the share capital;
- Information on close links with other natural or legal persons;
- A complete description of the premises and the equipment used by the firm;
- Documents attesting to an obligation to become a member of a recognised investor insurance system;
- Information on the financial brokers employed or intended to be employed and other employees providing the investment services;
- Proof of payment of the state charge for the issuing of the licence;
- Documents and information related to the measures and the procedures meant to ensure compliance with the organisational requirements imposed on financial brokerage firms;
- The operations organisation policy;
- The business continuity (uninterrupted operations) policy;
- A description of the administration and accounting policy and procedures;
- The internal control regulations and information on a person in charge of the enforcement of the internal controls;
- Information on compliance policy and the person in charge of the enforcement of compliance policy;
- A description of the risk management policies, procedures, and measures;
- The policy on the avoidance of the conflicts of interests;
- The rules for the examination of customer complaints;
- A description of the measures designed for control of personal transactions, protection of client assets, and prevention of reduction and loss of client assets;
- The order execution policy;

- The procedure for the enforcement of anti-money laundering measures;
- Information on the readiness to submit the transaction information to the Securities Commission on the basis of the Transaction Reporting System (TRS); and
- Information on information technology systems employed.

A license can be withdrawn essentially when the above conditions for the obtaining of a license cease to exist or when the firm does not meet capital adequacy requirements, is unable to pay its debts, as well as in other cases equivalent to those listed in the Investment Services Directive.[166]

Only members of the Stock Exchange may trade on the Stock Exchange, ie, financial brokerage firms authorised by the Securities Commission (now by the Bank of Lithuania) to act as market intermediaries and banks, the licences of which do not preclude them from engaging in operations with securities. Such to-be members of the Stock Exchange must apply to the Board of the Stock Exchange for a permit to trade on the Stock Exchange.[167] Together with the application, they must submit certain documents and comply with the Board's requirements. When the Board of the Stock Exchange issues a permit to trade on the Stock Exchange, such participants of the Stock Exchange become Stock Exchange members.

Only those financial brokerage firms that hold a general Group A licence or a specialised Group B licence issued by the Securities Commission (now by the Bank of Lithuania) may trade on the National Stock Exchange. On applying for membership, the financial brokerage firm or a bank also is obliged to become a member of the Stock Exchange Guarantee Fund and:

- Pay the initial contribution of the amount set forth in the rules of formation and use of the Guarantee Fund;
- Pay the annual fee for the participation in the Stock Exchange trading;
- Become a direct member of the Central Depository and/or other clearing system approved by the Stock Exchange;
- Make an agreement with the Stock Exchange concerning settlement of transactions concluded on the Stock Exchange;
- Acquire technical means and software for the participation in the Stock Exchange trading that meet criteria approved by the Board of the Stock Exchange; and
- Employ at least two qualified brokers.

167 AB NASDAQ OMX Vilnius participation (membership) and trading rules (Trading Rules), approved by the Management Board of the Stock Exchange, as amended from time to time.

The qualified brokers have to have at least six years prior experience in financial markets, proof that thye have acquainted themselves with the acts regulating the trading on the Stock Exchange, and proof of adequate economic, financial, and analytic skills. Each authorised broker has to pass a trading exam.

The right of a Stock Exchange member to trade on the Stock Exchange will be suspended or withdrawn by the decision of the Management Board of the Stock Exchange in certain cases, mainly those relating to the licensing and breaches of the regulatory regime.

Domestic Exchanges. As noted, the Vilnius Stock Exchange of Lithuania (AB NASDAQ OMX Vilnius) is the only securities exchange currently in existence in Lithuania. The Financial Instruments Markets Act, however, provides an opportunity for several securities exchanges to operate in Lithuania. Every exchange must be licensed by the Bank of Lithuania.

The Bank of Lithuania may refuse the licence if the incorporation documents of an exchange, the exchange trading rules, or other documents submitted to the Bank of Lithuania contravene Lithuanian laws, the information submitted is false, the economic substantiation of the exchange is insufficient for the exchange to properly operate, or the persons holding qualified holdings do not comply with the requirements of the Markets in Financial Instruments Act.

Off-Market Transactions and Transborder Electronic Trading Systems. Due mainly to the market concentration requirement, an effective over-the-counter trading system did not exist in Lithuania until the changes at the end of 2007. As mentioned earlier, the First North alternative market is the only alternative trading platform to the Vilnius Stock Exchange.

Similarly, there is no effective transborder electronic trading system, except the Lithuanian–Latvian–Estonian market, although larger banks and securities brokers in practice appear to conduct transactions on foreign markets for their own account through their own electronic connections.

Securities

Definition of Security. The definition of a security is important as it determines the scope of applicability of the Securities Act. An investor is defined in terms of the ownership of securities.[168] A person who has acquired instruments other than securities within the meaning of the Securities Act may not necessarily be considered as an investor and is not afforded relevant protection. The issue and the issuer are defined in the Securities Act with reference to the security and, consequently, such requirements imposed on the issuer as prior publication and registration of prospectus[169] and the periodic disclosure of information[170] are not applicable to the extent an instrument issued is not covered by the definition of a security.

168 Under the Securities Act, art 2, para 18, an 'investor' is defined as 'a person who holds securities by the right of ownership, or intends to acquire securities'.

169 Securities Act, arts 5–6, 8.

Only instruments that are securities within the meaning of the Securities Act can be considered for the admission and listing at the Vilnius Stock Exchange. For example, only shares of issuers in the sense of the Securities Act can be admitted to the trade list.

Generally, in Lithuanian private law, the term 'security' has a very broad meaning. Consistently with the New Civil Code, it is somewhat vaguely understood as a document embodying the obligation of its issuer to the holder of such document (it can literally be translated as 'valuable paper').[171] Thus, negotiable instruments (such as bills of exchange and promissory notes), as well as documents of title, consignment notes, bills of lading and, possibly, certificates of deposit, may be considered as securities.[172] It can be seen that this concept comprises not only instruments used in an investment context, but also those used in daily commercial practice. Investor protection and the related regulatory regime are not always relevant to all of those instruments.

Consequently, the Civil Code provides that for the purposes of investor protection and capital market supervision, other laws may lay down a different definition of securities (investment), which definition is employed in the laws governing relevant relations.[173] Based on this, the Financial Instruments Markets Act fully includes into its regulatory sphere only such securities which may be traded on securities markets, namely:

- Shares in companies and other securities equivalent to shares in companies, the societies operating on the basis of partnership and other entities, and depositary receipts in respect of shares;
- Bonds and other forms of non-equity securities, including depositary receipts in respect of such non-equity securities; and 171 Civil Code, art 1.101.1.

172 Under the Civil Code, art 1.101, para 1, 'a security, as an object of civil rights, is a document certifying the obligation of its issuer to the holder of this document. A security can confirm the right of the person in possession of the document (holder) to receive from the issuer interest, dividends, part of an enterprise upon its liquidation, or the funds lent to the issuer (shares, bonds, etc.); the right or duty to acquire or alienate for payment or gratuitously other securities (subscription rights, futures contracts, options, convertible bonds, etc.); the right to some income or payment duty subsequent to a change of prices on the securities market (index, etc.). A security also is a document by which a direct order is issued to a bank to pay a certain sum of money (cheques) or which certifies a duty to pay a certain sum of money to the person whose name is indicated in such a document (promissory note, bill of exchange); or which proves the right of ownership to commodities (documents of title); likewise a document which certifies the right or duty to acquire or alienate documents of title (derivative documents of title)'.

173 Civil Code, art 1.101.2.

- Other securities giving the right to acquire or transfer transferable securities or giving rise to cash settlements determined by reference to transferable securities, currencies, interest rates, yields, commodities, or other indices or measures.[174]

Consistent with the dual concept of securities, as enshrined in the Investment Services Directive, the above instruments may be referred to as securities stricto sensu. Additionally, the Financial Instruments Markets Act applies, however, to a different extent, its regulatory regime to investment instruments and deems investment instruments as securities for regulatory purposes. Investment instruments are defined in the light of the Investment Services Directive[175] as the following securities or deeds:

- Transferable securities;
- Money-market instruments;
- Units in collective investment undertakings;
- Options, futures, swaps, forward rate agreements, and any other derivative contracts relating to securities, currencies, interest rates or yields, or other derivatives instruments, financial indices, or financial measures which may be settled physically or in cash;
- Options, futures, swaps, forward rate agreements, and any other derivative contracts relating to commodities that must be settled in cash or may be settled in cash at the option of one of the parties (otherwise than by reason of a default or other termination event);
- Options, futures, swaps, and any other derivative contract relating to commodities that can be physically settled provided that they are traded on a regulated market and/or an MTF;
- Options, futures, swaps, forwards, and any other derivative contracts relating to commodities, that can be physically settled not otherwise mentioned in point 6, above, and not being for commercial purposes, which have the characteristics of other derivative financial instruments, having regard to whether, inter alia, they are cleared and settled through recognised clearing houses or are subject to regular margin calls;
- Derivative instruments for the transfer of credit risk;
- Financial contracts for differences; and
- Options, futures, swaps, forward rate agreements, and any other derivative contracts relating to climatic variables, freight rates, emission allowances or inflation rates or other official economic statistics that must be settled in cash or may be settled in cash at the option of one of the parties (otherwise than by reason of a default or other termination event), as well as any other derivative

> contracts relating to assets, rights, obligations, indices and measures not otherwise mentioned in this Section, which have the characteristics of other derivative financial instruments, having regard to whether, inter alia, they are traded on a regulated market or an MTF, are cleared and settled through recognised clearing houses, or are subject to regular margin calls.[176]

Thus, for instance, prior authorisation requirements, supervision of the Bank of Lithuania, as well as other regulatory measures set out in the Financial Instruments Markets Act, are applicable to intermediaries dealing with both securities stricto sensu and investment instruments. Furthermore, contracts relating to both securities stricto sensu and investment instruments are subject to certain requirements set out in the Financial Instruments Markets Act, and investment instruments like securities stricto sensu may be listed and traded on stock exchanges. Finally, rules applicable to stock exchanges, the Bank of Lithuania, and liability for contraventions apply in connection with both securities and investment instruments. However, issue registration requirements, rules relating to primary and secondary offerings, prospectuses, and disclosure and reporting requirements, rules on acquisition of qualifying holdings and tender offers, as well as rules on accounting of securities apply only to securities stricto sensu.[177]

In general, the form of the instrument (ie, physical or dematerialised, whether it is represented by the document or not) is irrelevant for the definition in the Financial Instruments Markets Act. This is evidently to reflect the system of dematerialised securities which has emerged in Lithuania.

In contrast with the Public Trading in Securities Act, the Securities Market Act has significantly approximated the concept of securities with EU legal requirements. This is also reflected in the Financial Instruments Markets Act.

Notes and bills issued pursuant to the Law on Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes,[178] as well as cheques and 'payment instruments' defined in the Payment Act',[179] are exempted from the regulatory regime of the Financial Instruments Markets Act.[180] The Payment Act defines 'payment instruments' as any personalised device and/or set of procedures agreed between the payment service user and the payment service provider and used by the payment service user in order to initiate a payment order.[181]

The Civil Code further expressly includes electronic payment instruments into the notion of 'payment instruments'.[182] However, the use of the term 'payment instruments' to refer to the above instruments is debatable. Conceptually, only money, questionably also electronic money, should be regarded as a payment instrument, whereas the above instruments should be deemed as means of payment. This distinction is clearly reflected in the Commentary to the Civil Code.[183]

Securities and Issuer Requirements for Listing. Currently, there are four lists of securities at the Vilnius Stock Exchange, these being:

- The Official List;
- The Secondary List;
- The List of Debt Securities; and
- The List of Investment Units (Funds).

Under the Companies Act, there are two types of companies, ie, public companies and private (or closed) companies. The minimum share capital of a public company must be at least LTL 150,000 and that of a private company LTL 10,000. If the number of shareholders exceeds 249, the company must be registered as a public company. Private companies may not publicly issue the shares (their shares may not be traded on the public market), and are prohibited from issuing publicly traded bonds.[184] At the same time, public limited companies cannot place their securities for the trade if the issuer does not fit to the issuer category under the strict meaning of the Securities Act. Under the Partnerships Act, partnerships are not allowed to issue securities.[185] Accordingly, as a practical matter, public companies are the only Lithuanian entities that may effectively issue securities and are 'admitted' to the Bank of Lithuania list of issuers.

According to the Trading Rules of the Vilnius Stock Exchange, shares of the issuer may be admitted to the Official List of the Stock Exchange by the decision of the Board of the Stock Exchange, subject to the conditions listed in the Trading Rules of the Vilnius Stock Exchange. Said conditions have been basically laid down in line with the provisions of Directive 2001/34/EC (which was amended by Directives 2003/71/EC, 2004/109/EC, and 2005/1/EC),[186] and include the following requirements:

- The legal position of the issuer is in conformity with the laws and regulations to which it is subject, as regards its formation and its operation;

- The issuer has prepared and published a securities prospectus in accordance with the requirements set forth in the Trading Rules of the Vilnius Stock Exchange or has published a prospectus meeting the requirements applicable to a prospectus for admission to the Official List (exception is made to securities issued by collective investment undertakings);
- The issuer has conducted business continuously for at least three years (the Board of the Stock Exchange may make exceptions to this requirement);
- The legal position of the shares is in conformity with the laws and regulations to which they are subject;
- The shares are freely negotiable, fully paid up, and granting the same rights to their owners (the Board of the Stock Exchange is authorised to make exceptions to the requirement for the shares to be fully paid up, as well as in case of shares which may be acquired only subject to approval);
- The foreseeable market capitalisation of the shares for which admission to Official Listing is sought or, if this cannot be assessed, the company's capital and reserves, including profit or loss, from the last financial year, must be at least EUR 4 million (Trading Rules leave possibility for leeway if there is sufficient interest in trading such securities on the regulated market). For admission to the Secondary List, the capitalisation requirement is EUR 1 million as defined in Directive 2001/34/EC.
- A sufficient number of shares has been distributed to the public in Lithuania or in one or more EU member states prior to the admission (a sufficient number of shares and exception to this requirement are determined in accordance with the requirements of Directive 2001/34/EC);
- Accounting of securities is conducted in accordance with the requirements of Lithuanian laws and regulations applicable to account operators;
- Where public issue precedes admission to the Official List, the shares may be listed only after the registration of the increase of the authorised capital in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the law;
- The application for admission to the Official List must cover all the shares of the same class already issued (the Board of the Stock Exchange may make exceptions to this requirement in line with the requirements of Directive 2001/34/EC);
- If the shares issued by a company which is a national of a non-EU member country are not listed in either the country of origin or in the country in which the major proportion of the shares is held, they may not be admitted to the Official List, unless the Board of the Stock Exchange is satisfied that the absence of a listing in the country of origin or in the country in which the major proportion is held is not due to the need to protect investors.

Depositary receipts may be admitted to the Official List, provided that:

- The issuer of shares meets the first three requirements applicable to the issuers the admission of whose shares to the Official List is being sought (ie, conditions relating to the legal position of the issuer, market capitalisation, and annual accounts), and has complied with the obligations applicable to the companies whose shares are admitted to the Official List;

- The issuer of depositary receipts has prepared and published an information bulletin in accordance with the requirements prescribed by the Trading Rules of the National Stock Exchange; and
- Depositary receipts meet the conditions relating to the shares of which admission to the Official List is being sought (distribution of sufficient number of shares, freely negotiable shares, and others).

Pursuant to the Trading Rules of the Vilnius Stock Exchange, government securities, as well as debt securities with a maturity longer than one year issued by the governmental, regional, or local authorities of other countries as well as international organisations, may be admitted to the Official List. All such debt securities have to be freely transferable and negotiable.

Other debt securities may be admitted to the Official List subject to the conditions laid down in the Trading Rules of the Vilnius Stock Exchange. Notably, the Trading Rules provide for a more extensive list of requirements applicable to other debt securities than Directive 2001/34/EC and Directive 2003/71/EB, and include basically the same conditions as those applicable to the admission of shares, ie:

- The legal position of the issuer is in conformity with the laws and regulations to which it is subject, as regards its formation and its operation;
- The issuer has published or filed its annual accounts prepared in accordance with Lithuanian legislative requirements or international accounting standards and audited in accordance with international accounting standards for two financial years preceding the application for official listing (exception to the requirement of three years may be applied by the Board of the Stock Exchange also not applicable to securities issued by the governmental, regional, or local authorities of other countries, as well as international organisations);
- The issuer has prepared and published an information bulletin in accordance with the requirements set forth in the Trading Rules of the National Stock Exchange or has published a prospectus meeting the requirements applicable to a prospectus for admission to the Official List;
- The issuer was operating profitably in the course of the last financial year (the Board of the Stock Exchange may apply exceptions to this requirement);
- The legal position of the debt securities is in conformity with the laws and regulations to which they are subject;
- The debt securities are freely negotiable, fully paid up, and granting the same rights to their owners (the Board of the Stock Exchange is authorised to make exceptions to the requirement for the debt securities to be fully paid up);

- The debt securities in respect of which application for admission has been made are in the hands of the public to the extent of at least 25 per cent of their issue or when, in view of the large number of such debt securities and the extent of their distribution to the public, the market will operate properly with a lower percentage;
- The nominal value of the debt securities issue is no less than EUR 200,000, and the maturity of the debt securities is no longer than one year (the minimum nominal value requirement is not applicable in case of tap issues where the nominal value of the debt securities issue is not fixed, and not applicable to securities issued by the governmental, regional, or local authorities of other countries, as well as international organisations);
- Convertible or exchangeable debentures and debentures with warrants may be admitted to the Official List only if the related shares are already admitted to the Official List or listed on another regulated, regularly operating, and recognised in an EU member state open market or are so admitted simultaneously (exception is provided where the Board of the Stock Exchange is satisfied that holders have at their disposal all the information necessary to form an opinion concerning the value of the shares to which these debt securities relate). This requirement is not applicable to securities issued by the governmental, regional, or local authorities of other countries, as well as international organisations;
- Accounting of securities is conducted in accordance with the requirements of Lithuanian laws and regulations applicable to account operators; and
- The application for admission must cover all debt securities.

Notably, conditions relating to the admission to the Official List of securities issued by undertakings of EU member states are applicable only following Lithuania joining the EU in 2004.

The securities of the issuer may be admitted to the Secondary List of the Stock Exchange on the decision of the Board of the Stock Exchange where the issuer and securities correspond to the Trade Rules.

As can be seen, there may not always be a direct condition precedent to having a securities issue registered by the Securities Commission (now the Bank of Lithuania). This is because such a requirement is set vis-à-vis the Central Depository. To open the securities issue account with the Central Depository of Lithuania, a copy of the registered prospectus (prospectus) and documents evidencing such registration with the Securities Commission (now the Bank of Lithuania) must be submitted to the Central Depository of Lithuania.[187]

In other words, if the securities issue has not been registered with the Securities Commission (now the Bank of Lithuania), there is no legal possibility for the securities issue to exist publicly, save for the exceptions prescribed by the Market in Financial Instruments Act, as well as by the Securities Commission or the Bank of Lithuania which, as mentioned, overtook the functions of the Securities Commission.

Trading Rules

Prospectus Requirements. Where the securities of the issuer whose home member state is Lithuania are intended to be offered publicly or admitted to trading on a regulated market in Lithuania and/or other member state, such issuer has to follow the requirements for admission of securities to trading on a regulated market and prepare and publish a prospectus. Where the home member state of an issuer is other than Lithuania, the requirements have to be complied with where the securities are intended to be offered publicly or admitted to trading on a regulated market of Lithuania. An issuer is also a legal person established in Lithuania, proposing to issue or issuing its securities. Requirements for admission of securities to trading on a regulated market are not applicable to:

- Securities issued (to be issued) by open-ended collective investment undertakings;
- Non-equity securities issued (to be issued) by a member state, its regional or local authorities, the European Central Bank, central banks of member states of the EU, and public international organizations of which at least one EU member state is a member;
- Shares of the central banks of member states;
- Securities unconditionally and irrevocably guaranteed by a member state, or its regional or local authorities;
- Non-equity securities issued in a continuous or repeated manner by credit institutions of member states, provided that such securities are not subordinated, convertible, or exchangeable, do not give a right to subscribe to or acquire other types of securities, or are not linked to a financial derivative, and provided the securities materialise reception of repayable deposits, and are covered by a deposit insurance coverage;
- Publicly offered securities issued by an issuer incorporated in a member state, provided the total consideration for the offer in the member states is less than €5 million calculated over a period of 12 months;
- Non-equity securities issued in a continuous and repeated manner by credit institutions incorporated in a member state where the total consideration for the offer in the member states is less than €75 million calculated over a period of 12 months, provided that such securities are not subordinated, converted, or exchangeable, do not give a right to subscribe to or acquire other types of securities and that they are not linked to a financial derivative.

The home member state should be interpreted as:

- For all Community issuers of securities — the member state where the issuer has its registered office;
- For all non-Community issuers of securities — the member state in which the securities were publicly offered for the first time after 31 December 2003, or intended to be offered, or where the first application for admission to trading on a regulated market is made. The home member state shall be designated at the discretion of the issuer, a person offering the securities, or a person asking for admission to trading on a regulated market, subject to a subsequent election by issuers incorporated in a third country if the home member state was not determined by their choice;
- For any issues of non-equity securities the denomination per unit of which amounts to at least €1,000, or for any issues of non-equity securities giving the right to acquire any transferable securities or to receive a cash amount as a consequence of them being converted or the rights conferred by them being exercised, provided that the issuer of non-equity securities is not the issuer of the underlying securities and is not related to the issuer of the underlying securities—the member state in which the issuer has the registered office or where the securities were or are to be admitted to trading on a regulated market, or where the securities are offered to the public. The same regime shall be applicable to non-equity securities in a currency other than euros, provided that the minimum denomination of such security is not less than €1,000.

Concept of Public Trading in Securities. Under the Securities Act, Article 2.58, public offering is defined as a communication to persons in any form and by any means offering securities and presenting sufficient information on the terms of the offer and the securities to be offered so as to enable an investor to decide to purchase or subscribe to the securities being offered. Offering of securities through intermediaries of public trading in securities shall also be deemed to be the public offering provided it meets the features of the public offering described previously. Communication to persons on the basis of trading in the regulated market of Lithuania is not deemed to be the public offering of securities. Admission of securities to trading in the multilateral trading facility, as well as the communication to persons on the basis of trading in the multilateral trading facility, is not deemed to be the public offering of securities.

The Registration Rules,[188] which were in force prior to the Securities Market Act, treated the following acts as the advertising for offering of securities and addressing the public:

188 Rules on Registration of Securities, approved by the Resolution of the Securities Commission on 30 May 2002, Zin (2002), no 63-2567, now Rules on Securities Prospectus and Information Disclosure, approved by the Resolution of the Board of

- An advertisement in media (such as newspapers, magazines, radio, and television);
- Information on offering of securities with the indication of the price of the issue in a publication or an interview to a media; and
- Printed, sound, visual, or other public advertisements and those transmitted via the telecommunications network.

Under current conditions, marketing of transactions that is related to official public offering or admission to the regulated market is mainly governed by the Law on Securities, Advertising Law.[189] There are no restrictions per se in carrying out marketing activities whether through media, telecommunications network, or other advertising means; however, any marketing campaign has to conform to the requirements below:

- Marketing must be clearly identifiable according to its form of presentation; surreptitious marketing is prohibited. Advertisements have to state that a prospectus has been or will be published and indicate where investors are or will be able to obtain it;
- Marketing of securities cannot include misleading information or such information that would deviate from the information provided in the published or to be published term-sheet or its annexes regardless of the fact of whether or not such information was disclosed for advertising purposes; information has to be accurate, fairly representing the risk factors, comprehensive, represented in a proper manner, and so on;
- Marketing of securities has to include all relative and important information about the issuer and the financial institution providing the investment services (if it is not the issuer); and
- Marketing documentation for professional investors has to state that it is intended to attract professional investors or a special category of investors and include information in the manner defined by the supervisory institution.

As regards marketing with respect to telephone calls, faxes, emails, or similar forms of communication, the Advertising Law sets forth that such direct marketing can only be carried out upon obtaining the consent of the receiver of the information.

Securities intended to be issued for non-public trading of securities, ie, in the absence of indications of public trading of securities, must be registered by the issuer at its own discretion for the public trading or private placement.

Exemptions from Preparation of Prospectus. The Securities Act provides exemptions to the securities issue for the preparation of the securities prospectus the Bank of Lithuania on 28 February 2013, in effect as from 9 March 2013, Zin (2013), no 25-1251 (hereinafter — "Registration Rules").

taking into account the type of securities, their trading peculiarities, as well as the need for disclosure of information.[190]

Consequences for Violation of Registration Requirement. The legal consequences for the non-compliance with the prospectus registration requirement vary. Dematerialised, non-registered securities (which are subject to the registration of the supervisory authority) will not be admitted to the clearing system of the Central Depository; thus, trades in such securities on the Stock Exchange would be impossible. They would not be admitted to the Stock Exchange listing.

Under the Companies Act, shares of a public limited company issued into circulation without prior registration of the issue with the supervisory authority are void. An issuer is entitled to rely on the invalidity of the shares to the same extent as an investor. In the case of public primary offering, it is forbidden to advertise securities or announce their subscription until the prospectus is published. The Securities Act also authorises the supervising authority to penalise issuers, intermediaries, or other persons who organise or perform public trading of unregistered securities or of securities the registration of which has been suspended or cancelled.[191]

Thus, the liability under the Securities Act for the breach of the duty of registration is primarily administrative. The Securities Act does not introduce any new rules of civil liability that would otherwise be available under the general grounds of civil law, but provides that persons who have infringed the provisions of the Securities Act will be liable in the manner set by law. According to the general principles of the securities markets, this requires that investors be indemnified for loss.

Criminal liability is vague. The new Criminal Code[192] provides for criminal liability only for insider dealing and market manipulation.[193] Criminal liability for fraud is available on general grounds.[194]

Accuracy of Prospectus. According to the law and the Registration Rules, the prospectus is a document prepared for investors and the public that discloses the main facts relating to the issuer and the securities offered for public trading.

The registration of a securities issue with the supervisory authority is confirmation that the information provided by the issuer complies with the disclosure requirements of the Securities Act and the Registration Rules. The

Securities Act specifically establishes liability for the accuracy of the prospectus.[195]

In addition to the usual damages provision, the supervisory authority has the right to terminate the registration of the securities, in which case further sale of securities is forbidden. In both cases, it is primarily the issuer who is liable for the accuracy of the prospectus. The personal civil and criminal liability of the directors or other persons signing the prospectus is not clear.[196] Most probably, liability can only be established in case of fraud; mere negligence should not suffice.

Refusal of Registration. Under the Securities Act, the supervisory authority may refuse to register the securities issue if the information delivered does not comply with the rules determined by the supervisory authority, or the issuer has refused to deliver required documents, information, explanations, or corrections; or has delivered incorrect documents or statements; or securities are issued in violation of laws or securities regulations.

Primary Offerings. The Public Trading in Securities Act applied virtually the same requirements to primary offerings carried out through both public and private placement. The Securities Act, by contrast, has made a clear distinction between the rules governing public primary offerings and those governing private primary offerings.

Any primary trading in securities may be carried out by the issuer himself or through an intermediary.[197] Main rules that apply during all primary offerings are: equal conditions for acquisition of the offered securities must be insured to all potential investors; each potential investor must be afforded the opportunity to become acquainted with the prospectus and other registration documents;[198] procedure and terms of primary offering, as set out in the prospectus, may be changed only upon a permission of the supervisory authority; and the price, par value, class, or type of securities may not be changed.[199]

If, during the period of any primary offering, a material event has occurred or the information included in the prospectus has changed, an issuer must publish this pursuant to the procedure of publishing material events.

195 Securities Act, art 7.

196 There is no precise provision in the criminal Laws of Lithuania that would make material misstatements or omissions in the prospectus a criminal offence; presumably, article 205 of the Criminal Code may be applied on general grounds; it imposes criminal liability on provision of misleading information on the 'activity or the assets of an enterprise in a report or application acting on behalf of an enterprise', provided that creditors, shareholders, the state or other institutions, or persons have been actually mislead with respect to such information and this has caused significant damage.

197 Securities Act, art 16.1.

199 Securities Act, art 16.3.

Although the Companies Act of 2000 implied a possibility to carry out primary offerings through the Stock Exchange,[200] such possibility was diluted by the Public Trading in Securities Act and other securities legislation, in particular by the Registration Rules of 1998, which were in force when the Companies Act of 2000 came into effect.

The Securities Act has removed the obstacles for carrying out primary offerings through the Stock Exchange. The Act expressly provides that primary trading in securities may be effected through a stock exchange following the rules adopted by the supervisory authority, and allows the issuers to set minimum and maximum securities issue prices in the prospectus when offering securities through the stock exchange.[201] Nevertheless, the Bank of Lithuania (supervisory authority) has not yet adopted the rules implementing the provisions of the Securities Act in connection with the primary placements through the exchange.

Secondary Trade

Basic Rules and Market Concentration. Pursuant to the Securities Act, public secondary trading may only be executed through an intermediary. The Law also provides that 'the secondary trading in securities shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of the Financial Instruments Markets Act of Lithuania'.[202] Moreover, any sale-purchase transactions in the secondary trading of securities may only be carried out on a stock exchange if securities are listed on the Official List or Secondary List of the exchange. A breach of these requirements may result in administrative liability up to LTL 100,000.[203]

Thus, Lithuania appears to have implemented the market concentration principle of the EU Investment Services Directive.[204] This has probably been influenced by French concepts as advice from French experts was important when drafting the Public Trading in Securities Act, in which this market concentration principle emerged.

Over-the-Counter Transactions. The Securities Market Act prohibited over-the-counter sale-purchase transactions in listed securities. Such prohibition is no longer existent in the Financial Instruments Markets Act. Securities Commission rules on reporting of over-the-counter transactions states that all such transactions have to be reported to the Central Depository.[205]

Article 31.3 of the Law on Markets in Financial Instruments sets forth that upon entering into a transaction regarding the financial instruments admitted to trading on a regulated market, a financial brokerage firm must forthwith, no later than the end of the following working day, give to the supervisory institution a notice of the transaction entered into in accordance with the procedure laid down by the supervisory institution. This duty is applied whether or not the transaction has been entered into on a regulated market.

Bulk Transactions on Regulated Market. The idea of market concentration has existed in Lithuania from the beginning of the creation of market structures.[206] However, it was also understood that its absolute application would ignore real market circumstances and, at least in situations where counter-parties to the transaction have privately agreed the terms of transfer of the securities, it would be unreasonable to force them to go through the vehicle of a stock exchange trade, endangering the effectiveness of the agreement.

Parties to such a transaction (called a 'direct transaction') were allowed to use a simplified procedure of the registration of a transaction with the exchange without deviating from the principle that the transaction be executed on the exchange. This procedure also remained under the current acts.

Under the current rules, direct transaction may be effected on the Stock Exchange where intermediaries deliver matching sale and purchase orders on listed securities.

Direct transactions are registered by the Stock Exchange and are subject to transparency: the price, volume, and other terms of the transaction must be published. There may be no limitations imposed on the price of securities acquired in other sell or buy transactions. The transaction is deemed as carried out on the Stock Exchange, and it is subject to its other rules, as well. The direct-transaction procedure is important as, in many circumstances, it proves to be the only possibility to execute private secondary trading transactions.

Foreign Securities

With regard to prospectuses and their annexes, the allowed prospectuses are those prepared in accordance with the requirements of the Republic of Lithuania or the requirements of any other member state of the European Union and approved by the respective supervising authority of that member state. Article 13 of the Law on Securities requires that the prospectus approved by the member state supervising authority has to be submitted together with the translation of the summary of prospectus into Lithuanian language. The Law on Securities provides that the securities issued by a foreign issuer can only be subject to public offering or trade on the regulated market after the supervising authority of the issuer's member state transfers to the supervising authority of the Republic of Lithuania the copy of the prospectus and the affirmation that such prospectus has been prepared in accordance with the laws of that member state.

Where the supervisory institution determines that the issuer or the financial institutions responsible for the public offering of securities have violated the legal requirements of this Law and other legal acts applied to the issuers whose securities are publicly offered or admitted to trading on a regulated market, it immediately notifies of the established violations the home member state of the issuer as well as the European Securities and Markets Authority.

The Law on Securities provides that the supervisory institution publishes on its website the list of the prospectuses obtained in accordance with the above requirements and of the certificates of approval of all supplements thereto, as well as, where applicable, the internet reference to these documents published on the website of the competent authority of the home member state, the issuer or the regulated market. The published list of prospectuses and of the certificates of approval of supplements are constantly updated and each record is retained on the website for not less than a year.

Under the Securities Act,[207] any person who, acting alone or in concert with others, acquires shares in a company amounting to 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 50, 75, and 95 per cent of the votes in such company must, within four days of crossing each such threshold (in either direction), inform the supervisory authority and the issuer of his shareholding of the amount of his votes. Both parties need to notify the supervisory authority and the issuer of the transaction (transferee, on acquisition; transferor, on disposal). The obligation is also binding upon the person directly or indirectly holding the securities that, subject to a formal agreement and upon an initiative of the holder thereof, entitles him to acquire in the future the securities issued by the issuer.

For the purposes of determining whether a person or a legal entity is required to make a declaration of acquisition or disposal of a major holding, regarded as voting rights held by that person or entity are those that:

- Are granted to a person by shares held thereby by the right of ownership (except where they are pledged as a security and the pledge agreement provides for the voting rights transfer to the security holder);
- Are held by another person with whom that person has concluded a voting agreement concerning the implementation of the corporate management policy;
- Are held by another person with whom he had concluded a provisional agreement on the transfer of the voting rights;

207 Securities Act, art 23.1.

- Are granted by shares that have been pledged or transferred as a financial security provided the security holder is authorised to use the voting rights attaching to the shares;
- Are granted by shares for which he as an usufruct authorised to use all his life or a determined period of time that may not be longer than the duration of the person's lifespan;
- Are according to the first five points, above, held by the entity controlled by the person;
- Are granted by the shares transferred to him by trust or otherwise deposited to him where the person, in the absence of other instructions, may exercise the voting rights at his own discretion;
- Are granted by shares acquired to his benefit but in the name of another person;
- May be used by the person at its own discretion under an authorisation or under other agency basis; and
- Are granted by the shares held by the spouse of the person except in cases when the nuptial agreements provide that securities are regarded as personal property of each of the spouses.[208]

The above amounts are calculated as regards all same-class shares that entitle voting rights, irrespective of whether the use of such shares has been suspended.

In line with Directive 2001/34/EC, the Securities Act lays down the following exemptions from the requirement to report the acquisition/disposal of the qualified holding:

- To members of the Central European Bank system performing monetary functions, also effecting pledge, repurchase, or other equivalent liquidity transactions within the payment system or for monetary policy purposes. This exclusion shall apply to short-term transactions provided the rights attaching to the shares are not exercised;
- A company belonging to a group of companies obliged to draw up annual consolidated financial statements, if a respective notification is submitted by its parent undertaking, or by the ultimate parent undertaking of the latter;
- A person who acquires the securities of the issuer only for the purposes of the mid-accounting or the settlement during the regular short-term settlement cycle. The maximum possible short-term accounting cycle shall be three trading days from the conclusion of a transaction.
- Account managers registered in member states and third countries who, acting as account managers, in the general meeting of shareholders have a right to vote in respect of the votes attached to shares only following the instructions of the customers submitted in writing or by electronic means.

- A market maker who in performing the activity of market maker is not involved in the management of the issuer in whose general meeting of shareholders he acquired or disposed of 5 per cent of votes or the votes above such threshold, and due to such acquisition or maintaining of the price does not affect the issuer.

The market maker shall within four trading days notify the competent authority of the use of such exemption. Notification procedure is prescribed by the Disclosure Rules.[209] Persons notifying the supervisory authority must also disclose to it holdings of securities that provide their right to vote and/or to hold the securities in the future (such as convertible bonds and convertible preference shares).

In the event of a person failing to notify the supervisory authority or the issuer of the acquisition in accordance with such a requirement, such a person, for the period until the proper disclosure of the data concerned, has the right to hold at the issuer's general meetings of shareholders more votes than the last threshold of which he has duly notified. Moreover, he is forbidden to have more votes in the general meeting of the issuer than the last threshold which has been reported.

In addition, all decisions adopted during the period between the acquisition of the holding and the moment of a proper disclosure of the information may be annulled by a decision of the court, if the decisions had resulted in a replacement of the issuer's managers or property or non-property rights of shareholders have been violated. Notably, the above sanctions are not applicable in the event of the failure to report the disposal of a qualified holding. Accordingly, the failure to report the disposal may result in an administrative penalty only. After the supervisory authority has received such information on the acquisition or disposal of major holdings, it must disclose it to the public.

Insider Dealing

Lithuania has implemented the new Insider Dealing and Market Manipulation Directive.[210] Notably, the definition of inside information as set out in line with Directive 89/592/EEC[211] has been changed.

209 Rules on Disclosure of Information on Acquisition (Disposal) of a Block of Shares, approved by the Resolution of the Board of the Bank of Lithuania on 28 February 2013, Zin (2013), no 26-1269.

210 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 28 January 2003 on insider dealing and market manipulation (market abuse) (2003/6/EC), OJ 2003 L 096/16, amended by Directives 2008/26/EC and 2010/78/EU.

Under the Financial Instruments Markets Act,[212] any persons who have access to inside information by virtue of being employees of the issuer's administration, by virtue of membership of the management or supervisory bodies, or by virtue of having access to such information through the exercise of their employment, profession, duties, or by virtue of being a shareholder of the issuer or by virtue of their criminal activities shall be prohibited from trying to enter or to enter for their own account or for the account of a third party, either directly or indirectly, into transactions in the financial instruments to which the information relates, until it is made public. Where the person referred to is a legal person, the appropriate prohibition also applies to the natural persons who take part in the decisions to enter into transactions for the account of the legal person concerned. The persons indicated above also are prohibited:

- From directly or indirectly forwarding inside information to another person, unless such disclosure is made in the normal course of the exercise of their employment, profession, or duties; and
- From recommending, inducing, or offering another person, on the basis of inside information, to enter into a transaction in the financial instruments to which the inside information relates.

The prohibitions specified also apply to any person who possesses inside information, while that person knows, or ought to have known, that it is inside information. However, the prohibitions do not apply to carrying out of the transactions entered into prior to familiarisation with the acquired inside information.

All prohibitions to take advantage of the inside information do not apply to transactions carried out in pursuit of monetary, exchange-rate, or public debt-management policies by the government, by the Central Bank, or any other body carrying out similar functions.

Under the Financial Instruments Markets Act, intermediaries are prohibited from rendering services in a transaction where they have information that such a transaction would violate the prohibition to take advantage of inside information and are obliged to report such information to the supervisory authority.[213]

Issuers are required to furnish certain information to the supervisory authority relating to persons having access to inside information and persons related to the issuer. Furthermore, to exercise at least a certain degree of control over insider transactions, the law requires directors of the issuer to report transactions in own-company securities. Such reports must be filed with the supervisory authority on a regular basis, at least once a month. Such information is made publicly available by the supervisory authority.

213 Financial Instruments Markets Act, art 62.

The Financial Instruments Markets Act also provides that an issuer or a person acting on behalf of or for the account of the issuer who discloses inside information to any third party in the normal exercise of his employment, profession, or duties must simultaneously (in the case of non-intentional disclosure — immediately after the disclosure) make effective public disclosure of the entire information. This requirement shall not apply if the person receiving the information owes a duty of confidentiality based on regulations, on articles of association of an undertaking, or on a contract. Issuers, or persons acting on behalf of the issuers or for their account, must, in accordance with the procedure laid down by the supervisory institution, transmit to it data (including personal numbers) of the persons having the right to be familiar a with inside information under contracts of employment or otherwise.

Prohibition of the use of inside information and prohibitions with regard to market manipulation (described below) in respect of the financial instruments which are traded on the regulated markets or multilateral trading facilities situated or operating in the Republic of Lithuania (or for which a request for admission to trading on such markets or facilities has been made) apply both to the actions carried out on the territory of the Republic of Lithuania and abroad.

The prohibitions and requirements in respect of the financial instruments which are traded on the regulated markets or multilateral trading facilities situated in any other member states (or for which a request for admission to trading to such markets or facilities has been made) apply to the actions carried out in the territory of the Republic of Lithuania, even if an appropriate transaction has been entered into outside such a market.

The Financial Instruments Markets Act provides that the entity that is in breach of prohibition against insider dealing and market manipulation is subject to administrative liability up to LTL 200,000. The Criminal Code expressly provides criminal liability for insider dealing:

> 'A person who, having knowledge of inside information about the issuer's material events or about any other information relating to the issuer or its securities, enters, directly or through brokers, into transactions in respect of the securities of that particular issuer or discloses such information to a third party, or recommends or offers for a third party to acquire or transfer the securities of that particular issuer is, if such actions cause property damage, subject to restraint or a fine or imprisonment of up to two years. A legal person is also held liable for the above acts to the same extent.'[214]

Civil law consequences of insider dealing are not very clear. Under the general principle of civil law, transactions violating the mandatory rules of the law are void.[215] This principle can be used to rescind contracts based on inside information. In addition, as was seen earlier, the supervisory authority has the power to bring class actions in court.

215 Civil Code, art 1.80.

Furthermore, as the rules relating to insider dealing are also effectively addressed to market professionals, they are additionally subject to the Stock Exchange Trading Rules and Code of Ethics.

Market Manipulation

Rules prohibiting market manipulation were introduced by the 1998 revision of the Public Trading in Securities Act. The Securities Market Act has slightly revised the concept of market manipulation. Under the Financial Instruments Markets Act,[216] it is prohibited to disseminate false, misleading, or incomplete information relating to the issuer, its securities, directors, activities, financial condition, or transactions in its securities. It is also prohibited to enter into securities purchase or sale transactions and give orders to buy or to sell securities, where such transactions or orders to trade would give false or misleading signals as to the supply of, demand for, or price of securities.

Similarly, as in the case of insider dealing, intermediaries are prohibited from rendering services in a transaction where they have information that such a transaction would lead to market manipulation. Consequently, intermediaries are also subject to the requirements prescribed by the Stock Exchange Trading Rules and Code of Ethics.

Legal consequences for violation of such a requirement are the same as those applicable to insider trading. However, the Criminal Code imposes criminal liability only for dissemination of false, misleading, or incomplete information, and does not deal with transactions or orders to trade which give false or misleading signals as to the supply of, demand for, or price of securities:

> 'A person who disseminates false, inaccurate, or incomplete information about the issuer or the securities of that particular issuer for the purposes of seeking to unreasonably boost and unreasonably cut the market price of the securities, and thereby inflicts property damage, is subject to restraint or a fine or imprisonment of up to three years. A legal person is also held liable for the above acts to the same extent.[217]'

Public Take-Over Bids (Tender Offers)

There are two types of tender offers under Lithuanian securities laws, ie, voluntary and mandatory.

Under the Securities Act, if a person, acting independently or in concert with other persons, acquires more than one-third of the votes at the general meeting of shareholders of an issuer, he must:

- Dispose of the securities exceeding the threshold; or

217 Criminal Code, art 218.

- Submit a mandatory tender offer to buy the remaining voting securities and securities granting the right to acquire voting securities of the issuer (eg, warrants).[218]

Persons acting in concert are defined as natural or legal persons who cooperate with the offeror or the target company on the basis of an agreement, either express or tacit, oral or written, aimed at acquiring the control of the target company granting 1/3 or more of the votes in the general meeting of shareholders of the target comany or at frustrating the successful outcome of the bid. Persons controlled by another person, and persons acting in concert with that other person, shall also be deemed acting in concert with one another.

The price of an offer must be stated in such an offer. It must be registered with the supervisory authority. The mandatory tender offer price may not be less than the highest price of the securities that the offeror has acquired over the last 12 months before exceeding the one-third limit. Notwithstanding this rule, each shareholder of an issuer is entitled to claim in court the increase of the mandatory tender offer price up to the fair price of such securities.

Furthermore, if the offeror acquires additional securities at a price higher than the price of the offer within one year following the implementation of the tender offer, both in case of the mandatory and voluntary tender offer, he is obliged to pay the balance to the persons having accepted the offer.

From the moment of exceeding the mentioned threshold, the person (or group of persons acting in concert) is deprived of all votes at the target company's shareholders' meeting, until the take-over offer is registered with the supervisory authority or such person transfers a certain amount of such securities, so that the number of votes is reduced to below the one-third limit. It appears that loss of the votes is the only consequence for the failure to comply with the mandatory tender offer requirement.

As mentioned, tender offers must be registered with the supervisory authority.[219] For purposes of registration, the offeror must deliver certain documents, among which are a circular prepared in a prescribed form. All tender offers must be exercised on the exchange (ie, regulated market), and they are subject to Stock Exchange Trading Rules, regardless of whether securities are listed by the exchange.

Execution of an offer must be commenced on the fourth business day following registration of the offer with the supervisory authority. An offer must remain open for a period not shorter than 14 days, but not longer than 70 days.[220] In voluntary offers, consideration may be paid either in cash or in other registered securities. In mandatory offers, consideration can only be paid in cash.

As soon as the target company has been notified of a pending offer, its managing bodies may not take any action to frustrate the offer or hinder the investors' opportunity to consider the offer. The Securities Act exempts certain situations from the mandatory tender offer requirement.[221] By the end of 2013, the following situations had been exempted:

- The party acts in concert with another person in respect of whom the obligation arises later;
- The threshold is exceeded because all of the issuer's securities or part thereof are exchanged for the securities of the newly incorporated company in proportion to the authorised capital of the issuer under the reorganisation or the split-off issuer and the person had previously executed the takeover bid or had been exempted from the obligation to submit a takeover bid although he had exceeded the threshold in respect of which the obligation to announce a takeover bid arises;
- The threshold is exceeded where the company that had been reorganised by way of splitting or from which a new spin-off company is established had previously implemented the takeover bid or was exempted from the obligation to implement the bid although it had exceeded the threshold of the votes giving rise to the obligation to submit a bid, and the securities held thereby are transferred to the companies established following the splitting of the company;
- The threshold is exceeded in accordance with the Law on Restructuring of Enterprises of Lithuania under the restructuring plan of the issuer;
- The threshold is exceeded through the acquisition of the securities from the controlled or controlling person; this exemption is applied only as long as the relation specified in this item between the seller and the purchaser is maintained;
- The threshold is exceeded by acquiring the securities when the mandatory bid is executed in connection with other persons and the threshold is exceeded personally; and
- The party who has acted independently or in concert with other persons and has submitted a voluntary bid to acquire all securities of the offeree company acquires more than one-third of the votes in the general meeting of shareholders of such company.

Periodic Disclosure

In General

Reporting Issuer. In the sense of the Securities Law, all securities issuers are the 'reporting issuers'. They are subject to periodic disclosure requirements, according to which they must submit to the supervisory authority an annual report and periodic reports (which are quarterly and semi-annual).[222] At the same time, the same reports must be delivered to the Central Information Database.[223]

221 Securities Act, art 32.

The supervisory authority determines the information to be disclosed in the annual and periodic reports. An annual report must be accompanied by the independent auditor's report on the compliance of the issuer's accounting and financial statements with Lithuanian laws, general accounting standards, or international accounting standards.

Annual and other periodic reports must include financial statements drawn up in accordance with the requirements prescribed by Lithuanian laws and general accounting requirements. Financial statements must be accompanied by an explanatory statement.

Annual and other periodic reports must comply with the forms prescribed by the supervisory authority. The information required is very extensive. If the issuer considers some information as being confidential, it may skip that item and apply to the supervisory authority for permission not to disclose such information.

However, the supervisory authority may require the issuer to prove that disclosure of such information may cause significant damage to the issuer or that it would be contrary to public interest. The supervisory authority may nonetheless instruct the issuer to publish such information if, in its view, such a disclosure would not cause significant damage to the issuer and the non-disclosure of information would mislead the investors.

All issuers must submit annual reports and periodical reports for three, six, nine, and 12 months. Additional reporting can be asked due to the essential events related to the issuer's financial status, trade securities, or material events.

An annual report must be submitted within one month after the annual shareholders' meeting; periodical reports must be submitted within two months after the end of the reporting period.

The issuer must make it possible for all owners of its securities to familiarise themselves with the reports free of charge. Such information is to be published in the central information database. Issuers whose securities are listed on the Official or Secondary List of the Stock Exchange are also obliged either to publish their reports, or to publish information on where and when the investors may familiarise themselves with such reports.

Foreign Issuers. Based on Directive 2001/34/EC (as amended), the Rules on Periodic Disclosure of Information and the Law on Securities provide reporting requirements applicable to the issuers whose securities are listed in EU member states. The governing rules also cover reporting requirements as regards issuers based in foreign (non-EU) states.

223 Rules on Annual and Periodic Information Disclosure Rules, approved by the Resolution of the Board of the Bank of Lithuania of 28 February 2013, Zin (2013), no 25-1255.

Articles 21 and 22 of the Law on Securities provides that the annual (interim) financial statements and annual (interim) consolidated financial statements of issuers established in member states must be drawn up in observance of the requirements of the national legal acts of the member state where the issuer has been established. The annual financial statements and annual consolidated financial statements of the issuers established in non-member states must be drawn up in observance of the international accounting standards or the universally accepted accounting principles. In the event that interim financial statements and interim consolidated financial statements have been drawn up not in observance of the international accounting standards, interim financial statements and interim consolidated financial statements must comprise at least an abbreviated balance sheet, an abbreviated profit and loss account, and an explanatory note.

Rules on Periodic Disclosure of Information[224] set forth the specific requirements as regards non-EU issuers. The annual financial statements and annual consolidated financial statements of such issuers have to clearly indicate that they have been prepared in accordance with universally accepted accounting principles, or that accounts have been prepared in accordance with accounting principles of Japan, the United States of America, the People's Republic of China, Canada, Republic of Korea and, for the financial year beginning 1 January 2015 — accounting principles of the Republic of India. As of the date these countries denounce their accounting principles in favor of universally accepted accounting principles, the applicability of accounting principles of the aforementioned countries is immediately suspended.

Reporting Material Events

On the happening of any material event, the reporting issuer also is under the duty to promptly deliver an information notice to the operator of the regulated market at which the securities issued thereby are being traded, the supervisory authority, and make public and post in the central storage facility an information notice on each material event, with the exception of events specified in the Securities Act.[225] Such an information notice must specify the nature of the event and provide a short description.

The duty is mitigated by the exemption allowing the issuer to decide that publication of information may cause it financial damage, in which case the issuer must forward information only to the supervisory authority, marking it as confidential.[226] Each material event must be reported within 24 hours.

224 Rules on Periodic Disclosure of Information, art 16.
226 Securities Act, art 18.2.

A 'material event' is understood as 'any event directly relating to the activities of the issuer of which the issuer is aware or must be aware, which is not of public knowledge, and which may lead to substantial movements in the prices of its securities'.[227] The Rules on Disclosure of Material Events provide a non-exhaustive list of events that are, by their nature, considered as material events. These include:

- Management decisions on changing the amount of the authorised capital;
- Management decisions to change the characteristics of securities, to buy up own securities, and to issue securities;
- Management decisions to pay dividends;
- Management decisions to file an application with the stock exchange for listing the issuer's securities on the stock exchange;
- Management decisions to change the members of the issuer's managing bodies, the audit firm, or the inspector;
- Management decisions to reorganise or liquidate the issuer;
- Management decisions to file a bankruptcy petition;
- Management decisions to establish a subsidiary or a branch;
- Management decisions to change the type of the main activity;
- Calling of the general meeting of the issuer's shareholders;
- Court decisions to start bankruptcy proceedings against the issuer or a decision of the meeting of creditors to settle the issuer's bankruptcy case out of court;
- Decisions of competent authorities to restrict the issuer's activity, or suspend or revoke authorisation (license) to engage in the main activity;
- Failing to meet certain requirements relating to capital and reserves of the issuer, as prescribed by relevant statutory acts;
- Conclusion, cancellation, declaring void, or other expiration of validity or suspension of execution of contracts on the transfer of the issuer's long-term high-value assets;
- Conclusion, cancellation, declaring void, or other expiration of validity or suspension of execution of large contracts (trade, credit, and the like) that have or might have material effect on the issuer's activity and financial state;
- Natural calamities and social unrest (strikes, fire, and the like) which have direct influence on the issuer's activity; and
- Decisions on significant guarantees, increase of debt, material litigation, or arbitration. The list is not exhaustive. In every instance, it is the issuer who must decide whether the event is to be considered as material. Failure to notify a material event imposes on the issuer administrative liability. The 227 Rules on Disclosure of Material Events, arts 6 and 9.

Commission may impose a fine on the issuer of up to LTL 200,000.[228] In addition, a concept of a material event serves as a basis for a determination of insider trading.

Squeeze-Out and Mandatory Sell-Out

Starting from 1 January 2005, the new rules for squeeze-outs and mandatory sell-outs were implemented in the Securities Market Act[229] and therefore it is now implemented in the Securities Act.[230] Under the mandatory change of shareholders' rules, the shareholder of an issuer in the sense of the Securities Act, acting independently or in concert with other persons and having acquired shares representing not less than 95 per cent of the total votes at the general meeting of shareholders of the issuer, shall have a right to require that all the remaining shareholders of the issuer sell the voting shares owned by them, and the shareholders shall be obligated to sell the shares in the manner established by the present law. Where the shareholder purchases shares acting independently or in concert with other persons:

- Persons acting in concert will be jointly liable for the fulfillment of the obligation to acquire the shares; and
- The number of shares acquired by persons acting in concert shall be proportionate to the number of votes of the issuer held thereby at the moment of the submission of the notification unless the agreement concluded by persons acting in concert provides differently.

Where a shareholder acting independently or in concert with other persons is obligated to submit a mandatory tender offer, the sale and purchase of shares in accordance with article 19 (37 under the Securities Act) may be executed only after the shareholder's obligation to submit the mandatory tender offer is fulfilled in the prescribed manner.

The price offered for the shares during the squeeze-out procedure must be fair. Neither the Securities Act nor other legislation prescribe in detail how fair price must be calculated.

Nonetheless, the Securities Act provides general principles for 'fairness of the price'. In particular, the fair price of shares must be established in accordance with the following principles:

- Where the shareholder, acting independently or in concert with other persons and having acquired not less than 95 per cent of votes in the general meeting of shareholders of the issuer, submits a mandatory tender offer, the fair price will be the one paid to him for the shares of the issuer while acquiring the shares in this manner (only provided not more than three months have elapsed from the moment of the expiry of the tender offer until the submission of the notification for the squeeze-out);

- Where a shareholder, acting independently or in concert with other persons and having acquired shares entitling it to not less than 95 per cent of votes at the general meeting of shareholders of the issuer, submits a voluntary tender offer, the fair price will be the one paid to the shareholder for the shares of the issuer while acquiring the shares in this manner, provided through the tender offer the bidder acquired not less than 90 per cent of tendered shares (only provided not more than three months have elapsed from the moment of the expiry of the tender offer until the submission of the notification for the squeeze-out); and
- In other cases, the price of the shares will be established in the manner opted by the person acquiring the shares and ensuring a fair remuneration for the shares being purchased.

On receipt of the notification of the shareholder buying up the shares acting independently or in concert with other persons, the issuer shall not later than within five days notify of the purchase of the shares by registered mail each shareholder, the supervisory authority, and the National Stock Exchange and publish an appropriate announcement in the Lithuanian national daily specified in the by-laws of the issuer, which publishes all announcements. The announcement shall indicate information specified by the law.[231] Within 90 days from the date of the announcement of the notice in the Lithuanian national daily newspaper specified in the by-laws of the issuer, all shareholders will be obligated to sell their shares to the shareholder indicated in the notice on the buy-up of shares, acting independently on in concert with other persons, or contest the price proposed for the shares in the court.

Where, within the prescribed term, the shareholder fails to sell the shares and does not contest the proposed price for the shares on the last day of the time limit, the shareholder buying up the shares will be deemed to have acquired the right to necessarily buy up the shares by transferring the proposed price for the shares into the account indicated by the shareholder or the depository account. The settlement for the shares being bought up shall be made only in cash. Where the shareholder buying up the shares fails to pay the proposed price for the shares within the established time limit, it will be deemed that the shareholder's right for the squeeze-out has elapsed.

Any shareholder of the issuer in the sense of the Securities Act will have a right to require the shareholder who, acting independently or in concert with other persons, has acquired the shares entitling it to not less than 95 per cent of all votes in the general meeting of shareholders of the issuer, to purchase the voting shares owned by him and the shareholder concerned must buy up the shares. In this case, the shareholder who requires selling of the shares must submit an appropriate notice to the issuer.

231 Securities Act, art 37.9.

Where a shareholder requires that another shareholder, acting independently or in concert with other persons and who has acquired shares entitling it to not less than 95 per cent of votes in the general meeting of shareholders of the issuer, purchases the shares of the shareholder, the above-mentioned provisions will apply mutatis mutandis.

Introduction

Preliminary Observations

Luxembourg securities laws deal specifically with shares, debentures, bonds, and other financial instruments able to create liquidities for the issuing companies. Regulating the issuance of such instruments is of paramount importance, especially in a growing international financial market. Although there are certain countries where foreign or international securities are regulated separately from domestic securities, this is not the situation in Luxembourg. Because the Luxembourg domestic market is of relatively minor importance when compared to the international financial market, Luxembourg, in its regulation of securities, does not make a distinction between foreign and domestic instruments.

Obviously, apart from the issuance of financial instruments on a public level, there are always transactions of securities between private parties which have nothing to do with the public market. Those private transactions are governed by the basic concept of contractual freedom. It is obvious that, if a company issues shares, bonds, or debentures, the statutory corporate bodies having the authority to do so must take the relevant decisions in the manner and in the format as required by law. Commercial transactions on such instruments between two private parties are not specifically regulated whether those are instruments issued by Luxembourg domiciled companies or by foreign companies and sold in Luxembourg.

The public market of international securities consists of course in the official Stock Exchange. The Law of 30 December 1927 created what was called at the time a 'Commercial Exchange' (Bourse de Commerce). Article 3 of the Law of 30 December 1927 provided that securities would be dealt with at this exchange. The Decree of 22 March 1929 entrusted the organisation and management of the Stock Exchange to a company to be specifically incorporated under the name of Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg (Stock Exchange Company of Luxembourg). The Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg SA was incorporated on 5 April 1929, and the articles of incorporation can be consulted in the Official Gazette.[1] The articles of incorporation were amended on 26 April 1989 and 24 April 1991.

Whereas the Luxembourg Stock Exchange was always under the supervision of a representative of the government under the name of Commissaire à la Bourse, Directives issued by the then European Community (EC), and now European Union (EU), required important transformations in law and regulations in the early 1990s. In anticipation, the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg enacted specific regulations on 27 June 1985. The Law of 21 September 1990 introduced the EC Directives into domestic law, abrogated the Law of 30 December 1927, and created the possibility of multiple stock exchanges. It also created a proper authority under the name Commissariat aux Bourses, which was under the direct control of the President of the government and whose job it was to supervise the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg. At the same time, the organisation and management of the Luxembourg Stock Exchange was extended in favour of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg until 21 March 2027, under the control of the Commissariat aux Bourses. The Law of 23 December 1998 created a new authority under the name of Commission de surveillance du secteur financier, the legal successor to the Commissariat aux Bourses.

Whereas, in earlier years and since 1945, the issuance and public offering of securities were under the control of the head of the Banking Supervision (Commissaire au contrôle des Banques), the Decree of 28 December 1990 requires for the admission of any security to the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, as well as for any public offering of securities, the filing and publication of a prospectus under the supervision and control of the Commissariat aux Bourses.[2] The Law of 4 December 1992 regulates the information and details which are to be disclosed in case of substantial holdings.

Legal Sources

Further to the laws and regulations referred to above, reference should be made to:

- The Company Law of 10 August 1915, as amended;
- The Law of 3 May 1991, regulating insider trading; and
- The Grand-Ducal Decree of 17 February 1971, as amended, governing transactions on securities.

Authorities

Whereas the regulation of the Luxembourg Stock Exchange lies within the responsibility of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg, this company, organised as a private limited-liability company (société anonyme or SA), is supervised by the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier, which is organised by the Law of 23 December 1998 and which, in general terms, supervises the Luxembourg Stock Exchange under the authority of the government.

In a very general way, the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier has the authority to investigate and report on applications for admission of new stock exchanges and to supervise those bodies managing the said stock exchanges, to supervise the files relating to stock exchange problems on an international and EC level and to represent the government in negotiations with respect thereto, to exchange information with the supervising public authorities and to recommend to the government all ways possible to improve the legal environment regulating the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, as well as to analyse and report on all other issues on which the government requests its advice.

This authority includes the right to veto all decisions made by the relevant stock exchanges and in general to supervise compliance with laws and regulations by all bodies involved in the operation of the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, as well as to control prospectuses dealing with public offerings for which a quotation on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange will not be required. The Commission de surveillance du secteur financier and the members of its staff are bound by rules of professional secrecy sanctioned by criminal laws. Obviously, the professional secrecy rules do not prevent the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier from making to national or foreign authorities such communications required by the supervision, on condition, however, that the said information will be protected by the secrecy rules governing the receiving authority. No tax or duty is levied on transactions on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange.

Procedures

It is obvious that a company purporting to raise funds by public offering of securities must comply with company laws and regulations, as well as with its own articles, for authorizing and issuing the said securities. It is certain also that, in case of a merger between two companies where a public offer of purchase of shares is launched as to the shares of one of the two companies, there are particular rules and laws to be complied with.

The purpose of this chapter is not to enter into the details of those matters pertaining to company law or to special rules relating to mergers, but only to deal with the general aspect of the public issuance of securities. If a public offering of securities is considered, this issuance may be with listing and quotation at the Luxembourg Stock Exchange or without such a listing.

Regarding listing on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, the law requires that the issuer file with the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg a prospectus, the contents of which are regulated in detail by the Decree of 28 December 1990. By this prospectus, full particulars of the issuer, as well as with respect to the nature and to technical details of the securities, are to be disclosed. This prospectus must obtain the approval of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg. In case of no response within six months of filing, this lack of response is deemed as being a refusal of authorisation. A recourse against a formal or implicit decision of refusal may be filed with the member of the government having within his attributions the Treasury Department. In no circumstances may the approval or visa by the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg be referred to in any documentation.

Regarding public offering but without listing on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, a different prospectus must be filed with the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier for authorisation. The contents of this different prospectus are also regulated by the relevant law. The procedure in general terms is similar to the one governing the prospectus in case of listing at the Luxembourg Stock Exchange. In addition, obviously all rules of normally applicable law are to be complied with in case of sale and purchase of securities.

Organisation of Security Market and Regulations

In General

As has been said above, Luxembourg law does not make any distinction between securities publicly offered which are to be sold by a domestic entity or by a foreign issuer. In all cases, the ordinary and normally applicable regulations must be complied with as well as when domestic securities are publicly offered by a Luxembourg seller or when international aspects are involved.

Marketing of Securities

Source of Regulation

Regarding participants in the securities market, the articles of association of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg, as well as the regulations issued by this company, govern the admission of participants to the market of publicly offered securities. While the law provides for possible admission of more than one stock exchange, there presently is only the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, as managed by the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg.

Rules and Reciprocity

In General. The listing of international or foreign securities, generally, is governed by the same rules as the listing of domestic securities. In addition, the same rules apply to foreign issuers and to nationals, all this without any requirement of reciprocity by the foreign state of which the foreign issuer is a national or a resident.

However, the fact that Luxembourg is a member state of the EU may have as a consequence that different rules may apply, depending on whether the supervisory or stock exchange authorities of an EU member state have already dealt with certain securities. Specific requirements will be highlighted hereafter.

Requirements as to Issuer. The requirements regarding the issuer of securities to be listed are governed by the regulations of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg. They may be indicated as follows:

- The capitalised value of the share capital of the issuer, inclusive of its last financial year, must be at least €1,239,467.6;[3]

3 It is within the discretionary authority of the board of directors of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg to exempt a company from this requirement.

- The issuer must have been validly incorporated, be in legal existence, and be operated in accordance with the law and regulations; and
- The company must have been in existence for at least three years or must have filed its annual financial statements for the last three financial years.[4]

Requirements as to Securities. Under the regulations of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg, it is possible to list on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange only shares, bonds, and debentures, as well as some derivative rights.[5]

Shares. The shares must have been validly created and issued under the laws and regulations governing the issuer. The shares may not be restricted, but must be freely transferable. Apart from other restrictions which will prevent shares from being listed, this means that only shares completely paid in may be listed. By exception to this rule, the board of directors of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg may exempt an issuer from this condition if sufficient guarantees are deemed to be given that the shares are, as a matter of fact, freely transferable.

In case an earlier public offering of shares has been made for which the period of validity has not yet expired, shares can be listed at the Stock Exchange only after the said period of public offering will have expired. In a general way, the shares must be publicly held within the member states of the EU. This condition is deemed to be fulfilled if at least 25 per cent of a given type of shares are so held by the public. This percentage may be reduced if it is considered to be impossible that such a percentage be reached given the number of issued shares.

It also is required that a complete block of the share capital or even all the shares of a given type be listed in one move and that the public be informed of the quantity of shares so listed and the number of shares retained. The public must have all necessary information as to the internal controlling structures organised within the issuing company. The shares must materially exist and be incorporated in transferable documents. However, it is admitted that, for shares issued by a member state of the EU, only national requirements for those shares must be met, on condition, however, that thereby the public interest is duly protected.

For foreign (non-EU member state) shares to be admitted to the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, it is required that they first are listed on the national stock exchange of the issuing company. If, however, this condition is not met, the board of directors of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg may exempt from the requirement, on condition, however, that it considers to have sufficient guarantees that the non-listing on the 4 Under certain conditions, the board of directors of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg also may exempt an issuer from this requirement.

5 It is to be noted in general terms that the board of directors of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg may impose additional conditions for listing or, indeed, refuse a requested listing if it considers that the interest of the public is not duly protected.

national stock exchange of the issuing company does not disclose an attempt to withhold publicly needed information.

Bonds and Debentures. For the listing on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange of bonds and debentures, the conditions relating to public holding of shares and to listing on the national stock exchange of the issuing company (for non-member states of the EU) are not applicable. For listing of bonds and debentures, it is required that the total raising of capital by way of the debentures is at least €247,893.52. This condition obviously does not apply in case of ongoing issuance and if the total amount of the capital to be raised is not set in advance.

Bonds and debentures convertible into ordinary shares or exchangeable against ordinary shares or warrants may be listed on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange only on condition that the corresponding shares have been admitted to a regulated public market prior to or at the same time as the listing of the debentures is requested. Again, and on condition that the information relating to the debentures is deemed to be sufficient for a full disclosure to purchasers of the precise value of the debentures to purchasers, the board of directors of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg may be exempt from this requirement.

Debentures Issued by Government. The listing of government debentures is beyond the scope of this chapter and will not be dealt with here.

Requirements as to Prospectus and Procedure. As noted above, as a condition to the admission to the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, a prospectus must be filed with the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg and must be approved by this company and by the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier. The contents of the prospectus are regulated by EC Directives, which have been integrated into Luxembourg law. In short, the following information must be disclosed in the prospectus:

- A copy of such documents as are required to be filed with the Luxembourg Companies Registrar in accordance with the Companies Act of 10 August 1915 and containing a complete disclosure of the company;
- Contractual agreements relating to the shares to be listed;
- The articles of association of the issuing company, as well as of any company guaranteeing reimbursement of bonds or debentures, together with a copy of the financial statements for the last three years prior to the application;
- A specimen of the securities to be listed on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange;
- Documents pertaining to the company and to the shareholders' decision to issue the securities; and
- If there is listing of the securities on the stock exchanges of one or more other EU member states, a certificate of compliance with the regulations of the stock exchange.

Again, it is to be noted that the board of directors of the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg may require further conditions to be met in the interest of transparency and protection of the public. The procedures governing the filing of the prospectus are provided by the Decree of 28 December 1990.

Prior to any public offering, the issuer must file a prospectus with the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg. This filing must be done at least 15 days in advance. If the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg considers that the interests of the public are not duly protected by the required disclosure, it may prohibit the public offering. The Commission de surveillance du secteur financier has a similar right, under certain conditions, to prohibit a listing at the Luxembourg Stock Exchange.

No prospectus is required if a company requests admittance to the Luxembourg Stock Exchange of securities within three months of a public offering duly made. In a public offering without listing at the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, the issuer has certain obligations to disclose information, but there is no requirement of filing of a prospectus with the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg. The disclosure obligations in question will be dealt with at a later stage.

In general terms, the purpose of the prospectus is to disclose to the interested public such information as it is entitled to know to enable it to come to an educated decision as to a possible investment. To warrant a sufficient disclosure, the Decree of 28 December 1990 provides for certain models to apply to disclose information. Under exceptional circumstances and if the disclosure risks serious jeopardy to the issuing company, the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier may exempt it from disclosing certain information. If, however, the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier considers that additional information is required to fully inform interested investors, it also may require the issuer to disclose additional information. Once the prospectus is approved by the authorities, it will be published together with the publishing material in possible newspapers and also in the brochures relating to the issuance.

Luxembourg being a member state of the EU, it may happen that an issuing company of another member state may apply to be admitted at the same time or within a very short period of time to the stock exchanges of Luxembourg and of one or more other member states. If an approval of a prospectus has already been obtained in another EU member state, the issuing company may request that the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier approve the prospectus used and approved in the other member state. Regarding applicable law, and if the issuing foreign company has applied for listing of the securities in its national member state, it is this national law which must be complied with for drafting the prospectus. If, however, the issuing foreign company does not apply in its national member state, it may opt as to the law which it wants to comply with.

If a prospectus has been approved of for public offering in another member state of the EU, the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier will recognize this prospectus for admission of securities to the Luxembourg Stock Exchange.[6]

6 The details as to disclosure by way of the prospectus are contained in the Decree of 28 December 1990. English and German versions of the disclosure requirements may be obtained from the Société de la Bourse de Luxembourg.

Registration of Public Offerings

Obviously, listing securities at the Luxembourg Stock Exchange is one of two ways of making a public offering of securities. It requires no further formalities than those indicated above. Another way of making a public offer consists of making a public offering short of applying for listing at the Luxembourg Stock Exchange. In this case, the company obviously is not required to comply with the requirements for listing. The public offering then is dealt with more specifically by the Companies Act of 1915 and, in particular, by articles 33–36 and 80–83 of the Companies Act.

Whoever wants to publicly offer shares, founder shares, bonds, or other securities relating to property rights in a company must file with the Companies Registrar a notice which contains the information essential for protection of the public and for assuring a fair environment for the public offering. The notice, similar to the prospectus required in the case of a listing on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, but with less detail, must disclose information relating to:

- Incorporation of the company;
- Structure of the share capital;
- Financial statements;
- Organisation and memberships of the board of directors; and
- Information relating to the nature and the technical aspects of the securities being offered.

This notice (Notice descriptive) will be published, together with all publicity material relating to the public offering. In the case of a public offering made by a foreign company, the company must file its articles of incorporation with the Companies Registrar, along with all required documents as would need to be filed by a Luxembourg company in accordance with Luxembourg law.

Periodic or Ongoing Disclosure

In the case of listing at the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, issuers of both shares and bonds must disclose, on an ongoing basis, important information having a material impact on the value of the shares or bonds listed, as well as on the rights attached to the shares or debentures or, in the latter case, with respect to the loan represented by the debentures. The issuing company also must inform the public if a new loan by way of debentures is raised, as soon as such a loan will be admitted to the Luxembourg Stock Exchange. In the case of companies of other member states of the EU, they must disclose in Luxembourg each and every change in substantial holdings in the country as they would have to do in their country of origin. The disclosure with respect to substantial holdings will be governed by their national law. Regarding companies of foreign countries being non-EU states, they must disclose any change in substantial holdings each time certain preset levels in percentages of voting rights are exceeded, and this within nine days of the relevant event.

In general, and in accordance with the regulations issued by the Société de la Bourse Luxembourg, a company (other than an open-end investment fund) must disclose on a bi-annual basis a note on its activity and financial situation. This note must be disclosed within four months of the end of the period and must provide the turn-over and the net result after tax. In the case of consolidated accounts, the company may opt between bi-annual notes on a consolidated or non-consolidated basis.

In the case where a company having its registered office in a non-EU state publishes in its home country a bi-annual report, the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier may accept that the company will publish this report instead of a specifically Luxembourg-oriented report. Again, there are no specific distinctions made between domestic Luxembourg companies and foreign companies, except for those which may result from EU regulations.

Specific Rules

Disclosure of Substantial Holdings

Disclosure of substantial holdings is governed by the Law of 4 December 1992 and the Law of 23 December 1998, which apply to any person obtaining or having a substantial holding in a Luxembourg company, the shares of which are in part or in total listed at the stock exchange of any EU member state. The duty of disclosure is triggered each time when the total voting rights in the Luxembourg company pass a threshold of 10 per cent, 20 per cent, 33.33 per cent, 50 per cent, or 66.66 per cent of the voting rights, whether by way of exceeding such a threshold or by way of decreasing below the threshold. The acquisition of voting rights referred to by the law may be any type of acquisition. The law obviously does not apply to UCITS or to brokers in so far as they do not intervene in the management of the company.

The Law of 4 December 1992 and the Law of 23 December 1998 require that any person having or controlling voting rights in the above proportions must comply with the disclosure duty, whether the rights are held in person or through nominees or legal entities. The duty of disclosure is to be satisfied with respect to both the company involved and the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier within seven days of the event of acquisition or loss of the substantial holding threshold or within seven days after the person or entity involved is deemed to have had the said knowledge.

Within nine days from the declaration by the shareholder to the company in which the relevant percentage of shares is held, the latter must proceed to its own disclosure. If disclosure is to be made, it is to be made to all EU member states where the shares of the company are listed on the official stock exchanges. If the disclosure is not made, the voting rights in question are suspended and may not be exercised.

Insider Trading and Fraud

The concept of a criminal offence for insider trading was introduced into Luxembourg law by the Law of 3 May 1991, which was enacted following the EC Directive of 13 November 1989. For insider trading to be a criminal offence, it is required that a person uses for his benefit or the benefit of another person precise information not publicly available as to the issue or as to certain securities of the issuer, such that this confidential information may have a material impact on the present value of the securities or on their value in the near future.

The territorial link to Luxembourg enabling Luxembourg prosecuting authorities and courts to retain jurisdiction over this offence results from the purchase or sale on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange of securities on the basis of insider knowledge, or from the fact that insider knowledge is gained or disclosed to a third party in Luxembourg to be used for trading in a foreign country. As soon as such a link with Luxembourg is given, Luxembourg authorities may prosecute.

In compliance with the Law of 19 February 1973 and the Law of 5 April 1993, as amended, and a ruling by the Luxembourg Monetary Institute (Institut Monétaire Luxembourgeois) of 7 November 1989 with respect to money laundering, all transactions over the Luxembourg Stock Exchange give rise to a duty to disclose the beneficially interested parties. The broker or financial institution having such information must advise the District Attorney if it considers that there are grounds for suspicion under the rules. The District Attorney may decide to investigate any insider trading offence, as well as any money-laundering offence. The Commission de surveillance du secteur financier, having the power of supervision over the Luxembourg Stock Exchange, may hand any relevant information over to the District Attorney.

In the case of an investigation by non-Luxembourg official authorities, there are channels for communication and investigation within Luxembourg, either through the Commission de surveillance du secteur financier or through the Luxembourg investigating magistrate. These channels of investigation and/or communication are either regulated by bilateral or international treaties or will be dealt with on a case-by-case basis by the Ministry of Justice.

Public Take-Over Bids

Luxembourg law does not contain any specific regulation as far as public take-over bids are concerned.

Jurisdictional Conflicts

For a country with a small territory, but with economic and financial dealings and aspirations having a worldwide aspect, such as Luxembourg, issues of conflicts of law and of jurisdiction are important as international elements are frequently encountered. Therefore, the law of international conflicts has always been a key element in Luxembourg's legal structure, both in terms of conflict of law and in terms of conflict of jurisdiction. In matters of conflict of law, Luxembourg is a party to the Hague Treaty of 15 April 1958 and the Treaty of Rome of 1 July 1980.

In matters of jurisdictional conflicts, Luxembourg's law of conflicts is particularly based on the Brussels Convention of 27 September 1968, governing the recognition of judgments as between members of the EU, replaced by a CE regulation number 44/2001 of the council of 22 December 2000 concerning the judicial competence, the recognition and the execution of decisions in civil and commercial matters and the Treaty of Lugano of 16 September 1988, governing similar issues with other European countries. The interpretation and construction of the Brussels Convention is obviously a matter for the European Court of Justice in Luxembourg, whereas the other international treaties are construed and applied by Luxembourg courts in accordance with the Luxembourg international rules.

Regarding the administrative law dealing with international securities in the context of listing at the Luxembourg Stock Exchange or other situations arising from the supervision by Luxembourg authorities, and if a company or physical person wishes to take recourse against a decision by the authorities and where such recourse is admissible, it is to be taken before the Administrative Court (Tribunal Administratif), which was created by the Law of 7 November 1996 and which commenced its functions on 1 January 1997.

If civil or commercial courts have jurisdiction to sit in matters of private litigation between the concerned parties, these courts will apply Luxembourg procedural rules. Regarding applicable law, they will analyse whether a certain legal relationship is to be governed by Luxembourg law or by any foreign law, the contents of which are to be established in court. For this purpose, both international treaties and Luxembourg rules of conflict will apply. It is only in exceptional situations where Luxembourg's concept of public order prevents normally applicable foreign laws from being applied.

In the event of a criminal offence committed in Luxembourg, Luxembourg criminal courts will have jurisdiction as soon as a criminal offence has been committed in Luxembourg or a Luxembourg national has committed abroad a crime considered as such under Luxembourg law. Luxembourg criminal courts can only apply Luxembourg law as, by nature and essence, criminal laws are restricted to the territory of the sovereign state which they govern.

Introduction

In General

Malaysia has two stock exchanges, ie, the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange and the Malaysian Exchange of Securities Dealings and Automated Quotations Berhad, commonly known as MESDAQ Bhd.

The Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange has, over the 100 years since its inception, grown to have more than 700 companies listed on its two boards, ie, the Main Board and Second Board. MESDAQ was only established in 1997, and it has only one company listed on its exchange.

The pioneering public-listed companies tended to be trading, plantation, or tin companies which had their origins in the United Kingdom, or were subsidiaries of the United Kingdom companies. After the independence of Malaysia in 1959, Malaysia embarked on a new economic policy, commonly known by its acronym, the NEP. The NEP seeks to eradicate poverty and attempts to restructure Malaysian society by re-distributing the economic pie more in line with the racial composition of the country. Hence, there is specific promotion of the Malay interest (which forms the majority of the populace which at that time was lagging in economic equality).

In the post-NEP decades, large privatised entities have emerged, such as Tenaga Nasional, Telekom Malaysia, and Petronas Dagangan. In addition, smaller-sized companies, which are mainly owner-dominated enterprises seeking new avenues for raising capital, also have dominated the numbers of listed vehicles in the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange.

With the onset of the Asian financial crisis in the late 1990s, the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange has seen its composite index taking a plunge from a 1,300-point high to a 300-point low. The government has taken great initiative to revive the capital markets, and plans are underway to ensure that the existing stockbroking companies with approximately 64 or so one-site broker houses of Malaysia merge into stronger and more efficient units able to face the onslaught of liberalisation, globalisation, and technology.

The Malaysian government, in December 1999, established a Capital Market Strategic Committee to assist in the development of a Capital Market Master Plan. The Capital Market Master Plan is a comprehensive plan that will chart the strategic positioning and future direction of the Malaysian capital market for the next 10 years.

Among other things, it will aim to address weaknesses in the capital market highlighted during the financial crisis in 1997–1999, provide a strategic road map to facilitate future business development, and assist in the creation of a resilient and competitive capital market. One should expect substantial revamping of the securities industries regulations in Malaysia in the near future.[1]

Regulatory System

Malaysia retained the British administration system after it gained independence in 1959. The Common Law concept is practiced in Malaysia, with corporate laws being modelled along the United Kingdom and Australian styles. Much of the provisions of the Companies Act are adopted substantially from the Australian Act. Cases from the commonwealth jurisdictions are not binding on Malaysian courts, but they would be persuasive.

The importation of English law relating to mercantile law generally continued under the Civil Law Ordinance 1956 where local legislation left lacunas. As local jurisprudence developed, much of these legislative gaps have been filled, rendering the importation of English law provisions somewhat superfluous.

Legal Sources

The sources of law that govern securities regulation in Malaysia broadly consist of the following:

- The Securities Industry Act 1983;
- The Securities Commission Act 1993;
- The Securities Industry (Central Depository) Act 1993;
- The Companies Act 1965; and
- The Futures Industry Act 1993.

There is much subsidiary legislation and various policies and guidelines that are issued pursuant to the above legalisation that will have an impact on securities regulations. The relevant guidelines that affect securities are mainly issued pursuant to the Securities Commission Act and are broadly the following:

- The Policies and Guidelines on Issue and Offer of Securities;
- The Guidelines for the Issue of Call Warrants;
- The Guidelines on Unit Trust Funds;
- The Guidelines for Public Offerings of Securities of Infrastructure Project Companies;
- The Guidelines for Public Offerings of Securities of Closed-end Funds;

1 The views expressed in this chapter are based on information available as at March 2000.

- The Guidelines on Asset Valuations for Submissions to the Securities Commission;
- The Guidelines on Property Trusts;
- The Guidelines on Loan Financing in Sale of Unit Trust Funds;
- The Guidelines on Delegation of Functions by Management Companies and Appointment of External Investment Managers;
- The Guidelines on the Establishment and Operation of Unit Trust Funds by Stockbroking Companies;
- The Guidelines on Transactions with Related Stockbroking Companies;
- The Guidelines on the Establishment of Foreign Fund Management Companies;
- The Guidelines on Securities Lending and Borrowing in Malaysia;
- The Guidelines for Application for Licences under the Futures Industry Act 1993; and
- The Malaysian Code on Take-overs and Mergers 1987 and its Practice Notes.

In addition to the above, there also are other legislation and policy guidelines (which may not have the force of law, but non-compliance with which may have extra-legal consequences) that directly affect foreign interests in Malaysian securities. These would include the Exchange Control Act and the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines (see text, below).

The Authorities

Securities Commission

Prior to establishment of the Securities Commission in 1993, there was no single authority in Malaysia that was entrusted with the responsibility of regulating and systematically developing the capital market. Supervisory powers were shared between industry organisations like the stock exchange and government institutions.

The Securities Commission was established pursuant to the Securities Commission Act 1993 to streamline the regulatory structure of the capital markets. It is a self-funding statutory body with investigative and enforcement powers. It reports to the Minister of Finance, and its accounts are tabled in Parliament annually. The Securities Commission's many regulatory functions include:

- Regulating all matters relating to securities and futures contracts;
- Regulating the take-over and mergers of companies;
- Regulating all matters relating to unit trust schemes;
- Licensing and supervising all licensed persons;
- Supervising exchanges, clearing houses, and central depositories;
- Encouraging self-regulation; and
- Ensuring proper conduct of market institutions and licensed persons.

The relevant legislation for which the Securities Commission is guardian includes the Securities Industry Act, the Securities (Central Depositories) Act, and the Securities

Commission Act. The Securities Commission has all powers under the legislation to deal with matters concerning 'securities laws'. 'Securities' is defined widely under section 2 of the Securities Commission Act as:

> . . . debentures, stocks, and shares in a public company or corporation, or bonds of any government or of any body, corporate or unincorporate, and includes any right or option in respect thereof and any interest in unit trust schemes.

The Securities Commission's ultimate responsibility is to protect the investor. Apart from discharging its regulatory functions, the Securities Commission also is obliged by statute to encourage and promote the development of the securities and futures markets in Malaysia. The functions of the Securities Commission under section 15(1) of the Securities Commission Act are to:

- Advise the Minister on all matters relating to the securities and futures industries;
- Regulate all matters relating to securities and futures contracts;
- Ensure that the provisions of the securities laws are complied with;
- Regulate the take-overs and mergers of companies;
- Regulate all matters relating to unit trust schemes;
- Be responsible for supervising and monitoring the activities of any exchange, clearing house, or central depository;
- Take all reasonable measures to maintain the confidence of investors in the securities and futures markets by ensuring adequate protection for such investors;
- Promote and encourage proper conduct among members of the exchanges, clearing houses, central depositories, and all licensed persons;
- Suppress illegal, dishonourable, and improper practices in dealings in securities and trading in futures contracts, and provide investment advice or other services relating to securities or futures contracts;
- Consider and make recommendations for the reform of the law relating to securities and futures contracts;
- Encourage and promote the development of securities and futures markets in Malaysia, including research and training in connection thereto;
- Encourage and promote self-regulation by professional associations or market bodies in the securities and futures industries;
- License and supervise all licensed persons as may be provided for under any securities law; and
- Promote and maintain the integrity of all licensed persons in the securities and futures industries.

The Securities Commission's mission statement is to promote and maintain fair, efficient, secure, and transparent securities and futures markets and to facilitate the orderly development of an innovative and competitive capital market.

Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange

The Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange is a public company limited by guarantee. The Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange is regulated by the Securities Industries Act, which itself directly comes within the purview of the Ministry of Finance in Malaysia.

Pursuant to section 9B of the Securities Industries Act, the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange has a statutory duty to 'ensure, so far as may be reasonably practicable, an orderly and fair market in the securities that are traded through its facilities'. Its statutory duties include:

- Acting in the interest of the public;
- Ensuring that its interests do not conflict with the public interest;
- Ensuring that its members whose shares also are listed on stock exchanges comply with the rules of the relevant stock exchanges;
- Notifying the Securities Commission if it becomes aware of any irregularity of any of its members in meeting its obligations in respect of its business of dealing in securities or breaches of any rules of the exchanges;
- Providing and maintaining, to the satisfaction of the Securities Commission, an adequate and properly equipped premises for the conduct of its business;
- Ensuring that it has competent personnel for the conduct of its business; and
- Providing automated systems with adequate capacity, security arrangements, and facilities to meet emergencies.

As a public company, its membership is determined by the memorandum and articles of association. The Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange has prescribed rules, as set out in its articles of association, which include certain disciplinary provisions allowing it to punish errant members through suspension and fine or other disciplinary actions.

Membership in the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange is limited to a maximum of 200 natural persons and 50 corporations. Corporate members must have shareholders funds in excess of RM 100 million and hold at least 51 per cent equity of a stockbroking company. Foreign nationals or stockbroking houses may be admitted as members of the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange only with the approval of the Minister of Finance.

Registrar of Companies

The Registrar of Companies administers the Companies Act. The principal functions of the Registrar of Companies in securities regulations are mainly in the following areas:

- Regulation of fund-raising activities from the public;
- Allotment of shares to the public;
- Regulation of 'participatory interest', which loosely means rights or interest which allows its holders certain return on investments;
- Compliance with accounting and financial matters; and
- Investigation into affairs of companies.

The chief functions of the Registrar of Companies in securities matters are normally restricted to compliance with prospectus requirements where shares or participatory interests are offered to public or when funds are elicited from the public.

Foreign Investment Committee

In General

The Foreign Investment Committee is a committee whose members are drawn from senior levels of government departments, such as the Special Economic adviser who acts as chairman. Other committee members include the Secretary-General of the Treasury, the Governor of the Central Bank, the Secretary-General of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, the Chairman of the Malaysian Industrial Development Authority, and the Registrar of Companies. The secretariat to the committee is established in the Economic Planning Unit of the Prime Minister's Department.

The Foreign Investment Committee issued guidelines for the regulation of acquisition of assets, mergers, and take-overs of companies and businesses commonly known as 'the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines' on 20 February 1974, following the introduction of the then-New Economic Policy of Malaysia. Malaysia suffered setbacks with racial disturbances and economic woes stemming from the unequal distribution of the economic pie between the Malays (also generally known by the local term 'Bumiputra', which literally means 'son of the soil') and non-Malays.

This also was contributed to by the widening economic gap between foreigners and Malaysians. The government of the day adopted the New Economic Policy with the emphasis on eradicating poverty and restructuring society so as to correct racial economic imbalance.

The New Economic Policy has since lapsed, and the government has indicated that the target for ownership by Malays has improved substantially but has not yet reached its intended goal. The New Economic Policy has now been substituted by the National Economic Policy, where much of the same emphasis of the New Economic Policy remains in place. Hence, the implementation of the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines continues to be an important consideration for foreign investment in Malaysia.

In general, the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines only cover six categories of investments, which are:

- Proposed acquisition by foreign interests of any substantial fixed assets in Malaysia;
- Proposed acquisition of assets or any interests, mergers, and take-overs of companies and businesses in Malaysia by any means, which will result in ownership or control passing to foreign interests;
- Proposed acquisition of 15 per cent or more of the voting power by any one foreign interest or associated group, or by foreign interests in the aggregate of 30 per cent or more of the voting power of a Malaysian company and business;
- Control of Malaysian companies and businesses through any form of joint venture agreement, management agreement, and technical assistance agreement, or other agreements;

- Merger or take-over of any company or business in Malaysia whether by Malaysian or foreign interests; and
- Other proposed acquisition of assets or interests exceeding in value of RM 5 million whether by Malaysian or foreign interests.

The Foreign Investment Committee has, since its establishment, issued several clarification notes regarding detailed application procedures. A company that is in the manufacturing sector may apply for a manufacturing licence under the Industrial Coordination Act (through the Ministry of International Trade and Industry) if its shareholder funds are in excess of RM 2.5 million and it employs more than 75 workers.

The terms of the manufacturing licence would permit 100 per cent foreign ownership if more than 80 per cent of its products were for export. Companies with a manufacturing licence are exempted from applying to the Foreign Investment Committee if they are directly regulated under the Industrial Coordination Act.

In theory, any single foreign interest exceeding 15 per cent, or a combination of foreign interests exceeding 30 per cent in Malaysian-incorporated companies, would require Foreign Investment Committee approval. This would technically apply to all new ventures or start-ups by foreigners. In practice, however, local consultants have invariably advised foreigners to obtain the Foreign Investment Committee approval on a necessity basis as it may be difficult to look for Malay or local partners for start-up companies.

In most instances, a grace period can be obtained from the Foreign Investment Committee to divest the equity of such companies to local partners. Each case will depend on its own merits and the government policy of the day.

Non-Compliance with Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines

The Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines, not being a creature of statute, therefore attract no penal sanctions for non-compliance. In the case of Ho Kok Cheong Sdn Bhd v Lim Kay Tiong,[2] Wan Hamzah J dismissed an argument that an agreement that did not comply with the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines was void and unenforceable as being in contravention of public policy. He held that:

> The [Foreign Investment Committee] Guidelines were issued not pursuant to any power given by law and, in my opinion, they have no force of law but are of advisory character merely. I do not think that non-compliance with the Guidelines can be taken as an act opposed to public policy. The Guidelines reflect the government's political policy, but government's political policy is not public policy.

2 Ho Kok Cheong Sdn Bhd v Lim Kay Tiong [1979] 1 LNS 29.

In David Hey v New Kok Ann Realty Sdn Bhd,[3] the Federal Court of Malaysia commented in dicta (obviously in reference to Wan Hamzah J's comments in the Ho Kok Cheong Sdn Bhd case) that:

> . . . the [Foreign Investment Committee] Guidelines constituted more than a political policy, reflecting as it did an economic policy of which the Court could properly take judicial notice.

In the more recent case of Thong Foo Ching v Shigenori Ono,[4] the Court of Appeal, Siti Norma Yaakob JCA, held that:

> A reading of the guidelines shows that there is no penalty imposed for non-compliance of any of their provisions. From the very nature of the document itself, and its purpose to eradicate poverty by restructuring the Malaysian society so as to correct any racial economic imbalance, at most I would say the [Foreign Investment Committee] Guidelines impose a moral obligation only on those effected to comply with their provisions. In this respect, I agree with Mr Wong that non-compliance or avoidance of the guidelines cannot render any agreement to be invalid or unenforceable. At most, non-compliance can be used as a means of refusing to exercise a discretion, a purely administrative act, as was done by the directors in the David Hey case. On the facts of the appeal before us, I consider that the learned trial judge was correct when she held that avoidance of the guidelines in the manner that was done in this case cannot be held against the respondent as to render the two agreements invalid.

In the Shigenori Ono case, the parties have attempted to avoid the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines by structuring a sale of a real property by breaking up the transaction into a purchase of the real property for a value that is below the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines requirements and another purchase of a shelf company for the balance sum of the agreed price for the real estate.

Interestingly, the Court of Appeal in the Shigenori Ono case went on to hold that the agreements were void as being against public policy because the structuring of the agreements has the effect of evading real property gains tax which the land owner would have to bear and a reduction in the stamp duties which would otherwise have been payable at a higher amount if only one instrument for the purchase of the real property had been effected.

This decision should ring bells of caution for any foreign investors seeking to achieve a tax-advantageous structure to avoid tax. One must always ensure that the structured agreements are not a scheme to evade tax.

Extra-Legal Considerations

Although there are no penal sanctions for non-compliance with the Guidelines, the above cases have indicated that there are some extra-legal consequences that foreigners should be aware of. This could include circumstances whereby the board of directors may refuse to register the transfer of shares that are in contravention of the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines.

To the extent that the court takes judicial notice of the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines, the court will not disturb the board's discretion to refuse a transfer if the board chooses to follow the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines, no matter what the articles of association of the company may say about such matters. This presents a difficult situation to a shareholder who may have acquired beneficial interests in the shares but can never exert its legal interests to have its name registered in the register of members with the company.

Non-compliance with the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines also may carry with it a certain degree of administrative inconvenience. These include:

- Application for expatriate immigration passes for local companies;[5] and
- Acquisition of real property where a 30 per cent foreign-controlled company is deemed to be a foreigner.[6]

If a company seeks to do business with the local government authorities or government-owned corporations, evidence of local participation is normally set out as tender requirements. If local companies require licensing for its business transactions, the licensing authorities may require, as part of its approving procedure, supporting letters from the Foreign Investment Committee.

In view of the pervasive nature of the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines, almost all prudent advisers would include into agreements relating to investments in Malaysia that such agreements are conditional on the Foreign Investment Committee approval being obtained within a certain time frame and on terms satisfactory to the investors within the prevailing investment climate. Non-approval by the Foreign Investment Committee would naturally mean that the agreements are not in force and foreign parties should adopt proper exit mechanisms.

Malaysian Central Depository Berhad

The Malaysian Central Depository Berhad is a subsidiary of the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange. The Malaysian Central Depository Berhad was established in 1990 to provide efficient central clearing and settlement of securities. The Malaysian Central Depository Berhad is the only authorized central depository permitted under the Securities Industry (Central Depositories) Act 1991 for the operation and maintenance of a Central Depository System in respect of shares, stock bonds, debentures, or other securities of any corporation.

5 In most instances, an approval letter from the Foreign Investment Committee is required to support such an application for professional expatriate passes.

6 In some states, in addition to government approval, the relevant land offices also may require letters of approval from the Foreign Investment Committee to support an application to effect a transfer of title in relation to real property to the Malaysian company.

The Central Depository System creates a scripless trading environment for the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange by making it a legal requirement for trading of shares on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange that all physical share certificates of companies listed on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange are immobilized and housed with the Malaysian Central Depository Berhad. Investors use the Central Depository System for safekeeping of shares and for custodian and pledging services. Stockbroking companies are appointed as Authorized Depository Agents to provide Central Depository System facilities and services to the investing public.

All investors, whether individual or corporate, are required to open Central Depository System accounts with an Authorized Depository Agent if they wish to trade in prescribed securities. Commercial and merchant banks, finance companies, certain government institutional investors, insurance companies, unit trusts, and other institutional investors also participate in the Central Depository System as Authorized Direct Members.

The Central Depository System further interacts with other users such as the issuers, registrars, issuing houses, the Securities Commission, and the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange. The first Central Depository System account was opened on 13 November 1992, marking the commencement of the Malaysian Central Depository Berhad's operations.

Kuala Lumpur Options and Financial Futures Exchange

The Kuala Lumpur Options and Financial Futures Exchange is ultimately owned by the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange.

The Kuala Lumpur Options and Financial Futures Exchange is permitted to operate a Options and Financial Exchange pursuant to the Futures Industries Act 1993 to trade in equity derivatives.

Ministry of International Trade and Industry

The Industrial Coordination Act of Malaysia regulates the issuance of manufacturing licences. Such licences are required when companies in the manufacturing sector accumulate a shareholders fund in excess of RM 2.5 million and employ more than 75 workers. The Ministry of International Trade and Industry is the authority for the issuance of manufacturing licences.

The manufacturing licences normally contain conditions relating to equity requirements that are in line with the Foreign Investment Committee Guidelines. Export-oriented industries normally enjoy a higher foreign equity content. On the company being listed, such equity conditions will normally not apply. However, as a pre-listing requirement, the securities of the affected company must have a minimum of 30 per cent Bumiputra content.

It would then appear that there are two authorities that will regulate foreign equity conditions, namely, the Foreign Investment Committee and the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, respectively. To avoid a conflict between the equity conditions which the Foreign Investment Committee and the Ministry of International Trade and Industry may impose, the Foreign Investment Committee issued a clarification note in 1989 that only the Ministry of International Trade and Industry will deal with companies that have manufacturing licences and the Foreign Investment Committee will deal with non-manufacturing companies.

Bank Negara Malaysia

The Bank Negara Malaysia is the Malaysian Central Bank, established pursuant to the Central Bank Act. Bank Negara Malaysia's prior approval must be obtained for dealings in securities affecting financial institutions and insurance companies.

With the onset of the Asian financial crisis in 1997, the Central Bank has assumed a more critical role as the controller of foreign exchange and acts as guardian of the Foreign Exchange Act. When the ringgit came under speculative currency attack, the Malaysian government implemented selective capital controls by declaring all ringgit outside of Malaysia as being without value (if not brought within the country by a fixed grace period), pegging the United States dollar at RM 3.80 and curbing outflow of ringgit unless approval from the Central Bank is obtained.

To a large extent, these capital control procedures have assisted in resolving the financial crisis, but not without heavy criticism and a continuing outcry amidst the changing political profile of the government. Gradually, the capital controls have been relaxed and, for all intents and purposes, the controls exist in name rather than form and currencies are freely repatriable subject to reporting procedures and capital gains levy being imposed.

Foreigners wishing to bring funds into Malaysia will have to open special external accounts in Malaysian banks. The initial funds will be assumed as capital from which any repatriation will be considered a return of the capital. Hence, where the return of capital is higher than the initial funds, there will be a rebutable presumption of capital gains unless accounts holders can prove otherwise.

To discourage short-term speculative money from disrupting the Malaysian economy, a flat rate of 10 per cent on capital gains is levied on any repatriation of profits by foreigners if such funds are moved out of Malaysia within one year of their remittance.

Regulatory Procedures

Trading System

Trading on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange is scripless and fully computerised. The Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange uses the broker front-end system known as the WinSCORE system. WinSCORE is a real-time information dissemination system, and it comprises two major computer systems, namely:

- SCORE (System for Computerised Order Routing and Execution), which is the central computer engine responsible for the matching of all orders; and

- WinSCORE, the broker front-end trading system, which is responsible for credit control management, order and trade routing, and confirmation.

Before a person can trade in the shares of Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange listed companies, he will first need to open a trading account with one of the local stockbroking companies. Trading of shares may only be permitted through a licensed dealer or remisier.

With the implementation of the Central Depository System, all shares are immobilized and lodged with the Malaysian Central Depository Sdn Bhd. This creates a scripless trading environment where each beneficial shareholder will maintain his entitlement to the shares which he owns through a Central Depository System account. Any person can open a Central Depository System account with one of the stockbroking companies which acts as the Authorized Depository Agent of the Malaysia Central Depository Sdn Bhd.

A purchase transaction starts off with an order given by a client to his remisier to buy a specified number of shares of a company at a specified price. The client also will need to quote his Central Depository System account number for Central Depository System counters. This order will be keyed by the remisier into the WinSCORE terminal at the stockbroking company. The order is then relayed through the WinSCORE system to the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange's central computers.

An order confirmation is immediately routed back to the broking company. The order for the purchase of shares will then be matched automatically by the system with a similar order for the sale of the shares at the same price, assuming that it is matchable in the first place. The price at which an order is matched is determined by the market forces of supply and demand through a process of bids and offers.

The price transacted for a buy order will be either at the same price keyed in, or lower if the seller's price is below the buyer's price. For a sale transaction, the price will be the same or higher if the buyer's order is higher. In other words, in every transaction, a security is sold to the highest bidder and purchased from the lowest offeror.

Once the order has been matched, a trade confirmation is printed out at the broker's office providing details such as the original order number, stock number, price and quantity matched, and the counter-party broking company. The remisier in turn confirms with his client that he has bought the specified number of shares and the price at which they were bought.

A sell order is carried out in the same manner. The broking house will then send out contract notes, for buying and selling, to the clients giving details of the transaction, such as brokerage, stamp duty and clearing fees payable, and the cost of the purchase or proceeds of the sale.

The Central Depository System uses a simple book-entry system to keep track of the movement of shares arising from trades effected on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange, and the Central Depository System account of the purchaser will be credited with the shares he bought and, similarly, the Central Depository System account of the seller will be debited for a similar quantity of shares. Sellers must have adequate shares in their Central Depository System accounts by 12:30 pm on the fourth day of the trade.

The buying client will be informed by his remisier that the shares have been transferred to his Central Depository System account. However, the buying client cannot further trade in those shares until he has settled the payment due.

Securities Clearing Automated Network Services Sdn Bhd (SCANS) provides clearing services for stockbroking companies. Only domestic contracts of all securities listed by the Exchange are cleared by the Securities Commission. There is no clearing facility for cross-border trades. To facilitate clearing and settlement, the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange has established a Fixed Delivery and Settlement System (FDSS).

The FDSS which is adopted by the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange is based on a T+5 (transaction date plus five days thereafter) rolling settlement. A fixed rolling settlement system requires that all trades are scheduled for settlement the same number of days after the trade date, which allows trades to settle on all business days of the week. In a T+5 rolling settlement environment, Monday trades are settled by the following Monday, five business days hence; Tuesday's trades are settled by the following Tuesday, and so forth.

A typical transaction for foreign institutional investors would commence with an initiation of a trade by an institutional investor, who can either be a foreign institution or a local institution. If a trade is initiated by a foreign institutional investor, eg, by a foreign fund manager, this can be done either by placing an order with a foreign stockbroker, who will place the order with a local stockbroker, or by placing an order directly with a local stockbroker.

Once an order is executed and matched, the local stockbroker will relay the information to the foreign stockbroker, who will subsequently relay this to the foreign institutional investor. Ensuing this, arrangements shall be made among the parties with regard to the acceptance/delivery of shares and payment under Institutional Settlement Service (ISS).

Shift to Disclosure-Based Regime

The Securities Commission inherited the merit-based regulation regime with its inception in 1993. In 1996, the Securities Commission began a programme to shift to a disclosure-based regulation regime as a basis for the necessary progression of the Malaysian capital market to become more efficient and to develop into a sound and credible market of international standing.

Under the merit-based regulation, the Securities Commission regulates the offering of securities by assessing the investment merits and pricing of the offering. The regulator assumes a paternalistic role in assessing the merit of securities to be issued and interposes itself between those seeking to raise funds and those seeking to invest.

Under the disclosure-based regulation, the onus of assessing the merit of any securities rests with the investors whose money is being put at risk. The investors assess and determine the investment merits of the offering while the Securities Commission regulates the disclosure of material information. The shift to a disclosure-based regulation regime will take be carried out over three phases, as follows:

- Phase 1, 1996–1999, flexible merit-based regulation with enhanced disclosure, due diligence and corporate governance;
- Phase 2, 1999–2000, hybrid merit-based regulation and disclosure-based regulation, with further emphasis on disclosure enhancement, due diligence, and corporate governance, as well as promotion of accountability and self-regulation; and
- Phase 3, 2001 onwards, full disclosure-based regulation, with high standards of disclosure, due diligence, and corporate governance, as well as exercise of self-regulation and display of responsible conduct.

The Securities Commission is currently in Phase 2 of the shift to disclosure- based regulation. During Phase 1, the most notable change was the flexibility allowed for securities under initial public offerings and rights issues to be priced on a market-driven basis and fixed by companies together with their advisers and underwriters. There is increased responsibility on the companies and their investments advisors in relation to this disclosure-based regulation shift. The measures taken by the Securities Commission to date in the shift to full disclosure-based regulation are:

- Amendments to the Securities Commission Act 1993;
- Amendments to the Securities Industry Act 1983;
- Amendments to the Securities Industry (Central Depositories) Act 1991;
- Introduction of, and subsequent amendments to, the Policies and Guidelines on Issue and Offer of Securities (1995, 1997, and 1999);
- Publication of Guidelines on Due Diligence Practices (1996);
- Introduction of the new Malaysian Code on Take-overs and Mergers (1998);
- Introduction of the Securities Commission (Unit Trust Scheme) Regulations 1996 and the Guidelines on Unit Trust Funds (1997, with Practice Notes in 1998 and 1999);
- Establishment of Malaysian Exchange of Securities Dealing & Automated Quotation (MESDAQ), which operates on full disclosure-based regulation principles (1997);
- Establishment of the Financial Reporting Surveillance and Compliance Department within the Commission with the responsibility of monitoring the financial reporting standards of public listed companies (1998); and
- Release of the Corporate Governance Report by the Finance Committee that includes the Malaysian Code on Corporate Governance (1999).

Legal Order and Regulatory Interests

Market Participants

Domestic Exchanges. There are only two domestic exchanges, both of which are regulated by the Securities Commission. The first is the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange and the other is MESDAQ. The Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange maintains two boards, ie, a Main Board and a Second Board.

The Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange was established in 1973 to provide a central market place for buyers and sellers to transact business in the shares, bonds, and various other securities of Malaysian listed companies. A strong link existed between the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange and the Stock Exchange of Singapore at that time as Malaysian-incorporated companies also were listed and traded through the Stock Exchange of Singapore, and vice versa for Singapore-incorporated companies.

A significant milestone for the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange was achieved in 1990 with the de-listing of Singapore-incorporated companies from the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange and vice versa for Malaysian companies listed on the Stock Exchange of Singapore. This move heralded the growth of the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange as a stock exchange with a truly Malaysian identity.

Thereafter, the Singapore Stock Exchange formed the over-the-counter market for such shares. CLOB International was formed in January 1990, an extension of the Central Limit Order Book system of the Stock Exchange of Singapore. CLOB's role diminished with the introduction of the Central Depository System under the Securities Industries (Central Depositary) Act 1991, which saw a mandatory legal requirement to deposit its physical shares with the Malaysian Central Depositary.

In 1998, the Malaysian government made further changes to the Securities Industries Regulations, whereby shares which are not deposited with the Malaysian Central Depositary will not be recognized by the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange. The decision prompted a closure of Malaysian securities that were traded on CLOB. This led to a dispute between the investors on CLOB securities and the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange.

Various proposals were tabled to both the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange and the Singapore Stock Exchange to resolve the impasse. Finally, a proposal from Effective Capital Sdn Bhd, an initiative from a Malaysian private sector, was recognised by both stock exchanges for a voluntary migration plan for the securities from CLOB to the Central Depositary of Malaysia.

The Malaysian Exchange of Securities Dealings and Automated Quotations Berhad (MESDAQ) is an approved stock exchange in Malaysia established pursuant to section 8(2) of the Securities Industries Act 1983 on 6 October 1997. Its primary function is to cater for technology-based companies and companies with strong growth potential but which do not have a profit track record.

MESDAQ is conceived with the intention of making an important capital market contribution to the development of the Multimedia Super Corridor (a high-technology development area where approved applicants enjoy considerable tax benefits and numerous other incentives and guarantees) as envisaged by the Malaysian Prime Minister, Dato Seri Dr Mahathir. In the longer term, the new market can be the platform to provide a NASDAQ-like market for high-technology companies and small companies with growth potential from within the Asian region.

MESDAQ is independent of the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange. It is a wholly member-owned, not-for-profit body. MESDAQ also is a Self-Regulatory Organization (SRO) with statutory responsibilities to regulate its members and to efficiently run the market. In carrying out its duties as an SRO, it must:

- Conduct examinations to ensure minimum standards of professionalism among intermediaries in the market;
- Enforce disciplinary procedures among members to promote high standards of commercial conduct and trade practices;
- Conduct arbitration procedures to settle disputes and controversies;
- Make surveillance of market activities through the use of automated systems; and
- Ensure that market makers fulfil their obligations at all times and, above all, promote investor trust and confidence in the market by way of public disclosure programmes and efficient and transparent information dissemination systems.

The Securities Commission, nevertheless, oversees the operations of the MESDAQ, and it ensures that MESDAQ adopts best practices and enforces compliance of its own rules in accordance with the securities laws of the country.

The criteria for admissions into these boards are governed by the rules of the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange and the Guidelines of the Securities Commission.

Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange Admission Criteria. The requirements for listing of and quotation of securities on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange are governed by the Policies and Guidelines for Offer and Issue of Securities ('the Securities Commission Guidelines'), issued by the Securities Commission, and the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange Listing Requirements.

The Securities Commission Guidelines set out four methods by which a public company may list and quote its shares, either for a going concern or for a successor of a going concern. They are:

- An offer to the public for subscription by or on behalf of an issuer of its own securities;
- An offer to the public by or on behalf of holders or allottees of securities already in issue or agreed to be subscribed;
- The obtaining of subscription for or the sale of securities by an issuer primarily from or to persons selected by the issuer; and
- An offer of a portion of the securities by way of tender subject to a minimum price being prescribed.

In assessing the suitability for listing, the Securities Commission will consider quantitative and qualitative factors. Quantitative requirements reflect the minimum requirements needed to qualify for consideration for listing whereas qualitative factors would reflect the quality of the earnings.

Where a group of companies is seeking listing on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange, at least one company within the group should be able to fulfil the profit track record requirements. If no company qualifies, listing could be based on the strength of the group's pro forma accounts, provided that all companies within the group:

- Are involved in the same or complementary business activities;
- Have common directors; and
- Have common shareholders with controlling shareholding on a collective basis.

A group of Bumiputera-controlled companies applying for listing based on the strength of the group's pro forma accounts would only need comply with the criterion that the companies should be involved in the same or complementary business activities, and not with the other two criteria that there must be common directors and common controlling shareholders. Such a Bumiputera group of companies, to qualify for the flexibilities given, should fulfil the following conditions:

- The group must have a genuine pooling arrangement;
- The company which is the single largest contributor, on an average basis for the past three full financial years, to profits within the pro forma group should have been incorporated and have been operating in the same or complementary business for at least five full financial years prior to making submission to the Securities Commission;
- Each company to be pooled together must have been a Bumiputera- controlled company under the control of the same Bumiputera shareholders with controlling shareholding for at least three full financial years prior to making submission to the Securities Commission (or throughout the life of the company if the company has been incorporated for less than three financial years); and
- The company used as the listing vehicle must, on and subsequent to listing, be a Bumiputera-controlled company.

A company is classified as a Bumiputera-controlled company if either one of the following two criteria is satisfied:

- More than 50 per cent of its equity is owned by Bumiputera shareholders; or
- At least 35 per cent of its equity is owned by an identifiable Bumiputera shareholder and (a) there is no other non-Bumiputera group holding more than 10 per cent of the voting power of the company or, in aggregate, the identifiable non-Bumiputera groups should not own more than 24 per cent of the voting power of the company, (b) the shareholding of the Bumiputera group is not associated directly or indirectly with any non-Bumiputera group; (c) the Bumiputera group is the rightful owner and each Bumiputera party is capable of exercising the voting power attached to his shareholding free of any influence, (d) the chairman, chief executive officer/managing director, and at least 51 per cent of the company's board members are Bumiputera individuals, and (e) at least 51 per cent of the management, professional, and supervisory staff comprise Bumiputera individuals.

The company seeking listing should generally be in a position to sustain its after-tax profit at a reasonable level to support its enlarged share-capital size in the future financial years. The company must be in a healthy financial position with no shortfall in working capital. All financial ratios are expected to be in line with, if not better than, those prevailing in the industry concerned.

Prior to listing, all debts owing to the applicant company by its directors and other companies controlled by the directors and substantial shareholders (with the exception of the applicant company's subsidiary or subsidiaries) must have been settled. The company is encouraged to pay a reasonable rate of dividend for the financial year following listing.

The net tangible assets per share (net of listing expenses), which should exclude any surplus arising from the revaluation of plant, machinery, or equipment, on flotation, may not be less than the par value of the share.

In the case of acquisition by a newly incorporated or dormant holding company of one or more acquiree companies where the holding company is used as the listing vehicle, the company seeking flotation is required to retain a certain level of reserves equivalent to the amount needed to be maintained in the acquiree company's/companies' reserves.

In this case, the holding company would have to restore the net tangible asset value by the equivalent amount of reserves the acquiree company would otherwise need to retain. The retention of reserves could be effected through a share premium account by way of an upward revision of the price of the rights issue shares or consideration shares to be issued for acquisitions (if any). 'Reserves' for the above purpose comprise retained profits and share premium only.

Where the applicant company is a newly incorporated or dormant company which is to be the investment-holding company under a rationalisation exercise prior to listing, the purchase consideration for the acquisition of those companies by the investment-holding company shall generally be based on the net tangible assets of the acquiree companies, subject to the retention of reserves above.

Where the acquirer company is in operation and has its own track record, the shares of the acquirer company may be valued based on the earnings method. The shares of the acquiree company also may be valued based on the earnings method, provided that the acquiree company is in operation and has its own track record.

The Securities Commission places great emphasis on the quality of the companies going for listing. These qualitative factors indicate strengths of the company and include the following factors:

- Business dynamics — Quality management, diversity of sources of supply or markets, skilled workforce, low staff turnover, technological edge, efficient operations and production processes, capabilities in research and development, capabilities to diversity into synergistic activities, and existence of long-term contracts;
- Competition dynamics — Good quality and range of products or services, focused target market and promotional activities, effective marketing and distribution channels, sizeable market share and good market ranking, competitive pricing, and ability to withstand an economic downturn; and

- Industry dynamics — Inelastic and unsaturated demand, satisfactory market size, stable industry, profitable industry, encouraging past and future growth trends and prospects, high barriers to entry and exit, and minimal threat of substitute products or services.

The company seeking listing or the qualifying company, as the case may be, must have a fully operational business which is independent and autonomous. Generally, the principal or sole asset of the company seeking listing should not be an investment in another listed company.

The company seeking listing or the qualifying company, as the case may be, should have had continuity of substantially the same management for at least three full financial years prior to making submission to the Securities Commission. In determining whether or not this requirement has been met, the Securities Commission will have to be satisfied that, throughout the relevant period:

- The current executive directors have had direct management responsibilities for, and played a significant role in, the company's core business;
- The senior management of the company has not changed materially; and
- The company has been under the control of the same shareholders with controlling shareholding.

Where this requirement has not been met, the promoters of the company seeking listing should demonstrate to the Securities Commission the expertise and capability of management in ensuring the effective operation of the company.

No material conflict of interest between the company and its directors, promoters, or substantial shareholders should exist. Where a company has, or is likely to have, a direct or indirect relationship with a substantial shareholder or a shareholder who has influence on the management of the company or who has an interest in a business which competes, or is likely to compete, with the company's business, which relationship could result in a conflict of interest between the company's obligations towards that shareholder and its duties to the general body of shareholders, the Securities Commission may regard the company as unsuitable for listing. As such, the nature, character, and extent of the relationship and conflict of interest must be declared to the Securities Commission.

Any transactions between the company (or its subsidiaries) and any related parties must be based on terms and conditions which are not unfavourable to the company.

A company seeking listing should not be vulnerable to specific factors or events, eg, dependence on a handful of customers. The Securities Commission may regard a company as unsuitable for listing where it is found to be thus vulnerable. The degree of vulnerability of the company must be analysed thoroughly and the analysis should cover business and financial risks involved and the impact on the company, as well as the measures that have been or will be taken to mitigate or minimize the risks.

The company must be shown to be contributing to the overall economic growth of the country and the achievement of government objectives. Such contribution would include usage of the country's primary commodities, employment and training of local management and workforce, involvement in value-added activities and provision of linkages to other sectors of the economy and catalyst for growth in other sectors.

Changes in accounting policies merely for the purpose of meeting the profit track record requirement or projecting a higher profit to inflate the price of securities under a public offering would normally not be allowed except where such changes are made in accordance with the reasons as stipulated in the approved accounting standards. The Securities Commission may regard a company resorting to such ploys as unsuitable for listing.

The listing of a holding company will generally not be allowed if one or more of its subsidiary or associated companies is already listed on a stock exchange and these already-listed companies collectively account for 50 per cent or more of the holding company's consolidated after-tax profits and/or net tangible assets in respect of each of the past three full financial years or five full financial years, as the case may be. Listing of a holding company may be considered if the following conditions are satisfied:

- The holding company should have its own autonomous business and should on its own (without its listed subsidiary/associated companies) meet the Securities Commission's requirements for listing; and
- The after-tax profits and/or net tangible assets of its unlisted subsidiary or associated companies account for more than 50 per cent of the consolidated after-tax profits and/or net tangible assets of the group in respect of each of the past three full financial years or five full financial years, as the case may be.

The listing of subsidiary or associated companies of a listed holding company could be considered under the following circumstances:

- The after-tax profits and/or net tangible assets of the subsidiary/associated company to be listed should not account for more than 50 per cent, respectively, of the consolidated after-tax profits and/or net tangible assets of the group in respect of each of the past three full financial years or five full financial years, as the case may be, or, where the company was acquired by the listed holding company for a period which is shorter than three full financial years or five full financial years, as the case may be, each of the years in which the company becomes a subsidiary or associated company;
- The listed holding company (excluding the subsidiary or associated company to be listed and existing listed subsidiary or associated companies) should have its own autonomous business and should on its own meet the Securities Commission's requirements for listing as if it were a new company seeking listing;
- The applicant subsidiary or associated company should be involved in a particular business of its own (with profits able to meet the Securities Commission's criteria for listing with respect to profit track record and future profit performance);
- The relationship between the subsidiary or associated company seeking listing and the other companies within the group, including the holding company, should not give rise to intra-group competition or conflict of interest situation; and

- The subsidiary or associated company to be listed should demonstrate that it is not overly dependent on the other companies within the group, including the holding company, in terms of its operations, including purchases and sales of goods, management, and management policies and finance.

The Securities Commission will not entertain adjustments made to past accounts for the purpose of meeting chain-listing requirements (such as adjustments to expenses, even if the expenses are to be actually reimbursed in the future). In this regard, the Securities Commission does not want to encourage the practice of making good a past shortfall by actual injection of cash in the future.

Firm underwriting arrangements must be in place before the offering of securities is made to the public. In this regard, the underwriting arrangements should be made for the securities, other than those securities in respect of which allocations have been made to certain parties, such as Bumiputera investors, directors, and employees, or for which certain shareholders have given written irrevocable undertakings to subscribe.

In addition, the corporate adviser making the application should be the managing underwriter for the issue and be prepared to be the sole underwriter in the event that the other co-underwriters are not able to underwrite. The full list of underwriters, together with their respective commitments, must be submitted by the adviser to the Securities Commission for its records, and, should there be any subsequent changes, the Securities Commission should be informed immediately.

A moratorium will be imposed on the disposal of shares held by the promoters in Main Board applicant companies involved in property development, construction, services, or specialized activities, and those in all Second Board applicant companies, whereby:

- The affected promoters will not be allowed to sell, transfer, or assign their shareholdings amounting to 45 per cent of the nominal issued and paid-up capital for one year from the date of admission of the company to either the Main Board or Second Board;[7] and
- In the case where the affected promoter is a private holding company, every shareholder of the private holding company (if an individual) or ultimate individual shareholder (if the shareholder of the private holding company is another private holding company) must give an undertaking that he/she will not sell, transfer or assign his shareholding in the related private holding company for the period as stipulated above.

A company listed on the Second Board could, subject to approval of the Securities Commission, be considered for transfer to the Main Board provided that the company has been listed for at least three years and meets the requirements of listing on the Main Board pertaining to issued and paid-up capital, shareholding spread and historical and future profit performance.

7 Thereafter, such promoters are allowed to sell, transfer, or assign only up to a maximum of one-third per annum (on a straight-line basis) of their respective shareholdings under moratorium.

A company listed on the Second Board which has been involved in reverse take-over/back-door listing exercises could only be allowed for transfer to the Main Board on the new injected assets, businesses or interests meeting the profit track record requirement of the Main Board or on the original core asset and/or business of the company meeting the normal requirements for transfer to the Main Board. Exceptions could, however, be given to those cases involving infrastructure projects and other government privatised projects.

MESDAQ Admission Criteria. MESDAQ is subject to all existing securities laws in Malaysia. In addition, the Ministry of Finance may prescribe new regulations which are peculiar to the MESDAQ market. The MESDAQ market operates in a full disclosure-based environment. The Securities Commission does not evaluate the merits or demerits of each proposal submitted by the company in its application for any new issue or offer of securities to the public.

Instead, the Securities Commission, as a regulator, will focus on issues of investor protection by ensuring that all information disclosed is adequate, accurate, and timely. Non-compliance with proper disclosure will attract severe penalties.

The MESDAQ must, by law, act in the public interest and, should there be a conflict between such interest with any interest that is required to be served under the corporation law (eg, interest of shareholders), the interest of the public will prevail. It is a 'higher risk' market because the companies admitted do not have much of an operational history and, in the extreme, may not even have commenced business operations.

The market operates under a full disclosure-based regulatory environment. Market intermediaries, such as brokers, advisers, and underwriters, must assume new roles and responsibilities which are distinct from the main market, the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange, as well as higher standards of compliance and disclosure. Market intermediaries are held to higher standards of sales practices and a stringent application of the 'know-your-client-and-product' rule.

Participants in the market are not limited to the existing stockbroking industry. The trading system incorporates elements of both order-driven and quote-driven systems.

The admission criteria is less stringent than that for the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange. Only one company is thus far listed, ie, Supercomal Technologies Berhad. However, several applications were being processed by MESDAQ. The Securities Commission approves listing of companies on MESDAQ based on fulfilment of both quantitative and qualitative criteria.

The applicant company should be involved in a single business activity or in a set of substantially related and complementary business activities. MESDAQ has identified priority technology areas covering the design, development, production, manufacturing, and/or assembly of 12 technology-based activities. These areas include:

- Advanced electronics and information technology;
- Automation and flexible manufacturing systems;
- Biotechnology;

- Bioconversion;
- Genetic engineering;
- Healthcare;
- Electro-optics, non-linear optics, and optoelectronics;
- Advanced materials;
- Energy;
- Aerospace;
- Transportation; and
- Emerging technology and services, such as education and training relating to application of smart technologies.

Although emphasis is given to technology companies, this does not exclude non-technology companies with high growth potential from seeking a listing on MESDAQ.

If the company is involved in technology-based activities, it does not require a minimum period of business operations or a profit record. If the company is not involved in technology-based activities, it must have generated operating revenue for at least 12 months at the time of seeking admission. However, no profit track record is required.

The company's minimum issued and paid-up share capital should not be less than RM 2 million. The promoters must hold at least 51 per cent of the issued and paid-up shares of the company on admission to MESDAQ and hold at least 45 per cent of the issued paid-up shares of the company for one year after the company's admission to MESDAQ.

MESDAQ places great emphasis on the following qualitative elements:

- Strength and integrity of the promoters and management;
- Business model and prospects;
- Research and development capabilities;
- Conflict of interests; and
- National policy.

There is a strong emphasis that companies seeking MESDAQ listing must adhere to the spirit of national interest. The applicant company should comply with the National Policy as outlined in the MESDAQ Listing Rules as follows:

- Location of assets — The company must have more than 50 per cent of its assets and operations situated in Malaysia at the time of admission to MESDAQ. This means either more than 50 per cent of the total assets of the company is situated in Malaysia based on the latest audited accounts or revenue of the company from operations in Malaysia should account for more than 50 per cent of its total revenue based on the latest audited accounts.
- Utilization of proceeds — The company must use at least 70 per cent of the funds raised in the initial public offering in Malaysia and have a definite plan and time frame to use the funds raised.

- National Development Policy — Unless exempted by the relevant governmental authorities, the company must comply with the National Development Policy, as follows: (a) if it has a profit record of three consecutive years with an aggregate after-tax profit of a minimum of RM 6 million on admission to MESDAQ, the company must have a minimum of 30 per cent Bumiputera equity participation, and (b) if the company does not have the profit record as stated above at the time of admission, the company must give a written undertaking in the application to fully comply with the National Development Policy requirement within five years after admission, or within one year after it has achieved the profit record, whichever is earlier.

The operational framework of MESDAQ is different from the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange. In a new market like MESDAQ, it is anticipated that confidence in the market will be low unless the secondary market for the shares is active. Market intermediaries have been introduced with the aim of ensuring that only quality companies are quoted and that the secondary market will have some form of liquidity.

MESDAQ has prescribed rules for each market intermediary and, generally, all members of the market brokers may, in addition to their dealing functions, be allowed to assume one or more of the following roles subject to suitability criteria, which include, among others, capitalisation, financial health, and experience and expertise of their employees. Brokers who assume more than one role will have to maintain appropriate 'Chinese Wall' procedures within the company to prevent the flow of classified information between the dealers, advisers and underwriters, sponsors, and market makers. The rules may be summarised as follows:

- Advisers and underwriters — All potential issuers will have to seek the services of an adviser who also will act as an underwriter. The adviser is responsible for ensuring that all admission criteria and disclosure requirements have been complied with in an initial public offer application, including coordination of the due diligence exercise and the lodgement of applications and prospectuses. In performing its duties, the adviser will have to undertake extensive due diligence examinations. There are severe penalties for failure to provide proper disclosure or deliberate withholding of material information. The adviser is expected to undertake firm commitments. The adviser will only make such firm commitments when he is certain that the offering is of a quality that he can easily sell to investors at a premium. Therefore, suitability judgements on the prospects of the issuer will, in a sense, be made by the adviser when he decides to bring the company to the market. To ensure that the adviser has a continuing responsibility to the clients to whom he will sell the shares, the adviser is required to provide updates and due diligence information associated with the offering for at least one year after the initial public offer is completed.
- Sponsor — All companies quoted on MESDAQ are required to secure and maintain the services of a sponsor for at least five years after the listing. A sponsor's responsibilities include promoting the company to investors by providing research materials, ensuring that the company complies with market rules and on-going disclosure requirements, and acting as the point of contact between the company and the investor and the company and MESDAQ. A company without a sponsor during the obligatory period will have to find a replacement within a specified time period, failing which the trading of the company's shares will be suspended and subsequently not allowed to remain quoted on MESDAQ.

- Market maker — Each company listed on MESDAQ must appoint a minimum number of designated market makers for its securities. The designated market makers are required to ensure that there are continuous markets in its securities. A market maker must provide continuous two-way quotes in counter for which he has been designated to make markets. These quotes must be for a minimum total order of two board lots each side and must be within the maximum spread prescribed by MESDAQ.

Transborder Electronic Trading Systems

The Securities Commission is a member of an international Task Force on cross-border securities settlement. The Task Force is a joint initiative of the Technical Committee of the International Organisation of Securities Commissions (IOSCO) and the Committee on Payment and Settlement Systems (CPSS) of the Bank for International Settlements.

The Securities Commission is the only emerging market securities regulator on the Task Force. The latest IOSCO-CPSS Task Force will issue recommendations for the design, operation, and oversight of securities settlement systems, covering both individual systems and the cross-border linkages between them. It also will promote the implementation of measures that can reduce risks, increase efficiency, and provide adequate safeguards for investors.

With the rapid growth in the volume of crossborder securities transactions, many trading systems are in a process of international integration or providing direct access on a crossborder basis to market participants. Settlement systems have much significance in facilitating the minimization of risks for the clearance and settlement of securities transactions, and thereby enhancing the stability of the domestic and international financial system.

Off-Market Transactions

Off-market transactions are defined as 'direct business transactions' in accordance with the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange rules. Direct business transactions are permitted only within a price variance of 15 per cent of the volume-weighted average price of the securities of the preceding trading day or the last trading day in which trades were conducted.

Where securities are first traded and where information of volume-weighted average price is not available (such as suspended counters resume trading on first day of uplifting of suspension; or where securities from an initial public offer are first traded; or where securities are first traded on an ex-entitlement basis or after a capital distribution or subdivision or consolidation or reclassification or substitution), direct business transactions are not permitted until the volume-weighted average price is established.

In the event direct business transaction should be effected outside of the 15 per cent price variance of the volume-weighted average price, prior notification to the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange of at least 10 trading days must be given before those transactions could be effected. The form of notification is by way of a statutory declaration supported by relevant documents specifying:

- Details of the buyer and seller;
- Number of shares involved and price;
- Basis on which the price was agreed;
- Specific reason for the transaction;
- Proposed date of the intended transaction; and
- Details of compliance with the Malaysian Code of Take-over and Mergers 1998 or any other directive as may be applicable to the transaction.

All statutory declarations carry the penalty of perjury if information contained therein is not correct. The Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange may issue specific directions on the parties to adhere to the price range of 15 per cent of the volume-weighted average price. If the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange does not reply by then, parties are free to carry out the direct business transaction.

Parties in breach of the direct business transaction may be levied with a penalty to pay for the difference between the aggregate permissible value and the aggregate transacted value of the direct business transaction. Direct business transactions are not permissible for suspended counters.

Securities

National Treatment and Reciprocity

It is the government policy to favour Malaysian interest over foreigners and Bumiputra interest over non-Bumiputra interests in line with the National Economic Policy.

As a general trend, foreign interests at the time of listing would generally be limited to 30 per cent, and approval from the Foreign Investment Committee would be required if foreign interests exceed that amount.

Issuer Requirements

Much of what is seen of the Foreign Investment Committee requirements stems from the governmental policy to eradicate poverty and to structure a more balanced economic spread between the various races in Malaysia; in particular, there is an emphasis to elevate the economic strength of the Bumiputras. To this end, most listing requirements of companies in Malaysia would require at least a 70 per cent allocation to Malaysian interests of which at least 30 per cent allocation of shares must be to eligible Bumiputras.

Based on general Foreign Investment Committee policy, foreigners are generally permitted to hold the balance 30 per cent at the point of listing. In many cases, foreigners can apply for higher percentages of shareholding, but each case will be considered on its own merits and justified with economic arguments as to why there could not be an adherence to the general policies of the Foreign Investment Committee.

Securities Requirements

There are no restrictions on the types of securities a foreign interest can purchase subject only to the rules of the Foreign Investment Committee as mentioned earlier. However, acquisitions of foreign securities and assets by a Malaysian company pose different risks from those associated with acquisitions of domestic securities and assets.

Malaysian public companies are required to seek the Securities Commission's approval in purchasing foreign securities or assets to ensure that only foreign securities and assets which are of quality and fairly valued are acquired and that the shareholders of the Malaysian companies and the investing public at large are appropriately and adequately informed of the details of and risks involved in such acquisitions.

Cash acquisitions of substantial foreign securities and assets[8] require the approval of the public company's shareholders. A public company should not raise funds through the issue of securities for the purpose of refinancing borrowings utilised for cash acquisitions within a period of two years from the completion date of the acquisitions, unless such acquisitions have been referred to and considered by the Securities Commission.

Additional approvals from the Foreign Investment Committee, where applicable, must be sought in respect of the resultant foreign equity ownership of the acquirer company, and the approval of Bank Negara Malaysia, where applicable, must be sought in respect of the remittance and repatriation of funds.

Prospectus Requirements

In General. All public offerings must be supported by an approved prospectus which is to be lodged with the Registry of Companies. The contents of the prospectus are normally incorporated into the submission to the Securities Commission pursuant to section 32 of the Securities Commission Act prior to it being approved by the Registrar of Companies.

The accuracy and completeness of the prospectus cannot be undermined in view of section 32B the Securities Commission Act where the applicant and its advisers would all be guilty of an offence which carries a maximum RM 3 million fine or 10 years' imprisonment, or both, if the contents are inaccurate or there are material omissions. A prospectus should have a summary fact sheet which summarises all salient features of the offering, such as the following:

- Ownership and management of the company;
- Corporate information of the company;

8 'Substantial' relates to a situation where the purchase consideration is more than 25 per cent of the public company's net assets.

- Financial information of the company;
- Business and financial risks of the company and the industry; and
- Prospects of the company and the industry.

A qualifying statement must be included in the prospectus disclosing that the approval of the Securities Commission shall not be taken to indicate that the Securities Commission recommends the proposal, and that investors should rely on their own evaluation to assess the merits and risks of any investment.

A company approved for listing and quotation on the Main Board is required to publish in full its prospectus and application forms in a widely circulated Bahasa Malaysia newspaper and English newspaper. A company approved for listing and quotation on the Second Board, although not required to advertise the full prospectus in a newspaper, is nevertheless required to publish an advertisement of a summary of the prospectus in a widely circulated Bahasa Malaysia newspaper and English newspaper. The company is expected to make available to the public a reasonable number of prospectuses and application forms commensurate with the size of the offering.

Qualification in the Prospectus. The prospectus for a public offering should state prominently that no application has been made by the company for the listing of and quotation for its securities on a stock exchange.

A qualifying statement should be included in the prospectus for the public offering disclosing that the approval of the Securities Commission shall not be taken to indicate that the Securities Commission recommends the proposal and that the listing of and quotation for the securities of the company will only be granted on application by the company and after the Securities Commission has been fully satisfied that the company has met all the criteria as set out in the Securities Commission Guidelines.

Primary Offers of Securities Via the Internet. Arising from numerous queries from offerors or potential offerors who are based outside of Malaysia about the possibility of their offer of securities via the Internet falling within the ambit of Malaysian securities laws, the Securities Commission has issued a statement on 18 August 1999 to clarify the matter.

The Securities Commission is of the view that an offering of securities on the Internet that is accessible within Malaysia is an offer that falls within the provisions of section 32 of the Securities Industry Act. Hence, the approval of the Securities Commission must first be sought if the offer is accessible within Malaysia or if acceptances from within Malaysia have not been expressly excluded. However, foreigners can structure their offering to exclude the operation of section 32 by incorporating the following measures:

- Not publishing the offer or invitation in websites that are frequently visited by, or draws the attention of, a person in Malaysia, eg, offering on websites that have '.my' in their address or that are offering content relevant to a person in Malaysia;

- Ensuring that the offering does not contain information specifically relevant to a person in Malaysia, eg, tax rates or prices which are presented in Malaysian currency;
- Designing or taking steps to automatically exclude and/or reject any subscriptions made by a person from Malaysia and to have a monitoring system on applications made by such person, eg, an offeror may programme its subscription system in such a manner to automatically reject any applications for subscription from a person in Malaysia where the telephone, address, and postal addresses indicate that they are from Malaysia;
- Restricting the access of information of the offering so that a person in Malaysia is unable to view documents that are related to the offering; and
- Incorporating a clear jurisdictional disclaimer into the on-line prospectus or offer document, stating that the offer is not intended to be available in Malaysia or to any person in Malaysia or which clearly states at which jurisdictions the offer is targeted in a list that excludes Malaysia.

Foreigners should be advised that the above measures are not exhaustive, and care must be exercised to ensure compliance with section 32 of the Securities Industries Act in view of the heavy penalty involved.

Corporate Governance

In General. While the majority of Malaysia public-listed corporations exhibit high level of good corporate governance, Malaysia has, in the past, seen a fair share of corporate abuses. These generally concerned the lack of transparency in related party transactions and incidences of conflicting decision making by corporate leaders which generally sacrificed corporate interest over their own. Asset shifting, as well as blatant and abusive conflict-of-interest transactions without proper disclosure by directors and coupled with poor financial management by directors, are great contributing factors.

Code of Conduct. In 1998, a high-level committee was established by the Ministry of Finance to look into establishing a framework for corporate governance and setting best practices for the industry. The committee has submitted a report on this issue and put up a suggested Code of Conduct in respect of corporate governance. Set out as follows are extracts of the report, which has been adopted by the private sector.

Corporate governance has been defined in the report to mean:

> . . . the process and structure used to direct and manage the business and affairs of the company towards enhancing business prosperity and corporate accountability with the ultimate objective of realising long term shareholder value, while taking into account the interests of other stakeholders.

The committee has suggested a Code of Corporate Governance as an initiative of the private sector to lead a review and establish reforms of standards of corporate governance at a micro level. It is based on the belief that, in some aspects of corporate regulation, self-regulation is preferable and the standards developed by those involved may be more acceptable and thus more enduring. Additionally, it allows for a more constructive and flexible response to raise standards in corporate governance, as opposed to the more black-and-white response engendered by statute or regulation.

A particularly important feature of the Code of Corporate Governance is the aspirational and evolutionary way in which codes influence the expectations of society that are eventually reflected in the law. The attention generated on corporate governance issues has already had an impact on evolving judicial interpretations of directors' duties internationally.

The recommendations set out in the Code are premised on a prescriptive approach to corporate governance. The proposed Code sets out four forms of recommendations, as described below:

- Principles — Part 1 sets out broad principles of good corporate governance for Malaysia. The objective of principles is to allow companies to apply these flexibly and with common sense to the varying circumstances of individual companies. Companies will be required by the Listing Requirements to include in their annual report a narrative statement of how they apply the relevant principles to their particular circumstances. This is to secure sufficient disclosure so that investors and others can assess companies' performance and governance practices and respond in an informed way.
- Best Practices in Corporate Governance — Part 2 sets out best practices for companies. It identifies a set of guidelines or practices intended to assist companies in designing their approach to corporate governance. While compliance with these guidelines is not mandated, companies will be required, as a provision of the Listing Requirements, to explain any circumstances justifying departure from such best practices.
- Exhortations to Other Participants — Part 3 is not addressed to listed companies, but to investors and auditors to enhance their role in corporate governance. These are purely voluntary.
- Explanatory Notes and 'Mere Best Practices' — Part 4 provides explanatory notes to the principles and best practices set out in Parts 1 and 2 and exhortations set out in Part 3. Part 4 also sets out best practices directed at listed companies that do not require companies to explain circumstances justifying departure from best practices, 'mere best practices'.

Due Diligence. In preparing the information to be disclosed to the public, directors of public companies must undertake a due diligence exercise to verify and ensure that the information to be released is accurate and timely.

Due diligence is a process by which inquiries are conducted to ensure that information to be disclosed is true, sufficient, and timely. Due care also must be given to ensure that there is no omission of material information.

Material information is information which would reasonably be expected by rational investors to facilitate their investment decisions. Information that can affect the trading activities and prices of the company's securities must be released immediately. The onus then lies with the investor to consider and weigh the information provided before making decisions.

The Securities Commission has imposed high standards of responsibility on promoters, directors, and advisers in respect of disclosures by amending section 32B of the Securities Commission Act. Any of such parties that submits any application or disclosures to the Securities Commission must ensure that the application or disclosures does not contain any false or misleading information or omission of material information.

A person who contravenes section 32B the Securities Commission Act shall be guilty of an offence and shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding RM 3 million or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 10 years, or both. A complete statutory defence has been accorded to persons who have carried out a proper due diligence exercise but are still unable at the material time to unveil the inaccuracies or misleading information at the date of submission. Needless to say, parties must immediately inform the Securities Commission of any such inaccuracies or omission as soon as they become aware of the same.

The Securities Commission released a publication on Due Diligence Practices in August 1996 and a further joint publication in 1999 on 'Due Diligence Guidelines on Submission of Proposals to the Securities Commission'. These practices and guidelines are not exhaustive and clients are advised to seek proper legal representation in carrying out any due diligence exercise.

With the emphasis by the Securities Commission on a disclosure-based regime, companies and their directors and promoters are expected to provide full, accurate, and timely disclosure of information to investors, to adhere to good practices of corporate governance, and to have a deeper understanding of the Securities Commission's policies, rules, and regulations. Directors of public companies are expected to discharge their duties with greater integrity and due care, bearing in mind the criminal liabilities imposed on persons convicted of violating the securities laws. Ultimately, they are liable for any breach of the securities laws and regulations.

Registration of Public Offerings

Before a company can officially make offers to the public, it must comply with the Securities Commission Guidelines, the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange listing requirements, and the Companies Act requirements of filing the prospectus. The first step towards a public offering is to obtain the approval of the proposal for public offer from the Securities Commission. The Securities Commission serves as the main regulator for the approval of public offerings.

The Securities Commission has statutory power, under section 32 of the Securities Commission Act, to approve any approval for public offerings. In almost all cases, simultaneous applications also may be made in respect of other regulatory authorities, such as:

- The Foreign Investment Committee, for equity ownership structure;
- The Bank Negara Malaysia, where the proposal involves private debt securities or such other instruments regulated by the Central Bank;
- The Director-General of Insurance, where the applicant company is in the insurance business;

- The Ministry of International Trade and Industry, where the applicant company comes within the purview of the Industrial Coordination Act;
- The Economic Planning Unit of the Prime Minister's Department, where it involves a privatisation of a government-owned enterprise; and
- The Ministry of Finance, where it involves financial institutions or stock broking firms.

On the approval of the various relevant authorities and the Securities Commission, a prospectus must be prepared and lodged with the Registrar of Companies before the offer can be made to the public at large.

The form and content of the prospectus must be approved by the Registrar of Companies pursuant to section 37 of the Companies Act. Failure to comply with section 37 will attract a maximum penalty of RM 100,000 or five years' imprisonment or both on conviction. A prospectus is not required if the offer is not made to the public.[9]

Registration of Placements

Chapter 15 of the Securities Commission Guidelines sets out the criteria for private placement. A company undertaking a private placement exercise is required to restore Bumiputera equity participation that may be diluted following the new issue under the private placement within one year of the issue.

Private placements must be approved by the Securities Commission. An application for private placement of new shares should provide for the basis for pricing of the shares, proposed utilisation of proceeds, the company's three-year financial record, underwriting commitment (if any), and identities and background of placees (including ultimate beneficiaries).

Any private placement should not exceed 10 per cent of the issued and paid-up capital of the company before the new issue. The shares placed with any single party should not exceed 20 per cent of total placement. However, there are restrictions as to the placees. The following category of persons are not permitted to be placees of a private issue:

- Directors or existing shareholders of the issuing company or their associates, whether in their own names or through nominees;
- Nominee companies, unless the names of the ultimate beneficiaries are disclosed; or
- Connected clients of the adviser, lead broker, or any distributor.

'Connected client' means:

- A director or substantial shareholder of the adviser, lead broker, or distributor;
- The spouse, parent, child (including adopted child and step-child), brother, sister, or spouse of the child, brother, or sister of any individual above;

9 Companies Act, s 4(6).

- A person in his capacity as trustee of a private or family trust (other than a pension scheme), the beneficiaries of which include any person above;
- A close relative of any person above whose account is managed by the adviser, lead broker, or distributor in pursuance of a discretionary managed portfolio agreement;
- A body corporate which is associated with those indicated above; or
- A company which is a member of the same group of companies as the adviser, lead broker, or distributor.

The Securities Commission also has set out certain requirements to prevent manipulation of private placements. These requirements are that:

- The placee should be independent and not under the control or influence of any of the issuer's directors and substantial shareholders;[10]
- Not more than 20 per cent of the total placement may be allocated to discretionary managed portfolios under the management of the same portfolio manager;
- The adviser, lead broker, or any distributor may not, under normal circumstances, retain any material amount of the shares being placed for his own account;[11]
- The issuer should issue a prospectus in connection with a placement, if deemed necessary;
- The issuer should disclose the purpose of the issue;
- The issue should be priced based on the weighted average market price of the shares for the past five days prior to placement, with a discount of not more than 10 per cent, if deemed appropriate; and
- Where approval of shareholders is sought, the Securities Commission may require that the major or controlling shareholders of the issuer abstain from voting.

In all instances, the maximum foreign interest arising from a private placement, together with any existing shareholding which the foreign interest may have should not exceed 30 per cent except with prior approval of the Foreign Investment Committee (see text, above).

Registration of Secondary Trade

Trading on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange is scripless, and participants in the secondary trading market need to open Central Depository System accounts with authorised depositary agents, namely, the stock broking houses, before they could trade. With the amendments to the section 30 of the Securities Industries Act, no trading for account of undisclosed principals may be allowed except for approved authorised nominees (see text, below).

10 However, if the Securities Commission is satisfied as to the independence of the placee, a placement may be made to a placee falling within certain categories, on the application of the issuer.

11 Where there is sufficient demand from investors, the adviser, lead broker, or any distributor may not retain more than five per cent of his respective portion of the total placing.

Share movement of account holders can, therefore, be monitored with precision and on a timely basis by the authorities. For the time being, there is not a requirement for registration of any secondary trade except where account holders accumulate more than two per cent of the total issued capital of any company would be deemed to be a substantial shareholder pursuant to section 4(6) of the Companies Act.

Once a person becomes or ceases to be a substantial shareholder, that person is obliged to inform the secretary of the company concerned and the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange of this change in status (see text, below).

Periodic Disclosure

In General

It is the responsibility of directors of public companies to ensure that all material information required by the public to make investment decisions is provided accurately, in full, and on a timely basis. In line with the shift from a merit-based system to a disclosure-based system, higher standards have been imposed on the directors and their advisors to make proper, accurate and timely disclosures.

Investors rely on available information when deciding where and when they should invest their money. There is a need for information when new securities are offered in the primary market. There also is a need for information when dealing in securities already traded in the secondary market. Disclosure of information, therefore, benefits investors by facilitating them to make investment decisions.

Companies intending to offer securities to the public are required to fully disclose information about the affairs of the companies and the securities which are being offered, in the offering documents or prospectuses. The Securities Commission Guidelines has set out a set of disclosure rules which are to:

- Make immediate public disclosure of all material information concerning its affairs;
- Release material information to the public in a manner designed to achieve the widest possible dissemination;
- Make periodic announcements of the status of any memorandum of understanding, where such memorandum of understanding has been entered into with another party; and
- Refrain from promotional disclosure activity beyond that necessary to enable the public to make informed investment decisions, in an attempt to influence prices of securities.

Pursuant to the amendments to the Securities Industries Act in 1998, additional powers[12] were conferred on the Securities Commission to require any person to disclose to the 12 Securities Industries Act, s 99A.

Securities Commission, in relation to any dealing in securities, whether or not the dealing was carried out on another person's behalf:

- The name of, and particulars sufficient to identify, the person from whom, through whom, or on whose behalf, the securities were dealt with;
- The nature of the instructions given to that person in relation to the dealing in securities;
- The particulars of the dealing in securities, including (a) particulars of the securities that were dealt with and (b) particulars of consideration given or received for the dealing in securities or any other transaction related to the dealing in securities; and
- Any other information in the possession of the person as the Securities Commission may specify as deemed expedient for the due administration of the Securities Industries Act.

Refusal or failure to comply such request is an offence that attracts a maximum fine of RM 1 million or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 10 years, or both.

In addition, chief executives and directors of listed corporations are compelled to make disclosures of any interest in securities of the listed corporation or any associated corporation of the listed corporation[13] or any dealings in respect of those securities. Listed corporations also are required to submit to the Securities Commission a copy of their audited annual accounts within two weeks from the date of their annual general meeting and its interim and periodic financial reports immediately after figures are available.

Any change in the registered or business address of the listed corporation and changes to the chief executive or any of the directors of the listed corporation must be notified to the Securities Commission within two weeks of the occurrence of such a change or event.

Foreign Issuers with Primary Admission

The listing of foreign-based companies with substantial Malaysian interests is governed by the Guidelines for the Public Offering of Securities of Foreign-Based Companies with Listing and Quotation on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange, issued by the Securities Commission.

Essentially, these guidelines classify a 'foreign-based company' as a public company incorporated in Malaysia or in a jurisdiction other than Malaysia, having substantial Malaysian interests, and substantial foreign assets and operations, and which seeks a primary listing on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange.

A foreign-based company is considered to have 'substantial Malaysian interests' where, at the point of application to offer securities under the guidelines:

- More than 50 per cent of the issued and paid-up capital of the company is beneficially held by Malaysian shareholders resident in Malaysia having management control; or 13 Securities Industries Act, s 99B.

- The single largest shareholder of the company is Malaysian and resident in Malaysia, having management control, and beneficially holding not less than 33 per cent of the issued and paid-up capital of the company.

A foreign-based company is considered to have 'substantial foreign assets and operations' where at the point of application to offer securities under these guidelines:

- More than 50 per cent of the total tangible assets of the company is situated outside of Malaysia based on the audited accounts for each of the past three financial years;
- The after-tax profits of the company from assets or operations held outside of Malaysia are in excess of 50 per cent of its total after-tax profits based on the latest audited accounts for a full financial year; and
- The aggregate of the after-tax profits of the company from assets or operations held outside of Malaysia for the past three financial years is in excess of 50 per cent of the aggregate of its after-tax profits based on the audited accounts for that period.

Foreign-based companies which are not incorporated in Malaysia may be permitted to list on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange if the Securities Commission is satisfied that the country of incorporation have standards at least equivalent to those in Malaysia with respect to:

- Corporate governance;
- Shareholder and minority interests protection;
- Disclosure standards; and
- Regulation of take-overs and mergers.

Foreign Issuers with Secondary Admission

There is no provision for admission for foreign issuers who already have a primary listing outside of Malaysia for the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange.

However, with the introduction of the Guidelines for the Public Offering of Securities of Foreign-Based Companies with Listing and Quotation on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange, the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange hopes to attracts foreign issuers to undertake a primary listing in Malaysia. MESDAQ will, however, consider a secondary listing on a case-by-case basis.

Issuers without Ongoing Disclosure Duties

No exceptions are granted to any issuer where the disclosure duties do not apply save where such securities are not issued to the public and are not governed by the Securities Commission Guidelines.

Notwithstanding that, the Securities Commission's prior approval still must be obtained for unlisted securities if those securities fall within the Securities Commission Guidelines.

Privileged 'Foreign Private' Issuers

There is no concept of a privileged foreign private issuer in Malaysia.

ADR Disclosure

Under the Securities Commission Guidelines, full disclosure of all pending litigation of a material nature in which the company or its subsidiaries may be involved in which may affect its income from title to or possession of any of its assets. Material litigation disclosure would also include any arbitration or alternative dispute resolution cases underway which have similar impact on the company or its subsidiaries. There are no definitions as to what would constitute litigation of a 'material nature'.

The common practice in Malaysia is to adopt some yardstick which should give a reasonable disclosure on litigation matters that have some impact on the income of the company or its subsidiaries peculiar to the industry or company concerned. A lower threshold may be applied for a company undergoing financial restructuring than for a going concerned company. To a large extent, material litigation would normally include claims against a company in excess of five per cent of the net tangible asset or 10 per cent of the previous year's audited profits may be a guideline for going concern companies.

Proxy Disclosure

Pursuant to the Securities Industry (Central Depositories) (Amendment) Act 1998, every securities account opened with the Malaysian Central Depositary Sdn Bhd (the Malaysian Central Depository Berhad) must be in the name of the beneficial owner of the deposited securities or in the name of an authorised nominee. Under rule 1.01 of the Malaysian Central Depository Berhad Rules, there are only 11 categories of authorised nominee, which include a custodian bank, a broking house, approved fund managers, and those exempted by the Securities Commission.

Account holders also must declare that they are the beneficial owners of the securities held in their accounts. Failure to make the necessary transfer of the securities into the appropriate securities account or to the authorised nominee may render those securities to be transferred to the Minister of Finance pursuant to section 30 of the Securities Industry (Central Depositories) (Amendment) Act 1998.

It also arose from the amendments to these rules that the Malaysian securities traded on the CLOB exchange in Singapore were rendered 'unauthorised', and agreement has since been reached in March 2000 for a proper migration of those CLOB securities into the Malaysian Central Depository Berhad accounts of the beneficial owners pursuant to a private sector initiative approved by the stock exchanges of Singapore and Malaysia.

Disclosure of Internet and E-Commerce Activities

With the explosion of the Internet and e-commerce activities worldwide, Malaysian public listed companies also have joined in the foray by jumping onto the bandwagon of investing in such technology business. The Malaysian regulators also have cautioned about the proliferation of dot com companies, and the Prime Minister of Malaysia has voiced out against the danger of bubble dot com companies, many of which may burst in the time to come.

The Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange has announced a new practice note to take effect in April 2000 requiring public listed companies to make proper disclosure of Internet-related businesses or e-commerce activities. The practice note sets out minimum requirements for announcements of such activities by public listed companies as follows:

- Details of the relevant business model;
- Details of the stage of development and, if already operating, details on the existing level of operations;
- A description of the risks and rewards involved; and
- Details of the technical capability and competence.

After the initial announcement, listed companies will be required to make announcements of the progress of such businesses and activities, including the arrangements, transactions or ventures or proposed arrangements, transactions or ventures in respect thereof on a quarterly basis simultaneously with their quarterly reporting of financial statements, or whenever there is a material development, whichever is earlier.

This obligation continues until operations commence and generate revenue, or the business or activity, including the arrangement, transaction, or venture, in respect thereof is aborted, as the case may be. This will keep investors informed of the progress of such businesses and activities.

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

Offer. Section 4(1) of the Companies Act defines 'prospectus' as a circular notice advertisement or invitation inviting applications or offers from the public to subscribe for or purchase or offer to the public for subscription or purchase any shares in or debentures of or any units of shares in or units of debentures of a corporation or proposed corporation. There is no definition of what constitutes an offer to the public in the Companies Act.

Offers must be distinguished from an invitation to treat. There would be circumstances in which a company may allot shares to an issuing house which subsequently may make an offer to the public. The first instance will not be classified as an 'offer' in the contractual sense and hence will not attract the prospectus requirements under the Companies Act. Certain statements made by companies will be deemed for purposes of the Companies Act to be prospectuses and, hence, 'an offer' being made to the public. This would include:

- An advertisement offering shares or debentures to the public or calling attention to such an offer;[14]

14 Companies Act, s 40(1).

- A document accompanying an offer for same made by an issuing house with a view to sale to the public;[15] and
- A statement issued in connection with the offer of participatory interests to the public.[16]

Care must, therefore, be made in relation to any announcements which a company makes, including any publication which is being posted on websites of companies.

Public. Any public offering must be approved by the Securities Commission and a prospectus issued and lodged with the Registry of Companies in Malaysia. There is no definition of who constitutes the 'public', but academics have generally accepted that the Australian case of Corporate Affairs Commission (SA) v Australian Central Credit Union[17] as good guidance in this interpretation. The court stated that:

> The question whether a particular group of persons constitutes a section of the public for the purposes of [section 4(6)] cannot be answered in the abstract. In a case where an offer is made by a stranger and there is no rational connection between the characteristic which sets the members of a group apart and the nature of the offer made to them, the group will, at least ordinarily, constitute a section of the public for the purposes of the offer. If, however, there is some subsisting special relationship between the offeror and members of a group or some rational connection between the common characteristic of members or a group and the offer made to them, the question whether the group constitutes a section of the public for the purposes of the offer will fall to be determined by reference to a variety of factors of which the most important will ordinarily be: the number of persons comprising the group. The subsisting relationship between the offeror and the members of the group, the nature and content of the offer, the significance of any particular characteristic which identifies the members of the group and any connection between that characteristic and the offer.[18]

The Companies Act also provides for a special class of offers (even if they are made to the public) where a prospectus is not required. This amendment was necessitated to promote a more active capital market without unnecessary expenses of prospectus filing. These are when the offerees of the public offering are limited to any of the following classes of persons:

- A prescribed corporation as defined in section 38(7) (which essentially is a banking corporation);
- A registered insurance company;
- A trustee corporation as defined under section 4(1);
- A statutory body established by the states or the federal government;
- An approved pension under section 150 of the Income Tax Act 1967;
- A unit trust scheme, as defined under the Securities Industry Act 1983;

- A licensed dealer or investment adviser under the Securities Industry Act 1983;
- A corporation incorporated outside Malaysia;
- A public company which is engaged primarily in the making of investment in marketable securities for the purpose of revenue and for profit and not for purpose of exercising control; and
- Any person declared to be an exempt purchaser by the Ministry.[19]

It is poignant to note that a foreign corporation can purchase a Malaysian public offering without the need for prospectus requirements. However, the reverse is not applicable. A foreign corporation having a public offering outside of Malaysia cannot make an offer to the public in Malaysia for subscription of the shares unless a prospectus for the foreign public offering is first approved and lodged with the Registrar of Companies in Malaysia.

Place of Offer. While the traditional form of publication can be easily traced to the source, it is not altogether clear in the case of web publications when it comes to identifying the actual place in which a public offering is made.

Under general principles of company law in Malaysia, no offer can be made to the public in Malaysia without the prospectus first being approved by the Securities Commission and a copy lodged with the Registry of Companies. Hence, a foreign issuer may not be permitted to bring on the shores of Malaysia a prospectus (even if validly issued outside of Malaysia) with a view of soliciting acceptances of offer from the Malaysian public.

Unlisted Securities. All applications for public offerings with no listing and quotation on a stock exchange would be considered by the Securities Commission on the merit of each case.

The general policies and principles adopted by the Securities Commission on public companies intending to undertake offerings of securities to the general public with no listing and quotation on a stock exchange are as follows:

- Promoters and directors — The promoters and directors of the company should have the necessary experience and expertise in the business of the company as well as in managing public companies. As the statutory requirements of the Companies Act 1965 for a public company are more elaborate than for a private company, the Securities Commission is of the view that, unless the directors have the necessary experience and expertise, they should continue to operate their businesses through private companies.
- Purpose of public offer — The proceeds raised from a public offer shall be utilized only for productive purposes. Full details of the utilisation of proceeds should be disclosed. Changes from the declared utilisation should not be made without the prior approval of the Securities Commission.

19 Companies Act, s 47B.

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Holdings

In General. Malaysia has, since 1998, made changes to the Companies Act 1965 reducing the disclosure of substantial holdings from five per cent to two per cent. The burden has therefore increased substantially on parties to make timely disclosure of their change in position whether on becoming or ceasing to be substantial shareholders.

Substantial shareholders also include shareholdings of those persons who normally act in the direction of the beneficial shareholders. This indirect deemed interest is broadly defined in section 122A of the Companies Act, which includes the interest of associates who are under the shareholder's control, his immediate family, and those who customarily would act under the instructions of the shareholders.

A person on crossing or leaving the threshold of a substantial shareholder must notify the company and the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange. The company, on receipt of those notices, must inform the Securities Commission and the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange for public release. The Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange maintains a website[20] of listed companies and their company public announcements which the public can assess freely. Notices of substantial shareholding must contain the following:

- Date of change of interest;
- Circumstances giving rise to the change;
- Number of securities acquired or disposed of and the figure as a percentage of the listed public company's issued capital;
- Amount of consideration (excluding brokerage and stamp duties) paid or received; and
- Number of securities held before and after the change and the figure as a percentage of the listed public company's issued capital.

Shareholder Duties. Shareholders' duties are distinct from directors' duties although, in most cases, the directors are nominated and appointed by the shareholders. Shareholders' rights are derived from the memorandum and articles of association, which regulate their relationship with other shareholders as if a contract has existed between themselves by virtue of the terms of the articles of association. From the rights as shareholders to receive notices of general meetings and to vote in the resolutions therein, the general duties as shareholders would therefore be limited to the extent that the exercise of those rights does not impinge on the rights of other fellow shareholders.

The majority shareholders cannot therefore oppress the minority, and general provisions for minority oppression will be available. In many cases of foreign investments, it is usual to structure joint venture companies in line with the National Economic Policy of Malaysia to cater to the local equity participation. Shareholders must be careful not to infringe the provisions of the shareholders' agreement entered into between themselves. The Foreign Investment Committee conditions have certain extra-legal impact, and foreign shareholders would be well advised to adhere to these conditions even if they may not have the force of law.

Company Duties. Companies have a separate legal existence from their shareholders. As a going concern, companies operate in a multifaceted environment where their duties to different parties would be different depending on the context of the situation. Generally, a company's interest is normally equated with the shareholder's interest.

Hence, its primary duty would be seen as making profits for itself and enhancing its own financial and economic values. In the true literal sense, a company is but a fiction. It really needs to have directors to run the company's affairs. Its directors and employees are the arms and legs of the company. The company then has duties towards these people in return as its employees to which the terms of the service contract should be adhered to properly.

The company has dealings with its suppliers and customers and the regulatory authorities. In each of these aspects, the company owes a duty to each of these parties largely based on contractual relationships which it forms in the course of its existence. It also has duties towards the society at large in which the company functions, such as the physical environment from which the company may extract its raw materials, the discharges of any affluent in the course of the manufacturing processes, and liability to the public concerning the ultimate products that it sells or distributes, no matter how remote the market may be.

Insider Trading and Fraud

In General

There are various prohibited practices under the Securities Industries Act. These include a substantial revamp and incorporation of 15 additional sections that extended the scope of insider trading pursuant to the Securities Industry (Amendment) Act 1998, which came into force in March 1998. A new section 89 defined 'information' to include:

- Matters of supposition and other matters that are insufficiently definite to warrant their being made known to the public;
- Matters relating to the intentions, or likely intentions, of a person;
- Matters relating to negotiations or proposals with respect to (a) commercial dealings or (b) dealing in securities;
- Information relating to the financial performance of a corporation;
- Information that a person proposes to enter into, or has previously entered into, one or more transactions or agreements in relation to securities or has prepared or proposes to issue a statement relating to such securities; and
- Matters relating to the future.

Section 89E defines an 'insider' to mean a person who:

- Possesses information that is not generally available which, on becoming generally available, a reasonable person would expect to have a material effect on the price or the value of securities; and
- Knows or ought reasonably to know that the information is not generally available.

An insider is prohibited, whether as principal or agent, in respect of any securities to which he has 'information' from doing the following:

- Acquiring or disposing of, or entering into an agreement for, or with a view to the acquisition or disposal, of such securities; or
- Procuring, directly or indirectly, an acquisition or disposal of, or the entering into an agreement for or with a view to the acquisition or disposal of, such securities.

Insider trading is punishable on conviction with a minimum fine of RM 1 million and imprisonment for a term not exceeding 10 years.

The Securities Industry Act provides for certain provisions whereby key officers of listed corporations or partnerships are deemed to have information which is not generally available save in some instances.

It is interesting to note that the Securities Commission now has civil remedies pursuant to section 90 of the Act, which allows it to institute civil proceedings (in addition to criminal proceedings) in the court against a defaulting party who has contravened the provisions of the Division relating to insider trading, whether or not that person has been charged with an offence in respect of the contravention, or whether or not a contravention has been proved in a prosecution.

Such civil proceedings may be begun at any time within 12 years from the date on which the cause of action accrued or the date on which the Securities Commission or the plaintiff, as the case may be, discovered the contravention, whichever is later. This right to civil remedy is premised on the Securities Commission safeguarding the public interest. It may pursuant to section 89 of the Act, file a civil claim against an insider trader regardless of whether or not the insider or any other person involved in the contravention has been charged with an offence in respect of the contravention or whether or not the contravention has been proved in a prosecution.

The Securities Commission may recover an amount equal to three times the amount of the difference between the price at which the securities were disposed of, or agreed to be disposed of, by the insider or the other person, and the price at which they would have been likely to have been disposed of at the time of the disposal or agreement, as the case may be, if the information had been generally available. In addition, it may request the court to impose a civil penalty subject to a maximum of RM 500,000.

Sums recovered or obtained by the Securities Commission pursuant to such a civil remedy will first be applied towards reimbursement of all costs of the investigation and proceedings incurred by the Securities Commission. The balance towards compensating the sellers or buyers of the affected securities of the same class on the stock market of the stock exchange when information was not generally available between the time of the insider trading and the time when information became generally available.

The Securities Commission also retains the right, if it considers it impracticable to compensate the affected buyers or sellers aforesaid, in view of the likely administration costs, the amount of any potential distribution to each person, and the difficulty of ascertaining or notifying the persons whom it is appropriate to compensate, as the case may be, to withhold such distribution. Such sums will then be retained by the Securities Commission to defray the costs of regulating market trading with the approval of the Minister of Finance.

Pursuant to section 90A, a person who suffers loss or damages by reason of, or by relying on, the conduct of an insider trader may recover the amount of loss or damages by instituting civil proceedings against the other person, whether or not the other person has been charged with an offence in respect of the contravention, or whether or not a contravention has been proved in a prosecution. A claim for loss or damages includes an unrealised loss or gain, as the case may be, in the price or value of securities of a corporation, being the difference between:

- The price or value of securities in a transaction in connection with which the aggrieved person claims to have suffered loss or damages; and
- The price which would have been the likely price of the securities in the transaction, or the value which it is likely that such securities would have had at the time of that transaction, if the contravention had not occurred.

There are many other prohibited market practices, such as short-selling, market manipulation, and providing false information, which carry a heavy penalty on conviction. The Securities Commission has introduced Guidelines on Securities Borrowing Also, Lending In Malaysia in 1998 by permitting stock broking firms to borrow and lend securities listed on the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange. In a sense, this is a controlled form of short selling which the regulators felt would benefit the market. Elements of a securities borrowing and lending transaction have been defined to include the following:

- The borrowing of securities for a period of time;
- The borrower simultaneously or previously providing the lender with collateral;
- The lender earning a fee (or returns on the reinvestment of cash collateral) as consideration for the loan of the securities;
- An outright disposition of the securities by the lender of the securities to the borrower taking place;
- The lender being able to recall the loaned securities at any time during the loan after serving adequate notice;
- At the end of the loan period, the borrower returning replacement securities to the lender which are of the same number and type as the original securities.

All participants planning to engage in securities borrowing and lending must ensure that they have obtained the prior authorisation of the Securities Commission. The Securities Commission would grant its authorisation to domestic participants only if the following minimum criteria are met:

- An applicant must be the holder of a dealer's licence or be declared an exempt dealer who is authorised to engage in securities borrowing and lending, under the Securities Industry Act 1983;
- An applicant must demonstrate that it conducts, or is capable of conducting, its securities borrowing and/or lending business in a prudent manner having regard to the nature and scale of its operations and the risks inherent in those operations; and
- An applicant must demonstrate that its securities borrowing and lending business is or will be carried on with integrity and with the professional skills appropriate to the nature and scale of its business.[21]

The Securities Commission has been rigorously prosecuting offenders in recent years as the onslaught of financial crises between 1998 and 1999 had regularly seen corporate failures and abuses which have affected investors' confidence.

Extra-Territorial Application

A new section 89P was introduced to the Securities Industry Act, which came into force in October 1998. Section 89P extended the coverage of insider trading to:

- Acts and omissions occurring within Malaysia in relation to securities of any body corporate which is formed or is carrying on business or is listed within or outside Malaysia; and
- Acts and omissions occurring outside Malaysia in relation to securities of any body corporate which is formed or is carrying on business or is listed within Malaysia.

There have not yet been any cases that have come to the Malaysian courts that have tested the provisions of these new sections in the Securities Industry Act. With the expanded scope of coverage and powers granted to the Securities Commission, Malaysia should see more transparent dealings in securities trading as the Securities Commission has made known their tough stand on any abuses of the Securities Commission Guidelines or relevant legislation.

Public Take-over Bids

In General

Public take-over bids of companies are governed by the Malaysian Code on Take-overs and Mergers 1998 (the 'Code') which was enacted pursuant to section 33A(1) of the Securities Industry Act. The Code, therefore, has the force of law, and criminal penalties will apply for non-compliance.

21 At the minimum, the applicant must demonstrate that it has established written policies and procedures governing its securities borrowing and lending activities.

The Code applies to parties having obtained control in a company and also to parties who hold more than 33 per cent, but less than 50 per cent, of the voting shares of a company and such party acquires in any period of six months more than two per cent of the voting shares of the company. A threshold of 33 per cent of voting shares in a company is set as a level at which a mandatory take-over offer must be made to the shares not already held by the party and to those acting in concert with it to seek control over the company.

It is interesting to note that, under Practice Note 1.2 issued pursuant to the Code, it is provided that the Code shall apply to a take-over of a private company which has either shareholders' funds or a paid-up capital of RM 10 million or more based on the latest audited accounts (on a consolidated basis, if applicable), as the case may be, and where the purchase consideration for the voting shares over a period of 12 months is RM 20 million or more.

Territorial Application (Foreign Bidder–Domestic Target)

As a general rule, a foreign bidder can technically bid for all the available shares in a Malaysian target company. However, the successful bidding of any such company also must meet the requirements of the Securities Commission Guidelines, which include the need to achieve a public shareholding spread as discussed above.

In addition, there are the Foreign Investment Committee requirements that the Bumiputra content of at least 30 per cent interest must be restored, although this content also may be incorporated into the public shareholding spread requirements.

For companies with a national-interest element, such as Telekoms and Petronas Dagangan, the foreign content cannot exceed a fixed amount as determined by the Securities Commission, which generally is set at 30 per cent or less. In such event, it would not be possible for a foreign bidder to make any take-over offers of such companies at all.

The Securities Commission Guidelines also impose reporting requirements on public companies to submit regular reports on the public spread and list of substantial shareholders. Some companies must, in compliance with the Securities Commission Guidelines, maintain a cap on foreign participation, established a two-tier shareholding structure, ie, one for local shareholders and one for foreigners.

Procedural Requirements

The Practice Notes have set out specific guidelines on the procedures in relation to the mechanism of undertaking a take-over offer. Parties are advised by the Securities Commission to seek advice from advisers who have the necessary expertise and experience. The board of directors of any offeree should seek independent advice from such advisers. Any aggrieved minority holder of voting shares of either the offeror or offeree wishing to seek a ruling by the Securities Commission should seek advice from such advisers.

Any adviser giving advice or submitting applications to the Securities Commission should be competent and of high professional standard since they would also be responsible for the advice given.

If the Securities Commission finds that the advice is not competent or results in the parties breaching the Code, the Securities Commission may refuse to accept any submissions on matters relating to any take-over offer, merger, or compulsory acquisition from any such adviser for a period of six months. A submission made to the Securities Commission must include the following:

- Brief information of the offeror and the offeree (detailed background information should be attached as appendices);
- Details of the transaction from which an obligation to undertake a mandatory general offer arises;
- Details of all persons acting in concert (if any);
- Requests and justification for an exemption or a ruling applied for; and
- Such other details considered relevant for the Securities Commission's consideration.

Exemptions

The Practice Notes set out various criteria on which applications for exemptions may be entertained by the Securities Commission from making a mandatory general offer.

In relation to an application for such an exemption, consultation with the Securities Commission at an early stage is essential, and applications for an exemption should be submitted prior to the obligation to make a mandatory offer arising. There are 10 general situations in which an exemption from making a mandatory general offer may be made to the Securities Commission under Practice Note 2.9.1 of 2 September 1910, which are:

- Practice Note 2.9.1 — Exemption if transactions involve issue of new securities;
- Practice Note 2.9.2 — Exemption if convertible securities are exercised;
- Practice Note 2.9.3 — Exemption if rescue operation;
- Practice Note 2.9.4 — Exemption arising from foreclosure of voting shares;
- Practice Note 2.9.5 — Exemption from a general offer involving placement of securities having voting shares;
- Practice Note 2.9.6. — Exemption if the remaining holders of voting shares of a company have given written undertakings not to accept an offer;
- Practice Note 2.9.7 — Exemption in transactions involving acquisition of additional voting shares by members of a group acting in concert in specified situations.
- Practice Note 2.9.8 — Exemption in compulsory acquisition circumstances;
- Practice Note 2.9.9 — Exemption based on national policy; and
- Practice Note 2 September 1910 — Exemption for holders of voting shares, directors, and persons acting in concert when a company purchases its own voting shares.

Recognition of Foreign Take-Over Regulation

The Securities Commission is under a statutory duty[22] to consider a written request from a foreign supervisory authority for assistance to investigate into an alleged breach of a legal or regulatory requirement which the foreign supervisory authority enforces or administers, provide assistance to the foreign supervisory authority by carrying out an investigation of the alleged breach of the legal or regulatory requirement, or provide such other assistance to the foreign supervisory authority as the Securities Commission thinks fit.

Jurisdictional Conflicts

In the 1980s, Malaysia saw the banking scandal involving Bank Bumiputra Malaysia Bhd and the lending to the Carrian group of companies in Hong Kong. The case brought about interesting legal arguments concerning jurisdictional issues of whether a Malaysian court will exercise jurisdiction over breaches of directors of a foreign company. In Bank Bumiputra Malaysia Bhd v Lorrain Esme Osman,[23] Bank Bumiputra Malaysia Finance Ltd (BMF), a Hong Kong company, sued its Malaysian director for fraudulent misrepresentation and breach of fiduciary duties.

BMF is a wholly owned subsidiary of Bank Bumiputra Malaysia Bhd (BBMB), a Malaysian company. The judge, Zakaria Yatim J, held that the applicable law to the substantive issues was the law of Malaysia, even though the actionable wrong was governed by both Hong Kong (on the basis of lex loci delicti, law of the place where breach occurred) and Malaysia laws (on the basis of lex fori, the law of the forum). He came to the conclusion on account that BMF is a subsidiary of a Malaysian bank, the director is a resident of Malaysia, and board meetings which authorised the unlawful transactions took place in Malaysia.

Academics have argued that, in adopting this approach, the court has probably followed the 'proper law approach' by focusing on the law of the relationship between the affected director and BMF as to whether the issues that arose out of the breach have the closest and more real connection with the relevant law.

While Malaysia may develop its own jurisprudence in relation to its approach to jurisdictional conflicts, the recent Singapore decision of Sumitomo Bank Ltd v Kartika Ratna Thahir[24] may be persuasive in Malaysia. In that case, a director of an Indonesian company amassed substantial wealth illegally, which he deposited in Singapore banks.

When the director died, his widow and sons made a claim on the money. The Indonesian company intervened to stake a proprietary claim on the proceeds on account of secret profits being made by the director which he should properly account to his company. The Singapore court held that the Indonesian company has a right to those monies. The decision is affirmed by the Singapore court of appeal, thus paving the way for a Singapore court to find jurisdiction over the acts of a director in a foreign country.

Introduction

In General

Since 2006, Mexico has had a new securities law and regulation that allows listing and trading in the local exchange securities issued by both non-Mexican entities and foreign securities with admission and listing requirements very similar to those required for Mexican securities or Mexican issuers.

Mexico's legal system is based on the Civil Law tradition and its legal framework is contained mainly in statutes and codes enacted by the legislative power and secondary statutes (reglamentos) approved by the executive power, and only secondarily governed by case precedents or judicial resolutions (jurisprudencia) issued by the Supreme Court and other upper courts of the judicial system. The legislative power is divided into two chambers, the Representatives Chamber (Cámara de Diputados) and the Senators Chamber (Cámara de Senadores).

In 2005, after intense months of debate, the legislative power approved the current Mexican Securities Market Law (Ley del Mercado de Valores, the 'Securities Law'), which became effective 2006. The Securities Law confers the executive power, specifically the National Banking and Securities Commission (Comisión Nacional Bancaria y de Valores) (the 'Banking and Securities Commission'), the authority to interpret the Securities Law as well as to issue secondary regulations in connection with the Securities Law.

Since becoming effective, the Securities Law boosted the Mexican economy by setting a clear and orderly framework for investors and companies to participate in financial markets as well as to support financial markets as an alternate option to lending and credit.

After the 2008 financial meltdown, the United States consumers' behavior changed dramatically resulting in unexpected variation of Mexican exports. Additionally, Mexico suffered a dramatic decrease in oil production, which is the source of a significant portion of fiscal revenues. Without the exportations' income and a plumbing oil production, the Mexican government implemented several reforms to boost local markets and to adopt a prudent fiscal stance. The government also is considering further tax reforms to straighten financial markets and reduce dependence on oil-related receipts.

With activity well below potential, inflation is projected to reduce gradually. This gives monetary policy and financial regulation some leeway to remain accommodative and support the recovery.[1] In January 2014, a new financial reform (the '2014 Financial Reform') to 34 financial laws and regulations, including the Securities Law, was approved and became effective. The 2014 Financial Reform was designed to provide for a healthier and more solid development of the Mexican financial industry, and to modernize financial laws and regulations; the foregoing, in order to promote better access for funding and credit. Where needed, selected amendments to securities laws and regulations pursuant to the 2014 Financial Reform are included in this chapter only as applicable to its scope and content.

Regulatory System

The main regulator of the Mexican Securities Market is the National Banking and Securities Commission, which depends on the Ministry of Finance and Public Credit (Secretaría de Hacienda y Crédito Público, the 'Ministry of Finance'). It is organized and governed by the Banking and Securities Commission Law (Ley de la Comisión Nacional Bancaria y de Valores, the 'Banking and Securities Commission Law').

Legal Sources

The main securities legal framework consists mainly of:

- The Securities Law;
- The General Regulations applicable to Issuers of Securities and other participants of exchange markets (Disposiciones de Carácter General Aplicables a las Emisoras y a Otros Participantes del Mercado de Valores), issued by the Banking and Securities Commission (the 'Banking and Securities Commission Regulations');
- The Mexican Securities Exchange Internal Regulations (Reglamento Interior de la Bolsa Mexicana de Valores, the 'Mexican Securities Exchange Regulations');
- The Broker-Dealers Sole Circular (Disposiciones de Caracter General Aplicables a las Casas de Bolsa, the 'Broker-Dealers Circular');
- The General Law of Negotiable Instruments and Credit Transactions (Ley General de Títulos y Operaciones de Crédito); and

- The Banking and Securities Commission Law (Ley de la Comision Nacional Bancaria y de Valores (together with the Securities Law, the Banking and Securities Commission Regulations, the Mexican Securities Exchange Regulations, the Broker-Dealers Circular, and the Banking and Securities Commission Law, the 'Securities Regulations').

Authorities

The main authority and regulator of the Mexican financial system is the Banking and Securities Commission. The Banking and Securities Commission is vested with the authority to supervise financial markets and financial entities, issue financial regulations within its faculties, authorize the registration of securities for public offerings in Mexico, authorize and license regulated financial entities to provide financial services in Mexico, impose penalties to financial entities and participants of financial markets, provide advice and clarification to the federal government in connection with financial regulation, and publish financial studies, analysis, and statistics and perform as liquidator of financial entities.[2]

The Ministry of Finance also is authorized to issue secondary regulations in connection with financial services and financial entities, mainly in connection with capital requirements and anti-money laundering. Also, the Mexican Central Bank (Banco de México) is authorized to issue circulars and regulations applicable to financial entities (mostly banks and broker-dealers) in connection with foreign currency, derivative transactions, and capital requirements in connection with specific transactions.

Additionally, the National Commission for the Protection and Defense of Financial Services Consumers (Comisión Nacional para la Protección y Defensa de los Usuarios de Servicios Financieros, CONDUSEF) acts as a consumer protection agency specialized in financial services.

The CONDUSEF performs mostly as an information agency requiring financial institutions to inform their clients with transparency about their services, risks, and fees as well as providing consumers of financial services comparative information over financial services and entities to make easier for them the taking of an informed decision.

As of the 2014 Financial Reform, financial institutions are granted amnesty regarding non-criminal, non-serious infractions to the Securities Regulation if such financial institutions voluntarily file self-correction plans with the Banking and Securities Commission.

Procedures

The public offering of securities in Mexico requires the prior filing of a statement for approval with the Banking and Securities Commission for any securities to be publicly offered in Mexico. The relevant securities must be registered at the National Registry of Securities (Registro Nacional de Valores, RNV) of the Banking and Securities Commission and listed at the Mexican Securities Exchange to be allowed for trading in the Mexican Securities Exchange.

As of the 2014 Financial Reform, it is possible for issuers to carry out a public offering targeted specifically at a type of investor, allowing for a wider spectrum of market specialization. The RNV contains a database with all relevant information of listed securities. All issuers must file information documents with the Banking and Securities Commission and the Mexican Securities Exchange simultaneously to having their securities recorded at the RNV and listed in the Mexican Securities Exchange. Filings are made electronically through proprietary systems and in printed form in both of the Banking and Securities Commission and the Mexican Securities Exchange.

The Banking and Securities Commission also is authorized to implement internal administrative procedures to solve disputes between financial entities and the Mexican Securities Exchange as well as to reconsider fines and sanctions applied to financial entities and other participants of financial markets.

Legal Order and Regulatory Interests

Admission

Market Participants

In General. Non-Mexican entities follow the same procedures as Mexican companies to list their stock in the Mexican Securities Exchange. The companies must file a registration statement, a prospectus, opinions, financial statements, agreements, corporate resolutions, and any other relevant documents simultaneously with the Banking and Securities Commission and the Mexican Securities Exchange, who review and comment on such documents.

Marketing of securities is allowed after the first filing of the relevant documents. Usually, after a number of turnarounds, the Banking and Securities Commission and the Mexican Securities Exchange approve the prospectus, the form of securities certificate, and other information documents allowing the company to sell the relevant securities through the Mexican Securities Exchange. In addition to the regulators and the investors, the main market participants in the offering of securities are the following:

Placement Agent or Underwriter. Placement agents are Mexican broker-dealers. They structure the deal, have contact with prospective investors, build the book, and have contact with regulators. The placement agent markets the securities and is liable for most of the prospectus content.

Independent Legal Adviser. The independent legal adviser issues the legal opinion that states that the issuer entity is in good standing and in position to issue the securities. Additionally, the independent legal advisor usually reviews the offering documents and signs the prospectus to be liable in connection with the relevant legal information.

Independent Accountant. The independent accountant reviews the entity's financial statements and issues an accountant's opinion with respect to the entity's audited financial statements. The independent accountant signs the prospectus and is liable in connection with the financial information contained therein.

Rating Agencies. In the event a financial rating is required regarding the type of security, the rating agencies give comments to the preliminary forms of prospectus and other offering documents. The rating agencies are not liable for the content of the prospectus.

Other Advisors. Depending on the complexity of the deal, the parties may hire additional advisors. For example, it is very common for the placement agents to have their own legal counsel, who does not sign the prospectus.

Domestic Exchanges

The Mexican Securities Exchange is the only securities exchange currently in place in Mexico. Foreign companies may be listed in the Mexican Securities Exchange. Many non-Mexican companies are listed in the Mexican Securities Exchange such as Banco Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria, SA, Citigroup Inc, Fresnillo Plc, and Banco Santander, SA.

Other exchange markets in Mexico include the MexDer (www.mexder.com.mx), which is a derivative agreements market only. Business contracts are not considered securities for purposes of the Securities Law; however, in the event underlying assets of a derivative instrument consist of listed securities, such derivative agreement may be considered as security for purposes of the Securities Law.

Transborder Electronic Trading Systems

The Mexican Securities Exchange Regulations provide for a transborder electronic system Sistema Internacional de Cotizaciones (International Quotations System, SIC).[3] Securities traded on the SIC are securities listed and traded in foreign exchanges and not listed or traded in Mexico through the Mexican Securities Exchange. The SIC is a trade window that allows the trading of securities listed in recognized foreign exchanges, as if such trading were being made in the foreign exchange where the relevant securities are listed. Such trading was limited to non-Mexican residents, qualified investors, and institutional investors, but as of the 2014 Financial Reform, trading in the SIC may be done by any entity or individual.

3 Additionally, the SIC is regulated by articles 262–264 of the Securities Law and the General Rules applicable to the International Quotation System.

The Mexican Securities Exchange must recognize and register a specific exchange market or the specific issuer of the respective security for such exchange or security to become traded into the SIC. Local broker-dealers or the Mexican Securities Exchange may initiate process for the acknowledgement procedure of a foreign exchange and/or security and shall become liable to provide the Mexican Securities Exchange with all the periodical and extraordinary information in its original language as it is provided by such issuer in the corresponding exchange.

The Mexican Securities Exchange may request from broker-dealers a summary in Spanish of such information. Transactions completed in the SIC are not considered to take place in Mexico and thus are not subject to the supervision of the Banking and Securities Commission.

For purposes of the Securities Regulations, institutional investors are Mexican financial entities as well as any other Mexican entities considered as institutional investors by statute such as banks or other financial entities. Qualified investors are any persons that, during the prior fiscal year, maintained investments in securities in an amount equal to or greater than 1,500,000 Investment Units (UDIs) or that obtained a minimum gross income equal or greater than 500,000 Investment Units (UIDIs) during the prior two fiscal years.

Although the Securities Law and the Banking and Securities Commission Regulations are silent if such investments should be kept within Mexico or in foreign financial markets, the definition of 'securities' under the Law includes securities regulated by non-Mexican laws and regulations as mentioned below.

The SIC is divided in two sections, ie, SIC debt and SIC stock. Both sections require, among others, that broker-dealers evidence that the relevant securities are listed and traded in, and thus supervised by, a foreign financial market or exchange.

Off-Market Transactions

Generally, all securities subject to public offerings must be listed and all transactions with listed securities must be performed by authorized financial intermediaries in the market through the Mexican Securities Exchange.[4] Off-market transactions with securities are only allowed as an exemption to the abovementioned rule. Such exceptions are the following:

- Private placements — Any entity or individual may perform private placements in Mexico when such offerings are made to institutional or qualified investors only, there are less than 100 investors (in case of the stock of a company)[5], employees of the issuer company invest through employee stock option plans, and entities or individuals perform their main corporate purpose or business with the issuer company. The Securities and Banking Commission may authorize other kinds of private placements, considering the number of investors to whom such private placement will be addressed, as well as general principles of the Securities Law.[6] As of the 2014 Financial Reform, any securities issued in Mexico or by a Mexican issuer that are privately traded outside of the Mexican territory in foreign stock exchanges must be notified to the CNBV. Mexican broker dealers and/or any other entities authorized for the offering of securities in Mexico are prohibited to offer securities that are not registered with the RNV and that do not represent the capital stock of a legal entity. Securities eligible for registration with the SIC are not eligible for private placements.

- Foreclosure of Securities Pledge Agreements — There is a specific form of collateral interest over listed securities called securities pledge (prenda bursátil). When a debtor breaches secured obligations under a specific securities pledge, the lender is allowed to foreclose collateral without a judicial procedure or, as of 2014, to retain possession and ownership of the collateral as payment in kind[7] if ab initio the ownership of the shares was transferred by the pledgor to the pledgee.
- Transfer of Securities after owners' instructions to broker-dealers — Clients of broker-dealers may instruct them to register transfers of securities under specific conditions where the broker-dealer had no participation in the specific transaction and are registered without the participation of the market. These kinds of transaction are common as a consequence of last wills' transfers, good management strategies, and other non-market driven transactions.[8]

Securities not subject to public offerings in Mexico and thus not listed in the Mexican Securities Exchange, are not subject to Mexican financial regulation and the supervision of the Securities and Banking Commission.

Securities

In General

The Securities Law defines securities as any shares, equity quotas, debentures, debt obligations, bonds, options, certificates, promissory notes, and any other documented debt obligations, whether nominated or not, listed or not in the RNV, that may be listed in the Mexican Securities Exchange, massively issued or in series, and which represent an interest in the capital stock of a company, a 5 The Securities Law is silent regarding the private offering of debt securities in Mexico to investors other than institutional or qualified investors. A definition in this regard would require the issuance of a ruling by the Securities and Banking Commission.

participation in a loan, or any other creditor right in terms of Mexican or foreign laws.[9]

National Treatment and Reciprocity

The Securities Law gives the same treatment to securities issued pursuant to Mexican law and securities issued under foreign laws and regulations. As a principle under Mexican law, the only limitation to such reciprocity would be Mexican public order.

In other words, if a security issued under non-Mexican regulation were to be legally deemed to be contrary to Mexican public order, such security will not be allowed in the Mexican Securities Exchange. Non-Mexican issuers may find additional listing requirements to list securities in the Mexican Securities Exchange in the event they already have securities listed in another foreign securities exchange.

Issuer Requirements

Mexican companies whose equity is listed in the Mexican Securities Exchange may be either incorporated in the form of a publicly-held limited-liability corporation called sociedad anónima bursátil (SAB) or in the form of a more flexible limited-liability corporation created to support new business and ventures called sociedad anónima promotora de inversión bursátil (SAPIB). The shares of a SAB or a SAPIB may be acquired by any entity or individual.

The SAB is the most common form of listed companies. SAPIBs are used to support new businesses and to raise capital for new ventures. SAPIBs must turn into SABs within 10 years after listing their shares, or before such time if their net worth exceeds the equivalent of 250,000,000 UDIs but must comply with later listing requirements in the Mexican Securities Exchange. In any event, public companies must adopt minimum corporate governance requirements set forth in the Securities Regulations as well as commercial practices of financial markets.

Foreign companies follow the same procedures as Mexican companies to list their stock in the Mexican Securities Exchange. The companies must file a registration statement, a prospectus, opinions, financial statements, agreements, corporate resolutions, and any other relevant documents simultaneously with the Banking and Securities Commission and the Mexican Securities Exchange, who review and comment on such documents. Marketing of securities is allowed after the first filing of the relevant documents.

Usually, after a number of turnarounds, the Banking and Securities Commission and the Mexican Securities Exchange approve the prospectus, the form of securities certificate, and other information documents allowing the company to sell the relevant securities through the Mexican Securities Exchange. Regular companies must have at least 200 stockholders, whereas SAPIBs must have at least 20 stockholders. No minimum trading record is required. The company must report profits during the prior three fiscal years. In the event the specific company to be listed is a SAPIB, it must report income only during the prior two years. The working capital requirements are UDIs 20,000,000 for SABs and UDIs 15,000,000 for SAPIBs.

Securities Requirements

The general public must hold at least 15 per cent of a SAB's capital stock. If the relevant company is a SAPIB, the general public must hold at least 12 per cent of its capital stock. At least 50 per cent of such capital stock must be distributed among investors who acquired no more than five per cent of the listed securities. No investor may acquire more than 40 per cent of the listed securities.

Prospectus Requirements

All prospectuses are governed by general principles of relevance and disclosure and all material information must be mandatorily disclosed. The information required for making an informed investment decision shall be legally deemed to be material information. A prospectus must contain, in general terms, the following information:

- General information regarding the securities;
- Executive summary of the transaction;
- Risk factors;
- Main destiny of the funds to be obtained from the public offering;
- Structure of the company before and after the public offering;
- Distribution plan;
- Dilution risks;
- Detailed information about the issuer company, such as a description of its businesses, existing litigations, corporate structure, and main shareholders;
- Financial information of the issuer company and its group, as well as any other entity that contributed 10 per cent or more to the issuer company's income or total sales in the previous year;
- Management structure and politics;
- Main assets and liabilities; and
- Responsible parties and individuals to provide information to the Banking and Securities Commission and the Mexican Securities Exchange.

The prospectus and other offering documents are prepared by the issuer with the advice of the placement agent and the external advisers. The placement agent, several officers of the issuer, the independent accountant, and the independent legal advisor are liable for the information contained in the prospectus and the offering documents within the scope of their professional expertise. There may be other information prepared by specific advisors, such as studies over a specific kind of assets or valuations of the company's assets.

Corporate Governance

A SAB's management is performed by a board of directors and a general director. The board of directors is composed of a maximum of 21 members, and at least 25 per cent of such members must be independent.

The board of directors is supported by several committees. Some of these committees are mandatory, such as the corporate practices committee (comité de prácticas societarias) and the auditing committee (comité de auditoría). These committees are formed by at least three independent members of the board of directors. The main functions of the board of directors are to:

- Establish the business and corporate strategy;
- Supervise the management and operation of the company as well as the company's advisors;
- Approve internal policies for granting loans and credits as well as managers' compensations;
- Appoint the general director of the company; and
- Submit to the shareholders' meeting a detailed annual report and financial information in connection with the operations of the company.

The members of the board of directors must comply with duties of care and loyalty and avoid acting under any form of conflict of interests as set forth in the Securities Regulation and securities practices. The main functions of the general director are to:

- Submit for the approval of the board of directors the business strategy of the company;
- Execute and comply the resolutions of the shareholders' meetings, as instructed;
- Submit to the auditing committee internal politics for control;
- Sign off on all periodic information submitted to investors in connection with his areas of expertise;
- Disclose any relevant information or events to which he is obligated to disclose pursuant to the Securities Regulation;
- Keep the accounting systems, records, and files of the company;
- Submit an annual report to the board of directors of the company; and
- Exercise any action to obtain reparation for any form of damage against the company.

Registration of Public Offerings

Filings for equity public offerings include the following documents:

- Registration statement;
- Copies of powers-of-attorney of all documents' signatories;
- Articles of incorporation and by-laws of the issuer company;[10]
- Corporate resolutions approving the public offering;
- Form of stock certificate;
- Audited financial statements;[11]
- Independency letters;
- Legal opinion;
- Placement agreement;
- Prospectus; and
- Public offering notices.

No offering or marketing of securities is allowed before filing of the preliminary prospectus and the rest of the offering documents, even if in preliminary form. Once these documents are filed with the Securities and Banking Commission and the Mexican Securities Exchange, the placement agent may initiate contacting prospective investors, reach clients via conference calls, or start the road show to market the securities.

The underwriter may only market the securities with information contained in the offering documents that they have been filed before the Securities and Banking Commission and the Mexican Securities Exchange. Only after the relevant securities have been registered in the RNV may said securities be traded in the Mexican Securities Exchange. The General Manager, the General Counsel, and other officials such as the head of the accounting department of an issuer are, within their respective authority, responsible for the information contained in the reports and financial statements that must be disclosed to the public and/or filed with the National Banking and Securities Commission or the Mexican Stock Exchange.

Registration of Placements

Whereas the Banking and Securities Commission must previously approve public offerings of specific securities that are to be carried out within Mexican territory, the actual placement transaction is not subject to its authorization. The very act of placement of securities is subject only to recordation by the Mexican Securities Exchange. The placement of securities usually occurs at the same date for the offering of such securities, after following a book-building system.

10 Subsequent equity offerings do not require this filing.
11 Subsequent equity offerings do not require this filing.

Book-building is still the most used marketing strategy for public offerings in Mexico. Usually, underwriters that market securities among institutional investors and financial intermediaries in the primary market tend to use the book-building system. Retail offers are managed directly by broker-dealers with their clients usually by means of electronic auction systems. The issuer must publish a public notice on the same date the relevant securities are offered and assigned through the Mexican Securities Exchange informing the investors that the relevant securities have been purchased in the market.

Registration of Secondary Trade

It is not required to obtain a specific authorization from the Banking and Securities Commission for secondary trading of securities. Secondary trading is simply recorded by the Mexican Securities Exchange and the specific broker dealers.

However, any person or entity that directly or indirectly as a result of one or more transactions holds 10 percent or more but less than thirty percent of a public company's stock listed in the Mexican Securities Exchange must inform to the public investors, through the Mexican Securities Exchange, said ownership the business day following the meeting of such threshold.

Furthermore, any person or entity that directly or indirectly holds 10 percent or more of a public company's stock listed in the Mexican Securities Exchange as well as any member of the board or relevant officer of the listed company must inform the Banking and Securities Commissions about the purchase or sale of securities of the relevant company in the following instances:

- If the amount of the transactions is equivalent or superior to UDIs 1,000,000 and the relevant transactions were performed within a calendar quarter of the year, such transactions must be informed within five business days after the end of said quarter; and
- If the amount of the transactions is equivalent or superior to UDIs 1,000,000 and the relevant transactions were performed within five days, such transactions must be informed the next business day after such transactions were completed.

A purchase of a significant participation in the capital stock of a public entity (ie, representing more than 30 per cent of the public entity's capital stock means the acquisition of the control of the public entity) will trigger the obligation to carry out a mandatory public tender offer.

Periodic Disclosure

In General

Public companies have three main obligations, ie, to report, to inform, and to disclose.

Reporting Obligations

Public companies must provide the following:

- Annual reports — This information updates the prospectus or the last annual report. These reports include the company's annual audited financial statements. Additionally, public companies must inform about their capital structure, the board members that are holders of one per cent or more of the company' capital stock, and the investors that hold five per cent or more of the company's capital stock.
- Quarterly reports — This information is filed pursuant to certain forms provided by the Banking and Securities Commission. These reports include the company's pro forma quarterly financial statements. The issuers of debt instruments in credit receivable securitization transactions also must report monthly specific financial information, including revenues and collection reports.
- Information — Public companies must inform investors about any shareholders' meeting, corporate restructure, or merger as well as any other notices addressed to their shareholders through the Mexican Securities Exchange within the time frames set forth by the Mexican Securities Exchange Regulations.
- Disclosure — Public companies must reveal to the general public, through the Mexican Securities Exchange, any relevant event that may affect the price or value of the stock. To determine if a specific event is relevant to investors, the company must consider whether the specific event is equivalent in value to five per cent of the company's assets, liabilities, or consolidated capital, or three per cent of the previous year's total sales. If it is not possible to determine if the specific event is relevant according to such criteria, the company must consider whether the event constitutes relevant information for investors to make an investment decision so as to understand the real situation of the company, or that may affect the value of the stock.

Official Trade

The average daily volume of stock securities traded in the Mexican Securities Exchange is p$14.4 thousand million and 384.2 million shares. The debt market is more active than the equity market. The number of issues traded in the debt market is variable considering there are short and long-term issues being traded at the same time that are constantly paid or cancelled.[12]

Regulated Market

The Mexican Exchange Market is a self-regulated entity and its fluctuations are determined by supply and demand of securities. The Securities Regulations set forth minimum capital requirements and standards for transactions in general terms. The Securities Regulations do not regulate prices or trading of specific securities.

Free Trade

Only securities subject to public offerings in Mexico are subject to the regulation and supervision of the Banking and Securities Commission. Regular securities and commercial transactions that are not subject to financial intermediation or listed in an exchange are not subject to any form of supervision or control by the Banking and Securities Commission.

Foreign Issuers with Primary Admission

First-time foreign equity issuers are required to submit the following documents:

- Registration statement;
- Copies of powers-of-attorney of all documents' signatories;
- Articles of incorporation and by-laws of the issuer;
- Corporate resolutions approving the public offering;
- Form of stock certificate;
- Audited financial statements;
- Independence letters;
- Legal opinion;
- Placement agreement;
- Prospectus; and
- Placement notices.

Additionally, the by-laws of foreign entities must contain similar minority shareholders' rights as those provided under the Securities Regulations. Foreign entities are not obligated to comply with local corporate governance obligations.[13]

Foreign Issuers with Secondary Admission

Foreign issuers of subsequent equity public offerings are not required to file their articles of incorporation, by-laws, or audited financial statements.

Issuers without Ongoing Disclosure Duties

Issuers without ongoing disclosure duties that have listed securities in a foreign exchange and have securities listed in the Mexican Securities Exchange must file with the Banking and Securities Commission and with the Mexican 13 Securities Law, arts 58 and 59.

Securities Exchange all offering and periodical information submitted to the foreign exchange.

The Mexican Securities Exchange will be entitled to request from the relevant foreign issuer a summary of said information in Spanish. In the event the foreign issuer does not have any securities listed in any exchange, it will be required to file all applicable documentation to list securities as described above.

Privileged 'Foreign Private' Issuers

Besides the Mexican government, Mexican financial institutions, and other specific entities, only international multilateral financial entities (organismos financieros multilaterales) to which Mexico is a party are 'privileged' for purposes of listing securities. This privilege consists in the possibility to perform a preventive listing of securities under a generic form (inscripción preventiva, en su modalidad de genérica).

This type of listing only requires generic information from the issuer and the security to be listed. Once it is obtained, it allows the issuer to issue securities on a regular basis and to market them in the Mexican Securities Exchange after obtaining the recordation of the securities in the RNV. The issuer must inform the Securities and Banking Commission about the new securities for it to register them no later than the next business day after they are placed in the market.[14]

Issuers of Registered Securities

In General

As mentioned above, issuers of registered securities will be required to file lesser documents and information to list new securities.

ADR Disclosure

Foreign issuers that concurrently have listed securities on the Mexican Securities Exchange and in other foreign exchanges (eg, ADRs on the New York Stock Exchange) have no restrictions under Mexican Law or the Securities Regulations to perform such issue and listing.

Mexican entities that issue and offer securities in foreign exchanges, and securities issued pursuant to Mexican Law and offered in foreign exchanges, whether directly or through trusts or similar vehicles, must inform the Securities and Banking Commission about the main characteristics of the issuance. This information does not result in a registration of the securities in the RNV. Such information is kept by the Securities and Banking Commission for information and statistical purposes only and thus the relevant securities may not be offered in Mexico unless under a private offering.

14 Banking and Securities Commission Regulations, art 10.

Proxy Disclosure

In General

Shareholders of a public company (SAB or SAPI) have the right to be represented in a shareholders' meeting by means of a proxy letter, including all the information specified in the Securities Law and the Securities and Banking Commission Regulations. Such proxy letters must disclose the following information:

- Specify in a clear manner the name of the company as well as the specific agenda; and
- Contain space in the document for the shareholder to address specific instructions as to how he wishes the agent to exercise the proxy letter.

The secretary of the board of directors is obligated to verify that the relevant proxy letters comply with these principles.[15]

Trading Rules

Trading of securities in the Mexican Securities Exchange is regulated by the Mexican Securities Exchange Regulations. There are two main structures for trading securities in the Mexican Securities Exchange:

- Continuous operation (operación contínua); and
- Public auction (subasta).

Pursuant to the continuous operation format, offers may be allowed and transactions may be completed at any moment during intraday operations. Pursuant to the public auction format, offers are only allowed during a specific offering period and, at the end of said period, the issuer of the best offer is entitled to the relevant securities.

Securities Offerings

In General

Only broker-dealers and banks allowed by the Mexican Securities Exchange to perform as intermediaries may perform as placement agents or underwriters pursuant to underwriting agreements they execute with their clients. Underwriting agreements for the marketing or securities may be structured either in a 'best efforts' (mejores esfuerzos) or a firm commitment (en firme) manner, although firm commitment underwriting agreements are uncommon in Mexico.

Green shoe options must be explicitly authorized by the Securities and Banking Commission or otherwise the placement agent will not be entitled to offer additional stock. Stabilization activities are permitted by statute without a specific agreement; however, stabilization activities may only be performed with funds obtained from securities sold after exercising a green shoe option. Additionally, it is common practice to authorize main or leader placement agents to enter into sub-placement or placement participation agreements with other broker-dealers instead of having syndicated placement agreements.

Offer

The offering of securities may be performed whether primary or secondary in connection with the securities, and it may be either national (only in the Mexican Securities Exchange) or global (national and foreign concurrently) in connection with the exchange where the securities will be listed. Offerings may be performed under a program if the relevant securities are debt instruments.

Public

Any individual or entity may acquire any kind or security if its individual investment regime allows it. Some securities are designed for institutional and qualified investors but, any investor may acquire such instruments by representing that he, she, or it knows all risks related to said instruments, including such risks as extraordinary volatility or dependence to a third party for payment.

Place of Order

All trading transactions carried out in the Mexican Securities Exchange are performed through the Electronic System of Negotiations (Sistema Electrónico de Negociación) and formalized by means of special forms specified by the Mexican Securities Exchange. The transactions may only be perfected during trading hours; however, it is possible to submit purchase and sale offers outside trading hours.

Orders are placed by broker-dealers acting on their own behalf or on behalf of their clients. Broker-dealers must appoint authorized traders within the company, who are qualified individuals responsible for the passwords of the specific broker-dealer to enter into the Electronic System of Negotiations and to place orders.

Listed Securities

The Mexican Securities Exchange is a self-regulated entity that is divided into the following sections:

- Section I — Stock Securities;
- Section II — Stock Certificates of Investment Funds;
- Section III — Government Bonds;
- Section IV — Debt Securities;

- Section V — Options; and
- Section VI — Development Capital Certificates (Certificados de Capital de Desarrollo), which are equity/debt hybrid instruments.[16]

Delisting

A public company may be delisted either voluntarily or by order of the Banking and Securities Commission. Mandatory de-listings may be requested by the Banking and Securities Commission if the relevant security does not comply with the Mexican Securities Exchange listing requirements or if the company has breached its obligations under the Securities Regulations.

If the Banking and Securities Commission mandates the de-listing of a specific security, the company must launch a tender offer within the next 180 days addressed to those shareholders that are not members of the controlling group. The company must create a trust and transfer to funds to acquire the stock of the shareholders that did not attend to the tender offer.

In a voluntary de-listing, 95 per cent of the company's shareholders convened at a shareholders' meeting may resolve to de-list the company. In such event, the company must launch a tender offer. Tender offers require the prior authorization from the Securities and Banking Commission. The minimum time frame for a tender offer is 20 business days. Assignation will be prorated among all the shareholders that sold their stock until the end of the tender offer. The tender offer needs to be addressed to all shareholders, without regard as to whether they have limited vote stock.

Disclosure of Purchase of Substantial Holdings

Shareholder Duties

Shareholders that control, directly or indirectly, 10 per cent or more of a public company's capital stock, as well as members of the board and other relevant executives of said public company must inform the Securities and Banking Commission of purchases and sales of securities issued by the company they own, control, or provide services to, within the time periods mentioned above.

Company Duties

Public companies must inform the Banking and Securities Commission annually about its capital structure, the board members that are holders of one per cent or more of the company' capital stock, the investors that hold five per cent or more of the company's capital stock, and the 10 principal stockholders.

16 As of the 2014 Financial Reform, a new type of capital development certificate was introduced, specifically the development, commercialization, or management of real estate properties.

Insider Trading and Fraud

In General

The Securities Law sets forth that the use of privileged information (información privilegiada) is a crime (insider trading). Privileged information is any information that has or may have influence in the price of a specific security or the financial position of the issuer which has not been disclosed to the general public. The following individuals, among others, are deemed to have privileged information in connection with an issuer, unless otherwise proved:

- The members of the board, the general director, and any other relevant executive;
- The shareholders that hold 10 per cent or more of the issuer's capital stock (if the issuer is a financial company, such amount will be five per cent); and
- The persons who may reasonably access said privileged information and vary considerably their investment patterns.[17]

Individuals in possession of privileged information are not allowed to:

- Perform transactions with securities over which they possess privileged information;
- Transfer or disclose the privileged information to third parties unless, pursuant to their possession, it is their obligation to disclose such information; and
- Issue investment recommendations in connection with securities or issuers over which they possess privileged information or that may be affected by said privileged information.

As of the 2014 Financial Reform, public companies must maintain a record or list of the individuals who were privy to privileged information before it was disclosed to the general public.

Basis of Territorial Link

The information must be connected to securities listed and traded in the Mexican Securities Exchange; otherwise, this restriction will not be applicable. Learning privileged information, even through misappropriation, is not a crime under the Securities Law.

There is a crime however, when there is a purchase or sale of securities that may be influenced by said information or when there is a wrongful disclosure of said information to a third party.

17 Securities Law, art 363.

Extraterritorial Application

This restriction only applies to purchase or sale of securities in the Mexican Securities Exchange, despite where the privileged information was transferred or learned. Individuals who breach this principle may be subject to criminal responsibility in Mexico, resulting in considerable fines.

Thus, in the event the suspect is not located in Mexico, such fines may be imposed against any assets he has in Mexico or, if an extradition treaty is in place, it may be requested from the country of origin.

Public Take-Over Bids

In General

Public take-over bids may not be prevented contractually. Although poison pills may be included in the by-laws of the company, all transactions with listed securities must be performed through the market. In the event bidders are competing for a specific security under a public auction format, the best offer at the end will keep the relevant security.

Territorial Application (Foreign Bidder and Domestic Target)

Some specific industries have limitation in the amount and type of securities that foreign investors may acquire, such as the local financial services industry, mining, or agricultural industry. Foreign investment limitations are not described or analyzed in this chapter.

Otherwise, foreign bidders have no restrictions in comparison to local bidders. At the end of the auction period, the highest bidder will be entitled to the relevant securities pursuant to the Securities Market Law and the Mexican Securities Exchange Regulations.

International Private Law

Agreements governed by foreign law may be enforced in Mexico provided that such agreement is in accordance with local public order, agreements to perform an act other than payment of money and covenants, and other agreements not to perform an act are not specifically enforceable in Mexico, although any breach thereof may give rise to an action for money damages.

Procedural Requirements

The enforceability in Mexico of the terms of agreements governed by foreign law may be limited by bankruptcy, insolvency, reorganization, moratorium, and suspension of payments or other laws relating to, affecting, or limiting the enforcement of creditors' rights generally.

A final judgment rendered by foreign courts pursuant to a legal action instituted before such courts in connection with any agreements governed by foreign law would be recognized by and valid and enforceable in the courts of Mexico (without any re-examination by such courts of the matters adjudicated by such judgment), provided that:

- The judgment has been rendered in an in personam action (an action against the person founded on a personal liability, as opposed to an action for a thing or action in rem);
- The Mexican courts do not determine that the obligation for which enforcement is sought violates Mexican law or public policy (orden público) or any international treaty to which Mexico is a signatory, or general principles of international law, insofar as procedural requirements are concerned;
- Process in the action has been served personally;
- The judgment is a final judgment according to the laws that govern said agreement;
- The judgment fulfils the necessary requirements to be considered authentic;
- The Mexican court before which enforcement of the judgment is requested will require a rogatory letter from the court that rendered the judgment, which rogatory letter must comply with the formalities provided for in the Federal Civil Procedures Code (Código Federal de Procedimientos Civiles);
- The courts of the country whose laws govern the agreement would enforce Mexican judgments as a matter of reciprocity;
- The action on which the final judgment is rendered is not the subject matter of a lawsuit among the same parties that is pending before a Mexican court, or resolved by definite judgments (sentencia definitiva) by a Mexican court that has previously served process (prevenido) or delivered a rogatory letter to the competent authorities in accordance with Mexican law; and
- The court issuing the judgment is considered competent under the rules internationally accepted and which are compatible with Mexican procedural laws.

Recognition of Foreign Take-Over Regulation/Compulsory Public Tender Offers

An investor or group of investors that intend to acquire 30 per cent or more of a public company's capital stock or the control of a public company must conduct a compulsory tender offer. The 30 per cent threshold does not refer to public float. Please note that during such tender offer, other bidders may offer a better price. As of the 2014 Financial Reforms, the penalties for non-compliance with the mandatory tender rules contained in the Securities Regulation can range from 10 to 100 per cent of the total value of the bid.

Jurisdiction Conflicts

In General

Most conflicts of laws under securities transactions are solved pursuant to contractual law. Governing law and competent courts will be the ones chosen by the parties in the relevant agreement.

A controversy that takes place in the Mexican Securities Exchange will be solved pursuant to the Mexican Securities Exchange Regulations and the procedures set forth therein before they are brought to a court. There is no precedent of a controversy derived from trading of listed securities brought to a court in Mexico.

Genuine and False Conflicts

Under Mexican law, the will of the parties is the main binding principle among them. As a general rule, if the parties agree to subject an agreement to foreign law and courts, the Mexican courts will have to enforce such agreement. If the parties agreed to subject the agreement to foreign law but Mexican courts are competent, such foreign law will be applied by the Mexican courts in the same terms that the foreign court would have applied it. Foreign law will not be implemented, inter alia, if:

- Such choice of law was made to wrongfully avoid fundamental principles of Mexican law and the judge determines the existence of such wrongful intentions; and
- The relevant foreign law or the result of implementing foreign law will contravene Mexican public order.[18]

If the parties did not agree upon a specific governing law or jurisdiction, the Mexican courts will be competent as long as the listed securities remain deposited in Mexico with a Mexican Central Depositary Institution (Indeval) and such agreement will be enforced in Mexico.[19]

As of the 2014 Financial Reform, it is now permitted to issue and deposit securities with the Depository Trust Company without actually physically issuing such securities, provided certain regulatory requirements are met.

Multilateral Approaches

In General

When several aspects or conditions of an agreement may be subject or governed by laws from different states or countries, all such laws will be applied

18 Federal Civil Code, art 15.
19 Federal Civil Code, art 13, ss III and V.

harmonically. The judge with jurisdiction is authorized to solve such controversy in an equitable manner using its own criteria.[20]

Substantive Law Solutions

Harmonization. As mentioned above, the judge with jurisdiction is authorized to solve such controversy harmonizing all applicable laws in an equitable manner using the court's own criteria.

Recognition. As mentioned above, foreign law may be applicable by Mexican courts when agreed by the parties or if such law is applicable pursuant to Mexican law. For such purposes, Mexican courts are entitled to obtain all required information in connection with the enforceability, currency, and interpretation of such foreign law, such as legal opinions or expert advice.

The Mexican Federal Civil Code is silent as to whether the cost of obtaining such information will be paid by the plaintiff, the defendant, or both.

Procedural Solutions

The law applicable to a specific transaction or agreement will be determined by applying the following:

- The binding relationship lawfully created in any of the states of Mexico or in a foreign state will be recognized in Mexico;
- The creation, regulation, and termination of real estate rights and lease rights over real estate property and movable assets will be governed by the laws where such assets are located; and
- The legal consequences of the agreements will be governed by the law of the place where such agreements will be fulfilled, unless the parties had legally agreed over a different governing law.[21]

Introduction

In General

This chapter provides an overview of securities laws and regulations in The Netherlands.[1] First, a general overview of the regulatory system, the legal sources, authorities, and procedures is given. This chapter introduces the legislation, authorities, sources, and procedures that a practitioner may encounter when confronted with a securities problem involving The Netherlands.

The second section builds on this introduction. It contains a fairly detailed description of requirements for admission to the securities markets. It discusses market participants, more specifically the laws and regulations regarding the exchanges and brokers and dealers. In addition, it discusses the requirements for securities to be admitted to the securities markets. This sub-section is divided into three parts: listed securities, unlisted securities, and investment undertakings. For these three groups, specific requirements for the securities and the issuers, as well as rules regarding the prospectus and corporate governance are discussed.

The third section discusses the rules for trading. It discusses what is considered an offering, when an offering must be accompanied by a prospectus, and when an offer will be considered to take place in or from The Netherlands. The laws regarding the disclosure of substantial holdings are described. The rules regarding insider trading and fraud and the rules regarding public take-over bids are discussed. The final section briefly discusses approaches to jurisdictional conflicts.

Regulatory System

European Community Directives

Much of the law in the securities area derives from European Community (EC) Directives. Since there is a separate chapter on European law, this aspect will not be further discussed. All applicable EC Directives have been implemented in several Dutch Acts that will be discussed below. However, some Directives have been partly implemented through self-regulation by the securities exchanges, by regulations of the Securities Board of The Netherlands (Stichting Toezicht Effectenverkeer) or the Dutch Central Bank (De Nederlandsche Bank), both supervisory bodies in the securities field.

1 This chapter should not be regarded as legal advice. Due to its scope and length, it inevitably contains generalisations and simplifications.

Dutch Laws Regarding Securities

Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995. The Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 (Wet Toezicht Effectenverkeer) is the main Act regulating the securities industry in The Netherlands. It regulates a number of topics, discussed below. It also is the basis for the powers of the Securities Board of The Netherlands.

Securities Offerings. The Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 regulates all non-private offerings of securities, except for listed securities and securities issued by investment undertakings. In addition, so-called savings certificates (spaarbewijzen) are not regulated by the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995.

The general structure of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 is that all non-private offerings of securities are prohibited, unless a prospectus is published that complies with the requirements set out in the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995[2] or unless an exception or exemption from these requirements applies. These requirements, exceptions, and exemptions are set out in the Decree on the Supervision of Securities Trade (Besluit Toezicht Effectenverkeer), the Further Regulation regarding the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1999 (hereinafter 'Further Regulation'), and the Exemption Regulation to the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 (hereinafter 'Exemption Regulation'). Offerings within a 'closed circle', ie, private offerings, are not regulated by the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995. They are not subject to specific government regulation.

Exchanges. In addition, pursuant to the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, securities exchanges in The Netherlands must be officially recognised or have obtained an exemption from this requirement by the Minister of Finance. Otherwise, they are prohibited.

Securities Institutions. The Act on the Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 requires all securities institutions (Effecteninstellingen) (for a definition, see text, below) to have a licence from the Securities Board of The Netherlands.[3] The requirements that securities institutions must fulfil to obtain a licence have been specified in the Decree on the Supervision of Securities Trade.

Mandatory Investors Compensation Arrangement. The Act on Super-vision of Securities Trade 1995[4] also requires all securities institutions and banks to become part of the branch-wide investors compensation arrangement. Such an arrangement became necessary because of Directive 97/9.[5]

3 Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, s 7.
4 Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, s 28a.

Holding More than Five Per Cent of Issued Capital of a Securities Institution. The Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 prohibits holding, acquiring, or enlarging five per cent or more of the issued capital (a so-called 'qualified participation') or votes thereon in a securities institution without a declaration of non-opposition from the Minister, who has delegated this power to the Securities Board of The Netherlands. Excepted are participations that have been approved by the Dutch Central Bank pursuant to the Credit Institutions Act (Wet Toezicht Kredietwezen). This topic is not further addressed.

Insider Trading. The Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 also prohibits insider trading (see text, below).

Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings. The Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings (Wet Toezicht Beleggingsinstellingen) prohibits all offerings of or payments in exchange for shares in an investment undertaking, unless that investment undertaking has been granted a licence by the Dutch Central Bank (De Nederlandsche Bank). Offerings and transactions within a 'closed circle' are excepted.

In addition, the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings sets forth requirements that need to be fulfilled to obtain a licence. These requirements have been specified in the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings (Besluit Toezicht Beleggingsinstellingen). One of these requirements is that a prospectus regarding the investment undertaking should be made available.

There are a number of exceptions and exemptions to the licence requirement. These have been set out in the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings and the Exemption Regulation to the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings. If the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings is applicable, the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 will not be applicable.

Other Laws Regarding Securities. Several other laws are relevant to the securities industries.

Credit Supervision Act 1992. The Credit Supervision Act 1992 regulates banks and similar institutions. The Credit Supervision Act requires all banks to obtain a licence and arranges for the supervision of all banks by the Dutch Central Bank. Unlicensed persons or entities are prohibited from obtaining money from the public.[6] However, the obtaining of money as consideration for securities issued in accordance with the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 is exempted from this prohibition.

6 Credit Supervision Act, s 82.

Generally, banks that are under Credit Supervision Act supervision are excepted from the supervision of the Securities Board of The Netherlands, and they are exempted from licence requirements for securities institutions of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995. However, due to agreements between the Dutch Central Bank and the Securities Board of The Netherlands, the Board strictly supervises securities-trade-related activities of banks. The Credit Supervision Act is not further addressed, except in the context of certain exceptions and exemptions from the securities laws proper.

Major Holdings Disclosure Act. Pursuant to the Major Holdings Disclosure Act (Wet melding zeggenschap in ter beurse genoteerde vennootschappen), the acquisition of substantial holdings in listed companies must be disclosed.[7]

The purpose of the Major Holdings Disclosure Act is to increase the transparency of the securities market for listed securities. The Major Holdings Disclosure Act, therefore, creates two obligations. First, the investor must disclose certain information about transactions in listed securities to the issuer and to the Securities Board of The Netherlands. Subsequently, the Securities Board of The Netherlands must publish information regarding the transaction in a national publication.[8]

Other Laws. There are specific rules for certain very specific and limited securities and securities services. Thus, the Canvassing Act (Colportagewet) contains some rules regarding the canvassing by personal visit only in unlisted securities, of which the price is not otherwise regularly published. The Savings Certificates Act (Wet inzake Spaarbewijzen) regulates savings certificates, which are defined as bearer commercial paper representing a nominal claim on the issuer, with no interim interest payments.[9] The Security Depository Act (Wet Giraal Effectenverkeer) regulates the keeping and transferral of bearer shares admitted to its system. In practice, all listed securities are deposited pursuant to the Security Depository Act.

The Netherlands Central Institution for Giro Securities Transactions (Nederlands Centraal Instituut Giraal Effectenverkeer, NECIGEF) acts as a central depository for bearer shares. All banks maintain accounts with the NECIGEF. Transferral of bearer shares from or to customers if those banks may be done by simple book entry. In addition, there are specific anti-money-laundering laws and specific laws regarding notification and information regarding financial transactions with persons in other countries.

Rules of the Amsterdam Exchanges NV and Socio-Economic Council Merger Code

Rules of the Amsterdam Exchanges NV. For securities transactions related to the Amsterdam Exchanges NV, the Rules of the Amsterdam Exchanges NV are the most important source of law. Its regulations are binding out of contract, the Listing Agreement. The most important are:

- The Listing Rules (Fondsenreglement);
- The Special Listing Rules NMAX (Reglement Bijzondere Vereisten Nieuwe Markt Amsterdam); and
- The Listing Procedure Rules (Reglement Procedure Beursnotering).

The most important of these, the Listing Rules, will be revised in the near future, due to changes in the structure of the Amsterdam Exchanges NV, and changes in the law.

Socio-Economic Council Merger Code. The Socio-Economic Council is the foremost advisory body of the government in the field of socio-economic affairs in The Netherlands. It consists of representatives of employers, unions and the government. It has adopted the Merger Code (Fusiecode) to further both union involvement in mergers and shareholder protection with regard to public take-over bids.

Legal Sources

European Union Law

There are numerous EC Directives in the securities field, and much of Dutch securities law derives from these Directives. In this respect, EC Directives are an important source of law.

Dutch Laws and Regulations

In General. For most securities problems, the solution will be found in the several securities Acts, their legislative history, and their accompanying regulations. An overview of securities Acts has been given above. Acts often delegate further rule-making to the government. This may be done in several ways. First, the government may issue a General Measure of Administration (Algemene Maatregel van Bestuur, AMvB), through a Royal Decree. Second, if the Act or the General Measure of Administration so stipulates, the Minister may issue ministerial regulations.

Finally, much rule-making has been delegated further to the supervisory authorities, the Securities Board of The Netherlands, and the Dutch Central Bank. Therefore, a practitioner may be confronted with an Act, further specified by Royal Decree containing a General Measure of Administration, further specified by ministerial regulations, and further specified by rules of the supervisory authority. These sources of law have been stated in hierarchical order.

Court Cases. There are very few court cases in the securities field. Moreover, formally, there is no stare decisis or rule of precedent in The Netherlands. Informally, court cases have strong persuasive value. Of course, the persuasiveness will depend on the place in the hierarchy of the court that decided a case. Thus, decisions of the Supreme Court (Hoge Raad) have the strongest persuasive force. Below these are the Courts of Appeal (Gerechtshoven), General Trial Courts (Arrondissementsrechtbanken), and Cantonal Courts (Kantongerechten). The last mentioned have a limited subject matter jurisdiction and, generally, they are not involved in securities litigation.

Cases of the Securities Dispute Commission. Disputes between private investors and securities institutions admitted to one of the exchanges, may be decided by the Securities Dispute Commission (Geschillencommissie Beursbedrijf). The investor may decide to use this alternative means of dispute resolution, or to go to court. The Securities Dispute Commission's judgments are binding on the parties, with the force of a contract between them. Because the procedure is inexpensive, because the Securities Dispute Commission has a good deal of know-how, and because the procedure is not public, it is generally considered preferable to court proceedings.

Opinions of the Securities Dispute Commission are published and carry considerable authority in the field of relations between private investors and brokers/portfolio managers. Generally, courts refer to these opinions, and they will follow their lead. However, the opinions are not law, and there may be differences between court opinions and the opinions of the Securities Dispute Commission.

Authorities

Minister of Finance

In both the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 and the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, the relevant government entity is the Minister of Finance. However, the Minister of Finance has delegated most of his powers under the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 and the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings to two supervisory authorities, the Securities Board of The Netherlands and the Dutch Central Bank. The Minister is responsible for the adequate supervision of the Securities Board of The Netherlands and Dutch Central Bank. The Minister has retained the power to:

- Create generally applicable exemptions from prospectus requirements;
- Impose periodic disclosure requirements;
- Establish licence requirements to engage in securities services;
- Require approval for acquiring a larger stake than five per cent in a securities institution; and
- Establish recognition and exemption requirements for exchanges.

In addition, the Minister has retained a number of the powers regarding securities exchanges.

Securities Board of The Netherlands

In General. The Securities Board of The Netherlands is a private law foundation, of which the board members are appointed by the Minister of Finance. Pursuant to section 40 of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, the Minister of Finance has delegated most of his powers under the Act to the Securities Board of The Netherlands. Thus, for example, the Securities Board of The Netherlands makes rules regarding the structure of a prospectus and determines whether an exemption from the prospectus requirement applies. The Securities Board of The Netherlands also grants licences to securities institutions.

The Securities Board of The Netherlands has been delegated the power to hear appeals against refusals to list or decisions to de-list securities by the Amsterdam Exchanges NV.[10] In addition, the Securities Board of The Netherlands has been delegated the powers of the Minister of Finance under the Major Holdings Disclosure Act.

Powers to Obtain Information. Pursuant to section 29 of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, the Securities Board of The Netherlands has the power to demand the information reasonably necessary for its supervisory activities from issuers, securities institutions, exchanges, and persons having more than five per cent of the shares of a securities institution.

Moreover, employees of the Securities Board of The Netherlands have the right to enter all places if necessary, view business documents, and make copies of these documents. All persons are required to co-operate.[11] This also applies to foreign issuers and securities institutions when securities transactions in The Netherlands are concerned.

Power to Give Directions. The Securities Board of The Netherlands has the power to give directions to persons and entities, within the purview of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, if they do not comply with the law.[12] The Securities Board of The Netherlands also may publish a warning with regard to certain persons or entities.[13]

In the event that directions by the Securities Board of The Netherlands are not complied with, the Securities Board may notify the securities institution in writing that any or all of its organs and officers may only exercise their powers after obtaining approval from the Securities Board of the Netherlands. Persons who do not comply with this arrangement are personally liable to the securities institution for acts done without permission of the Securities Board of The Netherlands.

The Securities Board of the Netherlands also may publish the direction given, as well as any correspondence between the Securities Board of the Netherlands and the securities institution.[14] The securities institution may nullify transactions concluded in violation of these directions if the third party knew of the measure. The maximum duration of this situation is one year.

Confidentiality. The Securities Board of The Netherlands and its employees are under a duty to keep all information they obtain secret,[15] unless one of the following situations occurs. The Securities Board of The Netherlands may divulge information when:

- Its employees are called as witnesses or experts in criminal proceedings; or
- A securities institution has been declared bankrupt or has been dissolved, in civil proceedings.[16]

Additionally, the Securities Board of The Netherlands may give information to the Amsterdam Exchanges NV.[17] Finally, the Securities Board of The Netherlands is under a limited obligation to inform the Minister of Finance.[18] Pursuant to section 31(5) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, the Securities Board of The Netherlands will not need to provide information that may be traced to specific corporations or institutions.[19]

Co-Operation with Other Supervisory Authorities. The Securities Board of The Netherlands co-operates and exchanges information with other supervisory authorities in The Netherlands, like the Dutch Central Bank.[20] More importantly, in the context of international transactions, the Securities Board of The Netherlands may give information to foreign governments and foreign supervisory authorities charged with the supervision of financial markets. There are limitations on this power, such as when:

- The foreign request is too vague;
- Compliance would violate Dutch law or public order; or
- It is not certain that the information will solely be used for the purposes stated by the foreign authority.[21]

In addition, the Securities Board of The Netherlands co-operates with supervisory authorities of other EU and European Economic Area (EEA) countries.[22] Likewise, the Securities Board of The Netherlands co-operates with the American and British authorities, pursuant to treaties between these countries and The Netherlands. The Securities Board of The Netherlands has the power to gather information at the request of the foreign authority. A representative of the foreign authority may take part in these investigations.[23] Persons asked for information must provide it, must co-operate, and must give access to all business papers.[24] The co-operation with other EU and EEA supervisory authorities entails the giving of information as described above, but it also includes powers to ask for verification of information or to verify the information itself.[25]

The Securities Board of The Netherlands may enter into written agreements with foreign authorities, even ones that do not have a treaty with The Netherlands, pursuant to section 33 of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, but these agreements must be approved by the Minister of Finance.

Competent Authority for European Community Directives. In addition, the Securities Board of The Netherlands is the 'competent authority' for purposes of the Public Offer Prospectus Directive,[26] the Capital Adequacy Directive,[27] and the Investment Services Directive.[28] However, with regard to banks (kredietinstellingen) and with regard to investment undertakings, the Dutch Central Bank is the competent authority pursuant to these Directives.[29]

Dutch Central Bank

The Dutch Central Bank is the supervisory authority both for credit institutions and for investment undertakings. The Minister of Finance has delegated all of his powers under the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings to the Dutch Central Bank, pursuant to section 29 of the Act,[30] with two conditions, namely:

- Written agreements with foreign supervisory authorities must be approved by the Minister; and
- The Dutch Central Bank has a duty to consult the Securities Board of The Netherlands when the Dutch Central Bank exempts investment undertakings from certain requirements when they are listed on certain exchanges.

What has been said above for the Securities Board of The Netherlands with regard to powers to obtain information, to give information, confidentiality, co-operation with other and foreign supervisory authorities, and binding directions to those institutions that it supervises also applies to the Dutch Central Bank, although it is based on different sections of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings.[31]

In case of special circumstances that threaten the functioning of an investment undertaking, the Dutch Central Bank may decide that any or all organs and officers of the investment undertaking may only exercise their powers after obtaining approval or instructions from the Dutch Central Bank. It must notify the investment undertaking in writing of this decision.[32] Those persons who do not comply with the directions of the Dutch Central Bank in such a case are personally liable for damages to the investment undertaking.

In addition, the investment undertaking may nullify transactions concluded in violation of these directions if the third party knew of the measure.[33] The maximum duration of this situation is one year.[34]

Amsterdam Exchanges NV

As of 1 January 1997, all recognised exchanges in The Netherlands are owned by the Amsterdam Exchanges NV. The officially recognised exchanges are:

- Amsterdam Exchanges NV Stock Exchange (Amsterdam Exchanges NV-Effectenbeurs);
- Amsterdam Exchanges NV Options Exchange;
- Amsterdam Exchanges NV Financial Futures Exchange (Amsterdam Exchanges NV-Financiele Termijn Markt); and
- Amsterdam Exchanges NV Commodities Futures Exchange (Amsterdam Exchanges NV-Agrarische Termijnmarkt).

The Amsterdam Exchanges NV Stock Exchange consists of two separate markets, namely:

- The Official Market; and
- The NMAX, a market specifically for young, growing enterprises.

In addition to keeping the only recognised stock exchanges in The Netherlands, the Amsterdam Exchanges NV is the competent authority for purposes of the Stock Exchange Admission Directive,[35] the Listing Particulars Directive,[36] and the Periodical Disclosure for Listed Securities Directive.[37] The Amsterdam Exchanges NV is mandated to bring about co-operation with foreign exchanges pursuant to these Directives.[38]

Administrative Law Act (Algemene Wet Bestuursrecht). Appeal against decisions by the Minister of Finance, the Securities Board of The Netherlands, and the Dutch Central Bank under the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 and the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings is possible. Such appeals must be lodged with the Business Appeals Board (College van Beroep van Bedrijfsleven), which is the highest court for many business administrative law affairs. The procedural rules for these appeals are set out in the General Administrative Law Act and the Administrative Adjudication Business Organisations Act (Wet bestuursrechtspraak Bedrijfsorganisatie).

However, a refusal by the Amsterdam Exchanges NV to list certain securities or a decision to de-list certain securities from the Exchanges, unless this decision was made to implement a Directive from the Minister of Finance, must first be appealed to the Minister of Finance, who has delegated this power to the Securities Board of The Netherlands.[39]

Admission

Market Participants

Exchanges

The Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 prohibits the maintenance of a securities exchange without recognition as an official exchange by the Minister of Finance.[40] An 'exchange' is defined in section 1(e) of the Act on the Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 as 'a regulated market meant to connect supply and demand in securities'. Official recognition can only be obtained when the exchange is maintained in The Netherlands, and the exchange meets certain, unfortunately unspecified, requirements regarding the reliability and expertise of its directors, the financial guarantees of the exchange, the clearing and settlement systems, and the powers of the exchange to compel its members to comply with the law and exchange regulations. The Minister of Finance can impose conditions and restrictions on his recognition.[41]

However, no recognition is needed by exchanges already licensed in another member state of the EU or EEA, under the conditions and procedures as set out in the Investment Services Directive.[42] Note, however, that the definitions of securities in the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 and the Investment Services Directive are not the same. Therefore, the exception for EU and EEA exchanges will not apply to exchanges that trade in securities considered securities under the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, but are not considered securities under the Investment Services Directive. Most notably, commodity futures are not considered securities by the Investment Services Directive, whereas they are securities under the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995. The exception for exchanges from EU and EEA countries of section 22(4) of the

Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, therefore, does not apply to exchanges that trade in those commodities futures.

The exception is conditioned on the foreign exchange's compliance with the rules necessary for the adequate functioning of the exchanges or the protection of investors using the exchanges.[43] In addition, the Minister may grant an exemption of the recognition requirement to any other exchange, with conditions and restrictions, if he wishes.[44] Such an exemption means the prohibition of section 22 of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 does not apply; yet, this does not mean that the exchange is 'officially recognised'. Therefore, the exemption of the prospectus requirement for listed securities may not apply to such an exempted exchange.

Recognised exchanges must notify the Securities Board of The Netherlands in advance of any changes in their rules and regulations and must ensure that the rules and regulations can be enforced against institutions admitted to their exchanges.[45] In addition, the Securities Board of The Netherlands can give directions to the officially recognised exchanges.[46]

Securities Institutions

In General. Securities institutions are:

- Brokers (effectenbemiddelaars);
- Dealers, underwriters, and brokers regarding interest swaps, currency swaps, securities swaps, or comparable derivatives; and
- Portfolio managers (vermogensbeheerders).[47]

Licence. Each securities institution, whether or not it is admitted to a recognised exchange, needs a Securities Board of The Netherlands licence if it provides these services in or from The Netherlands. Therefore, a licence is required for securities services regarding transactions on the recognised exchanges, as well as for 'off-market' transactions and transactions through transborder electronic trading systems.[48] The licence is not required if an exception or an exemption applies.

Exceptions to Licence Requirement. The following securities institutions do not need a licence:

- Securities institutions which are already under the supervision of a supervisory authority pursuant to some other Dutch law than the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade

43 Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, s 22(3) and (4).
45 Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, s 24(1) and (2).

1995 (eg, insurance companies and banks registered under the Credit Supervision Act that have received permission to provide securities services);
- Central banks or comparable institutions of other EU or EEA member states;[49]
- Foreign securities institutions which have a so-called European passport (see text, below);[50]
- Institutions which perform their activities exclusively for affiliated companies or exclusively perform portfolio management activities regarding participation plans of employees;[51]
- Institutions which only incidentally perform securities services in connection with their profession (eg, civil law notaries, attorneys-at-law, and accountants);[52] and
- Persons whose main business is trading in raw materials with either professional users of these materials or with others who engage in the same trade and who perform securities services only with these parties and to the extent that their business so requires.[53]

European Passport. Securities institutions do not need a licence if they:

- Are domiciled in an EU or EEA member state;
- Hold a licence issued by the competent authority of their home country; and
- Have fulfilled the so-called 'notification proceeding' and, therefore, possess a 'European passport'.[54]

The supervisory authority of the home country supervises these institutions with regard to compliance with business and economic requirements. The notification proceeding differs, depending on whether the securities institution will provide its services in The Netherlands through a branch office in The Netherlands or will provide the services from the home country. In the first case, the Securities Board of The Netherlands must have received a notification of the supervisory authority of the home country, indicating:

- The intended activities;
- The organisational structure of the institution;
- The address of the branch office; and
- The identity of the persons responsible for the daily operation of the branch office.[55]

In the second case, a notification by the securities institution to the supervisory authority of its home country regarding the intended activities in The Netherlands is sufficient.[56] The supervisory authority of the home country will then inform the Securities Board of The Netherlands.

However, according to a decision of the Minister of Finance,[57] securities institutions domiciled in EU and EEA countries that have not completely implemented the Investment Services Directive or the Capital Adequacy Directive cannot use this exception. According to the Securities Board of The Netherlands, the United Kingdom, Ireland, Sweden, Denmark, Belgium, Finland and France have completely implemented the Directives.[58]

Exemptions from the Licence Requirement. The Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 provides for exemptions from the licence requirement that can be distinguished in exemptions:

- Not related to the type of securities for which services are provided; and
- Only for services in one or more types of securities.

The exemptions unrelated to the type of securities are:

- The exemption for branch pension funds, company pension funds, and company saving funds under the supervision of the Insurance Supervisory Authority (Verzekeringskamer) that only provide securities services for the branch or company concerned;[59]
- The so-called 'family' companies (ie, Dutch corporations whose shareholders can only be a closed circle of family members), which only provide securities services for members of that closed circle;[60] and
- Persons or legal entities (cliënten-remisiers) that, when offering or performing securities services, only introduce clients to other securities institutions or investment undertakings.[61]

The exemptions for services in one or more types of securities are:

- Persons or legal entities (order-remisiers) that, as portfolio managers, bring orders in securities to which the Investment Services Directive does not apply (eg, commodity futures) or orders in transferable securities or units in collective investment for the account of clients to securities institutions that are admitted to a recognised exchange;[62]
- Securities institutions providing services for professional market parties as far as securities are involved to which the Investment Services Directive does not apply;[63] and
- Recognised 'private participation companies', as far as they provide services as a broker only regarding their own shares.[64]

The above exemptions may be subject to certain conditions, such as a notification to the Securities Board of The Netherlands and observance of the rules of the exchange concerned.

Requirements to Obtain a Licence. If a licence is required, the securities institution must apply for one with the Securities Board of The Netherlands. To receive a licence, the securities institution must fulfil requirements[65] regarding:

- Expertise and reliability — The required expertise depends on the precise activities of the securities institution. The reliability concerns, among others, whether the management of the securities institution has a criminal record.[66]
- Capital adequacy — The securities institution must have a minimum equity capital of, depending on the activities of the securities institution, between €35,000 and €730,000.[67]
- Management and establishment of head office — There are requirements concerning (a) the structure of the organisation, (b) separation between the assets of the securities institution and its clients, and (c) organisation and internal control. The structure of the organisation must safeguard that conflicts of interest among clients and between the securities institution and clients are avoided.[68] To protect the ownership rights of clients, the securities institution must separate the assets of clients from the assets of the securities institution itself.[69] Generally, this is done by depositing the money and securities of the clients with a third party that is a recognised credit institution, if the securities institution is not itself such a recognised credit institution. The security institution should organise its administration in such a way that the Securities Board of The Netherlands is able to supervise whether the rules regarding operational management and capital adequacy are observed.[70] The daily management of the securities institution must be determined by at least two persons.[71] The head office of the securities institution must be in the country of establishment. The head office is deemed the place of domicile of the persons who determine the daily management.[72]
- Safeguards for and adequate supervision of observance of the rules — The structure of the group of which a securities institution is a part must be such that the Securities Board of The Netherlands can adequately supervise the securities institution. A 'group' also includes private persons who are shareholders of the securities institution and (non-consolidated) participations.[73]

Less Stringent Licence Regime for Certain Foreign Securities Institutions. Some securities institutions domiciled in non-EU and non-EEA countries are governed by a less-stringent licence regime.[74] The less-stringent regime concerns securities institutions that:

- Are domiciled outside the EU and EEA (and, therefore, cannot obtain a European passport);
- Will provide, or have provided, securities services in The Netherlands to professional investors without having a branch office in The Netherlands; and
- Are under supervision in their home country that is comparable, in the opinion of the Securities Board of The Netherlands, to the supervision in The Netherlands.[75]

Securities institutions under the less stringent regime are not obliged to fulfil the requirements regarding expertise and reliability, capital adequacy, (operational) management, management personnel, and establishment of the head office. Nor are they required to provide all the information and documents in connection with the application for a licence (see text, below). However, such securities institutions must comply with the applicable rules to conducting transactions in general (see text, below). The Securities Board of The Netherlands is entitled to restrict the licence and to prescribe certain conditions.

Licence Application Procedure. Until 1 January 1999, there was a difference in the application procedure for securities institutions to be admitted to an officially recognised exchange and other securities institutions. From 1 January 1999, all securities institutions must apply for a licence directly with the Securities Board of The Netherlands.

There is legislation pending that will grant the Securities Board of The Netherlands and the Dutch Central Bank the power to fine securities institutions and issuers that do not comply with relevant legislation and regulations. In addition, the Securities Board of The Netherlands will obtain the power to impose dwangsommen, ie, fines that increase per violation or per day a violation exists. It is as yet unknown whether and when this proposal will become law.

In order to apply for a licence, specific information and documents must be provided to the Securities Board of The Netherlands regarding:

- The management and the shareholders;
- The organisational structure;

However, even if these requirements are not met, a licence may be granted if the requirements cannot reasonably be fulfilled and the purposes of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 can be achieved otherwise.

74 Letter of the Securities Board of The Netherlands, 5 July 1996.

75 The Securities Board of The Netherlands presently only acknowledges the United States as a country where the supervision (by the Securities Exchange Commission and the Commodities, Futures, and Trading Commission) is comparable to the supervision in The Netherlands.

- The system of separation of assets;
- The internal control system;
- The general conditions which apply to agreements with clients; and
- The types of securities to which the services apply.

In addition, a description of the services to be provided and a statement of an accountant about the fulfilment of the capital adequacy requirement must accompany the application.[76]

Admission to Recognised Exchanges

Those securities institutions that wish to become active on an exchange must, after obtaining a licence from the Securities Board of The Netherlands, apply for admission to the relevant exchange. In respect of requirements for admission, each of the four recognised exchanges has its own requirements. These requirements differ, depending on the activities and capacity of the securities institution on the relevant exchange.

Applications for admittance to the Amsterdam Exchanges NV Stock Exchange, Amsterdam Exchanges NV Options Exchange, and the Financial Futures Exchange must be filed with the Amsterdam Exchanges NV. Applications for admittance to the Commodities Futures Exchange must be filed with the Amsterdam Exchanges NV Commodities Futures Exchange (Agrarische Termijnmarkt).

The securities institution that wishes to be admitted to one of the exchanges must provide the Amsterdam Exchanges NV or Commodities Futures Exchange with documents and information comparable to those to be provided to the Securities Board of The Netherlands by institutions that apply for the off-market licence. Furthermore, the applicant must pay an entrance fee. In addition, several annual fees must be paid to the exchanges, depending on the function of the securities institution with the exchange concerned.[77]

Conditions for Activities as Securities Institution

In General. Licence holders must:

- Comply with the requirements of the licence;[78]
- Comply with rules of conduct;[79]

78 Changes in organisation, structure, and management require the approval of the Securities Board of The Netherlands. Decree on the Supervision of Securities Trade, s 22.

Decree on the Supervision of Securities Trade, s 24; Further Regulation Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, s 8; Commodities Futures Exchange General Regulation, Appendix I.

- Conclude an agreement with the client in accordance with legal requirements, eg, a description of services, costs, manner of administration, and liabilities must be included;[80]
- Provide a statement to the client in accordance with certain requirements;[81]
- In the case of portfolio management, provide a statement regarding the composition and value and costs of the portfolio;[82]
- Inform the client about any applicable regulation regarding guarantees;[83]
- Comply with general administrative and depository obligations, as well as keep records of transactions during a certain period;[84]
- Take part in the mandatory investor compensation scheme which, in case of bankruptcy, provides a limited compensation of up to €20,000; and
- Comply with the rules regarding the content of advertisements.

In addition, securities institutions may not engage in misleading actions and/or manipulate the prices of securities. Exemption from this prohibition is the stabilisation of prices of newly listed securities, as long as such stabilisation meets a number of requirements listed in the regulations.

In addition, the accountant who audits the annual accounts has a duty to inform the Securities Board of The Netherlands of information contrary to the obligations of the securities institution under the licence or the obligations under the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995.[85]

Rules for Securities Institutions Excepted from Licence Requirement. Credit and financial institutions that have a licence from the Dutch Central Bank or are already supervised by the Dutch Central Bank pursuant to the Credit Supervision Act, or credit and financial institutions that are domiciled in an EU or EEA member state, and may provide securities services pursuant to their licence issued by the supervisory authority in their home country, only need to comply with some of the rules described above.

Institutions that have a licence from the Dutch Central Bank or are already supervised by the Dutch Central Bank pursuant to the Credit Supervision Act must comply with the rules of conduct, the obligation to conclude a client agreement and, if they provide asset management, provide a statement regarding the composition, value, and costs of the portfolio. In addition, they must comply with the obligation to provide information relating to 80 Decree on the Supervision of Securities Trade, s 25. applicable guarantee regulations, provide a proper statement, and comply with depository and administrative obligations.[86] Furthermore, the rules regarding (operational) management apply.

Institutions that are domiciled in an EU or EEA member state, and which may provide securities services pursuant to their licence issued by the supervisory authority in their home country, must comply with the rules of conduct and the obligation to conclude a client agreement, provide a proper statement and, if they offer portfolio management, provide a statement regarding composition, value, and costs of the portfolio.[87]

Securities

Securities Listed or to Be Listed on Officially Recognised Exchange

In General. This sub-section discusses the requirements for securities to be admitted to the Amsterdam Exchanges NV markets. Discussed are the requirements for the issuers, for the securities themselves, prospectus and due diligence requirements, and rules regarding corporate governance. This sub-section does not deal with requirements for admission of options and other derivatives, due to the fact that these are 'issued' by the exchanges themselves and, therefore, are not subject to much specific regulation.

Issuer Requirements. Regardless of the type of security (eg, shares or bonds) for which an issuer seeks admission to the Official Market of the Amsterdam Exchanges NV, the issuer will have to fulfil the following requirements:

- The capital of the issuing company must be at least NLG 10 million (after IPO);
- At least three of the last five book years must have been profitable (net profits); and
- During a period of at least five years prior to admission, the issuer must have proven its viability or have had a considerable market share (although this requirement may be waived for 'spin-offs').[88]

Investment undertakings also must have a licence under the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings. If the investment undertaking loses its licence, its securities will be de-listed, once the revocation of the licence is final (ie, no longer subject to appeal).[89]

However, Amsterdam Exchanges NV can waive compliance with the second requirement in special cases where the issuer has had at least one net profitable book year out of three previous to its admission and where the existing shareholders agree to a lock up, either not to alienate their shares until at least three book years out of five have been net profitable or not to alienate more than 20 per cent of their shares per year during five years following the year of listing on the Official Market. Amsterdam Exchanges NV may waive the above requirements if a governmental entity issues the shares or if a government entity or a company that does meet all requirements guarantees the obligations of the issuer. Due to increasing competition from other exchanges, especially with regard to securitisations, Amsterdam Exchanges NV is discussing new admission requirements with the Securities Board of The Netherlands. To make its admission criteria less stringent, Amsterdam Exchanges NV proposes that the Official Market drop the profit requirement for issuers with a capital of Dfl 100 million after IPO. Additional lock-up requirements and requirements with regard to the risk chapter of the prospectus would probably be imposed in such a case. In addition, instead of a track record of five years, a track record of three years may become sufficient if certain information is available. Amsterdam Exchanges NV has requested the Securities Board of The Netherlands to be allowed to grant dispensation from the current requirements.

To be listed on the NMAX, an issuer will have to fulfil the following requirements:

- The capital of the issuer must be at least €1 million (after IPO);[90]
- The issuer must have deposited its annual statements with the trade registry or must have published its annual statements according to law for at least three complete book years previous to its request for admission to the NMAX;[91]
- The shareholders that own five per cent or more of the shares or depository receipts for shares of the issuer must agree in writing to one of the following 'lock up' provisions: (a) if the issuer at the time of its admission has not yet published an annual statement that shows a positive result on its ordinary business activities after tax, as well as a net profit during a full book year, (i) the shareholders may not alienate any shares or depository receipts for shares until the annual statement of the issuer shows such a result, and (ii) once this condition has been fulfilled, they may not alienate more than 50 per cent of their shares or depository receipts for shares until the annual statements of the issuer show a positive result on ordinary business activities after tax as well as a net profit during the full book year for three years, within a period of five book years, and (b) if the issuer at the time of its admission has published annual statements that show a positive result on its ordinary business activities after tax as well as a net profit during one or two full book years, the shareholders may not alienate more than 50 per cent of their shares or depository receipts for shares until the annual statements of the issuer show such a result for three years, within a period of five book years;[92] and
- The issuer may not be an investment undertaking subject to the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings.

However, the Amsterdam Exchanges NV can waive compliance with the requirement relating to deposit or publication of annual statements if the interest of the issuer or the investors so requires and if the Amsterdam Exchanges NV is convinced that investors have all the necessary information to form a well-founded opinion about both the issuer and the securities for which admission to the NMAX is sought. This will be the case, although waivers need not be limited to this situation, when the prospectus contains a quantitative forecast of performance of the issuer for the period up to and including the third full book year, counting from the year of the issuance. In addition, all the existing shareholders must have undertaken not to alienate:

- Shares or depository receipts for shares of the issuer until the end of the third full book year;
- Shares or depository receipts for shares until the fourth or any later full book year has shown a positive result on normal business activities after tax as well as a net profit; and
- More than 50 per cent of their respective total amount of shares or depository receipts for shares until the annual financial statements of three full book years have shown a positive result on normal business activities after tax, as well as a net profit, within a period of five years.

The Amsterdam Exchanges NV proposes to change the requirements for the NMAX, in the context of harmonisation of the requirements for all Euro new markets. Capital of an issuer would have to be €1.5 million before offering on the NMAX. The size of the offering would have to be at least €5 million, which would have to be at least 20 per cent of total outstanding capital. At least 100,000 units of securities would have to be offered. In addition, the lock-up rules would change. Existing shareholders could either agree to a total lock up for six months or to a lock-up which would only allow them to alienate 20 per cent of their holding in a year.[93]

Securities Requirements. To be listed, the securities will have to be securities within the definition of the Listing Rules of the Amsterdam Exchanges NV. Section 1 of the Listing Rules, which applies both to the Official Market and to the NMAX, defines securities as follows:

> Securities: shares, bonds (including bonds continuously issued, such as pledges, bank notes, and savings notes and savings certificates), convertible bonds, warrants, participation certificates, claims, scrips, and certificates that give a right to the payment of other securities (such as dividend certificates appointed for stock dividends), as well as certificates and depository receipts and everything else that is generally considered a security in the country where the issuer is located, respectively in The Netherlands.

It is difficult to conceive of a security that will not be considered a security by the Amsterdam Exchanges NV. However, not admissible are depository receipts for shares that cannot be converted to ordinary shares (niet royeerbare certificaten).[94]

94 Amsterdam Exchanges NV Listing Rules, Appendix X, s 5.

There are requirements with regard to the size of the first time introduction of the securities on the Amsterdam Exchanges NV Official Market. A total market value of at least NLG 10 million, or its foreign currency equivalent, of the securities must be effectively available for trading. The amount available for trading must correspond with at least 10 per cent of the outstanding capital of the issuer. In addition, the nominal amount of the total offering must be at least 2,000 times the size of the smallest available denomination of offered securities. For offerings of more than NLG 50 million, the nominal amount of the total offering must be at least 10,000 times the smallest available denomination of offered securities. In other words, at least 2,000 units of tradable securities, respectively 10,000 units, must be available for trading.[95] However, the Amsterdam Exchanges NV can waive compliance with these requirements if it expects that sufficient demand for the offered securities will develop.[96]

There are specific rules for the NMAX. There are two kinds of securities that cannot be listed on the NMAX, namely:

- Non-convertible bonds; and
- Securities issued by investment undertakings, as defined in the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings.

In addition, the total market value of a first-time offering of securities on the NMAX must be at least €1 million, effectively available for trading.

Prospectus Requirements and Due Diligence Requirements. For securities listed, or shortly to be listed, on Amsterdam Exchanges NV, the rules and regulations of Amsterdam Exchanges NV, and not the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, determine whether a prospectus must be published, in what way publication must take place, and what requirements the prospectus must fulfil.

General Procedure and Due Diligence. An issuer that wants to be listed on the Official Market or the NMAX must sign a Listing Agreement (Noterings- overeenkomst), publish a prospectus according to the requirements of the Listing Rules,[97] and be guided by a securities institution admitted to the exchange that meets certain requirements, the so-called 'sponsor' (almost always a bank). The sponsor has an obligation for three years after the introduction on the exchange to advise the issuer and coach and ensure communication between the issuer and Amsterdam Exchanges NV. A prospectus must be published both for new listings and for offerings of securities that are already listed.[98] Prior approval by Amsterdam Exchanges NV of a prospectus is required.[99]

The sponsor has the obligation to perform a due diligence investigation to ensure the accuracy and completeness of the information contained in the prospectus.[100] There are detailed rules regarding the content of the due diligence investigation, specified in Appendices B and C to the Listing Procedure Rules, respectively for shares and for bonds. The sponsor will have to build a due diligence file for Amsterdam Exchanges NV to inspect.[101] If there is no prospectus requirement, there is no due diligence requirement.[102]

However, if a due diligence investigation has been performed for a simultaneous or recent public offering on an exchange abroad of the same securities, the sponsor may rely on this due diligence investigation, even though it has been performed by an institution not affiliated with Amsterdam Exchanges NV. The sponsor must look into the reputation of the foreign institution that performed the due diligence, as well as the standards of due diligence abroad, to determine whether it is justifiable to rely on the foreign due diligence. If there is a time period between the foreign due diligence and the offering in The Netherlands, Amsterdam Exchanges NV may require that additional due diligence research be performed.

There also is no due diligence requirement if the offered securities are commercial paper issued by an issuer that has been rated by one of the internationally recognised rating organisations or if the securities are commercial paper issued by a credit institution in the meaning of the Credit Supervision Act.[103]

Publication Requirements. Section 20(2) of the Listing Rules requires the prospectus to be published in one of the following manners. Either the prospectus must be published in one or more of the Dutch newspapers distributed nationally or in large quantities, or the prospectus must be published as a brochure that is available to the public at no cost at the Amsterdam Exchanges NV building, at the office of the issuer, and at the office designated for payment (generally, the sponsor's office). In addition, an advertisement must be placed in the Prijscourant (the official journal of the Amsterdam Exchanges NV), which contains either the entire prospectus or the place where the prospectus is made available.

Content Requirements. The Listing Rules of Amsterdam Exchanges NV contain detailed requirements regarding the content of the prospectus. Generally, section 8 of the Listing Rules prescribes that a prospectus must provide information relating to:

- The status of the issuer at the last date of the book year;
- Important events that occurred after the last day of the last book year;
- Expected developments relating to the issuer;
- Investments, finances, and the personnel of the company; and
- Rights connected to the securities.

Specific content requirements have been set out in Schedule A (for shares), Schedule B (for bonds), and Schedule C (for depository receipts for shares). There also are specific requirements for:

- Credit institutions;[104]
- Bonds guaranteed by a legal entity;[105]
- Convertible bonds;[106] and
- Depository receipts for shares.[107]

Updating Requirements. Section 21(2) of the Listing Rules requires the issuer to publish an amendment according to the general rules for publication, if any event occurs that may influence the evaluation of the offering, between the time the contents of the prospectus were determined and the time the securities are listed. Prior approval by Amsterdam Exchanges NV is necessary for an amendment as it is for a prospectus.

Exemptions from Prospectus Requirements. If a prospectus has been used to become listed on an exchange in another member state of the EU and EEA as well, the prospectus will be recognised by Amsterdam Exchanges NV if the competent authority of the other state of the EU and EEA where the issuer has its seat has approved the prospectus. The approval must be evidenced by a written declaration that must be given to the Amsterdam Exchanges NV. If there were any waivers or exemptions granted from certain requirements for the prospectus, the declaration must state the reasons for these waivers or exemption. If the issuer has its seat outside the EU or EEA, the competent authority of the exchange in the member state where the prospectus was published must issue the approval. Amsterdam Exchanges NV may require the prospectus to be translated and may require that information specifically regarding the Dutch market be included. If the issuer had obtained waivers from certain prospectus requirements, the waivers:

- Must be in accordance with the Listing Rules of the Amsterdam Exchanges NV;
- Must be justified by circumstances in The Netherlands; and
- May not include any conditions that would bar Amsterdam Exchanges NV from granting such a waiver.

However, Amsterdam Exchanges NV may recognise the prospectus even though the prospectus does not satisfy these latter three requirements.[108]

If the issuer has published a prospectus in connection with a public offer on an exchange outside the EU and EEA not more than three months before the listing on the Amsterdam Exchanges NV, the prospectus will be recognised if it is approved by the competent authority of one of the EU or EEA member states. The same requirements apply with regard to the approval, waivers and exemptions, translation, and additional information regarding the Dutch market, as described above. Additionally, any new information (as opposed to new information that influences the evaluation of the offering) must be published in an amendment to the prospectus.[109]

If the issuer has published a prospectus to become listed on an exchange in another member state of the EU or EEA not more than six months before the listing on the Amsterdam Exchanges NV, the issuer will be exempted from the requirement to publish a new prospectus. In that case, Amsterdam Exchanges NV will consult the competent authority of the member state of the EU and EEA that previously allowed the prospectus. The same competent authority must approve the prospectus and issue a written statement to that effect. However, Amsterdam Exchanges NV may condition the exemption on the updating, expansion, and translation of the prospectus. There is no prospectus requirement for:

- Offerings of securities for no consideration;
- Offerings that result from the conversion of convertible bonds; or
- Offerings that result from the exercise of warrants.

There is a very limited publication requirement for warrants.[110]

No prospectus need be published if less than 10 per cent of the market value or nominal value of already listed securities is issued, the issuer is in compliance with the disclosure requirements of Amsterdam Exchanges NV, and a limited publication is made.[111] A limited publication requirement also is the only condition for offerings to employees of already listed securities or if the listed shares are replaced by depository receipts for shares, without raising the capital of the company.[112] Also exempted are certain bonds issued by issuers that are connected in certain ways to the government of a member state of the EU or EEA.[113]

Finally, Amsterdam Exchanges NV may waive requirements to publish certain information in the prospectus, in either of two situations, namely:

- If it believes the information to be unimportant and of no consequence for the evaluation of the property, financial position, results, and prospects of the issuer; and
- If publication of the information would conflict with the public interest or would bring serious harm to the issuer, yet the omission would not mislead the public with regard to information essential to the evaluation of the offering.[114]

NMAX. In addition to the requirements of the Listing Rules for the Official Market, the prospectus published in connection with a public offering on the NMAX must comply with various requirements. Any quantitative forecasts looking further ahead than the current book year must be substantiated. The accountant of the issuer will have to declare the forecasts to be in conformity with the accounting principles used by the issuer. For every shareholder holding more than five per cent of the capital of the issuer, his intentions with regard to his shares, depository receipts for shares, or options must be published. For every shareholder holding more than five per cent of the capital of the issuer, an overview of the contents of all undertakings not to alienate his shares or depository receipts for shares pursuant to section 4(2) of the NMAX Special Listing Rules, as well as an overview of the content of all other commitments regarding the shares or depository receipts for shares or options of the issuer, must be provided. Additionally, it is recommended that an English summary or translation of the prospectus be made available or accompany a prospectus.

Liability for Inaccurate Prospectus. The issuer that has used an inaccurate or misleading prospectus may be liable under the general laws of contracts (if there is a contract between issuer an investor) and torts (if there is no contract). The issuer's liability is not further discussed here. The lead manager may be liable under the laws of contracts or torts. Specifically, the rules regarding misleading advertisement[115] may be used to hold the lead manager liable. A lead manager will be held liable if the prospectus is misleading, if the lead manager is to be blamed, if the lead manager may be held to have published the prospectus, and if the plaintiff suffered damages because of the misleading prospectus.

Whether a prospectus will be misleading depends very much on all circumstances.[116] Both contents and presentation may lead a prospectus to be held misleading. Not only untrue information, but also omissions, incompleteness and even lack of clarity may be held to be misleading, depending on all circumstances. In that respect, a prospectus will be judged by a stricter standard than ordinary advertisements. The misleading information must have been essential for the evaluation of the securities by the investor.[117]

If the prospectus is misleading and the lead manager may be held to have determined the contents alone or jointly with others, the burden of proof regarding both the accuracy and correctness of the prospectus and the culpability of the lead manager shifts to the lead manager.[118] The Supreme Court has interpreted the phrase 'to determine alone or jointly with' extensively. A lead manager will be held to have determined the prospectus, unless the lead manager explicitly states not to be responsible for certain statements in the prospectus. Such a disclaimer, however, will only effect the burden of proof; it does not necessarily limit the liability of the lead manager.[119]

118 Civil Code, Book 6, s 195.
119 Amsterdam Exchanges NV has prescribed the wording of such a disclaimer; see section 15(1) and Appendix D to the Listing Procedures Rules.

Therefore, if the lead manager determined (alone or jointly) the contents of the prospectus, he will have to prove that the prospectus is true and accurate or that he is not culpable for the fact that it is misleading. If the lead manager has issued a disclaimer regarding certain information or has not determined (alone or jointly) the contents of the prospectus, the plaintiff will have to prove both that the information or the contents of the prospectus is misleading and the culpability of the lead manager.

In most cases, the lead manager will be deemed to have published the prospectus. At least when he has made the prospectus available to the public, he will be held to have done so.[120] 'Publishing information' includes information that has previously been published.

Corporate Governance. The most general rule regarding corporate governance is the requirement that security holders in like circumstances must be treated alike.[121]

In addition, Appendix X to the Listing Rules contains some detailed requirements regarding the number and types of measures to protect against hostile take-overs that may be in place. Appendix X aims at issuers to which Dutch law applies. However, there is no exception for foreign issuers. Thus, where the corporate law rules are similar, Appendix X will probably apply. Where Appendix X would create problems, there is the possibility of obtaining dispensation from Amsterdam Exchanges NV.[122] Appendix X regulates four different types of take-over protection and their cumulation:

Preference Shares. Preference shares that may be issued without prior approval by the general meeting of shareholders, may only be issued to an independent legal entity, specifically identified in the annual statements.[123] Depending on the number of preference shares that may be issued (either 50 per cent or 100 per cent of the total outstanding shares), representatives of the issuer must have less than half the votes in the independent legal entity, or may have not more than one vote in the legal entity.[124]

Moreover, that legal entity must have as its purpose, according to its charter or articles of association, the representing of the interests of the issuer, its enterprise, and all persons involved. The protection of the independence of the issuer as a purpose is prohibited.[125]

The decision to issue the preference shares must be taken by the general meeting of shareholders or by the supervisory board, if it exists and if the general meeting of shareholders has delegated the authority to issue preference share to the management board.[126] Within four weeks, the general meeting of shareholders must be convened to explain why the 124 In the latter case, there also are restrictions with regard to who may be the representative of the issuer.

125 Amsterdam Exchanges NV Listing Rules, Appendix X, s 2(c).
126 Both the general meeting of shareholders and the supervisory board are corporate institutions in Dutch corporate law.

preference shares were issued. Within two years of the issuance of the preference shares, a general meeting of shareholders must be convened to decide on recalling the preference shares. If it is not so decided, every two years after that meeting, another meeting on the same topic must be held.[127]

Depository Receipts for Shares. Non-convertible depository receipts for shares are not allowed.[128] The trust that administers the shares underlying the depository rreceipts must be independent and have a purpose as described above for preference shares.

There is one difference with preference shares, namely, if the foundation administers the shares of more than one issuer, the requirements regarding the purpose of the foundation do not apply. The foundation must then comply with section 15 of Appendix II of the Listing Rules, which requires the foundation to exercise its powers in accordance with the interests of the depository receipt holders.

Priority Shares. Priority shares are those to which some specific rights are attached with regard to corporate powers, eg, the right to make a binding nomination for board members. The names of the persons ultimately responsible for casting the priority votes and their office in the issuers, if they have one, must be published in the annual statements.[129] Not more than half the priority shares may be issued to members of the board.[130]

Pandora's Box Constructions. 'Pandora's Box' constructions include 'poison pills' and 'crown jewel' constructions, also known as 'porcupine' provisions. Section 12 of Appendix X of the Listing Rules requires the issuer to publish immediately any decision it has taken which has the exclusive purpose to frustrate a hostile tender offer, as well as any contracts concluded for such purpose.

Cumulations of Take-Over Protection Measures. The cumulation of a maximum of two of the take-over protection measures, as described above, is allowed in certain circumstances. More particularly, as long as the total amount of preference shares issued is not more than 50 per cent of the total outstanding shares, the issuer has more choice as to which take-over protection measures to cumulate. If the total number of preference shares is 100 per cent of total outstanding shares, this may only be combined with priority shares.[131] There are some additional, detailed rules.

New Legislation. There is currently legislation pending that creates the possibility for a holder of 70 per cent of the shares during a period of one year to apply to the Court of Appeal in Amsterdam to lift take-over protection measures. If enacted, the proposed legislation will make Appendix X superfluous to a large extent. However, the future of the Bill is yet uncertain. Moreover, the Bill would only be applicable to corporations governed by Dutch law.[132]

Unlisted Securities

Issuer Requirements. There are no specific requirements under Dutch law that must be fulfilled to issue securities. Corporations will only be able to issue securities if they can do so according to the law that applies to their internal organisation. In that respect, it should be noted that, according to Dutch conflict-of-laws rules, the law of the place where the corporation was formed applies to the formation, the internal structure and relations, and the dissolution and liquidation of the corporation. Therefore, the law of the place of formation will determine whether shares or bonds may be issued by the corporation.

Securities Requirements. Either the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 or the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings will apply to securities that fall within the definition of securities of the Acts. Both Acts use the same definition. If securities are not within this definition, generally, they are not regulated. Section 1(a) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, which is identical to section 1(g) of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, contains the following definition of securities:

> 1. share certificates, debt instruments, profit participation rights, founders' shares, option certificates, warrants and similar instruments;
> 2. participation rights, options, futures, entries in share and debt registers, and similar, either conditional or unconditional, rights;
> 3. certificates of values mentioned above;
> 4. provisional certificates or depository receipts of values mentioned above.

Specifically excluded by section 2 of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 and by section 2 of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings are securities that are exclusively instruments of payment and condominium rights. Instruments of payment are money, cheques, and drafts.

The definition of securities in the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 and the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings is not exclusive. Therefore, it is not clear exactly what are and what are not securities. The lack of clarity is compounded by the use of the words 'similar rights'. According to the Minister of Finance in the parliamentary debates, the 'similar rights' clause would give him most flexibility and effectiveness to respond to new developments in the market.[133]

133 Grundmann-Van der Krol and van den Ingh, Parlementaire Geschiedenis van de Wet Toezicht Effectenverkeer 1995 (1996), at pp 181 and 182.

Considering the very broad definition of securities, the general conclusion is that few investment instruments will escape the applicability of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 or the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings.

Prospectus Requirements for Unlisted Securities. Generally, if there is an offer of securities outside a closed circle, a prospectus must be made available.[134] This is true for all securities that fall within the definition of securities of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995. Violation of this prohibition is a criminal offence, punishable with a fine of NLG 25,000 and/or two years' imprisonment for natural persons and a fine of NLG 100,000 for legal entities.[135] In addition, violation of statutory duties may lead to voidness or avoidability of the transaction. However, this is debated.[136]

Publication Requirements. There are no specific requirements regarding means of publication of a prospectus. However, section 3(2)(b) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 requires the prospectus to be generally available. In addition, any written publication of the offering must refer to the prospectus. Any advertisements or documents holding out the offering must state the time and place where the prospectus will be published or made generally available. These advertisements or documents, as well as the prospectus itself, must be sent to the Securities Board of The Netherlands, for information purposes only. There is no formal approval procedure.[137]

The Securities Board of The Netherlands may require the prospectus to be in one or more languages if this is necessary to adequately inform investors, considering the possible area of distribution of the prospectus.[138]

Content Requirements. There are detailed requirements regarding the content and structure of a prospectus, pursuant to the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995. These detailed rules have been designed to follow the requirements of Directive 80/390/EEC (requirements for prospectus for listed securities) to give investors in listed securities and investors in unlisted securities information of roughly the same quality. However, the requirements sometimes exceed the requirements of Directive 89/289/EEC (requirements for prospectus for public offerings of unlisted securities) since, for unlisted securities, the prospectus, will generally be the only available source of information.

The requirements are set out in section 2(1) and (2) of the Decree on the Supervision of Securities Trade and the Appendix to the Decree on the Supervision of Securities Trade. Requirements vary for different types of securities (eg, futures, shares, or bonds). Additionally, the Securities Board of The Netherlands has issued a rule that requires every prospectus to begin with a summary containing the most important information.[139]

Updating Requirements. Any new information, omissions, inaccuracies, or mistakes, occurring or discovered between the time of finalisation of the prospectus and the time the offering ends that may be important for the evaluation of the financial situation of the issuer, the performance and prospects of the issuer, and the rights and obligations connected with the securities must be published in an amendment to the prospectus. This amendment must be made generally available as well, after it has been sent to the Securities Board of The Netherlands. After sending the amendment to the Securities Board of The Netherlands, it is considered to be part of the prospectus.[140]

Issuers that offer securities regularly have the possibility to use a prospectus written for a previous offering of securities, updated by an amendment as described above, if the following conditions have been met:

- The prospectus may not have been used more than 12 months before the new offering;
- The prospectus must have complied either with section 2 (proscribing content requirements) or with section 3 (excepting prospectus approved by EU and EEA Competent Authorities) of the Decree on the Supervision of Securities Trade; and
- The amendment must always be accompanied by the prospectus that is amended.

Note that the prospectus need not have been written for the same type of securities.[141]

Exceptions. There are some general exceptions to the general prohibition of offerings without a prospectus of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995. Firstly, the requirement that a prospectus must be published does not apply to securities listed on an officially recognised exchange.[142] Of course, to be listed on an exchange, one will have to publish a prospectus according to the rules of the exchange. Secondly, the prospectus requirements do not apply to offerings of securities that are listed on an officially recognised exchange of a member state of the EU or EEA.[143] Thirdly, offerings of securities of investment undertakings are governed by the rules of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings (see text, below).

Pursuant to section 3(c) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, the Decree on the Supervision of Securities Trade creates an exception for issuers from the EU and EEA that have published a prospectus in another member state. These issuers need not comply with the specific content requirements of section 2(1) and (2) of the Decree on the Supervision of Securities Trade if they have obtained the approval of the Competent Authority of their home country, pursuant to Directive 89/298/EEC (prospectus requirements for unlisted securities) no longer than six months before the offer and their prospectus complies with article 8 or article 12 of that Directive, ie, the prospectus complies with the requirements for a prospectus for listed securities, as detailed in Directive 80/390/EEC. they have obtained the approval of the Competent Authority of their home country, pursuant to Directive 89/298/EEC (prospectus requirements for unlisted securities) no longer than six months before the offer and their prospectus complies with article 8 or article 12 of that Directive, ie, the prospectus complies with the requirements for a prospectus for listed securities, as detailed in Directive 80/390/EEC. If they have obtained a waiver for some of the requirements of these provisions, the Securities Board of The Netherlands must agree that the waiver is appropriate for the offering of the securities in The Netherlands.

The Securities Board of The Netherlands may order that additional information be added to the prospectus.[144] If the Competent Authority has waived certain requirements, prior approval of the Securities Board of The Netherlands, contrary to ordinary procedure, is required. However, the prospectus must comply with the requirements regarding means of publication, language and structure of the prospectus as described above.

Exemptions. In addition, the Minister of Finance has promulgated the Exemption Regulation, which contains the following exemptions, based on section 4(1) and (2) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995:

- Professionals — Firstly, all offerings of securities or the holding out of an offering to any natural person or legal entity that is professionally engaged in the securities trade, need not be accompanied by a prospectus.[145] To be a professional, a person or legal entity must perform transactions in securities in the course of or directly connected with its profession or occupation.[146] Examples are broker and dealers, institutional investors (eg, pension funds), treasury departments of large corporations, investment undertakings, and credit institutions. However, to fall within the exemption, the offering memorandum, or any other advertisement or document holding out the offering, must explicitly state that the offering is only aimed at professionals. Copies of these documents must be sent to the Securities Board of The Netherlands before use. The restriction of this exemption to professionals applies to secondary trade as well. Section 3(3) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 requires publication of a prospectus for all offerings of securities that have previously only been available to professionals.
- Offerings exclusively to persons or entities outside The Netherlands — Section 3 of the Exemption Regulation exempts offerings of securities or the holding out of an offering to buy securities if aimed exclusively at persons or legal entities that are domiciled or have their habitual place of residence outside The Netherlands. It is Dutch law that determines domicile and habitual place of residence in this context. The relevant provision is section 10 of Book 1 of the Civil Code. The residence of a natural person is the place where he has his home or, if he has no home, the place where he actually resides. A legal entity resides in the place the law assigns to it, or in the place provided in the charter or articles of association of the legal entity. Additionally, section 14 of Book 1 of the Civil Code provides that, if a legal entity has a branch office, that place will be considered its residence for all matters concerning that branch office. The exemption is conditioned in that (a) the offering memorandum, or any advertisements or documents holding out the offering, must explicitly state that it is only aimed at persons or entities residing outside The Netherlands; (b) the offering must comply with the laws of the State in which the persons or entities at which the offering is aimed reside; (c) prior to the offering, a statement of compliance with the requirement under (b) must be filed with the Securities Board of The Netherlands; and (d) the statement is made part of the offering or any advertisement or document holding out the offering.

- Euro-issues — No prospectus need be published if an offering or the holding out of an offering concerns Euro-securities and if no general advertisement or vending campaign is held.[147] Euro-securities are securities that: (a) are underwritten by a consortium of which at least two members are domiciled in different member states of the EU or EEA; (b) have at least 60 per cent of the total amount underwritten by members of the consortium that reside in a different country than the issuer; and (c) are only offered through the agency of banks, or professional securities institutions.
- Other exemptions — If the securities that are offered are only available in denominations of NLG 100,000 or more, or the foreign currency equivalent, the offering is exempted from the prospectus requirement.[148] Offerings of securities for no consideration are exempted, as well.[149] Short-term notes, commercial paper, and like securities that have a term of not more than one year and are issued by a bank are exempted. No prospectus need be published for the offering of securities issued by investment undertakings that have been exempted from the licence requirement of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings. Finally, all offerings of securities issued by member states of the EU or EEA, a territorial public entity, or a legal entity according to public international law, of which one or more member states are a part are exempted.
- Individual exemptions — Pursuant to section 4(1) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, individual exemptions may be granted by the Securities Board of The Netherlands. These exemptions have been granted for offerings of securities that occurred simultaneously in the United States and The Netherlands and where the offering had been registered with the Securities Exchange Commission. The Explanatory Memorandum to the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 remarks that there may be a case for an exemption when securities are offered simultaneously in more than one country and where the prospectus requirements of those countries are incompatible, or where full compliance with the prospectus requirements would be unduly burdensome to the issuer, whereas no investor interest would be served.[150]

Corporate Governance. There has been much debate recently regarding corporate governance in The Netherlands. In 1996, a report was published by the Peters Commission, containing 40 recommendations to improve governance within Dutch corporations. Since this discussion is interesting only for Dutch corporations and since the recommendations were not binding, suffice it to say that the general drive of the report was to increase transparency and shareholder influence.

There are no legal rules regarding corporate governance for corporations that issue securities. There are, of course, detailed rules regarding corporate governance for corporations to which Dutch corporate law applies. In addition, as discussed above, for limited securities, there is legislation pending with regard to take-over protection measures.

Securities Issued by Investment Undertakings.

Issuer Requirements. A category of issuers that must fulfil specific requirements are investment undertakings. Section 4(1) of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings prohibits the offering of securities or the accepting of money and goods by an investment undertaking, outside a closed circle, unless that investment undertaking has a licence from the Dutch Central Bank. This also is true for investment undertakings that are listed on an officially recognised exchange. Therefore, any investment undertaking, like a mutual fund, that wants to offer its securities in The Netherlands, must have a licence, unless an exception or exemption applies. There are two types of investment undertakings, namely:

- Investment firms; and
- Investment funds.

The former is a legal entity (eg, a public or closed corporation or foundation) that solicits or has obtained money or goods for the purpose of collectively investing them, to make all participants share in the profits. The latter is not a legal entity (eg, a partnership or limited partnership) that solicits or has obtained money or goods for the purpose of collectively investing them, to make all participants share in the profits.[151] An investment fund must have both a manager (beheerder) and a depositary (bewaarder).

According to the Explanatory Memorandum to the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, holding companies, banks, and insurance companies are not investment undertakings. The purpose of the first is to provide capital; the latter's purpose is not to collectively invest. In addition, there has been discussion as to what it means to 'collectively invest'. For example, what if an individual investment is suggested to a number of individuals? According to the Dutch Central Bank, individual investments must clearly state they are individual, and the individual character of the investment must be clear in practice, as well.[152] It is a criminal offence to be or maintain an investment undertaking without the proper licence from the Dutch Central Bank, unless an exception or exemption applies.

Exceptions to Licence Requirement. Undertakings for collective investment in transferrable securities (UCITS) are open-end investment undertakings that, according to their charter or articles of association, invest exclusively in securities, using the principle of 'risk spreading' (eg, mutual funds).[153] Investment undertakings that qualify as UCITS and have their seat in another member state of the EU or EEA that has implemented the UCITS Directive 85/611/EEC need not apply for a licence. However, a UCITS must notify the Dutch Central Bank of its intention to offer its participations outside a closed circle in The Netherlands. The following documents should accompany such a notification:

- A statement from the competent authority of the UCITS' home country that the UCITS fulfils all requirements of Directive 85/611/EEC;
- The charter or articles of association and bye-laws;
- A prospectus;
- If applicable, the latest annual and half-yearly financial statements; and
- A statement regarding the way information will be provided to Dutch investors and the way trading, payment, and repurchase of participations will take place.[154]

If there is any publication requirement according to the law of the home country of the UCITS, the publication must be made in the Dutch language, as well.[155] In addition, the UCITS must take all necessary measures to ensure the dissemination of information and the payment on participations and/or repurchases of participations in The Netherlands.[156]

Unless the Dutch Central Bank gives notice that the UCITS is not within the scope of the Directive 85/611/EEC or that the UCITS' proposed activities violate Dutch law, the UCITS may start offering its participations after two months have passed after notifying the Dutch Central Bank.[157]

In addition, natural persons who offer participations not in the pursuit of their profession or occupation do not need a licence under the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings.[158]

Exemptions. Pursuant to section 14 of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, the Minister of Finance has issued the Exemption Regulation to the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings. This regulation creates two exemptions from the licence requirement. The first exemption is for offerings of participations in and solicitations for money for investment undertakings exclusively to and from professionals.[159] In this case, secondary trade is limited to professionals, as well. Even though the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings does not explicitly so require, the Dutch Central Bank does require this selling restriction. The second exemption from the licence requirement is for investment undertakings that have been officially recognised as so-called 'private participation firms', ie, venture capital firms that have been guaranteed by the government. Due to the uncertainty of the 'closed circle' criterion and a recent scandal regarding an investment club, the Exemption Regulation to the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings is under review.

Foreign Non-Exempt Investment Undertakings. When none of the exceptions or exemptions applies, an investment undertaking will have to apply for a licence. However, since the Dutch Central Bank has no means of enforcing the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings effectively against offshore investment undertakings, it has a policy of granting licences only to investment undertakings from certain countries. Licences will be granted to investment undertakings from the United States, Jersey, Guernsey, and Luxembourg. Investment undertakings from these countries may even obtain exemptions from certain requirements for a licence. The Dutch Central Bank considers the supervision in these countries over investment undertakings to be sufficient.

However, investment undertakings from countries that, in the Dutch view, lack sufficient supervision, specifically Bermuda, the Cayman Islands, and the British Virgin Islands, will not be granted a licence, unless they are able to meet quite strict conditions. These include the conditions that:

- A representative office be located in The Netherlands that has a formal relationship with a Dutch financial institution;
- At least two board members be resident in The Netherlands;
- The records of the investment undertaking be available in The Netherlands;
- The information that must be available to the public according to law be available in The Netherlands; and
- The investment undertaking have a Dutch auditor.

Investment undertakings from Aruba and the Netherlands Antilles may obtain a licence if all requirements for a licence are met and all board members and the records of the investment undertaking are resident on Aruba or the Netherlands Antilles.[160]

Licence Requirements. If an investment undertaking must obtain a licence, it must meet the following requirements[161] regarding expertise and reliability, capital adequacy, business organisation, and information to the public (see text, below, for prospectus and disclosure requirements):

- Expertise and reliability — Those persons who represent the investment undertaking or determine its policies must have sufficient expertise and be reliable. Those persons who have the power to appoint or fire the representatives or persons that determine policy must merely be reliable.[162] Appointments of persons who fall within these categories require the prior approval of the Dutch Central Bank.[163]
- Capital adequacy — The investment undertaking must have an equity capital of at least NLG 500,000. The depositary must have a capital of at least NLG 250,000, and it must provide collateral or insurance to cover liability for damages arising from fire, transport, fraud, and robbery.[164]
- Business organisation — At least two persons must determine the day-to-day policy of the investment undertaking. In addition, the conditions that the investment undertaking uses when issuing and selling shares must comply with a detailed set of requirements that are set out in Appendix A to the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings. If there is a depositary, it must have concluded an agreement with the investment undertaking that incorporates the above-mentioned conditions.
- Information to the public and participants (see text, below, relating to prospectus requirements and disclosure requirements).

If the investment undertaking is not a legal entity (ie, it is an investment fund), it will have to meet additional criteria, namely:

- The property of the fund must be deposited with a depositary;
- The depositary must be a legal entity; and
- The property of the fund must be separated both from the property of the manager, the depositary, or any other natural person or legal entity.[165]

Only professional depositaries are allowed.[166]

Exemptions may be granted from the requirements for a licence if they reasonably cannot be met and if the purposes of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings are otherwise served sufficiently.[167]

Additional Requirements for Undertakings for Collective Investments in Transferrable Securities. UCITS that have their seat in The Netherlands (or, in the case of an investment fund, if the manager of the fund has its seat in The Netherlands) must meet additional requirements. Section 6 of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings requires Netherlands-based UCITS to:

- Have their head office in The Netherlands (or, in case of an investment fund, to have the head office of the manager of the fund in The Netherlands);[168]
- Limit the activities of the manager of an investment fund to the management of the fund;[169]
- Limit the activities of the investment undertaking to those that make it a UCITS;[170]
- Deposit the assets of an investment firm with an independent, professional depositary;[171] and
- Ensure the depositary has its seat in a member state of the EU or EEA and a branch in The Netherlands.[172]

There are exceptions from these additional requirements for UCITS in the following circumstances:

- If the UCITS does not solicit funds from the public in a member state of the EU or EEA;
- If the UCITS' charter or articles of association or bye-laws only allow it to sell its securities to members of the public outside the EU or EEA;
- If the UCITS invests its assets through subsidiaries mainly in other assets than securities; or
- If the UCITS is of a type that has been designated by the Minister of Finance as exempted from the rules regarding investing and borrowing for UCITS.[173]

However, investment firms listed or to be listed within a year on an officially recognised exchange are exempted if their shares will be available only on the exchange and their charter or articles of association state the method to compute the intrinsic value of its shares (Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings, s 9(1)). If the last two criteria are not met, an exemption is still possible, but several additional criteria must be met (Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings, s 9(2)). In addition, such investment firms have some additional obligations (Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings, s 10).
172 Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, s 6(5).
173 Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, s 7.

The last exception applies, for example, to a UCITS that predominantly invests in unlisted securities.[174] Note that, if an exception to section 6 of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings applies, the general requirements of section 5 still must be met. Finally, exemptions may be granted by the Dutch Central Bank from these requirements if they reasonably cannot be met and if the purposes of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings are otherwise served sufficiently.

Continuing Obligations. A licence may contain restrictions, but only with regard to its scope and duration.[175] For example, if the management of an Investment institution has experience only with investment in securities, the licence may be limited to investments in securities.[176] Restrictions must be warranted by the needs of an adequately functioning market and the protection of investors on this market.[177] The licence may be revoked in certain circumstances.[178]

If an investment undertaking has its seat or is controlled by a legal entity that has its seat in a state not a member of the EU or EEA that does not admit Dutch financial institutions or unreasonably burdens Dutch financial institutions, the Dutch Central Bank may revoke, change, or condition the licence of that investment undertaking. Pursuant to section 12m of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, investment undertakings that have obtained a licence must comply with a set of requirements that closely resemble the requirements to obtain a licence in order not to lose their licence. The Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings specifies these requirements.[179] There are general requirements that all investment undertakings must comply with and additional rules for UCITS.[180]

The auditor of the investment undertaking is under a legal obligation to notify the Dutch Central Bank immediately if he, on checking the annual statements of the investment undertaking, finds that:

- The conditions of the licence are violated;
- The Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings is otherwise violated;
- The existence of the investment undertaking is threatened; or
- He cannot issue a declaration about the truthfulness of the annual statement without exceptions.[181]

In addition, the auditor must be authorised by the investment undertaking to provide the Dutch Central Bank with all information that is reasonably necessary for the Dutch

Central Bank to supervise the investment undertaking.[182] The auditor is not liable for this notification, unless he reasonably should not have notified the Dutch Central Bank.[183]

Prospectus Requirements. Pursuant to section 5(1)(d) of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, an investment undertaking must comply with requirements regarding information to be given to the public and participants to obtain the necessary licence (see text, above, for the other requirements). Consequently, section 6 of the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings requires the investment undertaking to have a prospectus available in order to be eligible for a licence.

- Publication requirements — Section 6 of the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings merely requires the investment undertaking to have a prospectus available. There are no further requirements regarding the means of publication. Section 7 of the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings requires the prospectus to be sent to the Dutch Central Bank, together with the licence application. The Dutch Central Bank does not formally approve the prospectus, and it is not liable for errors in it.[184] Pursuant to section 6(6) of the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings, the Dutch Central Bank may require the investment undertaking to have the prospectus available in one or several languages if, according to the Dutch Central Bank, the intended distribution of the prospectus so requires to adequately inform the public. Pursuant to the continuing obligations under the licence,[185] the prospectus must be available free of charge the day before issue of securities, the opening of participation in the investment undertaking, or the written holding out of the opening to participants. The places where the prospectus is available must be mentioned in any holding out of the offering.[186]
- Content requirements — The prospectus must contain all information necessary to enable investors to make a sound evaluation of the offering of the securities of the investment institution.[187] There are detailed minimum content requirements for the prospectus, set out in Appendix B to the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings. Among other material, the prospectus must contain a statement by an auditor that it complies with the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings and a statement by the responsible persons that, to their knowledge, the prospectus is true and complete. In addition, the conditions used in transactions with investors, or a summary thereof, must be included.[188]
- Updating requirements — A closed-end investment undertaking must update all essential information every time it issues new shares or participations outside a closed circle.

188 Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings, Appendix B, part I, s 1.2, part II, s 2.4, and part III, s 3.2.

An open-end investment institution must update all essential information when the information changes or becomes known.[189] The prospectus and the update may only be made available after sending it to the Dutch Central Bank.[190]

Exceptions and Exemptions. Whether an investment undertaking must publish a prospectus depends firstly on whether it must apply for a licence. If an exception to the licence requirements applies that exception will determine whether a prospectus nevertheless must be published (see text. above). However, if a prospectus must be published according to section 6 of the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings, there are certain exemptions from the content requirements as well as from the publication and updating requirements.[191]

Investment undertakings that do no fall within section 6(1) of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings (ie, do not have their seat in The Netherlands and are not UCITS) and whose securities have previously been available in The Netherlands outside a closed circle will have their prospectus recognised if they have a written declaration from the competent authority of an EU or EEA member state that their prospectus complies with the requirements for investment undertakings of Directive 80/390/EEC. According to the Explanatory Memorandum, therefore, if an investment undertaking has issued securities in another member state of the EU or EEA on an officially recognised EU or EEA exchange, its prospectus will be recognised.[192] The Dutch Central Bank cannot require the prospectus to be translated.

Non-UCITS or non-Netherlands-based UCITS that have not offered their securities outside a closed circle in The Netherlands are exempted from the content requirements if (a) an offering will take place in The Netherlands not more than six months after an offering outside a closed circle in another EU or EEA member state, and (b) the investment undertaking provides a written statement from the competent authority that its prospectus complies with sections 7, 8, and 12 of Directive 89/289/EEC. This only applies to closed end investment undertakings. However, the Dutch Central Bank may require additional information to be included that specifically relates to the Dutch market.[193] If a public offering is done simultaneously with an offering on an exchange, section 6(3) and (4) will overlap.[194]

Non-UCITS or non-Netherlands-based UCITS that are or will shortly be listed on an exchange appointed by the Dutch Central Bank as exempted, are exempted pursuant to section 6(5) of the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings. Since, for listing on an exchange, a prospectus will have to be published in any event, additional prospectus requirements do not make sense. The Dutch Central Bank, however, may Corporate Governance. In The Netherlands, there are no specific rules for corporate governance for investment undertakings.

Periodic Disclosure

Listed Securities

Official Market

In General. In addition to any disclosure requirement imposed by laws or regulations under the applicable law to the issuer, Amsterdam Exchanges NV imposes certain periodic disclosure requirements. In addition, Amsterdam Exchanges NV may require an issuer to publish additional information and, if the issuer refuses to do so, may publish it itself.[195] Additionally, section 6 of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 empowers the Minister of Finance to notify Amsterdam Exchanges NV, or even to direct Amsterdam Exchanges NV, to take action against listed issuers that do not comply with the periodic disclosure duties under the Listing Rules. This power has not been delegated to the Securities Board of The Netherlands.[196]

General Rules for the Annual Statements. If the issuer has its seat in a member state of the EU or EEA, its annual statements must be in accordance with the law of that state. If the issuer has its seat in a state not a member of the EU or EEA, its annual statements must be in accordance with Dutch law or rules that are, in the opinion of Amsterdam Exchanges NV, equal to those of Dutch law.

Disclosure of Certain Events. An issuer must inform its shareholders of a number of specific events. Most notably, an issuer must inform its investors of:

- Dividends;
- Shareholders' meetings; and
- Issuance of shares.[197]

An issuer must inform the public of changes in structure or ownership of important holdings of its shares.[198] This obligation corresponds exactly with the obligations under the Major Holdings Disclosure Act (see text, below). It does not apply to issuers that are founded under the laws of a member state of the EU or EEA because they fall within the purview of Directive 88/627/EEC (providing for disclosure of substantial interest in listed corporations) and, therefore, they already must publish significant changes in ownership. Changes in the rights connected to shares or depository receipts for shares must be immediately published, as well as significant changes in activities and significant changes in the board.[199]

Finally, any information or event concerning the issuer that should be considered to have a significant effect on the price of the shares (ie, depository receipts for shares) must immediately be published. Amsterdam Exchanges NV may grant dispensation from this requirement.[200]

Periodic Disclosure to Public. An issuer of shares or depository receipts for shares must make its annual and semi-annual statements available to the public.[201] There are some additional rules with regard to the content and time of publication of the annual and semi-annual statements.[202] In addition, Dutch corporations may be required under Dutch law to publish quarterly statements if they are listed on an exchange.[203]

Bond issuers need not publish semi-annual statements, but they do need to publish information regarding new loans. Governmental bond issuers do not need to publish annual statements. Investment funds must publish an annual statement regarding the management of the fund.[204]

Issuers Listed on Foreign Exchange. If the issuer is listed on the Official Market, as well as on other exchanges in the EU and EEA, it is under an obligation to ensure that, on each exchange, information of equal value is disseminated. If the issuer is listed on an exchange outside the EU or EEA and on the Official Market, information must be provided that is at least equal to the information provided to the foreign market, to the extent that this information may be of interest for the valuation of the shares or depository receipts for shares.[205]

Disclosure to Amsterdam Exchanges NV. The issuer must discuss changes in its charter or articles of association with the Amsterdam Exchanges NV, prior to informing its shareholders.[206] In addition, Amsterdam Exchanges NV must receive immediately all annual and semi-annual statements and other documents that are available to shareholders. Amsterdam Exchanges NV also must be informed immediately of significant changes in ownership or information that may have a significant effect on the price of the shares and of all other information and circumstances of which the public must be informed.[207] Private placements of listed securities that may be converted into shares must be notified to the Amsterdam Exchanges NV.

NMAX. In addition to the disclosure requirements mentioned above, issuers listed on the NMAX must publish quarterly statements with information regarding the issuer.[208] Included must be:

- Auditor's statements (if present);
- Information regarding changes in the holdings of shareholders; and
- The amount of shares and options held by the board and supervisory board.[209]

It is recommended that information regarding turnover, operational results, cash flow, and profit be included. If national accounting principles were used, it is recommended that they be reconciled with International Accounting Standards or United States GAAP. It is recommended to provide an English translation of all annual, semi-annual, and quarterly and other statements.

Unlisted Securities

In General

In addition to any periodic disclosure requirements pursuant to corporate law, which depend on the applicable law to the corporation, issuers of unlisted securities that are not investment undertakings are under periodic disclosure duties under the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995.[210] Therefore, even foreign issuers that do not need to comply with the general corporate publication requirements regarding the annual statement of Book 2 of the Civil Code must publish certain information if they have issued securities outside a closed circle in The Netherlands.

Content Requirements

There are detailed rules regarding what must be disclosed, specified in sections 7–9 of the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings. Briefly, these requirements entail:

- Drawing up of annual statements within six months after the end of the book year, according to general acceptable standards;[211]

208 NMAX Special Listing Rules, s 9.

210 Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, s 5.

- Drawing up of semi-annual statements within four months after the end of the semi-annual period that must provide information regarding turnover and results before and after tax;[212] and
- Auditing by an accountant of the annual statement.

The auditor's findings must accompany the annual statement. If an auditor audits the semi-annual statements, his findings must accompany those statements.[213] However, issuers that do not have their seat in The Netherlands may have their statements audited by an official who, according to local law, is authorised to do so.[214]

These statements must be in accordance with the Dutch law regarding annual statements found in Book 2 of the Civil Code, if the issuer has its seat in The Netherlands. If the issuer has its seat in another member state of the EU or EEA, the statements must be in accordance with the requirements of Directive 78/660/EEC and Directive 83/349/EEC. If an issuer has its seat outside the EU or EEA, its statements must be according to standards of equal quality. In addition, the statements must specify according to which rules they were drawn up. If the statements are not drawn up according to Dutch law or European law, the Securities Board of The Netherlands, in co-operation with the Minister of Justice, may issue guidelines regarding valuation methods and contents of the statements.[215]

Publication must take place within a week after the annual statements have been adopted by depositing them with the trade registry where the issuer is registered or, if the issuer is not registered in The Netherlands, with the trade registry in Amsterdam.[216] Simultaneously, the statements must be sent to the Securities Board of The Netherlands.

In addition, any significant new information regarding business activities that might influence the price of the issued securities considerably must be published as soon as possible. A copy of the publication must be sent to the Securities Board of The Netherlands.[217]

Exception

There is an exception to the requirement to publish semi-annual statements for issuers whose securities are listed on an exchange in a member state of the EU or EEA if the issuer publishes semi-annual statements in accordance with Directive 82/121/EEC.

Exemptions

Issuers who have only issued securities that are not within the prohibition of section 3(1) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 (ie, if the issued securities have been excepted or exempted from the prospectus requirement) are not under a periodic disclosure requirement.[218]

Investment undertakings that have been exempted from the licence requirement of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings because they only deal with professionals[219] or that have been individually exempted by the Dutch Central Bank, are exempted from the periodic disclosure requirements of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995.[220]

Finally, the Securities Board of The Netherlands may grant individual exemptions from the disclosure requirements on request.[221] These exemptions may be conditioned or restricted if the adequate functioning of the market or the position of investors so requires.[222]

Investment Undertakings

Disclosure to Public

The investment undertaking must draw up annual statements. If the investment undertaking is not already governed by the relevant rules of Book 2 of the Dutch Civil Code, the relevant sections are applicable through section 19(2) of the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings (ie, foreign investment institutions must make up their annual statements in accordance with Dutch law). The annual statements must be accompanied by a statement by an auditor to effect that they are true and accurate.[223] Section 21 of the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings provides detailed rules regarding the contents that are additional to the requirements of Book 2 of the Civil Code. Among these additional requirements is to publish the total personal holdings of members of the board and the total number of 'large investors' that have invested in the investment undertaking or its subsidiaries, as well as the total number and amount of transactions with these 'large investors'.[224]

There are limited exceptions to this requirement (eg, for transactions in listed securities).[225] 'Large investors' are defined as investors that hold, individually or through voting agreements, directly or indirectly, 25 per cent of shares or voting rights of the investment undertaking. In addition, the investment undertaking must make available for participants and send to the Dutch Central Bank semi-annual statements.[226] Detailed content requirements for semi-annual statements are found in section 22 of the Decree on the Supervision of Investment Undertakings.

Publication of the annual statements must take place within four months after the annual statements were drawn up and must take place according to the rules set out in the Civil Code (ie, they must be deposited with the Trade Registry). Participants in the investment undertaking are entitled to a copy without cost. In addition, the undertaking must either send every participant an annual statement or must publish such statement in a national newspaper, specifying the place where its annual statements are available. Simultaneously, the Dutch Central Bank must receive copies.[227]

Finally, the investment undertaking must make available, against payment of costs, the information about it or about the manager and depositary that, according to Dutch law, must be available with the Trade Registry, the conditions its uses, a copy of its licence, and a monthly statement with financial information.[228]

Disclosure to Dutch Central Bank

In addition to the above mentioned, investment undertakings must disclose periodically to the Dutch Central Bank their balance sheet and results, mutations in the capital, and their intrinsic value.[229] The form of these statements and the times at which they must be furnished have been further regulated by the Dutch Central Bank per type of investment undertaking.

The Dutch Central Bank may require the investment undertaking to provide an auditor's statement once a year, unless the auditor makes exceptions, in which case the Dutch Central Bank may require statements more than once a year.[230] Any change in the information filed with the trade registry regarding the investment firm, the manager, or the depositary (in the case of an investment fund) must be notified to the Dutch Central Bank within five days.[231]

Exemptions

According to section 12(3) of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, the Dutch Central Bank may grant an exemption from any of these requirements, if the investment undertaking shows that it cannot reasonably meet these requirements and the purposes of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings are otherwise sufficiently served.

Proxy Disclosure

The Netherlands does not have special rules for proxy disclosure or solicitation, even though proxies and powers of attorney may be used. However, the charter or articles of as-

Securities Offerings

In General

Section 3(1) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 prohibits the offering or holding out of an offering of securities through issuance in or from The Netherlands outside a closed circle, unless a prospectus is published. Section 4(1) of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings prohibits the offering of shares in investment undertakings or soliciting or obtaining money or assets for shares in an investment undertaking, in or from The Netherlands, outside a closed circle, unless a licence has been obtained. However, an investment undertaking may 'test the market' if all publications specifically state that a licence from the Dutch Central Bank has not yet been obtained and no draft prospectus or draft conditions are given to the public.[233] Whether an offering of securities falls within these prohibitions depends on four factors, namely:

- Whether the offering concerns securities in the meaning of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 or the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings (see text, above);
- Whether there is an offering;
- Whether the offering is done in or from The Netherlands; and
- Whether the offering is aimed at a 'closed circle'.

Offering

Section 3(1) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 prohibits the offering of securities through issuance or the holding out of such an offering through advertisements or documents. Although section 3(1) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 only speaks of the offering of shares through issuance, section 3(3) of the Act extends the prohibition to offerings of securities that have not been available in The Netherlands outside a closed circle, even though they have been available outside The Netherlands or have been available inside The Netherlands but only within a closed circle or have only been available in The Netherlands to professionals.

What constitutes an offering or the holding out of an offering is not further specified in the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, the Explanatory Memoranda to the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, or the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings.

232 Civil Code, Book 2, ss 117 and 227.
233 Dutch Central Bank Circular (14 May 1992).

The main issue has been whether negotiations with a single buyer or a small group of buyers constitute an offering. Apart from the question whether such a buyer or group of buyers may be a 'closed circle' (see text, below), these negotiations also may not constitute an offering. It is generally assumed that negotiating a take-over one-on-one does not amount to an offering.[234]

Especially in context of a merger or acquisition through the sale of shares, the prohibition of section 3(1) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 does not seem to make sense. The Supreme Court has held that, if one offers securities to one person or legal entity, the prohibition of section 3(1) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 does not apply. According to the Supreme Court, there will be sufficient opportunity for the investor to inform himself. According to literature, the same reasoning ought to apply to take-overs involving more than a single investor or buyer.[235] However, the Supreme Court has ruled that an offering need not necessarily be to the public at large to qualify as an 'offering' under the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995. Even if the investor approached the seller before the sale, even if negotiations followed, and even if the seller did not actively advertise the sale, there still may be an offering.[236]

It is not clear whether the Supreme Court reasons that there is a closed circle, or whether there is no 'circle', or whether it means that there is no offering. Therefore, although it is clear that one-on-one negotiations are outside the prohibition of section 3(1) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, it is not yet clear whether small group negotiations are prohibited. Much will depend on the circumstances.

Closed Circle

In General. The structure of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 and the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings is that all offerings that are not limited to a closed circle are within the scope of the Acts. The phrase 'closed circle' has not been defined. However, the Explanatory Memorandum to the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 gives some guidance for interpreting what a 'closed circle' is. Firstly, the Minister of Finance has remarked that the phrase should be construed narrowly.[237] Secondly, the Minister gave three specific considerations to determine whether there is a closed circle, even though all circumstances may be relevant, namely:

Limited in Number and Clearly Defined. The group of people to which the securities are offered must be limited in number and clearly defined. However, there seems to be no maximum number of people that may constitute a 'closed circle' for purposes of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995. At least for employee share option plans, the Securities Board of The Netherlands does not impose a maximum.[238]

In a recent Circular, the Securities Board of The Netherlands explained its opinion on the 'closed circle' criterion.[239] The Board stated that admission to a group must be limited for a group to meet the 'limited numbers' criterion.

Additional Relationship between Offeror and Offerees. There must be an additional, legal,[240] relationship between the offeror or issuer and the group of people to which the securities are offered. In other words, there must be a relationship in addition to 'the financial relationship of the offering'.[241] An example is the offering of securities to employees. This group is both limited and well defined. There also is an additional relationship. However, any additional relationship may not be sufficient. Thus, the offering of stock dividends to stockholders where the number of stockholders is very large, resulting in not more than an anonymous financial relationship, may not be enough. There are some writers who claim it is generally assumed that the additional relationship may not be financial at all.[242]

In principle, the additional relationship must exist between the offering person or institution and the investor.[243] There has been criticism on this narrow interpretation in literature, especially when investment funds for employees are involved. If the fund is separate from the employer, there will not be an additional relationship between offeror and investor, and thus the closed circle exception would not apply.[244] In response to this criticism, the Securities Board of The Netherlands adopted the policy that offerings by corporations that are part of a group to employees from other corporations within that group are within a 'closed circle'. Likewise, offerings by investment funds for employees are within a 'closed circle' if the investment fund is closely related to the corporation.

Presentations of Offering Explicitly Limited to Members of Closed Circle. In presenting the offering, it must be made clear that only members of the limited and narrowly circumscribed group may respond.[245]

Differences for Investment Undertakings. There are some minor differences with regard to investment undertakings. Firstly, the Explanatory Memorandum to the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings mentions the three factors discussed above, but it seems to add a fourth: that access to the closed circle must be limited. There is some discussion whether this is a separate requirement that must be fulfilled to be able to speak of a 'closed circle' or whether limited access logically follows from the first requirement that the group of people be limited and clearly defined.[246]

There also is a practical difference in the interpretation of what constitutes a closed circle between the Securities Board of The Netherlands for the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 and the Dutch Central Bank for the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings. While the Securities Board of The Netherlands has not imposed a maximum number of people that will always constitute a closed circle, the Dutch Central Bank does seem to work with numbers. According to one writer, the Dutch Central Bank considers a group of less than 10 persons a closed circle, regardless of the three requirements mentioned above.

Groups of more than 50 people will need to know each other to constitute a closed circle, in addition to the three requirements mentioned above. Groups of between 10 and 50 need only comply with the three requirements set out above.[247] It should be noted that the Dutch Central Bank has not issued any guidelines in this respect, and it has not committed itself to any course of action. It will consider whether a closed circle exists on a case-by-case basis.

Place of Offer

Section 3(1) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 and section 4(1) of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings are applicable to all offerings 'from or in The Netherlands'. There is no doubt that offerors that have their seat according to their charter or articles of association in The Netherlands fall within the prohibition of section 3(1) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 and section 4(1) of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings. The Explanatory Memorandum to the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings states that all 'investment undertakings that have their (statutory) seat in The Netherlands' fall within the purview of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings. Doubts may rise whether an investment undertaking that has its factual seat or a branch in The Netherlands, but offers its securities exclusively outside The Netherlands, is within the purview of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings.[248]

247 Corten, 'Het Element besloten kring in de Nederlandse Effectenwetgeving', TVVS (1997), no 97/6, at p 170.

248 The same problem does not exist for offerors of securities that are not investment undertakings because the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 prohibits only offerings in The Netherlands, whereas the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings prohibits the acceptance of money and goods, as well.

The use of parenthesis in the Explanatory Memorandum to the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings suggests that investment undertakings that have their factual seat in The Netherlands would have to comply with the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, as well. Whether an investment undertaking that has a branch office in The Netherlands, but offers its securities exclusively abroad, is regulated by the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings is unclear. However, considering the purpose of the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings (ie, the protection of investors in The Netherlands), such investment undertakings are probably outside the prohibition of section 4(1) of the Act. For the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995. the issue is solely whether the offer is made from The Netherlands. In other words, if the offeror is acting from The Netherlands, the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 will be applicable.

Clearly, if one advertises for an offering in Dutch newspapers, the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 or the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings will apply. Likewise, if the offering is solely aimed at investors in The Netherlands, even though the chosen medium may be crossborder, one will be offering in The Netherlands. However, if one advertises in crossborder media for a multinational offering, the applicability of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 or the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings is less clear. In the Explanatory Memorandum to the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings, the Minister of Finance has said that the purpose of the Act is that offerings of securities of investment undertakings traded in The Netherlands are possible only when a licence has been obtained by the investment undertaking.

This points to a broad view of applicability for both the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings and, analogously, the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995. The fact that a person in The Netherlands buys securities from an issuer outside The Netherlands may easily give rise to a charge of offering securities in The Netherlands, even when the offeror is located outside The Netherlands. This is the more so now that there are several exceptions from the prospectus requirement for offerors from other countries within and without the EU and EEA (see text, above).

Suggestions have been made for connecting factors to determine whether an offer is made in The Netherlands. Thus, whether the offering or the holding out is in the Dutch language, whether the advertisements are placed in Dutch newspapers or newspapers that are distributed in The Netherlands, whether there is an office or person in The Netherlands for investors to turn to, and whether there are telephone numbers aimed at Dutch investors could influence a determination that the offering was ‘in The Netherlands’.

Secondary Trade

In The Netherlands, there is no regulation of secondary trade in unlisted securities. Thus, the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 does not apply to secondary trade, unless the traded securities were not previously available outside a closed circle in The Netherlands.[249] Once securities are introduced with a prospectus, because their first-time offering was within the purview of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, the secondary trade in these securities is unregulated.

Listed Securities

Amsterdam Exchanges NV has some regulations with regard to the technicalities of the trade in securities. Thus, for first-time introductionsthe — there is a Circular of Amsterdam Exchanges NV regarding the stabilisation of prices after a first-time introduction.[250] With regard to the manner of offering securities that are or will be listed on the Amsterdam Exchanges NV, Amsterdam Exchanges NV has issued Circular R95-020, regarding book-building, that contains some regulations and considerations.

There also is an Amsterdam Exchanges NV Circular concerning non-public offerings (onderhandse plaatsing) of securities listed on the Amsterdam Exchanges NV Official Market.[251] According to Circular R94-029, there are publication requirements regarding the essentials (ie, issuer, buyer, amount, manner of pricing, manner of placement, and possible discounts) of the placement. In addition, there is a Circular with regard to the use of book-building for first-time introductions on Amsterdam Exchanges NV.[252]

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Holdings

In General

The Major Holdings Disclosure Act (Wet Melding Zeggenschap) covers both securities listed on an exchange in The Netherlands, and securities listed on exchanges in other member states of the EU or EEA. The Major Holdings Disclosure Act is applicable when the issuer is a corporation under the law of The Netherlands that is listed on an officially recognised exchange in an EU or EEA member state. Duties similar to those of the Major Holdings Disclosure Act are imposed on issuers listed on Amsterdam Exchanges NV that do not fall under the Act.[253]

Shareholder's Duty

Under the Major Holdings Disclosure Act, the investor can be a natural person or a legal entity. However, partnerships or limited partnerships are not regarded as shareholders under the Major Holdings Disclosure Act, although their partners are within the scope of the Act.[254]

The investor who acquires or disposes of shares of or voting rights in a listed corporation and who is aware, or should be aware, of the fact that such acquisition or disposal results in a crossing of certain threshold percentages of ownership in the issuer, must notify both the corporation and the Securities Board of The Netherlands.[255]

Acquisition of shares or voting rights, in this context, must be read in its broadest sense; it includes every form of direct or indirect holding of shares or voting rights or potential shares or voting rights. It includes the holding of the shares by the investor (or its subsidiary) or by a third party that holds the shares for the account of the investor. It also includes the holding of voting rights that can be exercised in connection with shares that are held directly, in usufruct, or that are pledged by the investor or by a third party for the account of the investor, or by virtue of a voting agreement.[256]

Shares or voting rights include potential shares or voting rights or depository receipts of shares (certificaten).[257] Potential shares or voting rights are agreements on the basis of which shares or voting rights can be acquired (eg, call options, warrants, or convertible bonds and the right to buy future shares or shares that are not yet issued).[258]

Any acquisition or alienation of shares or voting rights in a corporation must be notified if it causes the percentage of voting rights or shares of the investor to cross one of several thresholds. The Major Holdings Disclosure Act 1996 has determined five such thresholds, ie, five per cent, 10 per cent, 25 per cent, 50 per cent, and 662/3 per cent.[259] Only the crossing of a threshold caused by an acquisition or alienation of shares or voting rights in the company leads to the obligation of disclosure. A crossing of a threshold caused by an emission or withdrawal of capital is not subject to the rules set forth in the Major Holdings Disclosure Act.

Notification must be done immediately after the signing of the purchase agreement of shares or voting rights.[260] This need not necessarily coincide with the moment of actual transfer of shares or voting rights. Whichever moment comes first in time is decisive. In addition, the investor who acquires, or holds, more than five per cent of the shares of or voting rights in a corporation that is newly admitted to an exchange in an EU or EEA member state must disclose his holding in this corporation. Disclosure must be done within four weeks after the date of admittance.[261]

Exemption

The Major Holdings Disclosure Act grants an exemption from the disclosure requirement to certain investment undertakings that, in the conduct of their profession or business, hold shares for a period no longer than three months. This exemption is not applicable if the investment institution uses the shares or voting rights to vote or otherwise determine the policy of the issuer.

259 There is a less strict rule for large investment corporations with constantly changing capital, as referred to in section 76a of Book 2 of the Civil Code. Applicability of the 'regular' thresholds of the Major Holdings Disclosure Act would lead to constant notification with regard to these corporations. For these companies, a special regime of only three thresholds is established, ie, 25 per cent, 50 per cent, and 66$^{2}/_{3}$ per cent.

Consequences of Violation of Major Holdings Disclosure Act

Breach of the obligations under the Major Holdings Disclosure Act 1996 constitutes a criminal offence.[262] The investor risks a maximum sentence of two years' imprisonment or a fine of NLG 25,000 if he is a natural person, or a fine of NLG 100,000 if a legal entity.

In addition, the corporation, or one or more shareholders that represent in total at least one-twentieth of the issued capital of the corporation, can apply to the court on the basis of section 9 of the Major Holdings Disclosure Act to:

- Order the investor to comply with the Major Holdings Disclosure Act;
- Order the suspension of the voting rights on the holding of the delinquent shareholder for a maximum period of three years;
- Annul specific shareholders' resolutions that probably would not have been adopted but for the votes of the delinquent shareholder;[263] or
- Enjoin the delinquent shareholder from obtaining shares or voting rights in the corporation for a maximum period of five years.

These measures, except for the annulment of shareholder resolutions, also can be claimed in summary proceedings.

Publication

Between five to nine days after notification, the Securities Board of The Netherlands must publish:

- The name, address, and residence of the holder of the shares or voting rights;
- The name of the corporation;
- The relevant percentage of shares or voting rights;
- The composition of the holding (eg, shares, voting rights, and optional shares); and
- The date of the change in percentage.

Publication must be done in a daily national newspaper of every EU and EEA member state where the corporation is listed on an exchange.[264] The listed company involved may ask the Securities Board of The Netherlands to refrain from publication if publication can harm the public interest or lead to serious damages for the issuer.[265]

Applicable Rules

Insider trading and other forms of securities fraud are governed by various European Regulations, the European Convention on Insider Trading, the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, the Act on Economic Offences, and the Dutch Criminal Code.

Insider Trading under the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995

'Insider Trading', as prohibited under section 46 of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, is defined as any transaction in listed securities, or soon to be listed securities, or in securities that derive their value from (soon to be) listed securities that is performed or realised with inside information. 'Inside information' is defined as familiarity with a special circumstance regarding the legal entity, company, or institution which securities it concerns or regarding the trade in securities:

- That has not been made public; and
- The publication of which can reasonably be expected to influence the price of the securities concerned, without regard to the direction of the influence on the price.

Examples of 'special circumstances' are the knowledge of exceptionally good or exceptionally bad company results or knowledge of an upcoming take-over. Dutch case law in this area is so rare that few guidelines can be given as to what information will be covered by this part of section 46 of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995.

A definition of 'public' under section 46 must take into account that information can be publicly available without actually being absorbed by the public. Alternatively, information which was originally intended to remain secret can become public through a leak. If secret information has, in fact, become common knowledge among those in the securities industry, it is no longer considered non-public.

There are certain kinds of conduct that, although generally considered acceptable in the securities markets, would formally fall within section 46 of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995.

To prevent this, paragraphs 3 and 4 of section 46 provide that the prohibition of the first paragraph is not applicable to several categories of persons or transactions. Section 46(3) exempts the following persons:

- The intermediary who possesses inside information regarding the trade in securities and who acts in accordance with the rules of good faith as an agent for his principals;
- The entities (eg, banks) of which the employees and those involved in the transaction only have inside information with regard to the trade; and
- Those who perform a transaction to comply with an enforceable obligation which existed at the time they received the inside information.

Pursuant to section 46, paragraph 4, of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, the following transactions are exempted:

- The granting, pursuant to an employee stock option plan, of options of convertible bonds, warrants, and comparable rights, if the Securities Board was informed of the intention to grant two months before the grant;
- The exercising of an option under an employee stock option plan on the expiration date or within five working days preceding the expiration date, and the immediate sale of the securities obtained by the exercise if the exercising person informed the company of the intention to sell two months before the expiration date;
- Transactions that are necessary to comply with enforceable obligations to deliver shares or depository receipts;

- Transactions performed to stabilise the price of securities in a public offering by the securities institution concerned, if the intention to perform stabilising measures was announced in the prospectus;
- Underwriting a public offering; and
- Issuing stock dividends.

The above-mentioned exempted transactions do not violate the prohibition of insider trading, even if one party or both parties have inside information at the time of the transaction.

Section 46a of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 prohibits passing on inside information to a third party or, while having knowledge of inside information, advising a third party to perform certain transactions, unless this occurs in the normal line of duty (eg, a press officer whose job it is to make information public). The prohibition to advise does not apply to entities (eg, banks) of which the employees involved in such advise themselves do not have inside information.

Section 46b requires each issuer of listed securities to report its transactions in its own securities. It also contains obligations for its managers, supervisory directors or others in charge, and persons with easy access to inside information to immediately report to the Securities Board of The Netherlands any transaction in the company's securities.

Section 46c of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 requires the Minister of Finance to issue an official list of these transactions. Section 46d contains the obligation for issuers of listed securities to adopt regulations in which rules are laid down with regard to the possessions of and transactions in their securities by their employees, managers, supervisory directors, and others in charge. Such a regulation is commonly referred to as a 'Model Code'.

According to a regulation of the Minister of Finance, the Model Code should at least contain provisions regarding:

- The tasks and responsibility of the compliance officer, if there is a compliance officer;

- The duties of employees, managers, supervisor directors of others in charge, and shareholders of more than 25 per cent of the outstanding capital, regarding the possession of and transactions in the company securities; and
- The period in which no transactions may be performed by these persons.

The company must send the Model Code and its amendments to the Securities Board of The Netherlands.

International Aspects

Section 46(2) of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 makes it illegal to cause a transaction to be concluded with inside information in The Netherlands, as well as from The Netherlands. This prohibition concerns both Dutch exchanges and foreign exchanges admitted by the relevant government. As far as transactions in securities listed or soon to be listed at the Amsterdam Exchanges NV stock exchange are concerned, it is irrelevant whether these are performed or realised by a person inside or outside The Netherlands. Both situations are covered by section 46(2).

For foreign exchanges, the place of the transaction may be important. The phrase 'in or from The Netherlands' refers to the place where the transaction takes place or is caused to take place, not the place where the person who actually transacts or causes the transaction to take place is located.

Consequences

Violation of section 46a, 46b, 46c, or 46d of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 is punishable by a fine of a maximum of Dfl 100,000 or imprisonment of two years (in case of an individual) and a fine of up to NLG 1 million (for companies). Among possible additional measures are (partial) shut down of a company's activities, confiscation of certain rights, denial of certain benefits, and publication of a conviction.

Deception of the Public

Section 47 of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 prohibits the inducements of the public's subscription or participation by purposely withholding or falsifying certain information, usually through the prospectus. Section 47 only refers to the primary issuing of securities.

Price Manipulation

Section 334 of the Criminal Code prohibits deception of the public. It concerns the purposeful spreading of false information by a person for his own benefit, to influence the price of securities. Where information regarding securities on the secondary market is withheld or falsified, section 334 may be applicable.

Public Bids

In General

Public bids in The Netherlands are regulated mainly by the Socio-Economic Council Merger Code of Conduct (hereinafter, the 'Merger Code'). The Merger Code does not have force of law but is a code of conduct. In February 1996, the Socio-Economic Council proposed giving the Merger Code a legal basis but, to date, no legislation has been enacted.[266]

Chapter I of the Merger Code contains the rules with regard to the protection of shareholders in case of a public bid. Chapter II contains the rules with regard to notification and with regard to consultation with the trade unions in case of a merger. Chapter III contains the rules with regard to notification of the Minister for Economic Affairs in case of a merger. Chapter IV contains the constitution and the procedure of the Socio-Economic Council Committee for Merger Affairs, and chapter V contains some final provisions.

The rules contained in the Merger Code are generally followed by parties in public bids in The Netherlands. This is due to the fact that non-compliance with the Merger Code may constitute an act of tort. Furthermore, if the Merger Code is not followed, the Committee for Merger Affairs may make a public announcement or issue a public rebuke.[267]

Such an announcement or rebuke is considered bad publicity for the company or the companies concerned. In case of a public rebuke of a party involved in a public bid, all securities institutions admitted to the Amsterdam Exchanges NV are forbidden by the Amsterdam Exchanges NV to render any further services with regard to the public bid concerned. This will result in considerable difficulties for the bidder, especially with regard to the completion of the bid, as one or more of such securities institutions normally act as advisors to the transaction.

Territorial Application

Chapter I of the Merger Code applies if a public bid is made by a Dutch corporation (hereinafter the 'bidder')[268] for the shares of another Dutch company (hereinafter the 'target'), if the shares in the latter are listed on the Amsterdam Exchanges NV or not listed but regularly traded in The Netherlands.[269]

266 On 7 February 1996, the European Commission introduced the revised text of the proposed Thirteenth Directive on Company Law, providing for uniform regulation of public bids in the European Union. If enacted, the draft Directive would require two changes in Dutch merger regulations, namely: bidders who have acquired a specific percentage of the target's shares, giving control of the target, would be required to make a public bid for the shares held by the remaining shareholders in the target or take other means to protect such shareholders; and after a bid has been made, the target would be barred from adopting anti-take-over devices without shareholder approval.

267 Merger Code, s 32(1).

268 A corporation is an 'NV' (public corporation) or a 'BV' (closed corporation), as referred to in Book 2 of the Civil Code.

269 Merger Code, ss 1(1) and 2(1).

If the bidder is not a Dutch corporation,[270] the Merger Code must correspondingly be applied as far as possible, irrespective of the bidder's legal form and nationality.[271] A foreign bidder, therefore, should take the Merger Code into account when considering a public bid on a Dutch corporation.

If the target is a foreign corporation and the bidder is a Dutch corporation whose shares are listed on the Amsterdam Exchanges NV, or not listed but regularly traded in The Netherlands, the Merger Code applies in part.[272]

For example, the rules concerning the public announcement of the bid must be followed. Chapter I of the Merger Code also applies when a non-public bid is directed towards the shares of more than 50 per cent of the shareholders in the target as appearing from the shareholders' register.[273]

The Merger Code applies to 'friendly' bids and 'hostile' bids alike. Although attempts have been made, no hostile public bid has been successful in The Netherlands. This is probably due to the fact that a large majority of the Dutch-listed companies and non-listed companies have adopted adequate anti-take-over measures.[274]

The Merger Commission recognises three kinds of public bids,[275] namely:

- A fixed bid, which is a public take-over bid to all the shareholders in the target stating at least the offered price or the share exchange ratio in case the bidder offers to issue shares in exchange for the shares in the target;
- A partial bid, which is a public bid to acquire a limited portion of shares in the target;[276] and
- A tender offer, which is a public invitation to the holders of the shares in the target to tender their shares for a consideration to be stated by the holders of such shares.[277]

Fixed bids are the most frequent. The procedure for a fixed bid is described below in a more or less chronological order.[278]

270 This might be a Dutch entity not having the legal form of an NV or a BV or a foreign entity.
271 Merger Code, s 2(3).
272 According to section 2(5) of the Merger Code, sections 3, 10, and 13 must be observed.
273 Merger Code, s 2(2).
274 A statute which will enable a bidder to set aside such devices under specific circumstances is in preparation, Kamerstukken II, 25732; see text, above.
275 Merger Code, s 1(1).
276 A partial bid is permitted if the bidder does not acquire more than 30 per cent of the shares in the target, including the shares the bidder already owned prior to the bid. Merger Code, s 6A(1)(f).
277 The 30-per-cent rule applicable to partial bids equally applies to tender offers. Merger Code, s 6B(1)(f).
278 A merger resulting from a public bid may result in an impairment of free competition. Therefore, Dutch or European competition law often applies.

The bidder and the target are under an obligation to make a public announcement without delay if circumstances occur which require a public announcement to prevent insider trading.[279] For example, such a public announcement is required if the negotiations between the bidder and the target reach a stage where the expectation is justified that an agreement on the bid can be reached; such an announcement must state at least this circumstance and the names of the bidder and the target.[280] A public announcement also is required when definitive agreement on the price or exchange ratio is reached.[281]

In the event of a hostile bid, the bidder is under the obligation to consult with and to inform the management of the target before publicly announcing the price or share exchange ratio.[282] If a public announcement concerning a public bid is made, the trade unions must be informed in advance of the content of such an announcement.[283] If the expectation is justified that an agreement on the merger can be reached, the bidder and the target are under the obligation to inform and subsequently consult the trade unions on the anticipated bid.[284] Furthermore, the bidder and, in case of a friendly bid, the target have an obligation to give their respective works councils an opportunity to give advice on the proposed bid and subsequent take-over.[285]

If a public announcement has been made that the expectation is justified that an agreement can be reached between the bidder and the target or the target is notified of the bidder's intention to make a public bid, the bidder, within 30 days, must:

- Make a public bid;
- Announce the decision not to make the public bid; or
- Announce an indication of the period in which a decision about the public bid may be expected.[286]

The bidder is under an obligation to make available an offer to purchase. The availability of the offer to purchase must be made public by an announcement in the Prijscourant or by way of a further announcement in the national press, stating at least the price or the share exchange ratio.[287] An offer to purchase must be available within six weeks of such an announcement.[288] The offer to purchase must contain information on:

- The bidder;
- The target;
- The price or share exchange ratio;

279 Merger Code, s 3(1). Companies listed on the Amsterdam Exchanges NV are under the obligation to immediately make a public announcement of information that should be considered to influence the price of securities significantly (see section 28(h) of the Listing Rules, which is triggered independently from the obligation of section 3(1) of the Merger Code).

- The circumstances on which the take-over bid is made conditional;[289]
- The outcome of the discussions between the bidder and the target;
- The bidder's plans concerning the target;
- The cross-participations between bidder and target; and
- Whether shares in the target have been acquired by the bidder from officials of the target and their families in the three years prior to the offer to purchase.[290]

The managements of the bidder and the target are responsible for the information concerning their respective companies contained in the offer to purchase.[291] According to section 8 of the Merger Code, information on trading in the shares of the target by officials of bidder and target, and their respective families, in the period of six months before the first public announcement must be submitted to the Committee for Merger Affairs.

The tender period, the period during which the bid may be accepted, commences the first day after the offer to purchase is made available.[292] The tender period may not be less than 20 days if the bid is friendly. In the case of a hostile bid, the tender period may not be less than 30 days.[293] The target is under an obligation to convene a general meeting of shareholders to inform the shareholders about the bid at least eight days before the end of the tender period.[294] However, no shareholders' decision is required with regard to the intended bid. If the bidder offers to issue shares of up to a nominal value of more than one-quarter of the bidder's issued capital in exchange for the shares in the target, the bidder is under an obligation to convene a general meeting of shareholders, as well.[295] This obligation almost certainly does not apply to foreign bidders.

With some exceptions, most of the procedural rules that apply to fixed bids apply to partial bids and tender offers as well. Some of the more important exceptions are:

- In the case of a hostile partial bid or tender offer, the obligation to inform the management of the target does not include the obligation to inform regarding business policies of the bidder with regard to the target;[296]
- An offer to purchase is not required;[297] and
- In the case of a partial bid or tender offer, the tender period may not be less than seven days.[298]

293 Merger Code, s 7A(2).
294 Merger Code, s 9(1).
295 Merger Code, s 10.
296 Merger Code, ss 4A and 4B.
297 Partial bids and tender offers are made by means of a public announcement. The information to be included in such an announcement differs from the information to be included in an offer to purchase. The contents of such an announcement in case of a partial bid also differ from the contents of such an announcement in case of a tender offer. Merger Code, ss 6A and 6B.
298 Merger Code, s 7B(2).

Irrespective of the kind of public bid, the bidder is required to announce whether a public bid will be consummated no later than the fifth trading day following the end of the tender period.[299] If the bid is consummated, the bidder is not allowed to acquire shares in the target on terms more favourable than those of the public bid for a period of three years after the Offer to Purchase has been made available.[300] There are some exceptions to this prohibition, such as shares acquired by regular trading on the stock exchange or by way of a squeeze out procedure.

Jurisdictional Conflicts

In General

There are no separate rules for situations where Dutch securities laws and regulations collide with foreign securities laws and regulations. Where there are specific rules, they have been discussed in detail in the substantive sections above. The general system is that any issuer, securities institution, investment undertaking, or other institution that wishes to enter the Dutch market must comply with the Dutch securities laws and regulations. However, especially for issuers, securities institutions, and investment undertakings from EU or EEA member states, there are exceptions and exemptions from requirements.

For non-member states of the EU or EEA, there generally are no specific exceptions or exemptions. However, issuers, securities institutions, and investment undertakings from these countries may use the individual exemptions provided for in most Dutch securities legislation, often specifically to accommodate these situations.

Multilateral Approaches

Substantive Law Solutions

A clear example of a multilateral approach is the legislation of the EU. The law regarding securities in the EU and EEA is harmonised to a large extent.

Procedural Solutions

In addition to substantive rules having been harmonised to a large extent, most EC Directives in the field of securities (eg, the Investment Services Directive and the Prospectus Directives) provide for the recognition in other member states of several documents and licences issued by member states. Thus, once a securities institution is licensed in a member state of the EU or EEA, it may obtain a European passport to provide services in other member states of the EU or EEA. Likewise, a prospectus used for the offering of securities in one member state must be recognised by other member states if it meets the requirements of the relevant Directives.

299 Merger Code, ss 11(3) and 11A.
300 Merger Code, s 12.

Unilateral Approaches

Both the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995 and the Act on Supervision of Investment Undertakings provide for the possibility of individual exemptions.[301]

According to the Explanatory Memorandum of the Act on Supervision of Securities Trade 1995, the possibility of an individual exemption from the prospectus requirements is specifically meant for situations where foreign laws and regulations would be incompatible with Dutch laws and regulations.[302] Thus, where no exception or exemption is specifically created to accommodate foreign securities institutions, the possibility of individual exemptions will have to be used.

Introduction

Regulatory System

In the 1980s, the New Zealand government substantially deregulated New Zealand's financial markets. These are now relatively free of controls and relatively light-handed in terms of compliance costs.[1]

The light-handed approach adopted in relation to New Zealand's financial markets is reflected in New Zealand's disclosure-based approach to regulation of securities markets.

The collapse of a significant number of finance companies, beginning in 2006, focused the government's attention on the lack of regulation in relation to finance companies. As a result of this, the role and functions of New Zealand's Securities Commission came under close scrutiny. This brought about the establishment, in 2011, of a new super regulator, the Financial Markets Authority.

Legal Sources

Important sources of securities regulation in New Zealand are the following:

- The Securities Act 1978 (and Securities Regulations 2009), which regulates the offer and allotment of securities to the public, most importantly by requiring prospectuses and investment statements, restricting the content of advertisements and, in some cases, requiring the appointment of a trustee or statutory supervisor;[2]
- The Financial Markets Authority Act 2011, which established the Financial Markets Authority and provides the Financial Markets Authority's main

1 This chapter on New Zealand securities regulation is an overview of the relevant law as at the time of writing. Because, by necessity, it is generalised and a summary, and the law may be amended at any time, the reader should not treat any material in this chapter as legal advice. If expert advice on New Zealand securities laws is required, the reader should consult a New Zealand lawyer experienced in securities regulation.

objectives and functions as well as general information-gathering and enforcement powers;

- The Securities Trustees and Statutory Supervisors Act 2011, which requires persons that wish to be appointed as a trustee or statutory supervisor, in respect of a security or retirement village, to apply to the Financial Markets Authority for a license to do so;
- The Securities Markets Act 1988, which imposes liabilities for insider trading, tipping, market manipulation and dealing, and misconduct in respect of securities, requires disclosure of substantial and directors' and officers', interests in listed issuers' securities, regulates dealing in futures contracts, regulates securities exchanges, and requires continuous disclosure by public issuers;
- The Securities Transfer Act 1991, which provides methods for transferring securities;
- The Companies Act 1993, which regulates the issue of shares, transfer of shares, powers and duties of directors, disclosure, and registration of overseas companies in New Zealand;
- The Financial Reporting Act 1993, which requires companies to prepare and, in some cases, have audited (and overseas companies carrying on business in New Zealand and issuers to file) financial statements that comply with generally accepted accounting practice and give a true and fair view of their affairs;
- The Takeovers Act 1993 (and the Takeovers Code Approval Order 2000), which established a Takeovers Panel and the Takeovers Code;[3]
- The Overseas Investment Act 2005 (and Overseas Investment Regulations 2005), which regulates significant investments in sensitive land or significant business assets in New Zealand by overseas persons;
- The Commerce Act 1986, which regulates acquisitions which have the effect of substantially lessening competition in a market, as well as various restrictive trade practices;
- The NZSX/ NZDX Listing Rules, which apply to issuers of securities listed on the NZX and regulate the spread of ownership, the immediate release of price-sensitive information, continuous disclosure and periodic release of specified information, issues and buy backs of securities, transactions with related parties, major transactions, and contents of constitutions;[4]
- The New Zealand Exchange Limited ("NZX") Regulations, which constitute a statement of required practice for members of the NZX, in respect of the conduct of members and the conduct and administration of business on the NZX;

3 The Takeovers Panel may grant exemptions from the requirements of the Takeovers Code.

4 The NZX also conducts market supervision.

- The Financial Advisers Act 2008, which requires financial advisers and brokers to take care in providing services to investors and consumers and certain conduct by financial advisers and brokers, including by requiring certain advisers to be authorised and comply with the Financial Advisers (Code of Professional Conduct for Authorised Financial Advisers) Notice 2010;
- The Financial Service Providers Act (Registration and Dispute Resolution) Act 2008, which requires financial service providers to be registered and be part of a dispute resolution scheme;
- The Financial Advisers (Code of Professional Conduct for Authorised Financial Advisers) Notice 2010, which imposes a code of practice on authorised financial advisers;
- The Anti-Money Laundering and Counter Financing of Terrorism Act 2009, which facilitates co-operation amongst reporting entities, AML/CFT supervisors, and various government agencies to detect and deter money laundering and the financing of terrorism;
- The Unit Trusts Act 1960, which regulates unit trusts (in some countries called 'mutual funds');[5]
- The KiwiSaver Act 2006, which establishes the rules for New Zealand's subsidised retirement savings regime;
- The Superannuation Schemes Act 1989, which provides for the registration of superannuation schemes and regulation of registered schemes;
- The Trustee Companies Act 1967, which regulates companies defined as 'trustee companies' for the purposes of the Act and group investment funds;[6]
- The Partnership Act 1908, which regulates the nature of partnerships, relations between partners and between partners and persons dealing with them, and dissolution of partnerships;
- The Insurance (Prudential Supervision) Act 2010, which establishes a licensing system for insurers, imposes prudential requirements on insurers, provides for supervision by the Reserve Bank of New Zealand of insurers, and confers certain powers on the Reserve Bank of New Zealand to act in respect of insurers in financial distress or other difficulties;
- The Life Insurance Act 1908, which regulates aspects of life insurance policies;

5 The Unit Trusts Act 1960 is generally regarded as applying only to unit trusts established in New Zealand.

6 Trustee companies, in turn, may act as trustees for the purposes of the Securities Act 1978.

- Part 5D of the Reserve Bank Act 1989, which requires non-bank deposit takers to have a credit rating, an independent chair person and two independent directors, minimum capital, and to meet certain other requirements; and
- The Crimes Act 1961, which sets out various criminal offences.

Authorities

Financial Markets Authority

The Financial Markets Authority is the primary regulator of the New Zealand securities market, although certain roles are undertaken by the Reserve Bank of New Zealand and the Ministry of Economic Development. The Financial Market Authority's main objective is to promote and facilitate the development of fair, efficient, and transparent financial markets.

Ministry of Economic Development (Including the Companies Office)

The Registrar of Financial Service Providers registers prospectuses under the Securities Act 1978.[7] The Registrar of Companies registers documents required to be filed under the Companies Act 1993.[8] Company files at the Companies Office — of companies incorporated in New Zealand and overseas companies carrying on business in New Zealand registered under Part XVIII of the Companies Act 1993 — are open to public inspection.[9]

The Companies Office also has various powers of investigation and enforcement. The Ministry of Economic Development also is responsible for advising the government on the regulatory and legal framework for business issues.

Reserve Bank of New Zealand

The Reserve Bank of New Zealand (New Zealand's central bank) registers and supervises banks, insurance companies, and non-bank deposit takers, which includes credit unions.

NZX

The NZX is the only registered exchange in New Zealand. It comprises the three main trading markets, the NZSX, the NZDX, and the NZAX. All companies seeking to list securities on one of the three main trading markets must enter into a Listing Agreement with the NZX, agreeing to be bound by the relevant NZX Listing Rules.

7 Securities Act 1978, s 42
8 Companies Act 1993, s 362.
9 Companies Act 1993, s 363.

The NZX Listing Rules establish the NZ Markets Disciplinary Tribunal that is authorised to impose penalties for breaches of the NZX Listing Rules by listed companies and of the NZX Participant Rules by sharebrokers and other NZX participants.[10]

Commerce Commission

The Commerce Commission may grant approvals to business acquisitions or restrictive trade practices, and it investigates and takes enforcement action against anticompetitive acquisitions and trade practices, under the Commerce Act 1986.

Overseas Investment Office

The Overseas Investment Office handles applications for consent for overseas persons to invest in sensitive land or significant business assets in New Zealand under the Overseas Investment Regulations 2005.

Advertising Standards Complaints Board

The Advertising Standards Authority has a Code for Financial Advertising. The Advertising Standards Complaints Board, a self-regulatory body, hears and determines complaints about advertisements.

External Reporting Board

The External Reporting Board, an independent Crown Entity, established under the Financial Reporting Act 1993, has various functions, including implementing an overall strategy for financial reporting standards and auditing and assurance standards, issuing accounting standards, issuing auditing and assurance standards, and liaising with its international equivalents.

Industry-Specific Authorities

Self-regulatory bodies, such as the Insurance and Savings Ombudsman and the Banking Ombudsman, handle some types of disputes in their respective industries, and provide dispute resolution services under the Financial Service Providers (Regulation and Dispute Resolution) Act 2008.

Serious Fraud Office and Police

The Serious Fraud Office and the police may become involved in the event of criminal offences, such as fraud under the Crimes Act 1961.

10 The author is a member of the NZ Markets Disciplinary Tribunal.

Procedures

Financial Markets Authority

Applications. Most market participants are likely to deal with the Financial Markets Authority through following its guidance notes and under its procedures for granting:

- Exemption notices exempting a person or persons from complying with some or all of the requirements of the Securities Act 1978 and the Securities Regulations 2009, the Securities Markets Act 1988, and the Financial Reporting Act 1993;
- QFE Status under, or through, the Financial Advisers Act 2008; and
- Applications for approval as a trustee or statutory supervisor.

Investigations. In some circumstances, the Financial Markets Authority may undertake investigations. The Financial Markets Authority has a range of investigation and enforcement powers. These include:

- Receiving evidence on securities law and practice, with power to require people and entities to supply information, produce documents, and give evidence;
- Suspending or cancelling offer documents, removing a prospectus or investment statement from the market, banning advertisements, and publicising these actions;
- Entering and searching premises and vehicles;
- Investigating complaints about authorised financial advisers and taking appropriate disciplinary action;
- Enforcing securities law and the law relating to insider trading, market manipulation and disclosure by substantial security holders and financial advisers;
- Enforcing continuous disclosure law and making orders requiring disclosure by issuers;
- Requiring an exchange to provide the financial market authorities with information and assistance and making orders requiring disclosure by unregistered exchanges;
- Accepting enforceable undertakings; and
- Publishing warnings and alerts.

New Zealand Courts

The Financial Markets Authority may state a case for the opinion of the High Court on a question of law. The High Court may order the removal into the Court of Appeal of such a case.[11] The Financial Markets Authority may lay criminal charges, or begin civil proceedings in the New Zealand courts.

With a criminal proceeding, a public announcement will only be made after the first court appearance, giving time to the defendant to seek legal advice and/or name-suppression. The Securities Act 1978 provides for various civil and criminal liabilities for breaches of the Securities Act.

NZX

The NZX, on request or of its own motion, may make rulings on the application of the Listing Rules in respect of a listed issuer. Rulings have effect as if they formed part of the Listing Rules in relation to that listed issuer.[12] Therefore, when the application of the Listing Rules is doubtful, an applicant may seek a ruling to remove that doubt (and minimise the possibility of challenge).

Alternatively, in the event of a dispute or anticipated dispute between an issuer and a security holder as to the meaning of any provisions in the Listing Rules, either may apply to the NZX to determine the issue (although the NZX is not bound to do so).[13] Furthermore, the NZX also may waive the application of any of the Listing Rules.[14]

Other Authorities

Various procedures of other authorities are referred to in the body of this chapter.

Legal Order and Regulatory Interests

Admission

NZX

The NZX Limited is a securities market. The NZX provides a market for the raising of capital by listed companies and the trading of securities. Admission of issuers to the NZX is discussed in the text, below, relating to 'Issuer Requirements'.

11 Financial Markets Authority Act 2011, s 48.
12 NZSX/NZDX Listing Rules, rule 1.10.
13 NZSX/NZDX Listing Rules, rule 1.9.1.
14 NZSX/NZDX Listing Rules, rule 1.11.1.

Futures Exchanges

The Financial Markets Authority may, on the terms and conditions (if any) that it thinks fit, declare a body corporate to be authorised to conduct one or more futures markets in New Zealand.[15]

Other Market Participants

Many other market participants also need to be licensed. Regulations exist for:

- Financial advisers — Persons who provide financial advice, discretionary management services, investment planning services, or broker services may generally need to comply with a range of registration, authorisation, qualification, disclosure, and conduct requirements, depending on the product/investments involved, the type of advice, and the class of recipients as per the Financial Advisers Act 2008 who must be registered in accordance with the provisions of that act.
- Financial service providers — Financial service providers must be registered on the Financial Service Providers Register and in some cases also join an approved dispute resolution scheme.
- Authorised public securities dealers[16] — The Securities Transfer Act 1991 provides a method of transfer for securities disposed of in an 'authorised transaction'. A disposition of securities is an 'authorised transaction' if each party is, or is acting through the agency of, a person authorised to undertake activities on a stock exchange's market, solicitor in practice on that solicitor's own account, chartered accountant, trustee corporation, registered bank, or 'authorised public securities dealer' acting in the ordinary course of business as such. An 'authorised public securities dealer' is a person or body of persons approved by the Minister of Finance as a public securities dealer.
- Futures traders — The Financial Markets Authority may authorise a person, or class of persons, to carry on the business of dealing in futures contracts. No person may carry on the business of dealing in futures contracts without an authorisation from the Financial Markets Authority or approval by an authorised futures exchange under its rules to carry on the business of dealing in futures contracts in accordance with the rules of that exchange.[17]
- Trustees and statutory supervisors — Subject to any applicable exemption, debt securities (or participatory securities) may not be offered to the public for subscription unless, among other things, the issuer has appointed a trustee (statutory supervisor), and the issuer and the trustee (statutory supervisor) have signed a trust deed (deed of participation) relating to the security. In respect of participatory securities, the issuer of the security must have appointed a person as statutory supervisor in respect of the security and both the issuer and that person need to sign a deed of participation relating to the security.[18] The Securities Trustees and Statutory Supervisors Act 2011 requires a person that wishes to be appointed as a trustee or statutory supervisor, in respect of a security or retirement village, to apply to the Financial Markets Authority for a license to do so. The Financial Markets Authority has released guidance on the licensing process detailing the licensing criteria. The Securities Trustees and Statutory Supervisors Act 2011 imposes certain duties and reporting obligations on trustees and statutory supervisors.

- Trustees of unit trusts — A trustee of a unit trust established in New Zealand must hold a license under the Securities Trustees and Statutory Supervisors Act 2011 for a particular unit trust.[19]
- Banks — Although no licence is needed to carry on the business of banking, no person (with some exceptions) may use any of the words 'bank', 'banker', or 'banking' in its name unless it is registered as a bank or, in the case of a person formed or registered overseas with such a word in its title, authorised by the Reserve Bank to use such a word for its representative office in New Zealand. The Reserve Bank may not register any person as a registered bank unless that person's business consists of, or to a substantial extent consists of, the borrowing and lending of money or the provision of other financial services, or both. It considers matters such as the applicant's ownership structure, size of business, ability to carry on business in a prudent manner, standing in the financial market, the suitability for their positions of the directors and senior managers, the standing of the owner of the applicant in the financial markets and, where the applicant is incorporated outside New Zealand, the law and regulatory requirements relating to the licensing of banks in that overseas country, and the nature and extent of the financial and other information disclosed to the public by the applicant.[20]

Off-Market Transactions in Securities Listed on the NZX

The NZX Regulations govern off-market transactions effected by brokers who are members of the NZX. For the purposes of the Regulations, an off-market trade is any business transacted outside FASTER (Fully Automated Screen Trading and Electronic Registration), the system used for the trading, clearing, settling, and registering securities on the NZX.[21] Off-market trades include:

- A special sale in the Retail Debt Market; and
- Transactions between members conducted outside the hours of the trading sessions on the NZX.

21 NZX Regulations, reg 1.2.

The Regulations also contain procedures for trades outside the normal trading hours of the NZX and reporting of off-market trades.

Transactions in Securities Not Listed on the NZX

New Zealand has some private markets; these are where securities are issued to associates of the relevant company and sophisticated investors. Relief from the requirement for offering documents also is provided for offers to wealthy or experienced investors, subject to certain requirements, including certificates that they meet the relevant criteria.

Securities

National Treatment and Reciprocity

Both the New Zealand Financial Markets Authority and the NZX have international reciprocal arrangements.

Financial Markets Authority

The Financial Markets Authority maintains relationships with other banking and financial regulators in New Zealand and internationally. These relationships are designed to promote effective financial sector regulation through knowledge sharing, cooperation, and benchmarking.

In particular, the Financial Markets Authority contributes to the development of the Trans-Tasman Single Economic Market agenda, and maintains a strong relationship with Australia's financial markets regulator, ASIC. The Financial Markets Authority also participates in international Memorandums of Understanding in relation to co-operation and the enforcement of financial and securities law and to facilitate cross-border investments.

Issuer Requirements

Overseas issuers (and other overseas bodies corporate operating in New Zealand) may need to register with the Companies Office. A body corporate incorporated outside New Zealand (‘overseas company’) may not carry on business in New Zealand before its name has been reserved and must apply for registration under Part XVIII of the Companies Act 1993 within 10 working days of commencing to carry on business in New Zealand.[22]

Whether or not an overseas company is ‘carrying on business’ in New Zealand and, thus, must be registered, will depend on the circumstances of each case. If it establishes or uses a share transfer office or a share registration office in New Zealand, it will be ‘carrying on business’ in New Zealand.[23] An overseas company is not subject to all the provisions of the Companies Act 1993, but only certain requirements, such as ensuring that its full name and country of incorporation are stated on written communications and legal documents, filing an annual return, registering financial statements, and notifying the Companies Office of changes in its constitution, directors, place of business, and persons authorised to accept service in New Zealand.[24]

Registration under Part XVIII of the Companies Act 1993 does not have the effect of incorporating a company in New Zealand, but merely authorises it to carry on business in New Zealand. However, overseas companies can transfer their incorporation to the New Zealand register, and companies may be removed from the New Zealand register in connection with becoming incorporated under the law of another country.[25]

Listing and quotation on the NZX is granted at the discretion of the NZX, which may impose conditions (such as requiring the issuer to appoint independent directors).[26] The NZX generally does not consider applications for listing unless the anticipated market value of the issuer's securities to be quoted is at least NZ $5 million.[27] An issuer may apply to the NZX, through a Primary Market Participant acting as an Organising Participant, for listing either:

- With the NZX as its 'Home Exchange';
- With another stock exchange as its 'Home Exchange' if that issuer is domiciled or incorporated outside New Zealand and listed on a recognised stock exchange; or
- As a Dual-Listed Issuer.[28]

The 'Home Exchange' is an exchange that is recognised by the NZX and which the NZX is satisfied has primary jurisdiction in relation to listing requirements for the issuer and quotation of its securities.[29] The current fees for listing on the NZX can be found in the current Listed Issuer Fee Schedule available from the NZX website. Listed issuers who have the NZX as their Home Exchange must:

- Unless the listed issuer is a company incorporated in New Zealand, appoint a natural person resident in New Zealand with whom the NZX may communicate and who is authorised on behalf of the issuer to accept service of notices or legal proceedings from the NZX; and
- Hold all meetings of holders of quoted securities in New Zealand.[30]

If the NZX accepts a listing with an overseas exchange as the Home Exchange, the listed issuer:[31]

- Is deemed to comply with the Listing Rules so long as it remains listed on its Home Exchange (although the NZX can declare that any of the Listing Rules apply to that issuer);
- If it applies for a class or classes of its securities quoted on its Home Exchange to be quoted on the NZX, is deemed to satisfy the Listing Rules as long as those securities remain quoted on its Home Exchange;
- Must give the NZX the same information and notices it must give to its Home Exchange at the same time it must give them to its Home Exchange; and
- Must include a statement in its annual report that the Home Exchange corporate governance rules and principles may materially differ from the NZX's and a reference to where investors may find more information about the corporate governance and principles of the Issuer's Home Exchange.[32]

As a general rule, the NZX will cancel the listing if the issuer's listing is cancelled on its Home Exchange and will suspend quotation of a class of securities if quotation is suspended on the Home Exchange.[33] The NZX operates a separate market for small to medium-sized businesses wishing to list on the NZX entitled the 'NZX Alternative Market' (NZAX). The NZAX is the marketplace for small to medium-sized, fast-growing businesses and is designed to provide a safe and efficient capital-raising facility.

Securities Requirements

In General. Companies incorporated in New Zealand must comply with the procedures in the Companies Act 1993 in issuing shares, securities convertible into shares, or options to acquire shares. Companies listed on the NZX may not issue shares (or confer entitlements to a third party's securities) unless the issue falls within one of the categories specified in the Listing Rules, such as issues authorised by ordinary resolutions of holders of each class of quoted equity securities whose rights could be affected.[34]

Securities Registers. Companies incorporated in New Zealand must keep a share register in New Zealand.[35] Subject to any exemption, an issuer of securities offered to the public must keep in New Zealand a register for each type of security it issues (eg, equity securities and unit trusts), and it may notify the Companies Office of the place it keeps its register (unless the issuer is a company incorporated in New Zealand and keeps its register at its registered office).[36]

Quotation of Securities on the NZX. Listed issuers (or applicants for listing) may apply, through a Primary Market Participant acting as an Organising Broker, to the NZX for a class or classes of securities to be quoted on the NZX. The NZX will generally not consider an application unless the securities are held by at least 500 members of the public holding at least 25 per cent of securities in that class.[37]

However, the NZX will consider applications for a waiver from this 'spread' requirement where, in the case of debt securities or convertible equity securities, the lack of initial liquidity would not be of disadvantage to the holder or there is a commitment by one or more major holders to sell their holding into the market within a reasonable period.

Prospectus and Investment Statement Requirements. Subject to any applicable exemptions, issuers may not allot a security offered to the public for subscription:

- Unless the subscriber has received an investment statement relating to the security before subscribing;
- Unless at the time of subscription there is a current prospectus registered with the Companies Office for that security; and
- If, at the time of allotment, the issuer, or any director, knows that the investment statement or registered prospectus is false or misleading in a material particular by not referring or giving proper emphasis to adverse circumstances (whether occurring before or after registration).[38]

The fee for registration of a prospectus is NZ $320,[39] but this was to change from 1 August 2012 to NZ $2,327.11. Registered prospectuses may be amended by an instrument of amendments registered with the Registrar of Financial Service Providers.[40] The content requirements for prospectuses and investment statements are referred to in the text, below, relating to 'Requirements Applying to Offers of Listed and Unlisted Securities' and 'Exemptions from Disclosure Requirements'.

Corporate Governance. Companies incorporated in New Zealand are subject to the corporate governance requirements in Part VIII of the Companies Act 1993. The business and affairs of such a company must be managed by, or under the direction or supervision of, the board of the company. Its directors are subject to various duties, including duties to act in good faith and in the best interests of the company, to act for a proper purpose, not to trade recklessly, and to act with care and diligence. Directors' interests in a transaction must be disclosed to the board and entered in the company's 'interest register'.

Companies listed on the NZX also are subject to the corporate governance requirements in the Listing Rules.[41] As well as requirements on the appointment, rotation, removal, remuneration, and proceedings of directors, the Listing Rules prevent directors voting on matters in which they are interested except in matters where the Companies Act 1993 requires directors to provide a certificate.[42]

Registration of Transfers of Securities. Shares of a company incorporated in New Zealand may, subject to the constitution of a company, be transferred by entering the transferee's name on the company's share register, after receiving a form of transfer signed by the transferor or under an electronic system approved under section 7 of the Securities Transfer Act 1991.[43] The Securities Transfer Act 1991 provides other means of transfer applying to a wide range of securities. Securities may be transferred:

- If fully paid up and disposed of in an 'authorised transaction', by means of a securities transfer executed in New Zealand by the transferor;[44]
- If sold in a stock exchange transaction, by a securities transfer executed in New Zealand by the transferor and a brokers transfer; and
- In accordance with an electronic system approved under section 7 of the Securities Transfer Act 1991.[45]

Forms of securities transfers and brokers transfers are set out in the Schedules to the Securities Transfer Act 1991. In May 1998, the FASTER system, which handled the electronic transfer of securities quoted on the NZX, was extended to enable scripless trading. Now, shareholders need not provide any documents when buying or selling, and listed companies send shareholders a statement after each transaction.

Periodic Disclosure

In General

This section on periodic disclosure outlines requirements for regular disclosure. It does not cover requirements for disclosure on the occurrence of particular events (such as issuing shares, declaring a dividend, appointing directors, or a change in shareholding).

General Disclosure Requirements

In General. Companies incorporated in New Zealand must each year produce an annual report and an annual return.

Annual Report. The boards of most companies, within five months after the company's balance date, must prepare an annual report on the affairs of the company during the accounting period ending on that date. The annual report must be sent to shareholders not less than 20 working days before the date of the annual meeting. The annual report contains information pertaining to matters such as:

- Changes in the nature of the company's business;
- Financial statements;
- Auditor's report;
- Particulars of entries in the company's interests register;
- Value of the remuneration and other benefits received by each director or former director during the accounting period;
- Number of employees or former employees who received remuneration and other benefits worth more than NZ $100,000 per annum (disclosed in NZ $10,000 brackets);
- Donations by the company; and
- Directors and auditor's fees.[46]

Annual Return. The board of a company must file an annual return with the Companies Office each year at the time determined by the Companies Office.[47] The annual return discloses matters such as the company's registered office, address for service, types and number of shares, directors, shareholders, and the date of the annual meeting. Overseas companies carrying on business in New Zealand (but not incorporated in New Zealand) must file an annual return, but they need not produce an annual report.[48]

Access to Information. A company incorporated in New Zealand must keep its certificate of incorporation, constitution, share register, names and residential addresses of directors and registered office, and address for service available for public inspection. Shareholders also may inspect minutes of all meetings and resolutions of shareholders, copies of written communications to shareholders, directors' certificates, and the interests register.[49] Issuers must make their registers of equity securities, debt securities, participatory securities, and units in unit trusts open to public inspection.[50]

A shareholder may make a written request to a company for information held by the company. A company may refuse to provide information if disclosure would, or would be likely to, prejudice the commercial position of the company or any other person, or the request is frivolous or vexatious. It also may impose a reasonable charge for providing the information. A shareholder can seek a court order to compel the company to provide the information. The court also has the power, on the application of a shareholder or creditor of a company, to make an order authorising a person to inspect and make copies of company records.[51]

Financial Disclosure Requirements

Preparing Financial Statements. The directors of issuers and most companies must ensure that financial statements are completed and signed on behalf of the directors within the prescribed time (usually five months after the balance date).[52] The financial statements must comply with generally accepted accounting practice and give a true and fair view.[53]

However, the financial statements are taken to comply with section 11 of the Financial Reporting Act 1993 if the Companies Office notifies an issuer or company incorporated outside New Zealand that it is satisfied that its financial statements comply with the requirements in force in the country in which it is incorporated and those requirements are substantially the same as those under the Financial Reporting Act 1993.

Exemptions allow for the use of financial statements complying with the laws of foreign jurisdictions in certain cases. If an issuer or company has subsidiaries, it also must prepare group financial statements.[54] There is similar relief to that described above, for group financial statements that comply with foreign requirements. Issuers' financial statements and group financial statements must be audited.[55]

An auditor of a company incorporated in New Zealand must make a report to the shareholders on the financial statements audited by him.[56] An auditor of an issuer of debt securities or participatory securities offered to the public, or of an issuer of units in a unit trust, must copy his reports to the trustee, statutory supervisor, or unit trustee.[57]

Registering Financial Statements. The following must file at the Companies Office copies of financial statements, any group financial statements, and the auditor's report within 20 working days of when the statements must be signed (i.e., within 20 working days and five months of the company's balance date):

- Issuers;
- Companies incorporated outside New Zealand that carry on business in New Zealand;
- Subsidiaries of companies incorporated outside New Zealand; and
- Companies in which at least 25 per cent of the voting power is held by a company incorporated outside New Zealand, a direct or indirect subsidiary of a company incorporated outside New Zealand, or a person not ordinarily resident in New Zealand.[58]

Disclosure to Security Holders under the Securities Act 1978

Issuers of securities offered to the public must send to each security holder:

- Documents, information, and matters required to be sent by regulations;[59] and
- At the request of a security holder, a copy of its most recent annual report, its most recent financial statements required to be registered, any trust deed or deed of participation, any guarantee of payment of money owing in respect of the security, any guarantor's financial statements, the most recent prospectus, the most recent investment statement, and a comparison of the actual returns or results against any prospective financial information contained in any prospectus, disclosure statement, investment statement, or advertisement.[60]

Additional Disclosure Requirements for Listed Issuers

General Duty to Release Information Affecting Prices. Once an issuer listed on the NZX becomes aware of any 'Material Information'[61] concerning it, the issuer must disclose that Material Information to the Exchange unless:

- A reasonable person would not expect the information to be disclosed;
- The information is confidential and its confidentiality is maintained; and
- One or more of the following applies: the release of information would be a breach of law; the information concerns an incomplete proposal or negotiation; the information comprises matters of supposition or is insufficiently definite to warrant disclosure; the information is generated for 58 Financial Reporting Act 1993, ss 18 and 19.

59 At the time of writing, there are no such regulations.

60 Securities Act 1978, ss 54A and 54B; Securities Regulations 2009, Part 6, reg 44.

61 'Material Information' in relation to an issuer is information that: (a) a reasonable person would expect, if it were 'generally available to the market', to have a material effect on the price or value of quoted securities of the issuer; and (b) relates to particular securities, a particular issuer, or particular issuers, rather than to securities generally or issuers generally. (NZSX/ NZDX Listing Rules, rule 1.6.1).

the internal management purposes of the issuer; or the information is a trade secret.[62]

Listed issuers may not disclose any material information to the public, other stock exchanges (except where the issuer is listed on another stock exchange and it releases information to the NZX before or at the same time as it releases information to the other exchange(s) on which it is listed), or certain other parties prior to disclosing that material information to the Exchange, and prior to an acknowledgement from the Exchange of receipt of that material information.[63]

Listed issuers must release material information to the Exchange to the extent necessary to prevent development or subsistence of a market for its quoted securities which is materially influenced by false or misleading information emanating from the issuer, an associated person, or any credible source.[64] Listed issuers also must disclose to the NZX information on arrangements for which members of the public might reasonably consider the directors have a conflict of interest which may lead them to approve terms materially more favourable to the other party than arm's length terms.[65]

Annual Reports and Half Yearly Reports. Listed issuers must issue an annual report, to be issued to the NZX and to holders of quoted securities within three months after the end of the issuer's financial year,[66] and a half-yearly report, to be issued to the NZX and to holders of quoted securities within three months after the end of the first six months of each financial year.[67] As well as disclosing all information required by law (such as by section 211 of the Companies Act 1993 and part 2 of the Securities Markets Act 1988), the annual report must disclose:

- The information required to be published by sub-part 3 of part 2 of the Securities Markets Act 1988 and, in the case of a company, the information required by section 211 of the Companies Act 1993;
- The names and holdings of the equity security holders with the 20 largest holdings of quoted equity securities;
- The equity securities in which each director has a relevant interest;
- The details of the spread of security holders;
- The issuer's current credit rating status (if any);
- The waivers granted by the NZX and published, applicable as at the balance date;
- The details of any disciplinary action taken by the NZX;

- A statement of any corporate governance polices, practices, and processes;
- A statement as to which of the directors are independent and which are not; and
- The details of any directors appointed by security holders.

The NZX may require listed issuers to provide, in their financial statements or otherwise, information additional to that required by the Financial Reporting Act 1993.[68]

Preliminary Announcements. Listed issuers must make preliminary announcements through the NZX as soon as the relevant information is available (and in any event before the release of the annual or half-yearly report and not later than 60 days after the end of the financial reporting period). 'Preliminary announcements' contain information prescribed by the NZSX/ NZDX Listing Rules.[69]

Obligation to Copy Notices to Exchange. Listed issuers must give the NZX a copy of every notice or communication given to holders of that issuer's quoted securities and any stock exchange other than the NZX.[70]

Substantial Security Holders. A person who begins to have a substantial holding in a public issuer must disclose that fact as soon as the person knows, or ought to know, that the person has the substantial holding. There are other situations in which disclosure also is required if there is a movement of one per cent or more in a substantial holding, there has been any change in the nature of any relevant interest in the substantial holding, and the person ceases to have a substantial holding.[71]

Directors and Officers Disclosure

Directors and officers of private issuers (broadly, NZX listed issuers) must disclose any trade by them of a relevant interest in a security issued by their public issuer or a related body corporate within five trading days and of their holding of such securities within five trading days of the public issuer's listing or their appointment.[72]

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

Offer. The Securities Act 1978 regulates offers of securities to the public, including initial public offers by an issuer of securities to the public in New Zealand for the first time and new issues by existing issuers and certain offers of previously allotted equity securities which are offered to the public with the advice, encouragement, or knowing assistance of the original issuer, or when the original allotment was made with a view to offering the securities to the public and they have not yet been so offered.

The Securities Act 1978 applies to securities of bodies corporate incorporated outside New Zealand, as well as those incorporated in New Zealand. It is not possible to contract out of the Securities Act 1978.[73] A 'security' is generally any interest or right to participate in any capital, assets, earnings, royalties, or other property of any person. It includes:

- An equity security;
- A debt security;
- A unit in a unit trust;
- An interest in a superannuation scheme;
- A life insurance policy; and
- A renewal or variation of the terms or conditions of any such interest or right.[74]

An 'offer' of securities includes an invitation and any proposal or invitation to make an offer. References in the Securities Act 1978 to an offer of securities to the public include distributing an advertisement, a prospectus, or an application form for the subscription of securities.[75] The following are not offers of securities to the public:

- An offer of securities made to any or all of the following persons only (a) relatives or close business associates of the issuer or of a director of the issuer; (b) persons whose principal business is the investment of money or who, in the course of and for the purposes of their business, habitually invest money; (c) persons who are each required to pay a minimum subscription price of at least NZ $500,000 for the securities before the allotment of those securities; (d) persons who have each previously paid a minimum subscription price of at least NZ $500,000 for securities (the initial securities) in a single transaction before the allotment of the initial securities, provided that the offer of the securities is made by the issuer of the initial securities; and the offer of the securities is made within 18 months of the date of the first allotment of the initial securities; and (e) any other person who in all the circumstances can properly be regarded as having been selected otherwise than as a member of the public; and

74 Securities Act 1978, s 2D.
75 Securities Act 1978, ss 2(1) and 3(4).

- An invitation to a person to enter into a bona fide underwriting or sub-underwriting agreement with respect to an offer of securities.[76]

Some types of offers are excluded from most or all of the disclosure requirements in the Securities Act 1978,[77] including offers of previously allotted securities unless the securities were originally allotted with a view to being offered for sale to the public in New Zealand and have not previously been offered for sale to the public in New Zealand; are units in a unit trust that have previously been allotted (whether in New Zealand or elsewhere) and are being offered, sold, or otherwise disposed of to the public for subscription by the manager or unit trustee of the unit trust or by an associated person of that manager or unit trustee; or are equity securities (or securities convertible into equity securities) and the holder or offeror, not being the original allotter, offers the securities for sale to the public in New Zealand and the original allotter advises, encourages, or knowingly assists the holder or offeror.

Offers to the public of previously allotted securities not subject to the usual disclosure requirements will have implied a term that, except to the extent disclosed for the purposes of the offer, the offeror has no information in relation to the original allotter that is not publicly available and that would, or would be likely to, affect the price of the security.

Public. Offers of securities 'to the public' include offers of securities, whether or not any such offer is calculated to result in the securities becoming available for subscription by persons other than those receiving the offer, to any section of the public, however selected; individual members of the public selected at random; and a person who became known to the offeror as a result of any advertisement made by or on behalf of the offeror that was intended or likely to result in the public seeking further information or advice about any investment opportunity or services. However, none of the following are offers to the public:

- Offers made to any or all of the following persons only: (a) relatives or close business associates of the issuer, (b) persons whose principal business is the investment of money or who, in the course of and for the purposes of their business, habitually invest money, (c) persons who are each required to pay a minimum subscription price of at least NZ $500,000 for securities before the allotment of those securities, (d) persons who have each previously paid a minimum subscription price of at least NZ $500,000 for securities (the initial securities) in a single transaction before the allotment of the initial securities provided that the offer of the securities is made by the issuer of the initial securities; and the offer of the securities is made within 18 months of the date of the first allotment of the initial securities, and (e) any other person who in all the circumstances can properly be regarded as having been selected otherwise than as a member of the public; and

76 Securities Act 1978, s 3(2).
77 Securities Act 1978, ss 5, 6, and 6A.

- An invitation to a person to enter into a bona fide underwriting or sub-underwriting agreement.[78]

Whether or not persons to whom an offer of securities is made constitute 'the public' is a question of fact, depending on the circumstances. The protective purpose of the Securities Act 1978 is of importance in interpreting section 3.[79] Persons are not precluded from being members of the public merely because they are purchasers from, or employees or clients of, or holders of securities previously issued by, the issuer.[80]

Therefore, an offer of securities to some or all of the existing shareholders and/or debenture holders of a company may be an offer to the public.[81] It is often difficult to establish with sufficient certainty that an offer is not made 'to the public' when it is made to several people. Therefore, overseas issuers operating in the New Zealand market often rely on exemption notices rather than on there being no 'offer to the public'.

Place of Offer. Most disclosure requirements in the Securities Act 1978 apply to securities offered to the public in New Zealand, regardless of where any resulting allotment occurs and where the issuer is resident, incorporated, or carries on business.[82]

Certain Securities Act provisions relating to prohibitions on advertisements apply to advertisements that contain or refer to an offer of securities to the public outside New Zealand and that are distributed or to be distributed to a person outside New Zealand by persons resident or having a place of business in New Zealand. Provisions relating to criminal liability for misstatements in offering documents apply to such advertisements where they are distributed by persons resident or having a principal place of business in New Zealand.[83]

Requirements Applying to Offers of Listed and Unlisted Securities. To comply with the Securities Act 1978, most offers of securities to the public by or on behalf of an issuer are made primarily in (or accompanied by) an investment statement.

A prospectus, which is intended to contain greater detail on the offer and the issuer, is available on request. This two-tier disclosure regime has been mandatory since 1 April 1998. Before then, the registered prospectus was the primary disclosure document. The Financial Markets Conduct Bill is set to replace these requirements with a different disclosure regime, expected to be effective in 2013.

Investment Statements. The purpose of an investment statement is to provide certain key information that is likely to assist a prudent but non-expert person to decide whether or not to subscribe for securities and bring to the attention of such a person the fact that other important information about the securities is available to that person in other documents.[84] The contents of investment statements are prescribed by the Securities Act 1978 and the Securities Regulations 2009, and they relate to the following questions:

- What sort of investment is this?
- Who is involved in providing it for me?
- How much do I pay?
- What are the charges?
- What returns will I get?
- What are my risks?
- Can the investment be altered?
- How do I cash in my investment?
- Who do I contact with inquiries about my investment?
- Is there anyone to whom I can complain if I have problems with the investment?
- What other information can I obtain about this investment?

There are prescribed matters that must be addressed under each question. Issuers may not allot a security offered to the public if the subscriber did not receive an investment statement before subscribing.[85] Investment statements are not registered with any government agency.

Prospectuses. Prospectuses need be given to prospective subscribers only on request. The contents of prospectuses are prescribed by the Securities Act 1978 and the Securities Regulations 2009. The exact requirements depend on whether the security is an equity security, debt security, participatory security, unit in a unit trust, life insurance policy, or an interest in a KiwiSaver Scheme or superannuation scheme.

Prospectuses are registered with the Registrar of Financial Service Providers. They are generally valid for nine months after the date of the financial statements they contain. In some circumstances, this period can be extended for a further nine months by the directors providing a certificate that, among other things, states that the financial position of the company has not materially and adversely changed and that the prospectus is not false or misleading.[86]

Other Requirements in the Securities Act 1978. The Securities Act 1978 and the Securities Regulations 2009 also regulate the contents of advertisements that contain or refer to an offer of securities to the public or are reasonably likely to induce persons to subscribe for such securities and require issuers to keep registers of securities. Securities may not be offered to the public unless:

- For debt securities, the issuer has appointed a trustee, and has established and registered with the Registrar of Financial Service Providers a trust deed; and
- For participatory securities, the issuer has appointed a 'statutory supervisor' and has established and registered with the Registrar of Financial Service Providers a 'deed of participation'.[87]

Requirements Applying Only to Offers of Listed Securities. The NZSX/NZDX Listing Rules contain requirements for offering documents of issuers listed on the NZSX or the NZDX in addition to the requirements in the Securities Act 1978. Listed issuers must prepare and issue an offering document (which will usually be an investment statement) when required under the Securities Act 1978 or seeking an initial quotation of a security.[88]

The Listing Rules contain extra content requirements for such offering documents (and for trust deeds, in the case of debt securities), and they require listed issuers to obtain the NZX's approval of offering documents and prospectuses.[89]

Exemptions from Disclosure Requirements. The Financial Markets Authority may exempt any person or class of persons from the disclosure requirements in the Securities Act 1978 and the Securities Regulations 2009.[90] 'Exemption notices' are published in the New Zealand Gazette, an official government publication, and as statutory regulations. Exemption notices can be general, applying to all issuers of a specified type, or specific, relating to a particular issuer and/or transaction.

The Financial Markets Authority may not grant an exemption unless it is satisfied that the exemption would not cause significant detriment to subscribers for the securities to which the exemption relates who are members of the public in New Zealand, and the extent of the exemption is not broader than is reasonably necessary to address the matters that gave rise to the exemption. Several exemption notices are in force that may assist in international transactions.

Securities Act (Overseas Companies) Exemption Notice 2002. The Securities Act (Overseas Companies) Exemption Notice 2002 exempts companies incorporated outside New Zealand from the prospectus, investment statement, trustee, and statutory supervisor requirements where securities are (or will be) quoted on a stock exchange in the United Kingdom, Australia, Canada, the United States, Spain, or Hong Kong, and the offer to members of the public in New Zealand is either made to existing security holders, or holders of quoted securities of a promoter which is an associated company and is incorporated outside New Zealand, or an offer of securities as consideration for the acquisition or cancellation of quoted securities of another company incorporated outside New Zealand.

Securities Act (Overseas Listed Issuers) Exemption Notice 2002. The Securities Act (Overseas Listed Issuers) Exemption Notice 2002 exempts companies incorporated in the United Kingdom or the United States from the prospectus, trustee, and statutory supervisor requirements where securities are (or will be) quoted on the London Stock Exchange, NASDAQ, or the New York Stock Exchange if:

- There is an overseas prospectus;
- The Companies Office has received the overseas prospectus and various other documents;
- The issuer provides the overseas prospectus to offerees on request;
- The investment statement includes various warnings; and
- Offers are made in the relevant overseas jurisdiction at the same time.

Securities Act (Australian Issuers) Exemption Notice 2002. The Securities Act (Australian Issuers) Exemption Notice 2002 exempts companies incorporated in Australia and companies incorporated outside Australia that are (or will be) listed on the Australian Securities Exchange from the prospectus requirements for equity securities and debt securities, if:

- There is an Australian prospectus;
- The Companies Office has received the Australian prospectus and various other documents;
- The issuer provides the Australian prospectus to offerees on request;
- The investment statement includes various warnings; and
- Offers are made in Australia at the same time.

For debt securities, an exemption from the trustee requirement also is available if a person authorised under the laws of Australia to act as trustee has been appointed as trustee.

Securities Act (Overseas Takeovers by New Zealand Companies) Exemption Notice 2002. The Securities Act (Overseas Takeovers by New Zealand Companies) Exemption Notice 2002 exempts companies incorporated in New Zealand from the prospectus and investment statement requirements for equity securities quoted on the NZX if the securities are offered as consideration for the acquisition of securities issued by an overseas company quoted on a stock exchange in the United Kingdom, Australia, Canada, the United States, or Hong Kong.

Securities Act (Overseas Employee Share Purchase Schemes) Exemption Notice 2002. The Securities Act (Overseas Employee Share Purchase Schemes) Exemption Notice 2002 exempts issuers incorporated in Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Ireland, The Netherlands, Norway, Singapore, South Africa, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, and the United States that are listed on a securities exchange in one of these jurisdictions, and other named issuers, from the prospectus, investment statement, and certain other requirements, for offers of securities made under an employee share purchase scheme. Conditions include:

- The securities are allotted only to employees or directors of the issuer or its subsidiaries;
- Either an English version or translation of its most recent annual report and published financial statements, the rules of the employee share purchase scheme (or a summary), and the terms of the offer in New Zealand are sent to offerees, or a notice stating that this information is available on an internet or intranet site operated by or on behalf of the issuer and certain other information is sent to offerees;
- The above documents are received by the Registrar of Companies before allotment; and
- The securities are also offered, or have previously been offered, under the employee share purchase scheme in the jurisdiction in which the scheme is established.

The Securities Act (Overseas Employee Share Purchase Schemes) Exemption Notice 2002 also exempts New Zealand registered banks and overseas banks, the issuer or certain subsidiaries, or persons acting on their behalf from the prospectus, investment statement, and trustee and statutory supervisor requirements, in respect of debt or participatory securities offered in connection with participation in an exempt overseas issuer's employee share purchase scheme. Conditions of the various exemptions are that:

- The securities are allotted only to employees or directors of the exempt overseas issuer or its subsidiaries;
- Either an English version or translation of its most recent annual report and published financial statements, the rules of the employee share purchase scheme (or a summary), and the terms of the offer in New Zealand are sent to offerees, or a notice stating that this information is available on an internet or intranet site operated by or on behalf of the issuer, and certain other information, is sent to offerees;
- The above documents are received by the Registrar of Companies before allotment; and
- The subscriptions received are held in a bank account that holds only those subscriptions until allotment.

Although some of the Exemption Notices do not exempt issuers from the requirement to issue an investment statement, the Financial Markets Authority may be willing to consider applications for class exemptions from this requirement where overseas issuers are obliged by the law of another jurisdiction, possibly also by the terms of an established self-regulatory procedure, to distribute a document that is, in substance, very similar to the investment statement.

Securities (Mutual Recognition of Securities Offerings – Australia) Regulations 2008. The Securities (Mutual Recognition of Securities Offerings – Australia) Regulations 2008 relieves Australian issuers from most of the requirements of the Securities Act 1978 and Securities Regulations 2009 if their offer is regulated in Australia, they provide their Australian offer document with a prescribed warning statement to New Zealand offerees, they file certain documents with the Registrar of Financial Services Providers, and they comply with certain other requirements. NZX. The NZX may, in any particular case, waive the application of the Listing Rules.[91]

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Holdings

In General. Part II of the Securities Markets Act 1988 requires disclosure by 'substantial security holders', ie, persons with a 'relevant interest' in five per cent or more of the voting securities of a person listed on the NZX. 'Relevant interest' is defined very widely in section 5 of the Securities Markets Act 1988 to broadly encompass three categories of relevant interest, namely:

- Beneficial ownership;
- Presently existing powers; and
- Arrangements that may give rise to powers in the future.[92]

As well as beneficial interests, it covers powers to exercise, or control the exercise of, any right to vote attached to the voting security or acquire or dispose, or to control the acquisition or disposition, of the voting security. A person also will have a relevant interest if:

- The person may, at any time, have the power to do any of the above under any trust, agreement, arrangement, or understanding relating to a security (whether or not that person is a party to it);
- The person has any of the above powers over 20 per cent or more of the voting securities of another person with a relevant interest (ie, the definition 'looks through' persons with a relevant interest to cover, for example, major shareholders of such persons); or
- A body corporate related to it (such as a holding company or subsidiary) has a relevant interest.

91 NZSX/NZDX Listing Rules, rule 1.11.
92 Mercury Energy Ltd v Utilicorp NZ Ltd [1997] 1 NZLR 492, at p 501.

The powers set out above may be expressed or implied, direct or indirect, legally enforceable or not, exercisable presently or in the future, or exercisable alone or jointly with another person or persons.

Section 5 of the Securities Markets Act 1988 covers securities which could be acquired in the future under an existing right of first refusal or put option.[93] The purpose of the substantial security holder disclosure requirements is:

> '. . . to promote the prompt provision of adequate information to the market which in turn will enable the entire market to make informed judgments based on quality information. One would expect the market to want to know anything that could materially affect a decision whether and when to buy or sell, at what price and on what terms. Of central importance in that regard will be information as to the identity of those who have the destiny of the company in their hands.'[94]

Shareholder Duties. Notice must be given to the listed issuer and to the NZX by:

- Every person who becomes a substantial security holder in a listed issuer;
- A substantial security holder on a change in the total number of voting securities of a listed issuer in which it has a relevant interest where the difference between the number of such securities immediately after the change and the number of securities required to be stated in the last notice is equal to one per cent or more of the total number of the listed issuer's issued voting securities;
- A substantial security holder on any change in the nature of any relevant interest it holds in the voting securities of a listed issuer; and
- A person ceasing to be a substantial security holder in a listed issuer.

Notices must be in the form prescribed by the Securities (Substantial Security Holders) Regulations 2007, and they must be given as soon as the person knows, or ought to know, of the relevant circumstances.[95] However, a person need not give a notice if the requirement to comply arises by reason only of the fact that that person is related to another person who must comply, and that other person complies.[96]

Company Duties. A listed issuer must keep a register for the disclosures given to it. The register must be kept in New Zealand at the registered office of the public issuer or any other place in New Zealand, of which notice is given in accordance with the statutory requirements.[97]

Investigating Persons Holding Relevant Interests. Listed issuers may require a person registered as the holder of some of its voting securities to disclose to it the name and address of every person who holds a relevant interest in those voting securities and the nature of that interest and, if the registered holder is unable to supply any such information, such other particulars as will, or are likely to, assist in identifying that person and the nature of that interest.[98]

Listed issuers also may require any person who the listed issuer believes has, or may have, a relevant interest in its voting securities to supply such information as it may specify, to assist it to ascertain who is, or may be, a substantial security holder.[99] The NZX may require a listed issuer to exercise powers under sub-part 3 of part 2 of the Securities Markets Act 1988 and provide to the NZX for public release any information obtained under those powers (as a result of a request by the NZX or otherwise).[100]

Exemptions. The Financial Markets Authority may, on the terms and conditions (if any) that it thinks fit, exempt any transaction, person, class of persons, class of relevant interests, acquisitions, or disposals from compliance with any directors' and officers' disclosure obligation or obligations and exempt any person or class of persons, any transaction or class of transactions, or any class of relevant interests, substantial holdings, or relevant events from compliance with any substantial holding disclosure obligation or obligations.[101] The NZX has a general power to grant waivers from the NZX Listing Rules.[102]

Director and Officer Disclosure. Directors and officers of public issuers (broadly, NZX listed issuers) must disclose any trade by them of a relevant interest in a security issued by their public issuer or a related body corporate within five trading days and of their holdings of such securities within five trading days of the public issuer's listing of their appointment.[103]

Insider Trading

Insider Trading Liabilities. The Securities Markets Act 1988 contains an insider trading regime, with provisions prohibiting market manipulation, and new enforcement powers and penalties for breaches of securities trading rules, including the creation of indictable criminal offences for insider trading and market manipulation.

A person is an information insider of a public issuer if that person has material information relating to the public issuer that is not generally available to the market, and knows or ought reasonably to know that that information is material information and knows or ought reasonably to know that the information is not generally available to the market.[104] Therefore, a person can be an information insider even if that information is not derived from the issuer itself. If a person is an information insider of a public issuer, he may not:

- Trade securities of the public issuer;
- Directly or indirectly disclose inside information to another person if he reasonably ought to know or believes that that other person will, or is likely to, trade securities of the public issuer, continue to hold securities of the public issuer, or convince others to do the same; and
- Advise or encourage another person to trade or hold securities of the public issuer, or to advise another person to advise a third person to do the same. Insider conduct incurs criminal liability. A person who contravenes any of the above commits an offence if the person has actual knowledge that the information is material information; and that the information is not generally available to the market. The offence carries a maximum penalty of five years' imprisonment and a NZ $300,000 fine for an individual or a NZ $1,000,000 fine for a body corporate.

Market manipulation is prohibited. A person may not make a statement of disseminate information if:

- A material aspect of the statement or information is false or the statement or information is materially misleading;
- The person knows or reasonably ought to know that a material aspect of the statement or information is false or that the statement or information is materially misleading; and
- The statement or information is likely to induce a person to trade in the securities of a public issuer; or have the effect of increasing, reducing, maintaining, or stabilising the price for trading in those securities; or induce a person to vote for, or vote against, a transaction, or to abstain from voting in respect of that transaction.[105]

Persons against whom a judgment has been obtained under the insider trading provisions in the Securities Markets Act 1988 (or who have been convicted of a crime of dishonesty) cannot for five years after that time be a director or promoter or be involved in the management of a company without the leave of the New Zealand High Court. This includes both companies incorporated in New Zealand and overseas companies carrying on business in New Zealand.[106]

Note that, as set out above, offers to the public in New Zealand of previously allotted securities not subject to the usual disclosure requirements will have an implied term that, except to the extent disclosed for the purposes of the offer, the offeror has no information in relation to the original allotter that is not publicly available and that would, or would be likely to, affect the price of the security.

Public Takeover Bids

Territorial Application. The Takeovers Act 1993, the Takeovers Code Approval Order 2000, and the Commerce Act 1986 are relevant to takeover bids. The Takeovers Act and Takeovers Code regulate bids for shares or the control of shares in code companies (companies incorporated in New Zealand which are parties to a listing agreement with a registered exchange and that have securities that confer voting rights quoted on the registered exchange's securities market, or which were parties to such an agreement in the last 12 months, or which have at least 50 shareholders). The Code applies to bidders bidding for New Zealand companies, irrespective of whether the bidder is a New Zealander or a foreigner.

The Commerce Act 1986 applies to conduct outside New Zealand by any person resident or carrying on business in New Zealand to the extent that such conduct affects a market in New Zealand. In addition, section 47 (prohibiting acquisitions that have the effect of substantially lessening competition in a market) extends to the acquisition outside New Zealand by a person (whether or not that person is resident or carries on business in New Zealand) of shares or assets to the extent that the acquisition affects a market in New Zealand.[107]

Procedural Requirements. The Takeovers Code applies to companies incorporated in New Zealand which are, or in the previous 12 months have been, listed with a registered exchange and have securities that confer voting rights quoted on the registered exchange's securities market and which have more than 50 shareholders. Neither the Act nor the Code currently applies to other listed entities, such as unit trusts and group investment funds.

Fundamental Rule

In General. The core of the Code is the 'fundamental rule', which prohibits a person becoming the holder or controller of voting rights in a Code company if he and his 'associates' would afterwards control more than 20 per cent of the voting rights, unless the increase fits within one of the exceptions to the fundamental rule or the Panel grants an exemption. If a person already holds more than 20 per cent, he cannot become the holder of an increased level of voting rights except in compliance with the Code or through an exception or exemption.[108]

The term 'associate' is very widely defined. For example, a person is an associate of another if he 'has a business relationship, personal relationship, or an ownership relationship such that they should, under the circumstances, be regarded as associates'. It also includes related companies, people who act jointly or in concert, those who act on others' instructions, and third parties who should be regarded as associates because of connections through a common associate.

107 Commerce Act 1986, s 4(1) and (3).
108 Takeovers Act 1993, s 45.

Exceptions to the Fundamental Rule. The permitted methods of increasing the holding or control beyond the 20 per cent threshold are:

- Full offer — A full offer can be made for all voting securities of the target company as well as any non-voting equity securities on issue. If the target company has different classes of securities, the full offer must be fair and reasonable between different classes.
- Partial offer — A partial offer (for less than 100 per cent) is permitted but must be extended to all holders of voting securities (non-voting securities can be excluded) and must be for a specific percentage of the target company's voting securities. Again, if there is more than one class of voting securities, the partial offer must extend to each class. If the offeror's existing holding (together with associates) is 50 per cent or less, the offer must be for securities which will result in the offeror holding or controlling more than 50 per cent of the voting rights. However, a partial offer can be made for a lesser percentage if a written approval procedure is followed and is successful. If excess acceptances of an offer are received, the acceptances must be scaled back proportionately.
- Shareholder approval — A specific purchase or issue of equity securities may be approved by shareholders in the target company by an ordinary resolution (simple majority of shareholders voting on the issue), but the persons acquiring and disposing of the securities may not vote on the proposal.
- Limited five per cent creep — A person holding or controlling more than 50 per cent, but less than 90 per cent, of the voting rights, can increase their holding by up to five per cent of the total voting rights in any 12-month period. Unlike some other countries' codes, the 'creep' provision does not apply to holders with less than 50 per cent; there is a 'no-fly zone' between 20 per cent and 50 per cent.
- Compulsory acquisition — Acquisitions by persons holding or controlling 90 per cent or more of the voting rights can increase that holding without restriction. In addition, above the 90 per cent threshold, the holder may compulsorily acquire the remaining securities and may be required to acquire the securities of remaining holders.

Exemptions — Involuntary Increases. Under the Act, the Panel has a power to grant exemptions from the Code. Exemptions have been granted where the holder or its associates increase their percentage holding through share buy-backs, pro rata or not pro rata issues, or enforcement of lender security rights, while voting as proxy holders or representatives through transfers by operation of law, such as beneficiaries of wills, intra-group transfers, or as nominees, sharebrokers, underwriters, executors, or trustees. Conditions attach to these exemptions.

Offer Rules and Other Code Requirements. The Code contains detailed requirements for partial offers and full offers, and other requirements, which include:

- Disclosure documents — Detailed provisions in the Schedules to the Code specify the contents of the offeror's takeover notice and the target company's statement in response.
- Same terms and conditions — An offer must be on the same terms and conditions, including the same consideration, to all holders of securities of the same class.
- Independent adviser reports — The Code requires directors of the target company to obtain a report on the merits of an offer from an independent adviser. Independent adviser reports also are required to address fairness between classes, where an offer is made for more than one class of security, and to accompany a notice of meeting for any shareholder approval of an increase under the Code.
- Offer period — The offer must be open between 30 and 90 days, although a full offer can be extended up to 60 days beginning on the day on which the offer becomes unconditional as to a minimum level of acceptances.
- Minimum acceptance condition — Where the offeror holds or controls less than 50 per cent of the voting securities, the offer must be conditional on receiving acceptances which will bring the offeror's total holding above the 50 per cent threshold, unless it is a partial offer and shareholder approval for a lesser percentage is obtained.
- Self-defeating conditions prohibited — Although an offer can be conditional, the conditions cannot depend on the judgment of the offeror or be within their power or control. This requirement is intended to prevent offers being conditional on 'due diligence'.
- Variations — The Code allows offers to be varied but only to increase the consideration, to add a cash component to the consideration, to add to the offer a cash alternative, and to extend the offer.
- Defensive tactics — The Code restricts tactics by the target company directors that might 'frustrate' an offer, except in limited circumstances. The drafting of this provision is extremely wide and does not specify what types of action are restricted.

The 'notice and pause' requirements of the NZSX/NZDX Listing Rules apply to issuers who are not code companies under the Takeovers Code (ie, listed unit trusts and group investment funds). These requirements (which must be included in listed issuers' constitutions) apply to 'restricted transfers' of units quoted on the NZX. 'Restricted transfers' are transfers that would, alone or with one or more contemporaneous or subsequent transfers that comprise part of a scheme or linked transactions, result in the votes controlled by any person (or group of associated persons) of any class of quoted units:

- Exceeding 20 per cent of the votes attached to that class; or
- If the person (or persons) controls 20 per cent or more of the votes, increasing by more than five per cent in any period of 12 months above the number of votes controlled at the time that person (or persons) gave its last notice under the notice and pause requirements for that class of quoted equity securities.[109]

Bidders must give notice to the listed issuer and to the NZX of matters such as the price, material conditions, maximum number of securities to which the proposal relates, the identity of persons expected to acquire relevant interests as a result, the number of units which the bidder and associated persons will hold, the times the transfers are intended to occur, and how the transfers are to be effected (eg, through NZX's order matching market, by widespread direct offer, or by private treaty).[110]

Notice must be given at least 15 business days before the transfer if any offeree is an insider, or otherwise at least three business days before such time.[111] Where no offeree is an insider and the transfer is effected on-market, subject to certain conditions, the bidder need give only one business day's notice. Directors of a listed issuer the subject of such a notice must give notice as soon as possible (and within the 15-day, three-day, or one-day period), stating:

- Whether any director (or associated person of a director) is expected to be a transferee;
- Whether any director has a possible conflict of interest;
- Whether there is any relevant information on the issuer likely to be available to any transferee not generally available to the market;
- Whether there is any undisclosed relevant information which should materially affect the decision of a reasonably informed prospective transferor and whether the transfer would be more or less desirable as a result; and
- The timing and significance of any further action, investigation, report, or disclosure by any directors.[112]

If any transferee is an insider, the directors must commission an appraisal report on the transfer to be released to relevant security holders or to the NZX (unless all transferors waive this requirement, or a majority of the disinterested directors certify that in their opinion the cost and difficulty of providing it outweigh the benefit). The appraisal report is made by an independent, appropriately qualified person and states a variety of prescribed matters, including whether the consideration and terms and conditions of the transaction are fair to unit holders (other than those associated with associated persons).[113]

Constitutions of issuers listed on the NZX may modify the notice and pause provisions to apply only when the transferees are insiders ('insider only' provisions) or adopt 'minority veto' provisions which, among other things, require the longer notice period even where no transferee is an insider, require equal offers to all holders of the relevant securities or on-market transactions (unless holders agree otherwise), and require the directors to commission an independent report on the proposal.[114] Severe penalties can be imposed for breach of the notice and pause requirements, including the defaulter not being able to vote its securities and the defaulters' securities being sold.[115]

When a person (or group of associated persons) acquires beneficial ownership of 90 per cent or more of a class of quoted units, it must give an acquisition notice to other holders, the issuer, and the NZX, specifying that fact within 20 business days and that it intends to acquire the remaining securities or that remaining holders may require it to buy their securities, and the consideration for remaining securities. The majority holder, before giving the acquisition notice, must give the NZX an independent report confirming that the consideration is fair. The other holders may challenge the amount of consideration.[116]

Section 47 of the Commerce Act 1986 prohibits a person acquiring shares if the acquisition would have, or would be likely to have, the effect of substantially lessening competition. Section 47 of the Commerce Act 1986 also applies to acquisitions of assets.

The Overseas Investment Act 2005 regulates certain transactions involving "overseas persons". Consent from the Overseas Investment Office is required where an overseas person acquires a 25 per cent or more direct or indirect ownership and/or control of interests in "significant business assets" (with assets of NZ $100 million being the proxy for "significant business assets)"; "sensitive" and "special" New Zealand land; farm land; or fishing quota. Note that there are a number of exceptions to this requirement.

The Overseas Investment Act 2005 defines 'Overseas persons'.[117] The purpose of the definition is to provide that persons are overseas persons if they themselves are overseas persons (for example, not a New Zealand citizen or resident or, for companies, incorporated overseas) or they are 25 per cent (or more) owned or controlled by an overseas person or persons.

117 Overseas Investment Act 2005, s 7.

The Overseas Investment Act acknowledges that it is a privilege for overseas persons to own or control sensitive New Zealand assets and requires certain overseas investments to meet criteria for consent. Section 14(1) of the Overseas Investment Act 2005 requires that the Minister of Finance must grant consent to applications for consent to overseas investments in significant business assets if the following criteria are satisfied:

- The directors collectively have business experience and acumen relevant to the overseas investment;
- A financial commitment to the overseas investment has been demonstrated;
- The directors are of good character; and
- The directors are not of the kind referred to in section 7(1) of the Immigration Act 1987 (which section includes persons who have committed an offence punishable by more than 12 months' imprisonment, who have been deported from New Zealand, or who are believed to have engaged in an act of terrorism).

Under the Commerce Act 1986, buyers need not file any application with the Commerce Commission for the acquisition of shares. However, a buyer may choose to seek either an acquisition that will not have, or would not be likely to have, the effect of substantially lessening competition in a market or an authorisation, granted by the Commerce Commission, if it is satisfied that the acquisition will result, or will be likely to result, in such a benefit to the public that it should be permitted.[118]

A party cannot be liable under section 47 of the Commerce Act or the general prohibition in the Act on anticompetitive trade practices if it has a clearance or authorisation.[119] Buyers often seek clearances if there is any possibility of section 47 applying, especially if the acquisition is in an industry in which the Commerce Commission has indicated that it will take a special interest.

Clearances are often granted within the initial 10-working-day time limit in section 66(3) of the Commerce Act 1986 (although this period is often extended by agreement between the Commerce Commission and the applicant if the acquisition raises any significant issues).

Applications are made to the Commerce Commission, using a standard form published by the Commerce Commission, with an application fee of NZ $2,300 for a clearance or NZ $23,000 for an authorisation. The relevant Minister may exempt any person, transaction, interest, right, or assets (or class of persons, transactions, interests, rights, or assets) from the requirement to obtain consent or from the definition of overseas person or associate or associated land under the Overseas Investment Regulations 2005.

Jurisdictional Conflicts

In General

In dealing with jurisdictional conflicts, the principles of New Zealand 'conflict of laws' (otherwise known as private international law) determine three questions, namely:

- Will the dispute be determined by a New Zealand court?[120]
- If the dispute has already been determined by a court elsewhere, will the judgment be treated as decisive in New Zealand (and be enforced, or give rise to an estoppel so that the same issues cannot be litigated in New Zealand)? and
- If a New Zealand court determines the dispute, which system of law will apply to questions of law?[121]

Will the Dispute Be Determined by a New Zealand Court?

Service of Proceedings

The New Zealand High Court has jurisdiction if:

- The proceedings are within the subject matter jurisdiction of the court;
- In the case of parties that cannot be served in New Zealand, the High Court Rules allow service outside New Zealand; and
- The documents are served by personal service, under an agreement for service or according to a court order for substituted service.[122]

A company incorporated outside New Zealand and carrying on business in New Zealand may be served in New Zealand by:

- Delivery to a person named in the overseas register as a director of the company and who is resident in New Zealand;
- Delivery to a person named in the overseas register as being authorised to accept service in New Zealand of documents on behalf of the company;
- Delivery to an employee of the company at the company's place of business in New Zealand or, if the company has more than one place of business in New Zealand, at the company's principal place of business in New Zealand;
- Service in accordance with any directions as to service given by the court having jurisdiction in the proceedings; or
- Procedure in accordance with an agreement made with the company.[123]

120 This depends on whether the New Zealand court has jurisdiction and whether New Zealand is the appropriate forum.

122 Goddard, 'Conflict of Laws: Jurisdiction and Foreign Judgments', The Laws of New Zealand (online ed), at para 14.

In certain circumstances, a person may be served outside New Zealand without first obtaining the leave of the court. In other cases, the High Court may grant leave for service outside New Zealand.[124]

Forum Conveniens

Even if it has jurisdiction, a New Zealand court may decline to hear and determine proceedings if New Zealand is not the forum conveniens. The forum conveniens is 'the forum in which the case can be suitably tried for the interests of all parties and for the ends of justice'.[125]

Arguments that New Zealand is not the forum conveniens can be raised by a person on whom proceedings have been served, to object to the jurisdiction of the New Zealand court or, alternatively, to seek a stay of proceedings, or a person against whom proceedings are issued in New Zealand as of right or who has submitted to the New Zealand court's jurisdiction to seek a stay of proceedings.

If courts in more than one country have jurisdiction, the forum conveniens will be that with which the action has the most real and substantial connection.[126] The New Zealand court will be the forum conveniens if it is the only court with the power to grant the relief sought by the plaintiff, which may well be the case in some securities litigation (eg, proceedings seeking various orders under the Securities Markets Act 1988).

The New Zealand Court of Appeal has considered such issues in proceedings under the Securities Act 1978. In Society of Lloyd's & Oxford Members' Agency Ltd v Hyslop,[127] the plaintiff had become a member of the Society of Lloyd's and, through her managing agents, had entered into underwriting contracts as a member of various syndicates.

When these contracts made substantial losses and her managing agents sought to recover from her, she brought proceedings alleging, among other things, a breach of the Securities Act 1978. The New Zealand Court of Appeal held that the United Kingdom was the more appropriate forum, and it stayed the New Zealand proceedings (even though the New Zealand Courts appeared to have jurisdiction). The Court of Appeal took into account the following factors:

- Clauses in all relevant documents conferred exclusive jurisdiction on the English courts and applied English law as the proper law of the contract (and had been upheld in other jurisdictions);

123 Companies Act 1993, s 389.
124 High Court Rules, rules 6.27 and 6.28.
125 Lord Goff of Chieveley, The Spiliada [1986] 3 All ER 843, at p 858, approved in McConnell Dowell Constructors Ltd v Lloyd's Syndicate 396 [1988] 2 NZLR 257, at pp 273, 280, and 281.
126 Oilseed Products (NZ) Ltd v HE Burton Ltd (1987) 1 PRNZ 313, at p 316.
127 Society of Lloyd's & Oxford Members' Agency Ltd v Hyslop [1993] 3 NZLR 135.

- Eighty per cent of Lloyd's members were in England, so Lloyd's as regulator of the market could not deal equitably with all members if disputes were litigated in various jurisdictions;
- Many writs had been issued by others in England, so that many of the issues in the current proceedings would be considered in English proceedings and the outcome of such proceedings would affect the plaintiff;
- Most of the evidence and witnesses were in England;
- The basic documentation was in England and the crucial contracts were substantially performed there;
- The central fund and assets were in England;
- The relief sought in New Zealand would affect not only Lloyd's and Oxford, but also other Lloyd's members;
- English laws (such as the Lloyd's Act 1982) were relevant;
- There was particular public interest in England in Lloyd's matters; and
- Senior English judges were used to interpreting New Zealand legislation and, in any appeal from the New Zealand Court of Appeal, English Law Lords (sitting as the Privy Council) would determine New Zealand proceedings.

While some of the above factors may have been specific to the facts in that case, the Lloyd's case gives some guidance on New Zealand courts' view of the significance of the Securities Act 1978 in determining conflict of law issues. The then President of the Court of Appeal, Cooke P, stated:

'[T]he Securities Act may be seen as basically similar to securities legislation in other countries. Canadian, Australian and United States Courts have been content to leave questions concerning Lloyd's membership to the English Courts. The Securities Act 1978 is not distinctively New Zealand legislation, although no doubt it has some distinctive New Zealand features.

Whether any such features are significant in relation to the present case could not be determined without in-depth comparisons that, understandably, were not attempted in the argument of the present appeals. I am sure that the better course, in accordance with international trends, is to leave the respondent's claim against the present appellants to be tried in England, assuming that she pursues it there.'[128]

While the significance of the Securities Act 1978 in any particular proceedings will depend on all the circumstances of the particular case, the Lloyd's case suggests that New Zealand courts will not necessarily hold that this legislation must be interpreted by a New Zealand court.

Will a Foreign Judgment Be Recognised as Decisive in New Zealand?

Methods of Enforcing Judgments

In General. Foreign judgments may be enforced in New Zealand following registration under the Reciprocal Enforcement of Judgments Act 1934, under an action at Common Law, or by registering a memorial of the judgment under section 56 of the Judicature Act 1908.

Registration under the Reciprocal Enforcement of Judgments Act 1934. The Reciprocal Enforcement of Judgments Act 1934 is based on the United Kingdom's Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act 1933. Many other countries have similar legislation.

A judgment creditor under a judgment of a court in an overseas country to which the Reciprocal Enforcement of Judgment Acts 1934 applies may register that judgment under the procedure in the Act. At the time of writing, the Reciprocal Enforcement of Judgments Act 1934 applies to judgments of various courts in:

- Australia;
- Bechuanaland (Botswana);
- Belgium;
- Cameroon;
- Ceylon;
- Corsica;
- England;
- Fiji;
- France;
- Gilbert & Ellice Islands (Kiribati & Tuvalu);
- Hong Kong;
- India;
- Malaysia;
- Nigeria;
- Norfolk Island;
- Northern Ireland;
- Pakistan;
- Papua New Guinea;
- Sarawak;
- Singapore;
- Solomon Islands;
- Sri Lanka;
- Swaziland;
- Tonga;

- Scotland;
- Wales; and
- Western Samoa.

Subject to the procedure for setting aside of registration, a registered judgment is, for the purposes of enforcement, of the same force and effect as if the judgment had been a judgment originally given in the High Court. Proceedings may be taken on a registered judgment, the sum for which a judgment is registered will carry interest, and the High Court has control over the enforcement of a registered judgment. The judgment must be capable of being enforced in the country of the original Court.[129]

Actions at Common Law. If not covered by the Reciprocal Enforcement of Judgments Act 1934, a foreign judgment may be able to be enforced at Common Law. The plaintiff may sue on the foreign judgment itself or on the original cause of action.

The New Zealand court will enforce a foreign judgment in personam if New Zealand law recognises the foreign court's jurisdiction over the defendant, and the judgment is for a definite sum and is a final judgment.[130]

Registering a Memorial under Section 56 of the Judicature Act 1908. Section 56 of the Judicature Act 1908 applies to money judgments not covered by the Reciprocal Enforcement of Judgments Act 1934 of courts of any territories under the sovereignty of the Crown (including the United Kingdom) and Commonwealth countries.

A memorial of such a judgment, with the particulars specified in section 56 and sealed by the original court, may be filed in the office of the New Zealand High Court. The High Court may make an order for issuing execution on the judgment.

Which System of Law Will a New Zealand Court Use to Determine Questions of Law?

By way of general comment, a New Zealand court will apply New Zealand law unless it is established that the law of another country should apply.

129 Reciprocal Enforcement of Judgments Act 1934, s 4(2) and (2A).

Introduction

Regulatory System

The origin of the Nigerian capital market can be traced to the colonial era.[1] In 1946, the British Colonial government became aware that the absence of a capital market made it difficult to raise long-term funds necessary for the development of capital projects. Consequently, the colonial administration established a 10-year development plan for Nigeria under which long-term funds were raised in the United Kingdom and Nigeria for financing small community improvement projects, educational research, and infrastructure and to induce private sector industrial and agricultural development.

Thus, a Local Loans Board was established in 1946, and it was followed by the establishment of Regional Loans Boards in 1949. Thereafter, development planning was by five-year federal and regional plans, and savings were mobilised through the Regional Marketing Boards, as well as non-bank financial intermediaries such as the Lagos Building Society and the Post Office Savings Bonds Scheme.[2]

Although a Stock Exchange commenced operations in 1961, securities regulation started informally in 1962 with the activities of a non-statutory body, which was referred to as the Capital Market Committee. This was followed by a series of landmark events, fiscal and monetary policies, and developments in the legal framework, which culminated in the establishment of the present-day Securities and Exchange Commission.

The aim of the regulatory system is to regulate the operations, infrastructure, investments, and trading in securities in the Nigerian capital market. The Nigerian capital market affords corporate bodies, and the various tiers of government, the opportunity to raise long-term funds at a relatively cheaper cost through the issuance of securities to the public.[3] The primary objective of the regulatory system is to ensure that the capital market is fair, efficient, and transparent, thereby providing adequate protection to investors and sustaining confidence in the market. The Nigerian capital market has become increasingly vibrant and is ranked second after South Africa on the African continent. Its market capitalisation has grown from N 979.13 billion in 2003 to an estimated N 1.9 trillion in June 2004, and N 2.567 trillion in October 2005.

In the Nigerian legal framework, the term 'securities'[4] includes:

- Debentures, stocks, or bonds issued or proposed to be issued by a government;
- Debentures, stocks, shares, bonds, or notes issued or proposed to be issued by corporate or unincorporated entities;
- Any right or option in respect of any such debentures, stocks, shares, bonds, or notes;
- Futures contracts;
- Bills of exchange;
- Promissory notes or certificates of deposit issued by a bank which has a tenure of not less than nine months;
- Any of the above items transferred by means of any electronic mode approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission and which may be deposited, kept, or stored with any licensed depository or custodian company; and
- Derivatives, securities debt, or any other instruments registered by the Securities and Exchange Commission.[5]

Legal Sources

In General

The sources of Nigerian securities law can be classified as follows:

- Statutes;
- Rules and regulations;
- Listing requirements; and
- Judicial decisions and rulings.

Statutes

Lagos Stock Exchange Act Number 14 of 1961. The Lagos Stock Exchange was established in 1960 but commenced operations on the enactment of the Lagos Stock Exchange Act in 1961. When the Lagos Stock Exchange Act commenced securities exchange operations in 1961, it had 19 securities listed for trading. Hitherto, almost all formal savings and deposits went through the banking system while major capital balances were invested for the country by Great Britain on the London Stock Exchange.[6]

5 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 208, part F1.
6 See http://www.nigeriabusinessinfo.com/nse.

In 1976, a Federal Commission recommended that there should be a single National Stock Exchange. Thus, the name of the Lagos Stock Exchange Act was changed to the Nigerian Stock Exchange by statute in 1977. The Lagos Stock Exchange Act was repealed in 1999 by section 263(1) of the Investments and Securities Act, 1999.

Capital Issues Commission Act Number 14 of 1973. The ad hoc Capital Issues Committee was established in 1962 by the Central Bank of Nigeria to monitor the operations of the Lagos Stock Exchange and the Nigerian capital market.

In 1973, the federal government upgraded the Committee to a 'Capital Issues Commission' under the enabling Capital Issues Commission Act as a result of the increasing awareness of the importance of securities regulation. The Capital Issues Commission Act was repealed and superseded by the Securities and Exchange Commission Act Number 71 of 1979, which was amended and re-enacted in 1988 and later repealed and replaced with the Investments and Securities Act, 1999.

The Securities and Exchange Commission Act Number 71 of 1979. The Securities and Exchange Commission Act of 1979 established the Securities and Exchange Commission and vested it with the functions of determining the price at which the securities of a company are to be sold to the public, the timing and amount of any subsequent issues, registration of all securities proposed to be offered for sale to the public, and generally maintaining surveillance over the securities market.

The primary functions of the Securities and Exchange Commission under the Act were similar to those of the Capital Issues Commission. However, unlike the Capital Issues Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission also was responsible for the registration of new stock exchanges and the allotment of shares in public companies. As a result of the shortcomings of the Securities and Exchange Commission Act of 1979, particularly the absence of sufficient adjudicatory powers, the Securities and Exchange Commission Act of 1988 was enacted to replace the 1979 Act.

The Securities and Exchange Commission Act Number 29 of 1988. The Securities and Exchange Commission Act conferred the Securities and Exchange Commission with additional adjudicatory powers to conduct hearings into apparent violations of the securities law.

It also empowered the Securities and Exchange Commission to suspend erring capital market operators and to revoke the registration of a registered operator (with prior approval from the Minister of Finance). The Securities and Exchange Commission Act of 1988 was repealed by section 263(1)(c) of the Investments and Securities Act Number 45 of 1999.

Companies and Allied Matters Act, Cap 59, Laws of the Federation of Nigeria 1990. The Companies and Allied Matters Act was promulgated to provide for the incorporation of companies, registration of business names, and incorporation of trustees of certain communities, bodies, and associations. Part XVII of the Companies and Allied Matters Act also contained provisions related to certain dealings in companies' securities. This was an unnecessary duplication of the provisions of the Securities and Exchange Commission Act of 1988. Part XVII of the Companies and Allied Matters Act has now been repealed by section 263(1)(d) of the Investments and Securities Act Number 45 of 1999.

By section 54 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act, foreign companies that wish to do business in Nigeria must incorporate a local company for that purpose. Branch registration is not permitted.

Prior to 1990, companies were regulated by the Companies Act Number 51 of 1968. This was promulgated to provide a more modern legislation because the previous legislation was inadequate to cope with the growth of economic activities in Nigeria. The Companies Act contained many provisions that were perceived at that time to be far reaching, eg, the provision to publicise the affairs of the company in the interest of the shareholders and the general public.[7]

Nigerian Investment Promotion Commission Act Number 16 of 1995. The Nigerian Investment Promotion Commission Act guarantees foreign investors the unrestricted transferability of dividends or profits (net of taxes) attributable to foreign investment in Nigeria, payments in respect of foreign loan servicing, and capital repatriation in the event of liquidation.[8] The only restrictions on investment relate to the items on the negative list, which are reserved exclusively for the government. The negative list includes enterprises engaged in activities involving:

- Production of arms and ammunition;
- Narcotics and psychotropic substances; and
- Military, para-military, police, customs, immigration, and prison service uniforms and accoutrements.[9]

The Nigerian Investment Promotion Commission Act also guarantees foreign direct investment against all forms of expropriation or nationalisation by the federal government.[10] Disputes arising between foreign investors and any government of the Federation would be settled through mutual discussions. However, on failure to reach an agreement, the aggrieved party may resort to arbitration within the framework of the relevant bilateral or multilateral agreement on investment protection to which the federal government and the investor's country are parties.[11] The Nigerian Investment Promotion Commission functions as a liaison between investors and ministries, government departments, institutional lenders, and other institutions concerned with investments.

Foreign Exchange (Monitoring and Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1995 and Central Bank Guidelines and Circulars. The Foreign Exchange (Monitoring and Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1995 (FEMMP) further liberalised the Nigerian foreign exchange regime subsequent to the repeal of the Exchange Control Act 1962, the Exchange Control (Anti-Sabotage) Act 1984, the Foreign Currency (Domiciliary Accounts) Act 1985, and the Second Tier Foreign Exchange Market Act 1986, which hitherto restricted free dealings in foreign exchange.

The Foreign Exchange (Monitoring and Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1995 and the Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN) Guidelines and Circulars (as revised) regulate foreign exchange transactions. Dealings in foreign exchange are now generally liberalised. Any eligible transaction supported by appropriate documentation qualifies for foreign exchange purchase and/or remittance through the Inter-Bank Foreign Exchange Market (IFEM), currently conducted by the CBN through the Dutch Auction System (DAS). Eligible transactions include purchase of equipment and materials, remittance of expatriate salaries, and payment for services rendered by foreign service providers.

The CBN also is able to review and approve, on a case-by-case basis, any application for a foreign exchange transaction which is not included in the Guidelines. Holders of foreign currency domiciliary accounts are allowed unrestricted access to funds in their accounts, which can be transferred within and outside Nigeria to settle third-party obligations.

Investments and Securities Act Number 45 of 1999. After several studies and review of the securities market, and principally on the recommendations of the Dennis Odife Panel on the Review of the Nigerian Capital Market in 1996 ('the Odife Report'), the Investments and Securities Act was enacted in 1999 as the primary legislation governing the Nigerian capital markets.

The Investments and Securities Act is a consolidation of laws and regulations that were hitherto contained in various pieces of legislation, and it sought to resolve previously contradictory and outdated provisions in that legislation. The Investments and Securities Act introduced two novel features in securities regulation in Nigeria, namely:

- The requirement that solicitors and other professionals who wish to act as consultants in the capital market must be registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission; and
- The establishment of the Investments and Securities Tribunal (the Tribunal).[12]

The Tribunal was inaugurated on 19 December 2002 and is headed by Dr Nnenna Orji, a lawyer and retired Director of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Specifically, the Tribunal has powers to adjudicate on matters relating to the interpretation of the Investments and Securities Act, disputes between capital market operators and the Securities Exchanges or Capital Trade Points, disputes between capital market operators, 12 The Tribunal is made up of nine Capital Market Assessors appointed by the Minister of Finance. The Tribunal is vested with powers to adjudicate on disputes and controversies that arise under the Investments and Securities Act; Investments and Securities Act, s 234.

disputes between capital market operators and their clients, and disputes between quoted companies and the regulators or the Securities Exchanges.[13] Dissatisfied parties may make appeals to the Court of Appeal and, thereafter, the Supreme Court.[14]

Rules and Regulations

The Investments and Securities Act grants the Securities and Exchange Commission general and specific rule-making authority.[15] To carry out the objectives of securities regulation under the Investments and Securities Act effectively and after consultations with capital market operators and participants, the Securities and Exchange Commission published the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations.

Since the publication of the original Rules in 2002, the Securities and Exchange Commission published amendments in December 2003 and August 2005. The Commission has yet to consolidate all the amendments since 2003 into a single document.

The Rules and Regulations govern various issues including securities exchanges, capital market operators, offer of securities for sale or subscription, mergers, acquisitions and combinations, collective investment schemes, investors' protection fund, and borrowing by states and/or local government agencies.

Listing Requirements

The Nigerian Stock Exchange has formulated general and specific listing requirements for public liability companies, which have been codified as the Rules Governing Listing on the Nigerian Stock Exchange (the 'Rules'). A company may apply for listing in any of the following markets:

- Main Market or First-Tier Securities — Only matured companies that meet all of the Nigerian Stock Exchange's listing requirements qualify for listing on the Main Market;
- Second-Tier Market — The Second-Tier Market is for companies that do not yet qualify for listing on the Main Market; and
- Unit Trust and Venture Capital Market — The Unit Trust and Venture Capital Market is for listing of funds and schemes that involve public participation.

The Rules also provide for the following additional matters:

- Securities of companies whose capital is not already listed on the Exchange;
- Securities of companies part of whose capital is already listed on the Exchange;
- Contents of the prospectus for companies whose capital is not listed on the Exchange;
- Contents of the prospectus for companies part of whose capital is already listed on the Exchange;

13 Investments and Securities Act, s 234.
14 Although the status of the Tribunal has not been challenged judicially, it is likely to be subject as well to the supervisory jurisdiction of the High Courts by means of judicial review.
15 Investments and Securities Act, ss 258 and 261.

- Takeovers and mergers;
- Contents of prospectus for Unit Trusts; and
- Securities issued by statutory bodies.

Judicial Decisions and Rulings

One of the notable judicial decisions on securities law and regulation is that of the Court of Appeal in Societe Generale Bank Nigeria Limited v the Securities and Exchange Commission.[16] The Court of Appeal held that the Securities and Exchange Commission approval was required for a valid transfer of shares in any company with alien participation (whether public or private) to any person, whether Nigerian or non-Nigerian.

This judicial decision has now been superseded by the provisions of the Investments and Securities Act, which no longer require Securities and Exchange Commission approval for transfer of shares in companies with alien participation.[17]

The issue of the competence of the Nigerian Stock Exchange to suspend the registration of a person's securities was resolved in Owena Bank (Nigeria) Plc v Nigerian Stock Exchange Ltd.[18] Here, the Supreme Court reversed the decision of the Administrative Hearing Committee of the Nigerian Stock Exchange to suspend the registration of, and trading in, Owena Bank's securities until the transfer of its 23.7 million shares duly transacted on the floors of the Nigerian Stock Exchange was effected. This was on the basis that the suspension was ultra vires the provisions of the Securities and Exchange Commission Act of 1988, which conferred the Securities and Exchange Commission, and not the Nigerian Stock Exchange, with the power to suspend the registration of any person's securities.

Regulatory Authorities

The Securities and Exchange Commission

The Securities and Exchange Commission is the apex regulatory institution of the Nigerian capital market and the principal adviser to the Nigerian government on capital market issues. The mission of the Securities and Exchange Commission is 'to develop and regulate a capital market that is dynamic, fair transparent and efficient, to contribute to the nation's economic development', while its vision is 'to be Africa's leading capital market regulator'.

16 Societe Generale Bank Nigeria Limited v the Securities and Exchange Commission, Securities Law Report, vol 1 (1992), at p 1.

17 Securities and Exchange Commission Act, 1988, s 7, required prior Securities and Exchange Commission approval for alien participation in Nigerian companies. This requirement has been repealed by the Investments and Securities Act.

18 Owena Bank (Nigeria) Plc v Nigerian Stock Exchange Ltd (1997) 8 NWLR (pt 515).

To this end, the Securities and Exchange Commission is empowered to make rules and regulations, ensure compliance with the provisions of the Investments and Securities Act and, where necessary, impose sanctions on erring operators and participants in the capital market. Part II, section 8, of the Investments and Securities Act empowers the Securities and Exchange Commission to:

- Regulate investments and securities business in Nigeria;
- Register all securities to be offered for sale or subscription to the public;
- Register the exchanges where securities are to be bought or sold;
- Register all operators in the market, eg, stockbrokers, registrars, issuing houses, investment advisers, portfolio managers, and capital market consultants;
- Register all securities traded on the exchanges;
- Regulate mergers, acquisitions, and all forms of business combinations;
- Regulate collective investment schemes;
- Register rotating savings schemes, such as esusus and adashes;[19]
- Facilitate the establishment of a nation-wide system for securities trading in the Nigerian capital market to protect investors and maintain fair and orderly markets;
- Facilitate the linking of markets in securities through modern communication and data processing facilities to foster efficiency, enhance competition, and increase the information available to brokers, dealers, and investors;
- Act in the public interest having regard to the protection of investors and maintenance of fair and orderly markets and, to this end, establish a nation-wide trust scheme to compensate investors whose losses are not covered under the investors' protection funds administered by securities exchanges and capital trade points;
- Keep and maintain separate registers of foreign direct investments and foreign portfolio investments;
- Register and regulate central depository companies, clearing and settlement companies, custodians of securities, credit rating agencies, and intermediaries;
- Protect the integrity of the securities market against abuses arising from the practice of insider trading;
- Act as a regulatory apex organisation of the Nigerian capital market, including the promotion and registration of self-regulatory organisations and capital market trade associations to which it may delegate its powers;
- Conduct research into all or any aspect of the securities industry;
- Prevent fraudulent and unfair trade practice relating to the securities industry; and
- Perform such other functions and exercise such other powers not inconsistent with the Act as necessary or expedient for giving full effect to the provisions of the Act.[20]

19 These are examples of communal savings schemes. By seeking to incorporate these informal transactions into the mainstream of securities regulation, the Investments and Securities Act has clearly set a difficult task for the Securities and Exchange Commission.

20 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, part II, s 8.

Nigerian Stock Exchange

The Nigerian Stock Exchange is a self-regulatory organisation governed by the Nigerian Stock Exchange Council. The Nigerian Stock Exchange Council has an upper limit of 25 members comprising individuals, institutions, and stock broking companies. The Council makes decisions on the policies of the Nigerian Stock Exchange, which are executed by the executive officers headed by the Director-General.

The Nigerian Stock Exchange provides a marketplace for the buying and selling of securities issued by public companies, governments, and statutory bodies on the basis of a wide distribution of ownership and adequate disclosure of information.[21] The Nigerian Stock Exchange operates an Automated Trading System with more than 260 listed companies. Companies that wish to be admitted to the official list of the Nigerian Stock Exchange must comply with its listing requirements, the Investments and Securities Act, and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations.

Abuja Commodity Exchange

In 1999, the federal government of Nigeria announced the creation of the Abuja Stock Exchange[22] in the Federal Capital Territory of Abuja. The creation of the Abuja Stock Exchange was criticised by the Nigerian Stock Exchange and described as an unnecessary duplication of exchanges at a time when exchanges in other countries were consolidating.

However, with the registration and commencement of operation of the Abuja Stock Exchange in 2000, Nigeria became a multiple-exchange environment, which necessitated revisions to the Rules and Regulations on multiple trading and dual listings of securities. The rules on dual listings provide for securities on one exchange to be listed and traded on another, if the issuer so desires and meets the listing requirements of the Exchanges involved.

On 8 August 2001, the federal government revised its decision on the establishment of the Abuja Stock Exchange, and the Exchange was converted to the Abuja Commodity Exchange. The Abuja Commodity Exchange has been mandated to assist the federal government in its drive to expand the horizon and contribution of Nigeria's non-oil exports to the national purse.

In furtherance of its privatisation plans, the federal government intends to offer 51 per cent of the shares of the Abuja Commodity Exchange for sale to a core investor or a consortium of foreign or domestic investors. The remaining shares would be sold to members of the Nigerian public.

Investments and Securities Tribunal

The Investments and Securities Act provides for the establishment of an Investments and Securities Tribunal to handle capital market disputes expeditiously.

21 Rules Governing Listing on the Nigerian Stock Exchange, at p IV.

22 The Abuja Stock Exchange was granted a two-month provisional renewal licence. The full licence was issued pending the fulfillment of registration requirements.

The Tribunal was inaugurated in December 2002 and has commenced hearing of investment disputes. However, the Securities and Exchange Commission has sought to ensure the continuity of the erstwhile Administrative Hearing Committee by providing for its establishment under Rule 313, Part L, of the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, as amended.

The Administrative Proceedings Committee will have authority to resolve disputes and complaints arising from capital market operators and institutions in the market who are perceived to have violated or have actually violated or threatened to violate the provisions of the Act and the Rules and Regulations made thereunder and such operators or persons against whom complaints and allegations have been made to the Commission.

Domestic Exchanges. Under the Investments and Securities Act, securities exchanges and capital trade points may be registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission.[23] A Securities Exchange includes a Stock Exchange or an approved securities organisation such as a Commodity Exchange, Metal Exchange, Petroleum Exchange, and Options, Futures, and Derivatives Exchanges.[24]

On the other hand, capital trade points are defined as exchanges which constitute, maintain, or provide market facilities for bringing together purchasers and sellers of securities or for otherwise performing, with respect to securities, the functions commonly performed by a Securities Exchange.[25]

In Nigeria, the Nigerian Stock Exchange is the only domestic exchange that is currently mandated to trade in securities. A securities exchange is registered where the following is satisfactorily provided:

- Evidence of registration of the proposed Exchange as a Nigerian company, along with copies of the company's Memorandum and articles of association;
- Enacted or proposed by-laws or rules of conduct, codes of dealing, or other rules of the proposed Exchange; and
- Evidence of a minimum paid-up capital of N 500 million.[26]

The Securities and Exchange Commission is empowered by the Investments and Securities Act to have regulatory oversight of the Nigerian Stock Exchange particularly with regards to its manner of reporting off-market purchases. Capital market operators include securities dealers, stockbrokers, sub-brokers, jobbers, share transfer agents, bankers to share issue, market trustees of trust deeds, registrars to share issue, merchant bankers, issuing houses, underwriters, operators, portfolio managers, investment advisers, rating agencies, capital market consultants, and other such intermediaries associated with the securities industry.

An operator must be registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission before dealing in securities. Such registration, which is at the discretion of the Securities and Exchange Commission, is to ensure that only qualified and reputable persons and organisations are involved in dealings in securities.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has developed various registration requirements, depending on the activities to be carried out by the applicant. Thus, a single operator may be registered in various categories depending on the activities such operator intends to undertake on the capital market. The principle of universal registration is not applicable in Nigeria.

The Securities and Exchange Commission also requires brokers and dealers to be registered as members of one or more self-regulatory organisations. By virtue of the fact that the Nigerian Stock Exchange is the only exchange for trading shares in Nigeria, it qualifies as a self-regulatory organisation.[27] Brokers and dealers are registered by the Exchange. Dealers and brokers are required to be members of an Association of Securities Dealers to effect transactions in an over-the-counter market. The Securities and Exchange Commission is considering the registration of the Nigerian Association of Securities Dealers (NASD) as a self-regulatory organisation to establish an over-the-counter market for trading in the securities of public unquoted and quoted companies in Nigeria. The NASD also will have the mandate to streamline the operations of the market.

Registered members of the Nigerian Stock Exchange may have foreign equity participation or enter into any form of partnership with foreign stock-broking firms. Foreign stockbroker firms that wish to do business in Nigeria must incorporate a local subsidiary (which may be wholly owned by such firm). Such local subsidiary may then apply for membership of the Nigerian Stock Exchange subject to compliance with its rules and regulations, which include a capital base of at least N 40 million and the payment of the prescribed deposit into the Nigerian Stock Exchange Investors Protection Fund. The subsidiary company also will register with the Securities and Exchange Commission under the desired category as a capital market operator.

Central Securities Clearing System. To further improve the quality of its services, the Nigerian Stock Exchange incorporated a subsidiary clearing house, the Central Securities Clearing System in 1992. The clearing, settlement, and delivery transactions of the Nigerian Stock Exchange are now made electronically through the Central Securities Clearing System.

27 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, reg 42.

The Central Securities Clearing System was introduced to implement a computerised Stock Exchange Management System, which emphasises the immobilisation of share certificates in a central depository. The Central Securities Clearing System provides an integrated central depository, clearing (electronic/book-entry transfer of shares from seller to buyer), and settlement (payment for bought securities) for all stock market transactions. The Central Securities Clearing System also acts as a clearing and custodian agency for local instruments and issues central identification numbers to stockholders.

Electronic Trading Systems. The Nigerian Stock Exchange introduced the Automated Trading System in April 1999 to replace the call-over trading system. Stockbrokers now match bids and offers on the trading floors of the Nigerian Stock Exchange through a network of computers.

The Automated Trading System was introduced to facilitate a significant level of transparency, efficiency, and fairness in the stock pricing process. The Nigerian Stock Exchange has introduced the Remote Trading System to increase efficiency in securities trading and to obviate the need for dealers to consummate deals on the floor of the Nigerian Stock Exchange or any of its branches. Nigeria does not have a transborder electronic trading system.

The Central Securities Clearing System recently introduced a transaction verification procedure called 'Trade Alert' to prevent unauthorised trade in company securities by stockbrokers, to the detriment of investors. Trade Alert works by sending text messages to investors on their mobile telephones anytime there is a transaction on their accounts, to enable them to confirm the transaction or abort it, if it was carried out without their authorisation. Investors are thus able to monitor their transactions and stock balances on their accounts on a daily basis, and it is believed the resultant transparency would enhance the global attractiveness of the Nigerian capital market.[28]

The Abuja Commodities Exchange. The purpose of the Abuja Commodity Exchange is to assist the government in its drive to diversify the Nigerian economy by internationalising and standardising Nigeria's tradable commodities, such as cocoa, palm products, cotton, rubber, and non-ferrous metals. The Abuja Commodity Exchange has not yet commenced operations.

Off-Market Transactions. Stocks can be transferred outside the Nigerian Stock Exchange in cases of nominal transfers, and it also is possible to arrange negotiated deals such as divestitures by way of management buy-out.

Other than in these situations, off-market transactions are not permitted. Consequently, it is not possible to transfer regulated securities other than on the trading floor of the Exchange where such securities are registered.

Securities

National Treatment and Reciprocity. 'Foreign investment' means any investment in securities involving foreign capital importation made by a foreign person (corporate body or individual) or by a Nigerian resident outside Nigeria. Generally, in Nigeria, investments are categorised as follows:

- Shares and stock in the share capital of a company;
- Debentures, including debenture stock, loan stock, bonds, certificates of deposit, and other instruments creating or acknowledging indebtedness, not being government and public securities;
- Loan stock, bonds, and other instruments creating or acknowledging indebtedness issued by or on behalf of a government, local authority, or public authority;
- Warrants or other instruments entitling the holder to subscribe for investment in shares and stock in the share capital of a company, debentures, or government and public securities;
- Certificates or other instruments which confer (a) property rights in respect of warrants or other instruments entitling the holder to subscribe for investment in shares and stock in the share capital of a company, debentures, or government and public securities, (b) any right to acquire, dispose of, underwrite, or convert an investment, being a right to which the holder would be entitled if he held any such investment to which the certificate or instrument relates, or (c) a contractual right (other than an option) to acquire any such investment otherwise than by subscription;
- Units in a collective investment scheme, including shares in or securities of an open-ended investment company;
- Options;
- Futures; and
- Other forms of investment or capital instrument within the meaning of investment generally.[29]

In 1995, the previous laws regulating foreign investment[30] were repealed, and the Nigerian Investment Promotion Commission Act and the Foreign Exchange (Monitoring and Miscellaneous Provisions) Act were enacted to enable Nigeria to compete favourably with other African countries for foreign direct investment. Hence, there are no restrictions on investments by foreign institutions and individuals,[31] except in the following sectors, which are prohibited to Nigerians and foreigners alike:

- Production of arms and ammunition;
- Production of, and dealing in, narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

29 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, Second Schedule.

31 Nigerian Investment Promotion Commission Act, 1995, ss 17, 18, and 32.

- Production of military and paramilitary wears and accoutrement, including those of the police, customs, immigration, and prison services; and
- Such other items as the Federal Executive Council may determine.

Any person (including foreigners) may invest or deal in all securities traded on the primary and secondary markets or by private placements in Nigeria, or any other money market instruments, whether or not denominated in foreign currency in Nigeria.[32] These securities, except in the case of private companies, are to be registered by the Securities and Exchange Commission in accordance with the Investments and Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations.[33]

Portfolio investors subscribing in primary market securities are required to effect their transactions through capital market operators registered in Nigeria by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Those investing in the secondary markets are to effect transactions through licensed brokers/dealers on the floors of any of the Exchanges or through over-the-counter markets registered by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Foreign investors investing foreign capital in the securities of public companies are required to do so through capital market operators registered by the Securities and Exchange Commission.[34] Furthermore, such investors are required to import the requisite foreign capital for such investments through an authorised dealer in foreign exchange and to obtain a Certificate of Capital Importation from the authorised dealer.[35] The Certificate of Capital Importation entitles the foreign investors to:

- Open a foreign currency domiciliary account with any authorised dealer for investment purposes;[36]
- Open a special non-resident Naira account to which could be credited all receipts from the capital inflows, proceeds from sale of securities, dividends, and interests;[37] and
- Make investments in securities in Nigeria out of the balances in the Naira account.[38]

The capital imported into Nigeria and invested in any securities or other investment, together with the capital gains, dividends, profits, or any interests attributable to the investment, may be repatriated at any time through an authorised dealer subject to the deduction of withholding tax.[39]

Foreign investors can divest their holdings in securities through the Exchange or on a recognised over-the-counter market with respect to unquoted securities traded on that market. Divestment of holdings in securities in any other public company can be done through the capital market operators registered by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Issuer Requirements. The Investments and Securities Act, 1999, section 29(1), precludes any person (including foreign institutional investors)[40] from dealing in securities, without a Certificate of Registration from the Securities and Exchange Commission. This requirement also applies to sponsors of venture capital funds or collective investment schemes, including mutual funds.

Recently, the Securities and Exchange Commission issued a new directive requiring all capital market operators to ensure that the rating of bonds be filed with the Commission before application. SEC expects this new measure to enhance proper assessment of bonds as well as investors' confidence in the bond market.[41]

Issuing Houses. The registration requirements for issuing houses are governed by rule 29, part A4, of the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations.

An application for registration is to be made to the Securities and Exchange Commission with the requisite Form SEC 3, accompanied by the following documents:

- A minimum of three sets of the duly completed Form SEC 2 to be filed by the sponsored individuals;[42]
- A copy of the certificate of incorporation certified by the Corporate Affairs Commission, Abuja;[43]
- A certified true copy of the memorandum and articles of association of the company;[44]
- A copy of the particulars of directors of the company (CAC Form C07), certified as a true copy by the Corporate Affairs Commission;
- A copy of the latest audited accounts, or an audited statement of affairs for companies in operation for less than one year;
- The company profile;
- A fidelity bond representing 25 per cent of the paid-up capital of the company;
- A sworn undertaking to keep proper records and render returns;
- Evidence of minimum paid-up capital of N 150 million.[45]

40 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 29(3), stipulates that any institutional foreign investor also must obtain this certificate before dealing in securities.

41 Securities and Exchange Commission, Press Release of 28 February 2003.

42 'Sponsored individuals' are the principal officers and/or professionals held out by the applicant company as experts on whose advice or actions investors are expected to rely. These individuals are required to be registered by the Securities and Exchange Commission and are required to possess some minimum level of qualification; Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 15, part A1.

43 Where an uncertified copy is filed, the applicant is required to present the original for sighting by an authorised officer of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

44 The objects of the memorandum should confer on the company the powers to act as an issuing house.

45 Rule 17, Part A2, of the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations requires the following documents to be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission as evidence of compliance with the paid-up capital requirement: (a) a copy of the Board Resolution authorising the increase in share capital certified by the Corporate Affairs Commission, (b) evidence of registration of such increase with the Corporate Affairs Commission, certified by the Corporate Affairs Commission, (c) audited statement of account or management account signed by two directors with a letter of confirmation by an external auditor or a statement of affairs signed by an auditor, showing that the increase has been paid-up, and (d) where capital contributed is in the form of real property, title documents in the name of the company in respect of the capitalised properties.

The head of the issuing house must have practical experience in packaging public issues. The issuing houses are required to file applications for renewal of their registration every two years.[46] The application for renewal of the registration should be filed at least 30 days prior to the date of expiration supported by evidence of attendance of at least one course organised by training bodies recognised by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

All registered issuers, brokers, and dealers are required to display the Certificate of Registration issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission at the reception of their offices. In addition, they are required to comply with the Securities and Exchange Commission rules on orderly, fair, and equitable dealings in securities and to ensure that they maintain proper standards of professionalism in securities business. They also must comply with the Code of Conduct for capital market operators, as approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Such bodies would include the Nigerian Stock Exchange, Chartered Institute of Brokers, and/or any other organisation as may be approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission.[47]

Every corporate body registered in accordance with the Securities and Exchange Commission regulations is required to provide and maintain a bond, which should be issued by an insurance company acceptable to the Securities and Exchange Commission against theft, stealing, fraud, or dishonesty, covering each officer, employee, and sponsored individuals of the company.

Registered persons and bodies are to keep and maintain all books, records, and financial reports, required under the Investments and Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, in a readily accessible place, for not less than five years from the end of the year during which the last entry was made on such record, and during the first two years of this period in an appropriate office of the registered person. Registered issuing houses also are required to:

- Maintain the prescribed minimum paid-up capital and to have, at all times, sufficient liquid assets to cover their current indebtedness;
- Act as agents of issues for purposes of primary issues, co-ordinate activities of other professionals and parties to the issue, and prepare the registration statement, the prospectus, and other offer documents,[48] and fulfil any other roles ancillary to these; and
- Make the following returns to the Securities and Exchange Commission (a) allotment proposal, (b) statement of account as at the date of allotment, (c) evidence of transfer of the proceeds of the issue to the issuer, (d) certified copies of returns filed with the Corporate Affairs Commission, (e) semi-annual statement of activities in the capital market including staff movement, (f) completed Form QR/3 of the Securities and

Exchange Commission, and (g) evidence of publication of results of allotment in at least two national newspapers.[49]

Issuing Houses are permitted to act as Receiving Bankers in the same issue subject to meeting the qualifying requirements set out under the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations.[50]

Foreign Capital Market Operators. The Companies and Allied Matters Act stipulates[51] that every foreign company which, having been incorporated outside Nigeria, desires to carry on business in Nigeria, must be incorporated in Nigeria, as a separate entity for that purpose and, until so incorporated, cannot carry on business in Nigeria or exercise any of the powers of a registered company.

Foreign capital market operators are required to register with the Securities and Exchange Commission before they can establish a securities business in Nigeria.[52] However, before registering with the Securities and Exchange Commission, they must be incorporated in Nigeria. Other than the certificate of local incorporation, the other documents to be presented are:

- Proof of registration from the Securities Commission or the relevant regulatory authority in its country of domicile;
- Latest audited accounts of the foreign capital market operator in its country of domicile;
- Management and promoter's profile;
- Certified true copy of the foreign capital market operator's memorandum and articles of association or its equivalent;
- Certified true copy of the Certificate of Incorporation in the country of domicile; and
- Any other information considered by the Securities and Exchange Commission to be relevant.

If the foreign capital market operator intends to partner with an existing Nigerian registered capital market operator or acquires part of a Nigerian business, the registered capital market operator may sponsor the foreign capital market operator for registration with the Securities and Exchange Commission by filing the application forms accompanied by the required documents.

Foreign Issuers. A foreign issuer, ie, a foreign government or a company incorporated or organised in a foreign country, may utilise the service of the Nigerian capital market in issuing, selling, or offering for sale or subscription securities to the Nigerian public. These securities may be denominated in Naira or in any convertible foreign currency.

Foreign issuers of securities are required to file an application for registration of their securities with the Securities and Exchange Commission accompanied by a draft prospectus under such conditions as prescribed by the Securities and Exchange Commission. The application is to be filed using the Securities and Exchange Commission Form 6F, and it is to be accompanied by a registration fee, which is prescribed by the Securities and Exchange Commission from time to time.

However, where it is in the 'public interest' and where a reciprocal agreement exists between Nigeria and the country of the issuer, or the issuer's country is a member of the International Organisation of Securities Commissions, the Securities and Exchange Commission may grant exemption from compliance with any of the requirements for registration to securities issued in that country. These exemptions may include the waiving of a full compliance under the Securities and Exchange Commission regulations by the acceptance of a prospectus approved or cleared by a foreign Securities Commission and the adoption of audited annual reports/accounts of foreign issuers accepted by the Securities Commission of that country. This, however, does not relieve an issuer from the requirements of filing reports, forms, or other documents related to the securities as may be prescribed by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Effectiveness and Renewal of Registration. The Securities and Exchange Commission is required to notify an applicant for registration (or renewal) of its decision granting or renewing the registration. Until receipt of the formal notification, the registration or renewal shall not take any effect.[53]

In addition, all applicants can apply to the Securities and Exchange Commission for an extension of time within which it is required to make known its decision to grant or deny an applicant's request.[54] The rationale may be to afford an applicant the opportunity to resolve queries or put in further documentation the absence of which could have resulted in an adverse decision. This rule previously applied only to the registration of Securities Exchanges.

Withdrawal of Registration. Capital market operators seeking withdrawal from their registered functions are required to file, among other requirements, a list of all their clients with outstanding liabilities written against their names and evidence of discharge of all outstanding obligations to the Securities and Exchange Commission.[55]

55 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations 1999, as amended, rule 20(5), part A2.

The suspension or withdrawal of a market operator effectively suspends or withdraws the registration of the sponsored officers. A sponsoring officer who resigns his employment with the sponsoring company is required to obtain a fresh registration with the Securities and Exchange Commission in his new employment.[56] The market operator is obliged to notify the Securities and Exchange Commission of the resignation or dismissal of any of its employees where such dismissal was based on fraudulent or manipulative acts in connection with activities in the capital market.

Reinstatement of Suspended Registration. A suspended capital market operator can apply for revalidation or reinstatement of its registration where it is able to provide evidence that it has complied with the terms and conditions of the suspension order issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission.[57]

However, where the suspended capital market operator is unable or failed to comply with the terms and conditions of the suspension order within 12 months, its registration will be void. The capital market operator will be obliged to make a fresh application. If the capital market operator fulfils the stipulated requirements for reinstatement, then the Securities and Exchange Commission is obliged to effect such reinstatement within 14 days.[58]

Securities Requirements. All securities must be registered by the Securities and Exchange Commission before they can be issued, sold, transferred, or offered for subscription or for sale to the public, and prior approval for the issue, sale, transfer, or public offer must have been granted by the Securities and Exchange Commission.[59] Securities registered by the Securities and Exchange Commission may be transferred electronically or by any other means or system approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission, under such terms and conditions as the Securities and Exchange Commission may prescribe, to a securities exchange or capital trade points or any other self-regulatory organisation.

All issuers of securities are required by the Investments and Securities Act to keep a register of securities into which all the information and particulars of the securities are entered. Securities dealers also are required to keep accounting and other records to sufficiently explain the transactions and financial position of their business and enable true and fair profit and loss accounts and balance sheets to be prepared from time to time. The following bodies are required to register their securities with the Securities and Exchange Commission:

- Public quoted companies;
- Public unquoted companies;

56 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations 1999, as amended, rule 21(4), part A2.
57 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations 1999, as amended, rule 21(6), part A2.

59 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 32; Companies and Allied Matters Act, 1990, s 547.

- Governments and government agencies; and
- Investment schemes.[60]

The types of securities to be registered are as follows:

- Issued securities, ie, ordinary shares, bonus shares, debentures, preference shares, rights issue and units of a unit/investment trust scheme, and asset-backed securities;
- Issue of securities for the purpose of taking over an existing business or asset;
- Securities offered to the public;
- State and local government bonds and securities; and
- Investment contracts or participation in any profit-sharing agreement or in any oil or gas or other mineral royalties or lease.[61]

Any securities offered through the following media also are subject to registration by the Securities and Exchange Commission:

- Offer for subscription;
- Offer for sale;
- Rights issue;
- Bonus issue;
- Private placement by public companies;
- Securities arising from conversion of a company to a public limited company;
- Debenture loan stock;
- State and local government bonds; and
- Offer by introduction.[62]

However, the Securities and Exchange Commission may exempt any securities from being registered if such exemption is in the interest of the public and does not endanger investor interest. The Securities and Exchange Commission also has the power to prohibit trading in particular securities that have been offered at a securities exchange or capital trade point in the interest of the public, although it must first issue a notice to that exchange or capital trade point.[63]

Before securities can be registered, the issuer must file an application on Form SEC6 accompanied by the following documents:

- A copy of the resolutions passed in the general meeting of the company authorising the offer and certified by the company secretary;
- Two copies of the memorandum and articles of association of the issuer company with any amendments thereto, certified by the Corporate Affairs Commission;

60 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 106, part C1.
61 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 107, part C1.
62 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 40, part A5.
63 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 27(1).

- A copy of the certificate of incorporation certified by the company secretary;[64]
- A signed copy of each audited account for the preceding five years or number of years for which the company has been in operation, if less than five years;
- Two copies each of the draft prospectus and the abridged prospectus;
- Two copies of the draft trust deed, where applicable;
- Two copies each of the draft underwriting agreement and sub-underwriting agreement, where applicable;
- Vending agreement;
- Where there are more than one issuing house, the agreement regulating the relationship between the joint issuing houses;
- Letters of consent given by the parties to the issue, sworn before a notary public;[65] and
- Any other document required by the Securities and Exchange Commission.[66]

In addition, the application to the Securities and Exchange Commission should contain information indicating the type and character of the securities and the following:

- The nominal value, the rate of dividends if fixed, and whether they are cumulative or non-cumulative;
- A brief description of the preference shares, if any;
- In the case of debt instruments, the rate of interest, the date of maturity or, if the issue matures severally, a brief description of the serial maturities;
- If the payment of principal or interest is contingent, an appropriate indication of such contingency, a brief indication of the priority of the issue and, if convertible, a statement to that effect;
- The organisational and financial structure and the nature of business of the company, including any risk factors;
- The directors, officers, and underwriters, if any, and each securities holder of record holding more than five per cent of any class of any equity or N 50,000 in value, whichever is higher;
- The bonus and profit-sharing arrangement;
- The management and service contracts;
- The write-up from the issuing house on the issue;
- A schedule of claims and litigation;
- The bridging loan agreement and schedule of other material contracts, where applicable;
- Evidence of property ownership or transfer; and
- Any other document or information required by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

64 Where a copy is not certified, the original should be presented for sighting by an authorised officer of the Securities and Exchange Commission.
65 Where the consent is contained in a power of attorney, it must be executed and stamped.
66 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 40(B), part A5.

If the securities are for listing on an exchange, or with any association or body of securities dealers recognised by the Securities and Exchange Commission, the issuer also must file with the Securities and Exchange Commission copies of the duplicates and originals of the application to the exchange and a certificate to the effect that the application has been made. The directors of the issuer and other parties to a public offer will sign copies of the approved prospectus and other documents of offer which the issuer must forward to the Securities and Exchange Commission within 48 hours of the signing of the prospectus.

The documents may, in the absence of the issuer, be signed by an authorised representative with a duly stamped power of attorney. If the securities registered by the Securities and Exchange Commission are not offered to the public within six months after registration, the issuer must obtain a revalidation of the issue from the Securities and Exchange Commission before the offer to the public. An issuer may list its securities on one or more exchanges provided it complies with the listing requirements of the relevant exchange.

Prospectus Requirement. Any form of application for securities in a public company must be issued with a prospectus.[67] However, if the form of application was issued either in connection with a bona fide invitation to a person to enter into an underwriting agreement with respect to the shares, or in relation to shares which were not offered to the public, then this requirement will not apply.[68] The requirement also will not apply to the following situations:

- Issue to existing members of a company of a prospectus or form of application relating to shares in the company whether or not an applicant for shares has the right to renounce in favour of other persons; or
- Issue of a prospectus or form of application relating to securities, which are or are to be in all respects uniform with all securities previously issued and for the time being dealt in, or quoted on, a recognised stock exchange or capital trade points.[69]

An applicant may apply for a certificate of exemption where, having regard to the proposal (ie, the size and other circumstances of the issue of securities) and the limitations on the number and class of persons to whom the offer is to be made, compliance with the requirements of a prospectus would be unduly burdensome. This exemption may be granted even though the offer consists of securities from a public company to persons who are not existing members of the company. Nevertheless, an application has been made to a recognised Stock Exchange for permission to deal in or quote the securities on that Exchange.[70]

67 Rule 53(I) requires the prospectus to be in duplicate and no longer in size than A4 paper and printed forms. For issuers of securities through the Capital Trade point, the prospectus may be abridged in terms of content and may be in printed form.

Where a prospectus includes an expert[71] statement, it cannot be issued unless the expert has given his written consent to the issue and a statement that the expert has given and has not withdrawn his consent appears in the prospectus.[72]

Any prospectus issued by, or on behalf of, a company or in relation to an intended company must be dated and, unless the contrary is proved, that date will be regarded as the date of publication of the prospectus.[73] In addition, no prospectus can be issued unless, on or before the date of its publication, a copy has been delivered to the Securities and Exchange Commission for registration and signed by every person who is named in it as a director or a proposed director of the company or by his agent authorised in writing.[74] Every prospectus should:

- State that a copy has been delivered to the Securities and Exchange Commission for registration; and
- Refer to statements included in the prospectus which specify any documents required to be endorsed on or attached to the copy so delivered.[75]

The Securities and Exchange Commission will not register a prospectus unless it is satisfied that it is dated and signed as required and that all required documents have been endorsed on it or attached to it and the prospectus complies with all the other requirements of the law.

The required contents of a prospectus are specified in part I of the Third Schedule to the Investments and Securities Act, 1999. A prospectus also must set out the reports specified in part II of the Schedule. A statement in lieu of a prospectus must be in the form and contain the particulars set out in part I of the Fourth Schedule to the Investments and Securities Act. The Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations reinforce the provisions of the Investments and Securities Act on the requirements of a prospectus and further provide additional specifications with regard to details about the form, size, number, statements, and contents in rules 53–58 of part B1.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has proposed additional disclosure requirements for the primary and secondary markets relating to, amongst others, caveat on risk factor on the cover page of the prospectus, corporate director, conflicts of interest, mergers or takeover, and the Accountant's Report.[76]

Allotment of Shares and Under-Subscription. An application to the Securities and Exchange Commission for clearance of any allotment proposal must be accompanied by a joint letter of consent signed by the issuer and the issuing house and forwarded by the issuing house with other documents.

The requirement that undersubscribed and underwritten securities should be warehoused by the issuing house or underwriters have been extended to securities listed on the capital trade point. In the case of such securities, the issuer or issuing house is required to warehouse and underwrite the securities where there is under-subscription and, thereafter, sell the securities on the floors of the Securities Exchange or capital trade point within six months after allotment.

The minimum subscription level for securities listed on the Capital Trade Point is 50 per cent, while that of companies listed on other Stock Exchange remains 25 per cent. However, where an issue not underwritten is undersubscribed (ie, less than 25 per cent subscription level and 50 per cent in the case of securities offered through the Capital Trade Point), the issue must be aborted by the issuer and issuing house.

Corporate Governance. The management and administration of companies in Nigeria is regulated by the Companies and Allied Matters Act and by the articles of association of the companies, which must comply with the general provisions of the Companies and Allied Matters Act. The Corporate Affairs Commission is the regulatory authority vested with the power to administer the Companies and Allied Matters Act and to regulate and supervise the affairs of companies, especially where the interests of shareholders and the public so demand. The provisions of the Companies and Allied Matters Act regulating the acts of directors, for instance, include:

- The duty of directors to disclose age;[77]
- The prohibition of insolvent persons from acting as directors;[78]
- The restraint of fraudulent persons;[79]
- The disqualification for directorship;[80]
- The removal of directors;[81]

77 Sections 252 and 256 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act provide that any person above the age of 70 who is appointed as a director of a public company must disclose this fact to the members of the company at a general meeting.

78 Section 253 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act prohibits all insolvent or bankrupt persons from acting as directors of any company and/or taking part (directly or indirectly) in the management of the company.

79 Section 254 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act precludes any person who is guilty of an offence in connection with the formation or management or winding up of a company from being appointed as a director for a specified period not exceeding 10 years.

80 Sections 257 and 278 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act disqualify the following persons from acting as directors of a company: an infant (ie, a person under the age of 18 years), a lunatic or a person of unsound mind, a person disqualified on grounds of insolvency or bankruptcy and being guilty of fraud, a person who resigns his office by notice in writing to the company, and a corporation other than its representative appointed to the board of directors for a given term.

81 Section 262 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act provides that a company may by ordinary resolution remove a director, notwithstanding anything in its articles of association or in any agreement between them, provided that a special notice is given to the affected director of such resolution.

- The remunerations of directors;[82]
- The prohibition of loans and guarantees to company directors;[83]
- The disclosure of a director's interest;[84]
- The disclosure of a director's particulars;[85]
- The roles of directors and their fiduciary relationship;[86]
- The conflict of duties and interests;[87]
- The duty of directors to exercise a duty of care and skill;[88] and
- A director's legal position.[89]

To ensure transparency, the provision of adequate information to the public, and general access to corporate documentation, the Companies and Allied Matters Act mandates all companies to keep proper records. All companies must keep a register of member/shareholders, a register of directors and secretaries, and a register of share transfers. In addition, proper accounting records must be kept. Section 331 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act provides that these records must be sufficient to show and explain the transactions of the company and disclose, with reasonable accuracy, the financial position of the company at any point in time. The accounting records are to be kept either at the registered address of the company or wherever the directors think fit and should be open to inspection by the officers of the company at all times. The records are to be preserved for a period of six years from the date on which they were made.

82 Section 267 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act provides that the remuneration of directors is to be determined from time to time by the company in general meeting. A director who receives more than he is entitled to would be guilty of a misfeasance and accountable to the company for such money.

83 Section 270 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act precludes companies from giving loans or guarantees or securities with respect to any loan to its director or a director of its holding company except in special circumstances, such as when the fund is required to meet the obligations of the company.

84 Section 275 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act requires every company to maintain a register showing the number, description, and amount of shares or debentures held by any director of the company. It is the duty of any director who holds such shares to disclose this to the company. In addition, section 277 provides that every director has a duty to disclose any interest in a contract or proposed contract with the company.

85 Section 278 provides that every company should state the names and nationalities of every Nigerian director on its letterhead, trade catalogues, trade circulars, and show cards.

86 Section 279 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act stipulates that all directors stand in a fiduciary relationship towards the company and should observe the utmost good faith in any transaction with the company or on its behalf.

87 Section 280 states that the personal interest of a director should not conflict with any of his duties as a director and, in the course of his management of the affairs of the company or in the utilisation of the company's property, he should not make any secret profit or achieve other unnecessary benefits.

88 Section 282 provides that all directors are to discharge their duties honestly, in good faith, and in the best interests of the company. They must exercise the degree of care and skill which a reasonably prudent director would exercise in comparable circumstances.

89 Section 283 provides that directors are trustees of the company's money, properties, and powers. In this regard, they must account for all the money over which they have control and refund any money improperly paid away. They also must exercise their powers honestly in the interest of the company and its shareholders.

Furthermore, the directors have a duty to prepare the financial statements of the company every year, as stipulated in section 335 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act. The financial statement must comply with the Companies and Allied Matters Act and the standards laid down in the Statements of Accounting Standards issued by the Nigerian Accounting Standards Board. The balance sheet and the profit and loss account must give a true and fair view of the company for each year.

According to section 344, every member of the company and holder of the company's debentures must be given a copy of the financial statement. Section 345 provides that the directors of the company must lay the financial statement before the members of the company at the annual general meeting every year. The report of the auditors on the financial statements also is to be read at the annual general meeting and should be open to inspection by any member of the company. Subsequently, the financial statements must be filed together with the Annual Returns of the company at the Corporate Affairs Commission.

Section 370 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act stipulates that all companies limited by shares or guarantee should file the company annual returns, which contains relevant information about the company in the past year, at the Corporate Affairs Commission every year. All companies also are mandated to update their corporate information at the Corporate Affairs Commission and to report any changes, eg, changes in the composition of the board of directors or other officials of the company, allotment of new shares, and change in registered address of the company. The corporate records of all companies at the Corporate Affairs Commission are open to examination by the general public.

The Companies and Allied Matters Act also provides, in section 357, for the appointment of auditors at the annual general meeting of the company to audit the financial statements of the company and to hold office until the next annual general meeting. The auditors have a duty, as stipulated in section 360, to carry out investigations on the company to enable them to form an opinion as to whether the company has kept accounting records and whether the balance sheet and the profit and loss statement are in agreement with the accounting records.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has 'midwifed' a Code of Best Practices for Public Companies in Nigeria (the 'Code'). The Code is derived from the report of a Committee set up by the Securities and Exchange Commission and makes recommendations focused on the transparency and accountability of the management and boards of companies. The Code encourages voluntary compliance with the Committee recommending that all public companies comply with the Code and be required to state reasons for non-compliance.

Registration of Public Offerings. Rule 51, part B1, of the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations require the issuer or issuing house to file a registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission before any public offering of securities is made. In addition, the issuer must comply with the provisions of the Investments and Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations on the registration of securities discussed above. After the registration statement has been filed, it will be cleared by the Securities and Exchange Commission, and a Completion Board Meeting will be held before the issue is authorised to open.

It is unlawful for any person to buy or sell securities before this procedure is completed except in the following circumstances:

- Preliminary negotiations or actual agreement between the issuer and the underwriter;
- Oral offers not made to the public; and
- Notices of proposed offerings.

Registration of Placements. Rule 96, part B3, of the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations provides that, where a private offering of registered securities is proposed, the issuer should file two copies of the placement memorandum with the Securities and Exchange Commission. The placement memorandum and accompanying documents should not contain any false or misleading information. The issuer also is required to file a report with the Securities and Exchange Commission not later than 10 days after the first sale of the securities. The report, which should be signed by persons duly authorised by the issuer, must contain the following information:

- Names and addresses of the parties to the offer;
- Basic information about the issuer;
- Information about the offering, such as offer price, volume of securities, and number of investors;
- Name and addresses of the purchasers;
- Amount purchased and the mode of payment;
- Time of payment;
- Nature of the purchaser; and
- Amount the company is raising.[90]

All private offerings must meet the criteria and requirements for securities as prescribed by the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations. No issuer is allowed to make more than one private offering a year, and issuers are not allowed to offer for subscription or sell securities by way of private placement without obtaining prior written approval from the Securities and Exchange Commission.[91]

Private offerings may not be offered by any form of public invitation, general solicitation, or general advertising, including seminars or meetings to which those attending have been invited by any general solicitation or general invitation.[92] In addition, there should be no more than 50 purchasers of the securities offered.

91 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 90, part B3 (as amended).
92 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 91, part B3 (as amended).

Extension of Offer Period. The Securities and Exchange Commission may on application by the issuer extend the offer period if it can be shown that there has occurred within the offer period:

- An upheaval, whether religious, political, or social (occurring nationwide or within the catchment areas of the issuer, ie, where most of the shareholders reside);
- A crisis such as labour unrest or riots which could lead to office shutdowns,
- A minimum of three days' public holidays; or
- Natural disasters, such as an earthquake or fire.[93]

Registration of Secondary Trade. Secondary trading in listed securities does not require any registration with the Securities and Exchange Commission or Nigerian Stock Exchange. However, the Registrar of the listed company whose securities are being traded must record the transaction and enter the name of the new owner in the Register of members. To complete the transfer of the securities on the floor of the Stock Exchange, the stock broker involved in each transaction has the duty to:

- Forward the certificate of the transferor to the Company's Registrar for rectification; and
- Inform the Central Securities Clearing System of the transfer.[94]

Periodic Disclosure

General Reporting Obligations of Listed Companies

In General. Public companies that are listed on the Nigerian Stock Exchange owe disclosure obligations to the Nigerian Stock Exchange, as well as to the following bodies:

- The Corporate Affairs Commission; and
- The Securities Exchange Commission.

Corporate Affairs Commission. All companies registered in Nigeria are required to make the following returns (statutory returns) at the Corporate Affairs Commission:

- Change of company name (within 15 days of passing the resolution authorising the change);
- Amendment of objects clause in the memorandum of association or amendment of the articles of association (within 15 days of resolution);[95]
- Allotment of shares (within one month of allotment);
- Increase or reduction in authorised share capital (within 15 days of resolution);[96]

93 The minimum aggregate offer value of N 25 million is no longer required. Issuers are free to offer for sale or subscription by way of private placement securities whether or not their aggregate value is up to N 25 million.

94 The Central Securities Clearing System will demobilise the securities and record the transfer.

95 This period is counted from the end of the 28-day period allowed for dissenting members to apply to court for the cancellation of the resolution.

96 In the case of reduction, the company is further required to register with the Corporate Affairs Commission the court order sanctioning the reduction.

- Conversion and division of stocks and shares (within one month of event);
- Creation of charges by the company or acquisition of property which is subject to a charge (within 90 days of creation of charge or acquisition of property);
- Change in registered address of the company (within 14 days of change);
- Appointment, removal, or resignation of a director (within 14 days of resolution);
- Appointment, removal, or resignation of the auditor (within 14 days of appointment, removal, or deposit of notice of resignation);
- Appointment or change of company secretary (within 14 days of appointment or change);
- Relocation of register of members (within 28 days of relocation);
- Variation of class rights (within 15 days of resolution);[97] and
- Passing of a special resolution, ie, a resolution approved by at least a three-quarters majority of the members of the company present and voting at a meeting of the members of the company (within 15 days of resolution).

Annual returns also must be filed within 42 days of the annual general meeting of a company.[98] The annual returns disclose matters such as the company's registered office, shareholding structure, directors, and company secretary.

Default in filing the required statutory return within the stipulated time results in a liability on the company and its affected officers to pay a stipulated amount, as a fine, to the Corporate Affairs Commission, calculated per each day of default. In practice, the Corporate Affairs Commission may impose a fixed amount on the company as a late filing fee. Default in registering any charge created by the company makes such charge void as against the company's liquidator in the event of a subsequent winding-up of the company. Failure to file the annual returns also may result in the Corporate Affairs Commission striking off a company's name from the Register of Companies.

Generally, to ensure smooth conduct of its business in Nigeria, every company must consistently update its corporate data at the Corporate Affairs Commission as this impacts other matters, such as registration and compliance requirements of other regulatory bodies (eg, the Nigerian Stock Exchange and the Securities and Exchange Commission), contract bids, and foreign exchange remittance.

Securities and Exchange Commission. All public listed companies are required to register their securities with the Securities and Exchange Commission.[99] Thereafter, such 97 Where an application is made by dissenting shareholders for cancellation of the variation, a copy of the court order made pursuant to the application must be submitted to the Corporate Affairs Commission within 15 days of the date of the order.

98 Companies and Allied Matters Act, ss 370 and 374. This should be filed together with the company's audited accounts for the year.

99 The Investments and Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations primarily impose reporting obligations on capital market operators. Rule 9 of the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, however, empowers the Securities and Exchange Commission to examine the records and affairs of, or call for information from, any company covered by the provisions of the Investments and Securities Act.

companies are required to file certain reports with the Securities and Exchange Commission,[100] and these would include reports on beneficial owners of five per cent or more of the company's shares, and transactions involving such persons.[101]

In addition, on obtaining Securities and Exchange Commission approval to the acquisition of its own shares, a company is required to make quarterly returns to the Securities and Exchange Commission with respect to the acquisition or any subsequent disposal of such shares. The returns must disclose particulars of any nominee or trustee holding those shares on behalf of the company.[102]

The Securities and Exchange Commission requires each listed company to submit six copies of its quarterly, half-yearly, and annual reports, respectively. The quarterly and half-yearly reports are to be made available to the Securities and Exchange Commission at the same time as they are submitted to the Nigerian Stock Exchange. The annual report is required to be despatched simultaneously to the shareholders, the Nigerian Stock Exchange, and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The Registrar of a listed company is required to publish once a year, in at least two national daily newspapers, the details of shareholders who are yet to claim their share certificates and, thereafter, file documentary evidence of compliance with this requirement with the Securities and Exchange Commission.[103] The Registrar also is required to submit a statement of all unclaimed dividends and interest warrant to the Securities and Exchange Commission.[104]

Furthermore, a listed company intending to offer securities to the public must first submit a copy of the prospectus or other offer document to the Securities and Exchange Commission,[105] which will review such document to ensure that it makes full disclosure relating to the affairs of the company and the securities being offered, in compliance with the provisions of the Investments and Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations relating to the contents of a prospectus.

Nigerian Stock Exchange. Each listed company is required to provide the Nigerian Stock Exchange and the investing public with material information about its activities at the time of seeking listing and, once its shares are admitted to the official list, it must comply with the post-listing requirements of the Nigerian Stock Exchange to retain 100 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 106. Under rule 108, however, the Securities and Exchange Commission may exempt any securities from being registered and any company from reporting if it considers such exemption to be in the interest of the public, and it does not endanger investors' interests.

listing. The post-listing requirements mainly consist of continuous disclosure obligations to the Nigerian Stock Exchange and the investing public.

The Rules Governing Listing on the Nigerian Stock Exchange ('the Listing Requirements') provide that, before the grant of listing, all applicant companies must sign a General Undertaking that they will promptly provide certain information about their operations.[106]

Financial Statements and Reports

The dictates of the general undertaking require a company whose shares are listed on the Nigerian Stock Exchange to make both interim and final reports to the Nigerian Stock Exchange.[107]

Interim reports consist of quarterly statements and forecasts (whether or not audited), which must be submitted to the Nigerian Stock Exchange not later than six weeks after the end of each quarter of the year.[108] Companies listed on the First-Tier Market are to make quarterly and half-yearly returns, while companies listed on the Second-Tier Market are required to make only semi-annual returns. The Listing Requirements also provide that interim reports and accounts approved by the directors should be despatched to all shareholders not later than six months from the date of the notice convening the last annual general meeting of the company.[109] However, the Nigerian Stock Exchange will accept publication of the reports and accounts in at least two leading national daily newspapers as sufficient for this purpose.[110]

The final report consists of the annual report and audited accounts approved by the Board of Directors of a listed company, which must be submitted to the Nigerian Stock Exchange at least 21 days prior to the company's annual general meeting.[111] Where applicable, consolidated accounts of a group of companies must be submitted. The following must be included in, or circulated with, the annual report and audited accounts:

- Description of the operations carried on by the company or, where the company has subsidiaries, the group;
- Where the company has subsidiaries or associated companies, information on the name and country of operation of each subsidiary or associated company and the nature and quantum of interest of the company in each subsidiary or associated company;
- Particulars of any arrangement for the waiver of directors' emoluments;

- Statement detailing the particulars of directors' shareholding as at the end of the financial year, which should reflect changes in such shareholding between the end of the financial year end and a date not more than one month prior to the notice convening the annual general meeting; and
- Statement detailing the particulars of persons other than directors holding more than five per cent[112] of the shares of the company as at a date not more than one month prior to the notice convening the annual general meeting.[113]

In addition, the following minimum information[114] must be disclosed in the annual report:

- Turnover figures representing sales exclusively to third parties;
- Other income, such as investment income, rents, profits from sale of assets, and other unusual items (listed separately);
- Profit before tax;
- Tax payable and paid;
- Profit after tax;
- Sources and application of funds;
- Value-added statements;
- Sales and profit contribution per activity;
- Interest expenses and similar charges;
- Dividend proposed and dividend liability with full disclosure;
- Five-year financial summary;
- Directors' direct and indirect holdings in the issued shares;
- Substantial shareholdings representing five per cent or more of the issued shares; and
- Capital expenditure.

Every listed company also is required to deliver to the Nigerian Stock Exchange for vetting and approval, not less than 14 days before despatch, two copies of proof of all circulars and notices to shareholders together with accompanying documents, quarterly reports and forecasts, and bi-annual and annual reports and accounts.[115] The Nigerian Stock Exchange makes these documents available to the stockbrokers on the trading floor of the Exchange to enable them to react to the interim and final performances of listed companies. Nigerian Stock Exchange approval must, thereafter, be given before all such documents, including the reports and accounts, can be published.

112 Although the rules governing listing prescribe five per cent, in practice, the Nigerian Stock Exchange would require such a statement where the shareholding is more than 10 per cent.

Other Disclosure Obligations

Every listed company must promptly notify the Nigerian Stock Exchange of certain facts, which could in any way affect the market value of its shares. These include the following:

- Announcement of dividends, changes in capital structure, redemption of securities, or any other activity or incident that could affect the market price of the company's shares;
- Changes in the board of directors;
- Proposed alteration of the memorandum or articles of association of the company, in the general character or nature of the business of the company (or the group), or in voting control or in beneficial ownership of the securities carrying voting control;
- Decision of the company (or its subsidiaries) to acquire controlling shares in another company or to acquire another business or a share of another business;
- Extension of time granted for the currency of temporary documents;
- Date and time the Board of Directors is expected to meet to discuss dividends, which must be at least 14 days in advance; and
- Other information necessary to enable shareholders to appraise the position of the company and to avoid the establishment of a false market in respect of the company's shares.[116]

Where the securities involved are debentures or bonds, there are currently no disclosure obligations to the Nigerian Stock Exchange. It is the duty of the Trustee to the issue or bond to ensure compliance with the terms and conditions of the debenture or bond issue.

Foreign Issuers

Foreign companies whose securities are listed on the Nigerian Stock Exchange are under the same disclosure obligations as are applicable to Nigerian listed companies.

Default in Disclosure Requirements

Where a listed company defaults in its reporting obligations, the practice of the Nigerian Stock Exchange is to invite the company secretary to give reasons for the default and to grant such extension of time as is necessary for the necessary returns to be made. Where there is continued default, the Nigerian Stock Exchange would formally invite the management of the company for discussions to determine, and possibly resolve, the reasons for the default.

It is only in extreme situations that the Nigerian Stock Exchange would exercise its power to order a technical suspension of trading in the shares of a defaulting company. However, recent developments suggest a changing disposition of the regulatory bodies to persistent default by listed companies in their reporting obligations, as the Securities and Exchange Commission recently recommended that the Nigerian Stock Exchange de-list from the official list 41 'moribund' companies that had consistently defaulted in submitting their quarterly and half-yearly reports to the Nigerian Stock Exchange.

Proxy Disclosure

The provisions of the Companies and Allied Matters Act permit a shareholder of a listed company to appoint another person (whether a shareholder or not) to represent him and exercise voting rights at a shareholders' meeting.[117] The Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations make detailed provisions relating to the proxy statement, the proxy form, and any solicitation of proxies by the management of a company.[118] The Registrar of a listed company is obliged to file with the Securities and Exchange Commission a copy of the proxy statement, proxy form, and all other soliciting materials not later than 48 hours before despatching the documents together with the notice of the meeting to the shareholders.[119]

The Listing Requirements also provide that every listed company must send out proxy forms to all shareholders entitled to attend and vote at general meetings of the company and ensure that such proxy forms are appropriately worded as to enable a shareholder or debenture holder to vote either for or against each resolution.[120] Nor may the articles of association of a listed company be worded so as to preclude the use of such two-way proxy form.[121] The Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations also contain detailed provisions on the contents of every proxy statement or material used in the solicitation of proxies.[122]

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

Offer. The issue of securities can be made either publicly or privately. The term 'private placement' refers to the issue of securities that do not involve a public offering.[123]

No issuer is permitted to offer for sale or subscription or sell securities whose aggregate offer value is N 25 million and above by way of private placement without obtaining prior written approval from the Securities and Exchange Commission. Such approval will not be given if the private offering does not meet the criteria and requirements under Rules 91–97 of the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations.[124]

No issuer or person acting on its behalf in making a private placement offer is permitted to offer the securities for subscription or sale in any manner denoting a public invitation. These forms of public invitation, general solicitation, or general advertising include:

- Any advertisement, article, notice, or other communication published in any newspaper, magazine, or broadcast over the television or radio; and
- Any seminar or meeting to which those attending have been invited by any general solicitation or general invitation.[125]

The number of purchasers to whom the securities are offered by private placement should not exceed 50.[126] In line with the Securities and Exchange Commission objectives to ensure fairness in the capital market, for the purposes of calculating the number of purchasers, the following categories of purchasers are excluded:

- Any relative, spouse, or relative of the purchaser's spouse who has the same principal residence as the purchaser;
- Any trust or estate in which a purchaser and any of the persons related to him, as indicated above, collectively have more than 50 per cent of the beneficial interest (excluding contingent interests);
- Any corporation or other organisation of which a purchaser and any of the persons related to him collectively are beneficial owners of more than 50 per cent of the equity securities (excluding directors' qualifying shares or equity interests); and
- Any accredited investor.

'Accredited investors' are persons or institutions that are capable of understanding and affording the financial risks associated with acquisition of unregistered securities. These include financial institutions, executive officers of issuing houses, natural persons with a net worth of over N 2 million, natural persons with incomes exceeding N 400,000 or N 500,000 for single and married persons, respectively, trust or business partnerships with net assets of more than N 5 million, and entities in which all the owners are accredited investors.

However, for the purpose of calculating the number of purchasers, corporations, partnerships, and other entities (that are not accredited investors) are regarded as one purchaser. Such 'other entities' do not include entities that are organised for the specific purpose of acquiring the securities offered.

Prior to making an offer and subsequent sale, the issuer or any person acting on its behalf should have reasonable grounds to believe that the offeree has sufficient knowledge and experience in financial business matters to evaluate the merits and demerits of the prospective investments. The issuer should also believe in the offeree's ability to bear the economic risk of the investments.[127]

Each offeree is entitled to have reasonable access to the same kind of information included in a placement memorandum or offering document describing the terms and conditions of the offering. At a reasonable time before the sale of the securities, the issuer is expected to furnish this information to the offeree to such extent that will enable the offeree to have a proper understanding of the issuer, its business, and the securities being offered.[128]

The issuer is required to exercise reasonable care to ensure that the purchasers of the securities are not and do not become underwriters.[129]

The issuer must file two copies of the private placement memorandum with the Securities and Exchange Commission.[130] The private placement memorandum and all the accompanying documents must not contain any false or misleading statement or information. The issuer must file a report of a sale of the securities in the offering, within 10 working days of the close of the offer (and no longer than after 10 days of the sale of the securities) with the Securities and Exchange Commission.[131] The report must contain the following information:

- Names and addresses of the parties to the offer;
- Basic information about the issuer;
- Information about the offering, such as offer price, volume of securities, and number of investors;
- Cost of issue and use of proceeds;[132]
- Name and addresses of the purchasers;
- Amount purchased and the mode of payment;
- Time of payment;
- Nature of the purchaser; and
- Amount the company is raising.[133]

Issuers are restricted from making more than one private offering within any year.[134] This provision restricts the free transaction in private securities. Some issuers may have more investments to manage than others, and being limited to making one private offering in a year will defeat the objective of assisting members of the private sector to secure long-term funds through the issue of securities.

Invitations to the Public. Section 44 of the Investments and Securities Act provides that:

A public offering can only arise where an invitation or offer is made to the public. Invitations are made to the public where an offer or invitation is:

- Published, advertised, or disseminated by newspaper, broadcasting, cinematography, or any other means;
- Made to or circulated among any persons whether selected as members or as debenture holders of the company concerned or as clients of the persons making or circulating the invitation or in any other manner;
- Made to any one or more persons on the terms that the person or persons to whom it is made may renounce or assign the benefit of the offer or invitation or any of the securities to be obtained under it in favour of any other person or persons; or
- Made to any one or more persons to acquire any securities dealt in by a securities exchange or capital trade point or in respect of which the invitation states that the application has been or will be made for permission to deal in those securities on a securities exchange or capital trade point.[135]

In addition, where any company allots or agrees to allot any of its securities to any person with a view to inviting the public to acquire any of those securities, such an invitation also would constitute an invitation to the public.[136] However, invitations are not regarded as being 'made to the public' where:

- In the circumstances, the offer or invitation is not being calculated to result, directly or indirectly, in shares or debentures becoming available for subscription or purchase by persons other than those receiving the offer or invitation, or otherwise as being a domestic concern of the persons making and receiving it;[137] and
- The invitation is made by or on behalf of a private company exclusively to its existing shareholders.

It is unlawful to issue any form of application for securities in a public company unless the form is issued with a prospectus prepared in accordance with the Investments and Securities Act.

Listed Securities. All securities for which listing on the Nigerian Stock Exchange is sought must first be registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Only public companies which will issue or have issued an invitation to the public to subscribe for their shares or have satisfied the Nigerian Stock Exchange Council that the public is sufficiently interested in the company's shares will obtain listing on the Nigerian Stock Exchange.[138]

Before listing is granted to an applicant company, it must sign a General Undertaking that it will provide certain information about its operations and follow certain administrative procedures.

Listing Methods. The methods for listing of securities on the Nigerian Stock Exchange include:

- Offer for subscription— an invitation by or on behalf of a company or other authority to the investing public to subscribe to its securities at a fixed price;
- Offer for sale — an offer made by or on behalf of a shareholder to the public, the proceeds thereof going to the vendor;
- Placing — the sale by a broker to its clients of securities that have already been subscribed for or purchased;
- Rights offer or issue — a privileged offer to existing shareholders to acquire proportionately additional shares in the company, usually at a special price;
- Capitalisation issue — a bonus issue to existing shareholders;
- Tender — an offer of a specific quantity of shares or stock to the public by or on behalf of a company or other authority to a third party for bidding;
- Introduction — a listing of securities already widely held;
- Conversion — an exchange for or conversion of securities into other classes of securities;
- Option — an offer to buy or sell some shares at an agreed price and time; and
- Any other method that the Council or Committee of the Nigerian Stock Exchange may prescribe.[139]

A company may apply to be listed on the First-Tier Securities Market or the Second-Tier Securities Market of the Nigerian Stock Exchange. The requirements for listing on the First-Tier Market are as follows:

- The company must be registered as a public limited liability company under the provisions of the Companies and Allied Matters Act;
- The company must submit to the Nigerian Stock Exchange its financial statements and business records for five years before the date of the application;
- The date of last audited accounts may not exceed nine months;
- The amount of money that can be raised is unlimited depending on the borrowing power of the directors or company;
- The company must pay its annual quotation fees based on market capitalisation;

138 Rules Governing Listing on the Nigerian Stock Exchange, at p 7.
139 Rules Governing Listing on the Nigerian Stock Exchange, at p 3.

- At least 25 per cent, or N 250,000, of nominal value of share capital must be offered to the public;
- The number of shareholders may not be less than 500;
- After listing, the company must submit quarterly, half-yearly, and annual accounts;
- The securities must be fully paid-up at the time of allotment;
- The unalloted securities must be sold on the Nigerian Stock Exchange's trading floors; and
- There must be provision for issue of mergers, acquisitions, unit trusts, or mutual funds.

In addition to the usual listing requirements for corporate entities, the Nigerian Stock Exchange also requires that all applications for state government bonds should be submitted together with four proof prints of a prospectus prepared in accordance with the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations. These proofs must be submitted at least 30 days before the prospectus is published.

For listing on the Second-Tier Market:

- The company must be registered as a public limited liability company under the provisions of the Companies and Allied Matters Act, 1990;
- The company must submit to the Exchange financial statements and business records of the past three years;[140]
- The date of last audited accounts may not exceed nine months;
- The amount of money that can be raised may not exceed N 10 million;
- The annual quotation fee must be a flat rate of N 5,000;
- At least 10 per cent nominal value of share capital must be offered to the public;
- The number of shareholders may not be less than 100;
- After listing, the company must submit half-yearly and annual accounts;
- The securities must be fully paid-up at the time of allotment; and
- The unalloted securities must be sold on the Nigerian Stock Exchange's trading floors.

Application for Listing. The company's application for listing must be sponsored by a dealing member of the Nigerian Stock Exchange and be accompanied by the application fees. The application must be prepared in compliance with the listing requirements and accompanied by the documentation required by the Nigerian Stock Exchange.[141]

140 In certain cases, fresh companies may be considered for listing.

141 These documents include 10 copies of the abridged application for quotation and listing on the Nigerian Stock Exchange, two copies of the applicant's certificate of incorporation evidencing its public limited company status, and two copies of the Memorandum and articles of association; a draft of a Trust Deed (in the case of loan stock or debenture), a certified true copy of the resolution authorising the issue of securities for which listing is sought, issue of the prospectus and the increase of share capital to absorb the proposed issue, a copy of the account for the five years preceding the date of the application, a copy of the draft underwriting agreement, and a copy of the Reporting Accountants' statement on the financial results; a copy of the pricing proposal submitted to the Securities and Exchange Commission, a copy of the draft prospectus, the estimated cost of the issue, the offer timetable, and a certified copy of every report, the valuation referred to in the prospectus, and consent letters from all the parties to the issue.

When the relevant portions of the Listing Requirements have been met and submitted to the Nigerian Stock Exchange, the Quotations Department will carry out a detailed analysis of the application documents and prepare an Appraisal Report, recommending approval of the application[142] to the Quotations Committee of the Nigerian Stock Exchange Council. The Quotation Committee, based on the independent opinion formed from the Quotations Department's Appraisal Report, will approve or reject the application.

After the Quotation Committee approves, the Nigerian Stock Exchange will issue a letter of approval to indicate that the issue may proceed. The applicant also is required to submit its allotment proposal to the Securities and Exchange Commission for approval. Once the approval has been obtained, the following documents must be filed with the Nigerian Stock Exchange before listing can be granted:

- Copy of the approved allotment proposal;
- Newspaper cutting of the announcement of the allotment in the newspapers;
- General undertaking signed by the managing director or company secretary of the applicant company; and
- Declaration of compliance in the prescribed form.

When all the requirements have been complied with, then the stockbrokers can apply for the date of listing through a registered issuing house. An application filed for the listing of securities on the Nigerian Stock Exchange will be deemed to apply to the listing of the class of the securities, and listing will become effective as to the shares or amounts of such class when issued (including additional shares or amounts of such class then or thereafter authorised) on listing.[143]

Admission to Listing. Companies admitted to listing on the Nigerian Stock Exchange also are required to pay a listing fee. Since the Investments and Securities Act does not prohibit dual listing, the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations permit issuers and public companies to list their securities on more than one exchange provided that the issuer complies with the listing requirements of the relevant exchange.[144] By so doing, the Securities and Exchange Commission has recognised that the venue for listing of securities is purely a business decision of the issuer or company.

Certification that securities have been approved for listing is made by the Nigerian Stock Exchange Governing Council.[145] The Nigerian Stock Exchange is empowered to withdraw the certification by notice to the Securities and Exchange Commission before the listing becomes effective. The Nigerian Stock Exchange also is empowered to de-list listed securities after written notification to the Securities and Exchange Commission, seven days before the action is taken. However, this notification will be unnecessary where the order to de-list the securities has been given by a court of law or other governmental authority, in which case the order would be final.

142 Where the Quotations Department is of the opinion that the application does not merit the Quotations Committee's attention, the applicant is invited for further discussions or advice on restructuring the application.

Listed companies are required to enter into a covenant to provide the Nigerian Stock Exchange and the investing public with material information about their activities at the time of seeking and, thereafter, for retaining listing.[146] Listed companies also are required to advertise conspicuously the Notice of their annual general meeting in two widely read newspapers at least seven days before the meeting.

Unlisted Securities. Securities that are not listed on the Nigerian Stock Exchange include securities of private companies that are not required under law to be listed and those of unquoted public companies.

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Holdings

Shareholder Duties. Section 95 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act imposes an obligation on a person who is a substantial shareholder in a public company to give notice in writing to the company stating his name and address and giving full particulars of the shares held by him. If the shares are held through a nominee, the notice must name the nominee.[147] A person is a substantial shareholder if the shares held by him or his nominee entitle him to exercise at least 10 per cent of the unrestricted voting rights at any general meeting of the company.[148]

The notice must be given within 14 days after the shareholder becomes aware that his shareholding is substantial and must be given notwithstanding that he ceases to be a substantial shareholder before the expiration of this period.[149] Failure to give the notice is an offence punishable under section 95(5) of the Companies and Allied Matters Act and involves payment of a fine of N 50 for every day that the default continues.

Furthermore, under section 96, a person who ceases to be a substantial shareholder in a public company must notify the company in writing, stating his name and the date on which he ceased to be a substantial shareholder and the circumstances by reason of which he ceased to be a shareholder. The notification must be made within 14 days.[150]

The disclosure requirements stipulated by sections 95 and 96 of the Companies and Allied Matters Act only oblige the substantial shareholder to notify the company of his acquisition (and divestment) of substantial shareholding. There is no corresponding obligation to notify the Corporate Affairs Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, or any other regulator of either the shareholder or the company.

However, the Investments and Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations require a person or company that seeks to acquire substantial shareholding to notify the Securities and Exchange Commission both before and after he makes the acquisition. The disclosure requirements here are activated on a proposal for a take-over, merger, or other combination. The rules basically require that the Securities and Exchange Commission be informed of the proposed arrangement and that its approval to the scheme be obtained.[151]

Company Duties. Rule 109(A) of the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations provides that public companies quoted on the Stock Exchange should notify the Securities and Exchange Commission of any beneficial owners holding five per cent or more of a company's shares. In addition, notification on any subsequent transaction in such shares also must be filed.[152] The information must be filed within five days of the initial acquisition or subsequent change of ownership.[153]

Furthermore, chapter 4, rule 14, of the Rules Governing Listing on the Nigerian Stock Exchange requires disclosure of substantial shareholding where listing is sought for securities of a company some part of whose capital is already listed on the Stock Exchange. In such cases, the prospectus by which the offer is made shall include a statement to the persons holding or beneficially interested in any substantial part of the share capital of the company and the amounts of the holding in question. The Listing Rules do not define what amounts to a substantial shareholding in this regard.

Insider Trading and Fraud

Definition and Regulation. Insider trading occurs when a person (or group of persons), in possession of certain confidential price-sensitive information relating to a company's securities, utilises such information to buy or sell, or otherwise deal in the securities of such company, for the benefit of himself, itself, or any person.[154] An individual is an 'insider' if he is, or at any time within the preceding six months has been, knowingly connected with the company whose securities are traded in any of the following capacities[155] and has, by virtue of such connection, obtained unpublished price-sensitive information in relation to the securities of the company:

- A director, officer, or employee of the company or a related company;[156]
- A person in a position involving a professional or business relationship with the company or a related company; and 156 'Related company' is defined as a subsidiary or holding company and includes a subsidiary of the holding company; Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 95(1).

- A shareholder who owns five per cent or more of any class of securities of the company or the agent of such shareholder.

The Investments and Securities Act prohibits an insider from buying or selling or otherwise dealing with the securities of the company which are offered to the public for subscription.[157] In addition, an insider may not counsel or procure another person to deal in the securities of the company nor communicate confidential information to any other person where he knows or has reasonable cause to believe that the other person will make use of the information in relation to the securities of the company.[158] A person who knowingly obtains confidential information from an insider also is prohibited[159] from doing any of the following acts:

- Directly dealing in the securities of the company;
- Counselling or procuring any other person to deal in the securities of the company;
- Communicating confidential information to another person where he knows or has reasonable cause to believe that the other person will make use of the information with regards to the securities of the company; and
- Dealing in the securities of any other company involved in an actual or contemplated transaction with the primary insider's company, where such person is in possession of unpublished price-sensitive information in relation to the securities of that other company.[160]

A person who is contemplating or has contemplated making a take-over bid for a company in a particular capacity cannot deal in the securities of that company in another capacity where the offer is price-sensitive information in relation to the securities of the target company.[161] Any person who directly or indirectly obtains such information from him also is prohibited from dealing in the securities of the target company.[162] Furthermore, a person involved in securities trading is prohibited from engaging in manipulative and deceptive practices including dealing in the securities of any company of which he is an insider.[163]

Exemptions. Persons who possess price-sensitive information relating to the securities of a company, and who act on such information, are expressly excluded from the prohibitions on insider trading in the following instances:

- Acts done without any motive for financial gain or avoidance of financial loss;

157 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 88(1). The Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, in rule 110(2), describe insider trading to include dealings in the Nigerian Stock Exchange and off-market dealings.
158 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 88(6) and (7).
159 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 88(2) and (3).
160 A public officer or former public officer who is in possession of price-sensitive information obtained in his official capacity also is prohibited from doing any of these except the last mentioned, acts; Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 89.
161 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 88(4).
162 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 88(5).
163 Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 110(1)(e).

- Transactions entered in good faith in the ordinary course of the exercise of the functions of a liquidator, receiver, or trustee in bankruptcy;
- Acts done in good faith and based on information obtained in the ordinary course of a business (including that of a stock broker); and
- Acts of a trustee or personal representative or agents of such, done without any motive for financial gain and based on the advice of a qualified person who himself is not prohibited from dealing in such securities.[164]

Civil Liability and Penal Provisions for Insider Trading. The Investments and Securities Act provides that no transaction shall be void or voidable for the sole reason that it was entered into in contravention of the provisions of the Act prohibiting insider trading.[165] An aggrieved party is, therefore, prevented from rescinding the actual transaction leading to his loss and claiming the contract sum.

However, apart from any liability incurred under any other law, an insider or any other person who contravenes any of the provisions of the Investments and Securities Act relating to insider trading is guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to pay compensation to any such person who has directly suffered loss as a result of the transaction in question.[166]

Either the Securities and Exchange Commission or the Investment and Securities Tribunal will determine the amount payable as compensation. An aggrieved person who is shown to have known, or could have known, with the exercise of reasonable diligence, about the price-sensitive information that resulted in his loss is barred from claiming any compensation for the loss. In addition, an aggrieved person is prevented from commencing an action for recovery of loss at the Tribunal until at least two years after the date of the completion of the transaction in which the loss occurred.[167] Criminal conviction under the provisions of the Investments and Securities Act incurs a fine of either of, or both, a fine of N 1 million or two years' imprisonment.[168]

Extraterritorial Application. The prohibition on insider trading applies to trading in the securities of any company listed on the Nigerian Stock Exchange, and it is immaterial whether the transaction was conducted outside Nigeria or that the insider is resident outside Nigeria.

Public Take-Over Bids

In General. Although the Investments and Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations contain extensive provisions on take-overs, there has 164 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, ss 90 and 91.

165 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 92.
166 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 93(1). Under section 93(2), such person also is accountable to the company for the direct benefit or advantage received or receivable by him as a result of the transaction.

168 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 94.

not been a single case of an actual take-over in line with these provisions in Nigeria. The Investments and Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations empower the Securities and Exchange Commission to generally regulate any take-over of a public company in Nigeria.

'Take-over' is defined as the acquisition by one company of sufficient shares in another company to give the acquiring company control over that other company.[169] Section 104 of the Investments and Securities Act provides that a take-over bid will be deemed to be made where the targeted shares would vest in the offeror more than one-third of the issued shares (or class of shares) of the company. The Securities and Exchange Commission's position is that the primary issue is whether the motive behind any acquisition of shares is control of the target company or purely for reasons of investment.

Where the acquisition is made for investment purposes, it will not be deemed to be a take-over under the Investments and Securities Act. Every take-over bid is subject to prior review and approval of the Securities and Exchange Commission. In performing this supervisory role, it is the responsibility of the Securities and Exchange Commission to ensure that any acquisition of shares through a take-over bid does not create substantial restraint of competition or a monopoly in any line of business enterprise.[170]

Territorial Application (Foreign Bidder — Domestic Target). The provisions of the Investments and Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations relating to take-over apply to all public companies in Nigeria. Thus, it is immaterial whether a Nigerian company or a foreign company initiates the bid.

Following the liberalisation of the Nigerian economy and the enactment of the Nigerian Investment Promotion Commission Act, 1995, which allows 100 per cent foreign shareholding of Nigerian companies, a foreign entity can make a take-over bid for all the available shares in a Nigerian target company.

Procedural Requirements. Any person, group of persons, or corporate body ('offeror') intending to acquire control of a target company by means of a take-over must first make a written application to the Securities and Exchange Commission for authority to proceed with the take-over bid.[171] The application must state the name or names and other particulars of the offeror, the particulars of the proposed bid, and any other information required by the Securities and Exchange Commission.[172]

In deciding whether to grant the authority to proceed with a take-over bid, the Securities and Exchange Commission's sole consideration should be the likely effect of a successful take-over bid on the economy of Nigeria and on any policy of the federal government of 172 The Securities and Exchange Commission also may request additional supporting documentation.

Nigeria relating to manpower and development.[173] The Securities and Exchange Commission will issue a 'no objection letter' if it is satisfied that those issues are not compromised.

After the authority to proceed is granted, the offeror must within three months forward a copy of the bid to the Securities and Exchange Commission for registration.[174] The Securities and Exchange Commission will register the bid where it is satisfied that the proposed transaction comes within the provisions of the Investments and Securities Act relating to take-over. It is only after registration is obtained that the bid will be despatched to the necessary parties.

The bid may be expressed either as an 'invitation' or an 'offer'. It is unclear from the provisions of the Investments and Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations what the actual distinction is between these two types of a bid. However, it is presumed that a bid which is an offer expresses an offeror's binding intention to take up all shares deposited pursuant to the bid, while a bid which is an invitation merely conveys an offeror's willingness to take up a certain number of shares deposited pursuant to the bid, subject to certain conditions of the bid being fulfilled. Generally, a bid may be made unconditionally or may be dependent on a specified minimum acceptance. The offer document conveying the bid must state[175] the following:

- The full name or names and address of the offeror;
- Where the offeror is a company, the date at which the approval of its directors was given to the take-over bid;
- The number (or, in the case of an invitation, the maximum number) and other particulars of the shares of the target company proposed to be acquired during the specified period;
- The consideration and other terms of the offer (or proposed acquisition, in the case of an invitation);
- The number and other particulars of the shares of the target company which the offeror (or any associate company) is or are entitled to, immediately before the date of the take-over bid;
- The intention of the offeror to invoke the right granted by the Investments and Securities Act to compulsorily acquire the shares of dissenting shareholders;[176] and
- The intention of the offeror to purchase shares of the target company in the stock market during the period within which shares may be deposited pursuant to the bid.

173 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 105(6). However, the overriding consideration of the possible anti-competitive effects of the bid would still be relevant.

174 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 106; Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 238. The bid must be despatched within three months after obtaining the authority to proceed unless an application is made for renewal of the authority to proceed.

175 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 107; Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations, rule 236. Whether a bid is an invitation or an offer has little effect on these requirements.

176 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 117. This is only possible where the bid is for all the shares (or a class of shares) of the target company.

Where the target company is a company listed on the Nigerian Stock Exchange, additional disclosure requirements are prescribed by the Nigerian Stock Exchange Listing Requirements, and these include:

- A statement on any direct or indirect beneficial interest of the directors of the offeror in the shares of the target company;
- The details of transactions in the shares of the target company, made within 12 months prior to the take-over bid, involving the offeror, its directors, or associate companies;
- A statement on any intention to transfer the shares acquired by virtue of the bid to another entity and particulars of such entity, including details of its shareholding in the target company;
- The intention of the offeror regarding the employees of the target company and the continuation of the business;
- Where the consideration for the shares of the target company consists of shares in the offeror company, a statement on the nature and particulars of the offeror company's business, including its net profit before tax, rate per cent of dividends on its shares, and amount distributed, for the previous three years; and
- Any other information requested by the Nigerian Stock Exchange.[177]

The Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations provide that a take-over bid may be made directly or through a registered capital market operator (capital market operator).[178] It is, therefore, the responsibility of the capital market operator to simultaneously despatch a copy of the bid to each director and shareholder of the target company, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Nigerian Stock Exchange (where the target is a listed company).[179] The resolution of the directors of the offeror, approving the bid, also must be despatched with the bid.[180] The take-over bid must be advertised in at least two national daily newspapers.

On receipt of the bid, the directors of the target company are required to prepare a directors' circular, reflecting their opinion on the bid, which will be despatched to each shareholder of the company, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Nigerian Stock Exchange (where the company is a listed company). If the directors fail to reach a unanimous decision on whether or not the take-over is advantageous to the shareholders of the company, a directors' circular reflecting the recommendations of the majority must be approved and despatched. A dissenting director is, however, entitled to indicate his opinion or disagreement, in a statement setting out his reasons for such, in the directors' circular.[181] The directors' circular must include particulars of any payments made to any officer or former officer of the target company as compensation for loss of office or as consideration for, or in connection with, his retirement from office.

There is no statutory provision prohibiting the management of the target company, after receiving the bid, from taking certain steps or entering into certain transactions, within the period specified by the bid for the deposit of shares, which will directly or indirectly undermine the bid, such as issuing new shares, charging significant assets of the company as liabilities, or executing contracts which are beyond the ordinary business of the company. However, if the Securities and Exchange Commission becomes aware of such acts, it will invoke its general supervisory powers to restrain the management from embarking on or continuing with such conduct.

The consideration for the shares of the target company would normally be cash payment, but the bid may be made for a consideration other than cash, such as shares in the offeror company. Uniform consideration must be offered to all the shareholders and, where the terms of the bid are amended by increasing the consideration, the offeror must pay the increased consideration to each shareholder whose shares are taken up pursuant to the bid, whether or not such shares were taken up prior to the amendment.[182] Where, during the offer period, the offeror purchases shares in the target company through means other than the bid and pays a higher consideration for those shares than that offered by the bid, the bid will be deemed amended and the offeror must pay an increased consideration for the shares taken up pursuant to the bid.[183]

The period of time within which shares may be deposited pursuant to a take-over bid may not be less than 21 days after the date of the bid.[184] Where the bid is for less than all the shares (or a class of shares) of the target company, the maximum period within which shares may be deposited is 35 days after the date of the bid.[185]

The offeror is bound to take up the shares deposited, subject to any condition stipulated in the bid, and make payment for those shares within 14 days of the expiration of the time stipulated for the deposit of shares. Where the bid is for all the shares (or a class of shares) of the target company, the offeror is precluded from taking up shares deposited until 10 days after the date of the bid; where the bid is for less than all the shares (or a class of shares), the offeror cannot take up shares deposited until 21 days after the date of the bid. The members of the target company are, however, at liberty to withdraw their shares within 10 days of the date of the bid; where the bid is for all the shares (or a class of shares), shareholders are permitted to withdraw shares deposited at any time on the expiration of 60 days from the date of the bid.

The offeror is permitted, with the Securities and Exchange Commission's consent, to amend the terms of the bid including the period of time within which shares may be deposited and also is entitled to waive certain terms of the bid.[186] Where a bid is for less than all the shares (or a class of shares) of the target company, and a greater number of shares is deposited than the offeror is bound or willing to take up, the offeror is bound to take the shares on a pro-rated basis, according to the number of shares deposited by each shareholder.

Compulsory Acquisition. Where, by virtue of a bid made for all the shares (or a class of shares) of the target company, the offeror becomes entitled to at least 90 per cent of those shares, the offeror is entitled, within one month of obtaining the requisite number of shares, to give notice to the remaining shareholders of the target company requesting that they make an election as to the terms of the transfer of their shares to the offeror, ie, whether to transfer at the same consideration as offered under the bid or to demand payment of a fair value for the shares as determined by the Federal High Court.[187] Irrespective of the election made, all affected shareholders must forward their respective share certificates to the target company within 20 days of service of the notice on them.[188]

A shareholder who does not exercise his right of election is deemed to have agreed to a transfer of his shares on the terms of the bid. The offeror must, within 20 days of serving the notice, pay or transfer an equal cash payment or other consideration as that offered under the bid to the offeror company, to be held in trust for the affected shareholders.

In the event that an offeror who has acquired at least 90 per cent beneficial interest in the target company does not exercise the right to serve the remaining shareholders with the notice discussed above or does not serve all the remaining shareholders with the notice, the law requires the offeror to give notice of the fact that it has acquired such percentage of shares to the remaining shareholders within two months of acquiring those shares. Within two months of receiving the notice, the remaining shareholders are entitled to give the offeror notice requiring that it acquire their shares on the same terms as that of the bid or as agreed between the parties or as fixed on the application of either of the parties.[189] Once a shareholder gives such notice, the offeror is bound to acquire his shares, subject to the determination of the consideration.

Exemptions. The take-over procedure outlined above will not be required where:

- The acquisition involves the participation of a holding company, and the acquisition is for the purpose of investment, and not for the creation of restraint in competition or monopolies in any line of business enterprise; and 186 The waiver is subject to the express provisions of the Investments and Securities Act, 1999, and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations.

187 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 117.
188 Failure to do this will result in the cancellation of the share certificates and the effective transfer of the shares to the offeror, although the shareholders are still entitled to the appropriate consideration.
189 Investments and Securities Act, 1999, s 121.

- The transaction is conducted under the authority of any federal government agency vested with the statutory power to approve such transactions.[190]

Furthermore, a take-over bid will not be deemed to have been made where:

- The bid is despatched to less than 20 members representing 60 per cent of the members of the target company;[191]
- The bid is despatched to purchase shares in a company which has fewer than 20 members;[192] and
- The shares to be acquired under the bid are shares in a private company.[193]

Recognition of Foreign Take-Over Regulation. The Investments and Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Commission Rules and Regulations make no provision for the take-over of a listed foreign company.

However, it is presumed that the law of the place of incorporation or the regulations of the primary market of such company would be applicable to such bid. The Securities and Exchange Commission and the Nigerian Stock Exchange should, however, be formally notified before the process is initiated and where the bid is successful.

Jurisdictional Conflicts

In General

There is little literature on jurisdictional conflicts with regard to securities regulation in Nigeria. This is mainly because the Nigerian securities market is just coming into its own, and it has not generated a sufficient volume of litigation or overseas participation to sustain such discussions on an on-going basis. Jurisdictional conflicts could arise in a number of contexts, both domestic and international. These include:

- Domestic conflicts relating to the appropriate court within Nigeria that should exercise jurisdiction in disputes relating to securities transactions;
- Conflicts in the requirements of various stock exchanges both within and outside Nigeria; and
- Private international law conflicts relating to the law applicable to securities contracts with an international flavour, the appropriate jurisdiction to refer disputes relating to these conflicts, the procedural rules applicable in such cases, and the enforcement of cross-border judgments and awards in these contexts.

Domestic Conflicts

Section 251(1)(e) of the Constitution of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, 1999, vests exclusive civil jurisdiction in the Federal High Court over matters relating to the operation of the Companies and Allied Matters Act and any enactment replacing it or regulating the operation of companies incorporated under the Act. Part XVII of the Companies and Allied Matters Act was repealed by the Investments and Securities Act,[194] and matters hitherto contained therein are now regulated by the Investments and Securities Act.

It may, therefore, be correct to suggest that the Federal High Court will have jurisdiction, to the exclusion of any other court or tribunal, in respect of civil actions arising from the above matters. Apart from the above matters, the exclusive jurisdiction also vested in the Federal High Court in respect of civil actions 'arising from the operation of . . . any other enactment . . . regulating the operation of companies incorporated under the Companies and Allied Matters Act' is so broad that it may be construed to extend to the operation of the Investments and Securities Act insofar as it regulates the operation of companies incorporated under the Companies and Allied Matters Act.

However, section 224 of the Investments and Securities Act established the Investments and Securities Tribunal to adjudicate in disputes and controversies arising under the Investments and Securities Act and its Regulations.[195] The Investments and Securities Act actually seeks to confer exclusive jurisdiction on the Tribunal on these matters.[196] In view of the construction earlier placed on section 251(1)(e) of the 1999 Constitution, this provision is of doubtful validity, and the Tribunal will appear to have no jurisdiction in respect of matters relating to securities of companies operating in Nigeria, since the Constitution vests exclusive jurisdiction in such matters in the Federal High Court.[197]

Multilateral Approaches

The globalisation of securities markets has led to an increasing appreciation of the need for crossborder securities regulation. Thus, the Nigerian securities regulatory regime recognises the existence of market operators whose activities are regulated in more than one jurisdiction. Although there has been no specific legislation on this matter, the issues raised have been approached in a number of ways.

The Securities and Exchange Commission is a member of the International Organisation of Securities Commissions. The International Organisation of Securities Commissions comprises of approximately 135 securities regulatory agencies worldwide. Part of its objectives is to further co-operation among members in maintaining just and efficient domestic and international markets through better regulation and to make united efforts in establishing standards and effective surveillance of international securities. The members also seek to assist one another to ensure market integrity by rigorously applying standards and effectively enforcing them.

The International Organisation of Securities Commissions operates by co-operation, with members voluntarily agreeing to implement its resolutions in their respective countries, and progress on issues can be quite slow. Members have some latitude in implementing the resolutions, and the resolutions may have options for alternative courses of action built into them. Furthermore, there is no enforcement procedure for International Organisation of Securities Commissions resolutions and no penalties for non-compliance so that it may take time for regulators to implement the resolutions of the International Organisation of Securities Commissions.

The Securities and Exchange Commission also may work with regulators in other jurisdictions to ensure a proper working of the international securities markets. Although Nigeria lacks specific provisions that empower the Securities and Exchange Commission to invoke its regulatory powers on behalf of foreign regulators, section 8(x) of the Investments and Securities Act authorises the Securities and Exchange Commission to 'liase effectively with the regulators and supervisors of other financial institutions locally and overseas'. This provision may serve as a basis for such co-operation with the regulators of other financial markets.

In furtherance of the above objective, the Securities and Exchange Commission has entered into memoranda of understanding with regulators in other countries, such as China and Ghana. These memoranda of understanding contain arrangements that may help facilitate the resolution of cross-border conflicts. The Nigerian Stock Exchange has similar memoranda of understanding with some foreign exchanges, such as the International Stock Exchange of London, the Egyptian Stock Exchange, the Ghana Stock Exchange, and the Stock Exchange of South Africa.

Unilateral Approaches

Private International Law

Trading in international securities may raise conflict of law issues where the subject matter of the transaction is truly international, as is the case with securities with dual listings, or where the parties are based in different jurisdictions or if, for some other reason, the transaction in question is subject to conflicting laws of two or more jurisdictions. It then becomes necessary to determine the applicable law and the relevant jurisdiction in determining this issue.

Nigeria is a Common Law country and the Common Law rules of private international law determine which country's laws will apply to specific legal relationships that are connected with the laws of other countries. In the context of securities transactions, the applicable rules are those relating to companies and contracts. In applying private international law principles to resolve jurisdictional conflicts, questions may be raised relating to:

- Whether Nigerian courts will determine the dispute in question;
- Which system of law will be applied in resolving the questions of law raised by the dispute; and

- Whether a judgment obtained elsewhere in respect of such disputes will be treated as decisive on the matter and will be enforced by Nigerian courts.

The competence of Nigerian courts to assume jurisdiction over a matter is mainly one of procedure which is dependent on the service of a writ on the defendant. Nigerian courts will assume jurisdiction over a dispute relating to international securities transactions if a writ can be served on the defendant. This is possible if he is present within Nigeria, if he submits to the jurisdiction of Nigerian courts, or if the rules of court authorise service out of jurisdiction.

However, even if a Nigerian court has jurisdiction, it may decline to hear a case and refer it to a foreign court if it decides that the foreign court is the appropriate forum for the trial of the action.[198] This will be the case where the action has a greater or more substantial connection with the law of that country.

Once a Nigerian court accepts jurisdiction over a matter with international aspects, it still needs to decide whether to apply Nigerian law or the law of another jurisdiction. The general rule is that a Nigerian court will apply Nigerian law unless it is established that the law of another country is more appropriate.

Nigerian law will apply if the dispute relates to a company that is sufficiently connected with Nigeria through any of the relevant connecting factors of presence, residence, domicile, or nationality. In contractual transactions, the 'proper law of the contract' will be applied. The proper law is determined by the express choice of the parties, or by judicial determination of the system of law to which the transaction has the closest or most substantial connection or may be inferred from the circumstances of the case.

Nigerian courts will not enforce rights or duties prescribed by foreign law which are contrary to Nigerian public policy. If one of the parties to a transaction has obtained a judgment in respect of the transaction from a foreign court, the issue may arise as to the recognition or enforcement of the judgment by Nigerian courts. This may be done by registration under the Foreign Judgment (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act or by action or counterclaim at Common Law.

Under the Foreign Judgment (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act, foreign judgments are enforceable in Nigeria if substantial reciprocity of treatment is given to judgments of Nigerian courts in the country where the judgment is given.[199] A person who obtains a judgment in a superior court of such a country may apply within six years for registration of such judgment in a superior court in Nigeria. On registration, the judgment may be enforced in Nigeria as if it were the judgment of the court in which it was registered.

198 This is done under the doctrine of the forum non conveniens, ie, the Nigerian court is not the appropriate forum in which the action can best be tried in the interest of all the parties and the ends of justice.

199 Foreign Judgment (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act, s 3.

Apart from registration, a foreign judgment may be enforced in Nigeria through the institution of fresh proceedings to enforce that judgment. The foreign judgment creates an obligation on the defendant which is actionable in Nigeria. However, for a Nigerian court to enforce such judgments, the circumstances of the case must have been such as to justify the foreign court in having assumed jurisdiction. The foreign court must have been entitled to summon the defendant and give judgment against him, either because of his presence in the foreign country at the time of the suit or by his submission to the jurisdiction of the court.

Introduction

Regulatory System

Norway follows a regulatory system similar to that of other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) countries, and the Norwegian authorities have entered into co-operation agreements with all major international stock exchanges and regulatory authorities. The system in Norway is divided between the Oslo Stock Exchange, which deals with trade-related issues, and the Financial Supervisory Authority (Kredittilsynet), which deals with other issues.

The regulatory system is based on current European Union (EU) regulations, which have been implemented in Norway through the European Economic Area (EEA) agreement. The Financial Supervisory Authority and the Stock Exchange also have entered into a co-operation agreement concerning which of the two bodies deals with specific issues. Often, an issue will appear through the market supervision conducted by the Stock Exchange, who will forward a copy of its report to the Banking, Insurance, and Securities Commission for further investigation and possible filing of a criminal complaint with the Serious Fraud Prosecutor.

Neither of the bodies may initiate civil legal actions, which is left to the individuals suffering an economic loss resulting from any breach of current regulations and law. However, the Stock Exchange may impose fines on listed companies and member brokerages.

Legal Sources

The Norwegian Securities Trading Act 1997 is based on the current EU regulations, such as the Investment Services Directive. The Capital Adequacy Directive 2004/39/EC on markets in financial instruments is not yet incorporated in Norwegian law. The Prospectus Directive (2003/71/EC) and the Market Abuse Directive (2003/6/EC) were incorporated in the Securities Trading Act in 2005. Certain issues, particularly relating to trading on the Stock Exchange and prospectuses, are based on the Norwegian Stock Exchange Act 2000 and regulations given based on authority from that Act, particularly the Stock Exchange Regulations. Circulars from the Oslo Stock Exchange and the Norwegian Financial Supervisory Authority are of practical importance.

The Stock Exchange Regulations are to be materially updated in 1998, and this chapter is based on the regulation being updated in accordance with the draft circulated for comments on 14 January 1998.

Authorities

A stock exchange in Norway must be organised as a public limited company. The same applies for authorised market places. Some, but far from all, stock exchange legislation applies correspondingly to authorised market places, eg, the information requirements to the issuers apply correspondingly in an authorised market place. There are two exchanges and one authorised market place in Norway.

The Oslo Stock Exchange is currently the only existing stock exchange in Norway. Income to the Oslo Stock Exchange comes from fees on trades and fees payable from stockbrokers and listed companies. Fees are also payable to the Stock Exchange in connection with all prospectuses issued by listed companies. A managing director heads the administration at the Stock Exchange. There is also a Board of Directors and a Control Committee.

Most resolutions passed by a Norwegian stock exchange can be appealed to an Exchange Appellate Committee appointed by the Ministry of Finance.

The Financial Supervisory Authority is a governmental body under the Ministry of Finance. The Commission has a separate department dealing only with security-related issues, including the granting of brokerage licences.

All listed securities in Norway are subject to registration with a paperless securities register. The Security Central (Verdipapirsentralen or VPS) is currently the only existing securities register in Norway. A securities register operates as a 'bank', and each owner must have at least one account with the registry. All trades are settled through the securities register on a 'T-plus-three-days' basis. An accounts-keeper on behalf of investors must have a separate agreement with the Registry, setting out the rights and obligations. Account-keepers, for all practical purposes, will be brokerages and major banks. The investors may wholly or partially mortgage their accounts.

Procedures

As a small economic community, the Norwegian securities industry has been somewhat informal, but this has changed in recent years. This is particularly true as more Norwegian companies have dual listings in other time zones. Thus, the Stock Exchange currently requires that press releases and other information going to the Stock Exchange be forwarded by e-mail rather than by telefax.

A problem for foreigners will normally be that the Financial Supervisory Authority requires that all documents be made available in the Norwegian language or at least duplicated in Norwegian, while the Stock Exchange also accepts the Swedish, Danish, or English languages.

In 2000, the Oslo Stock Exchange adopted a highly advanced electronic market surveillance system.

In 2002, the Oslo Stock Exchange adopted the same trading platform as the other stock exchanges in the Nordic stock exchange alliance, NOREX. As a result of this, several international brokerage firms have joined the Oslo Stock Exchange.

Domestic Exchanges. Currently, the only Stock Exchange in Norway is the Oslo Stock Exchange. Previously, there were smaller stock exchanges in several major cities in Norway.

Basically, no one can own shares representing more than 10 per cent of the share capital or the votes in a Norwegian stock exchange. However, the Finance Ministry may allow a Norwegian or foreign stock exchange to own up to 25 per cent as a part of a strategic co-operation.

All public limited companies which have a licence from the Financial Supervisory Authority to conduct brokerage business and brokerages which, through their domestic licence from an EEA member state, are entitled to conduct domestic business in Norway, may apply to become members of a Norwegian stock exchange. The member must have an adequate capital under the circumstances under which it operates. The Exchange Appellate Committee has interpreted this requirement liberally in a decision concerning a discount broker only operating through the Internet.

Only members of the stock exchange may use the trade system. Thus, only trades that are made by members of the Stock Exchange form the basis for the official quotes of a Norwegian stock exchange.

Transborder Electronic Trading Systems. The NOREX exchanges — being the Oslo Stock Exchange, Stockholm Stock Exchange in Sweden, Copenhagen Stock Exchange in Denmark, Helsinki Stock Exchange in Finland, Iceland Stock Exchange, Tallinn Stock Exchange in Estonia, Riga Stock Exchange in Latvia, and Vilnius Stock Exchange in Lithuania, the Stockholmsbörsen in Sweden, the Copenhagen Stock Exchange in Denmark and the Iceland Stock Exchange — use the same trading platform (SAXESS) and have the same member and trading rules.

A member of one of the NOREX exchanges may easily become a member of other NOREX exchanges, by using the existing technical connection and the simplified and harmonised application procedures of NOREX. Apart from this, Norway has no transborder electronic trading system. Access to real-time trading information from the Oslo Stock Exchange can be purchased from a wholly owned subsidiary of the Oslo Stock Exchange.

Securities

National Treatment and Reciprocity. Norway has implemented all current European Community (EC) Directives concerning limited companies and, as a consequence, only public limited companies (Allmennakstesezskat, or ASA) may offer their shares to the general public. Only shares issued by public limited companies (allment aksjeselskap, or ASA) may have their shares listed.

As a result of Norway having implemented all current EC Directives, including those involving crossborder transactions, securities deriving from an EEA member state may be offered in the same way as set out in the relevant EC Directive. This includes crossborder, local marketing, and use of prospectuses from other EEA countries.

The Oslo Stock Exchange has two lists for shares, ie, the main list and the list for small and medium-sized companies. The difference between the two lists is mainly the requirements with respect to minimum market capitalisation and number of shareholders.

Issuer Requirements. To be listed on the main list, a Norwegian public limited company or a similar foreign company must have a market capitalisation of at least NOK 300 million and normally have at least 25 per cent of its shares spread among at least 500 shareholders, each holding shares worth at least approximately NOK 10,000, excluding shareholders 'linked to the company'.

Furthermore, the company must have existed at least three years and have conducted the major parts of its business activity for at least three years. Accounts must have been published for the last three years, of which one has to be profitable. The board of the stock exchange may grant exemptions from these requirements.

For listing on the list for small and medium-sized businesses, the requirements with respect to market capitalisation is NOK 8 million and the number of non-related shareholders 100. Further, the requirement for profit in one of the recent years does not apply for listing on the list for small and medium-sized businesses.

The board of the Oslo Stock Exchange may decide that a company listed on the small and medium-sized business list with a market capitalisation of at least NOK 300 million for at least one year should be moved to the main list. Similarly, the Board may decide that a company listed on the main list, but whose market capitalisation has been less than NOK 300 million during at least three years, or less than NOK 150 million for one year, should be moved to the small and medium-sized business list.

High growth companies, which normally do not have substantial operating revenues or generate profits, and companies in a pre-commercial phase, must have sufficient liquidity to continue as budgeted for at least 18 months. Other companies must substantiate that they will have sufficient liquidity to continue as budgeted for at least one year. In the case of a merger involving at least one company with listed shares, the merged company must continue to be listed. The same applies in the case of a de-merger or a split of a listed company or in case of transfer of a substantial part of the assets or activities of a listed company.

Securities Requirements. Any type of financial instrument can be listed if the stock exchange in question deems the instruments fit and that they will be traded frequently. The term financial instruments includes:

- Shares and similar instruments;
- Bonds and other transferable debt instruments;
- All other securities, which are normally sold and which give a right to acquire any such transferable security by way of subscription or interchange, or which give a right to a cash settlement;
- Shares in mutual funds;
- Money market instruments;
- Financial futures and forwards contracts;
- Future interest contracts;
- Interest and currency swap contracts and swap contracts in connection with shares and share indexes;
- Options to buy or sell any above-mentioned instrument, including index options, currency and interest options, and similar instruments with cash settlement; and
- Commodity derivatives, ie, financial futures and forwards contracts, options, or swap contracts connected to commodities or services.

Subscription rights in connection with a rights issue of shares in a listed share class will be listed, unless the Stock Exchange finds that such rights do not have general interests, will not be subject to normal trade, or for other reasons should not be listed.

There are other types of rights to demand the issue of shares, including:

- Rights connected to a convertible loan, but transferable independently of transfer of the loan;
- Rights connected to a rights issue, but separated from the subscription right share;
- Subscription warrants;
- Rights to subscribe for subscription warrants or for convertible loans; and
- Other rights to demand the issue of shares, including shares in foreign companies.

These other types of rights to demand the issue of new listed shares can themselves be listed if they are expected to have a general interest and to be traded frequently.

An increasing number of over-the-counter options are cleared through the Norwegian Option Central (NOS) and under its standard guarantee for settlement. This is based on the initiative of the Oslo Stock Exchange as there have been some unfortunate incidents where brokers have issued over-the-counter options without adequately securing settlement by way of encumbering the underlying shares. In cases of bankruptcies among brokers or owners of shares subject to an option, this has led to substantial losses for the counter parties.

Investment firms in Norway must participate in an investment firm insurance fund scheme securing their client's claims in case of insolvency. It is yet unclear to which extent foreign investment firms providing investment services in Norway will have to participate in the insurance fund scheme.

If options have been registered with the Securities Register and are expected to have a general interest and to be traded frequently, such options may be listed subject to separate applications.

Bonds may be listed if they are expected to have a general interest and will be traded frequently. Listing is subject to application from the bond issuer. The issuer must prepare and publish a bond prospectus, unless the issuer has published an offer prospectus less than three months earlier. The stock exchange may in whole or part be exempt from the prospectus requirement.

Prospectus Requirements. The issuer must prepare a prospectus in connection with:

- Listings, and for listed companies in connection therewith; and
- Issues of securities to which 100 or more persons in the Norwegian market have been invited and which are in excess of €100,000;

There are 10 exceptions to the prospectus requirement for issues of securities.

The requirement as to the content of a prospectus is detailed and follows the normal EC standard.

Corporate Governance. Norwegian public limited companies follow a general three-level hierarchical system with the general meeting as the top body, followed by the board of directors, which is superior to the general manager.

Normally, the general meeting elects the directors. However, if a company with more than 30 employees does not have a corporate assembly, a majority of the employees may demand that a member of the board of directors and an observer with alternates are to be elected by and from among the employees.

If a company with more than 50 employees does not have a corporate assembly, a majority of the employees may demand that up to one-third and at least two of the members of the board of directors with alternates are to be elected by and from among the employees.

In companies having more than 200 employees, an intermediary body called the 'corporate assembly' elects the directors. The general meeting elects two-thirds of the members of the corporate assembly. A third of the members of the corporate assembly and alternate members will be elected by and among the employees. It may be agreed between the company and a majority of the employees, or trade unions representing two-thirds of the employees, that the company is not to have a corporate assembly. If a company has more than 200 employees and it has been agreed that the company is not to have a corporate assembly, the employees will elect a member of the board of directors and an alternate member or two observers with alternates in addition to the representation, which follows from the '50 employees rule' described above.

The general manager has the right and obligation to attend all meetings of the board of directors. The general manager cannot be chairperson of the board of a public limited company or of a private limited company with a share capital of NOK 3,000,000 or more. Only for financial institutions is it required that the general manager automatically be a member of the board of directors.

Registration of Public Offerings. When a prospectus is required, the registration procedures depend on whether the securities are listed. In the case of offers referring to securities, which are quoted on a stock exchange, or for which quotation has been applied for, the prospectus will be sent to the stock exchange for inspection no later than one week before the offer is made. Information as to received notices of offerings is normally available on the web site of the Oslo Stock Exchange on the Internet. The Oslo Stock Exchange requires a fee to be paid in connection with the control of such prospectuses.

In the case of offers referring to securities which are not quoted on a stock exchange and for which quotation has not been applied, the prospectus will be sent to the Register of Business Enterprises for registration before being published.

All prospectuses must be made public no later than the day before the offer can be accepted. This even applies to prospectuses which are relevant only to a narrow circle of investors or security holders. A prospectus must be available free of charge to the public at the offeror's place of business and all places where the acceptance form is published. In addition, an advertisement must be taken out in at least one national newspaper.

When the Prospective Directive implementation Act becomes operative, the registration requirements depend on whether the prospectus is a so-called European Economical Area Prospectus. The European Economical Area (EEA) consists of the European Union countries, Norway, Iceland, and Lichtenstein. A prospectus for an offer equal to or exceeding €2,500,000 is an EEA Prospectus.

Prospectuses which are not EEA Prospectuses must be sent to the Register of Business Enterprises prior to its publishing. EEA Prospectuses do not need to be registered, as they are required to be approved by the Financial Supervisory Authority of Norway or the corresponding prospectus control authority in the EEA member state in question. Furthermore, a prospectus must be published at the latest when the offer period commences.

Registration of Placements. There is no registration of placements with the Oslo Stock Exchange but, before the securities can be issued and transferred to the subscribers the issue must have been registered with the Norwegian Register of Business Enterprises as having been fully paid. Companies who have their share registries kept by the Securities Registries (which includes all listed companies) must register the securities with the Securities Registry, through the accounts-keeper for the listed company.

It is a requirement in Norway that the consideration payable for subscribed shares must have been made prior to issuance, and that the company's auditor must have confirmed its receipt and value in relation to the increase in share capital. Furthermore, the Company

Register must have received all relevant documents, including the auditor's certificate, and must at least have faxed a copy of the company's new company certificate to the accounts-keeper with the securities register. The new shares will then be available on the account of the individual shareholder or his trustee through the securities register the next day.

Registration of Secondary Trade. All secondary trade done through member brokers must be registered with the trade system of the Oslo Stock Exchange the same day the trade takes place if prior to 4:30 pm and before start of trade the next day if after 4:30 pm. The stock exchange opens at 8:15 am, while trading starts at 9 am.

After the trade has been registered with the trading system of the Stock Exchange, it must be registered with the Securities Registry as a transfer between the buyer's and seller's accounts. In this respect, the seller must release the shares from his account pursuant to either a general or specific power of attorney. The trade will then normally be carried out on a 'T-plus-three-days' basis, after which the traded shares will be available on the buyer's account with the Securities Registry.

If the broker has facilities for 'secured transactions', the trade will be reversed electronically and automatically if the buyer or his broker do not have sufficient funds available. This is handled through an electronic link between the Securities Registry and the relevant broker's account with the Central Bank of Norway.

In Norway, investment firms must tape all orders and indications of orders to buy, sell, or subscribe for financial instruments received by telephone. Further, they must store documentation on all orders and indications of orders received through other means of communication for at least three years and keep it searchable.

Periodic Disclosure

Official Trade

All listed companies must have annual accounts, with a directors' report, audited by a chartered auditor. Additionally, listed companies must publish quarterly reports. Quarterly reports, including interim annual accounts, must have been approved by the board of directors of the company within two months after expiration of the relevant period.

The quarterly accounts and the interim annual account must be forwarded to the Stock Exchange immediately after having been adopted by the board of directors. The Stock Exchange will immediately distribute these accounts through its information system. If such information has been received by the Stock Exchange after its opening hours, publication must be made in a safe manner insuring that the information is generally available at the same time for the whole market no later than at the start of trading the next trading day.

Regulated Market

The periodic disclosure regulations apply correspondingly in an authorised market place.

Annual Accounts

Generally, Norwegian limited companies must hold an ordinary general meeting within six months after the end of each financial year, approving the annual accounts and directors' report, including any distribution of dividends. The accounting year in Norway is the calendar year. However, Norwegian branches and subsidiaries of foreign businesses may use the accounting year used by the foreign business.

The annual account must be filed with the Central Accounts Registry within one month of having been adopted by the shareholders' general meeting, ie, normally before 1 August in the year following the accounting year. Filed accounts are publicly available. The Central Accounts Registry delivers copies of filed accounts by mail or facsimile for a nominal fee.

Regulation (EC) 1606/2002 of the European Parliament on the application of international accounting standards is implemented in the Norwegian Accounting Act. Thus, Norwegian-listed companies must prepare their consolidated accounts in conformity with the international accounting standards. Both listed and unlisted Norwegian companies may prepare their company accounts and group accounts in conformity with the international accounting standards, but they are not required to do so.

Foreign Issuers with Primary Listing

For non-Norwegian issuers with primary listing, the requirement for annual and quarterly financial statements will apply. These will be bound pursuant to the terms of the Listing Agreement entered into with the Oslo Stock Exchange. All notices to the Stock Exchange must be made in the Norwegian, Danish, Swedish, or English language.

Foreign Issuers with Secondary Listing

For foreign issuers with secondary listing, the Stock Exchange will normally require an adherence to the same reporting requirements as for Norwegian companies; however, the Stock Exchange will accept other reporting requirements, as long as these are reasonable and in conformity with the requirements of the primary listing.

Any deviation from the standard requirements of the Stock Exchange will be incorporated in the listing agreement entered into with the Stock Exchange. All notices to the Stock Exchange must be made in the Norwegian, Danish, Swedish, or English language.

Issuers with Ongoing Disclosure Duties

Even if an issuer has an ongoing disclosure duty, such as in connection with new information relevant for a correct quote, it will not be exempt from its normal periodic disclosure requirements concerning financial accounts.

Privileged 'Foreign Private' Issuers

Unless an issuer is subject to listing, a foreign issuer in the Norwegian market will not be subject to any disclosure requirements. Prospectus requirements may apply, depending on the circumstances discussed above.

If a 'foreign private' issuer has listed its securities, the periodic disclosure requirements will be found in the listing agreements negotiated on an individual basis. As mentioned above, these requirements will normally conform to any standard and acceptable requirements of the jurisdiction of the issuers' incorporation. This particularly applies if the issuer is listed in its home jurisdiction.

Issuers of Registered Securities

As Norway, for all practical purposes, does not have unregistered securities, there are no specific regulations for issuers of registered securities. The distinction is more between listed and unlisted companies.

American Depositary Receipts Disclosure

Norwegian companies with sponsored American Depositary Receipts programmes comply with the normal Norwegian reporting requirements mentioned above, and any local requirements applicable as a result of requirements of the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States. As all listed securities in Norway are registered with the Securities Registry, an American Depositary Receipts or custodian arrangement will appear from the transcript from the Securities Registry. Such transcripts are publicly available against a nominal fee covering the actual cost of printing out the transcript.

All custodians must have a licence from the Financial Supervisory Authority, and these are generally granted on a reciprocal basis. If the custodian is subject to regulation by a body similar to the Financial Supervisory Authority with which the Financial Supervisory Authority has disclosure agreements, the licence will normally be granted. As a result, most European banks have or can be accepted as long as their respective regulators or the banks themselves have committed to disclose the identity of the beneficial shareholder to Norwegian authorities on request.

The custodian will find out whether the client is the genuine security owner. If the custodian does not receive information as to the genuine security owner, the custodian must refuse the custody assignment. The custodian will register information for Norwegian tax purposes and for purposes of anti-money laundering measures.

If the company or a public authority so demands, the custodian will be obliged to provide information on who owns the shares covered by the custodian assignment, and on the number of shares owned by each individual shareholder.

If a custodian does not comply with an order to provide Norwegian authorities with required information, the Financial Supervisory Authority may forbid the custodian to have disposal of the securities in his custody.

Proxy Disclosure

There are no periodic disclosures in relation to proxies. The shareholders will be entitled to attend the general meeting, either in person or through a proxy appointed at their own discretion. The right to attend cannot be restricted in the articles of association. The letter of proxy will only apply for the first general meeting unless expressly stated otherwise. The shareholder may revoke the letter of proxy at any time. The articles of association in a public limited company (as opposed to in a private limited company) may stipulate that shareholders wishing to attend the general meeting must give the company prior notice thereof within a fixed deadline, which may not be set earlier than five days prior to the meeting.

The deadline must be stated in the notice convening the general meeting. A shareholder who has not given notice before the expiry of the deadline may be refused access. Generally, proxies must have been received by a Norwegian public company some days prior to the relevant general meeting. This is in order for voting slips to be prepared for the general meeting.

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

Offer. Regarding prospectus requirements, reference is made to the 'Prospectus Requirements' section above.

Public. Regarding publication of prospectuses, reference is made to the 'Registration of Public Offerings' section above.

Place of Offer. There are no special requirements as to place of offer or acceptance.

Prospectus Control. As the Prospective Directive becomes operative, prospectuses must be approved by the Financial Supervisory Authority or by the corresponding prospectus control authority in the EEA member state in question. If the issuer has its registered office in Norway, the Financial Supervisory Authority approves the prospectus even if the offer is only directed at markets in another EEA state or is only in respect of listing in another EEA state.

For securities which are listed or for which listing has been applied, the draft prospectus must be sent the Stock Exchange for control no later than one week before the offer is made. Announcements and advertisements distributed or made available to the public by the offeror must be approved in advance by the Stock Exchange. The Stock Exchange will decide whether the documents should be controlled before they are made publicly available.

The Stock Exchange may notify the offeror that it has no comments as to the received documents. Such notification does not mean that the Stock Exchange has approved the documents, and it does not stop the Stock Exchange from later disallowing the offer as a result of the documents including inappropriate information. The Stock Exchange is under an obligation to notify the central Companies Registry if it has refused to accept documents relating to a subscription issue, thus making it impossible for the company to have the share increase registered.

An EEA prospectus that is approved by the prospectus control authorities in another EEA state is regarded as approved in Norway. Regarding registration of prospectuses, reference is made to the 'Registration of Public Offerings' section above.

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Holdings

Shareholder Duties. An acquirer of securities listed on a Norwegian stock exchange must notify the stock exchange upon reaching or passing one-twentieth, one-tenth, one-fifth, one-third, one-half, two-thirds, or nine-tenths of the share capital or a corresponding part of the votes of the company. Similar obligations exist when selling down. Securities lending, call options, subscription warrants, other subscription rights, and redelivery of shares after securities lending also count as acquisition, respectively divestment.

The duty to notify exists immediately after agreement concerning acquisition or sale has been entered into. There are concert group definitions. The thresholds apply both for the aggregate holding of the mentioned rights to shares and individually for shares or rights to shares. A shift from forward contracts to shares or vice versa may, therefore, trigger the flagging requirement.

Company Duties. For listed Norwegian companies and other companies whose shares are registered with a securities register, the company's duties are taken care of by the individual investors' account holder towards the securities register or, in the case of new issues, by the account holder for the issuer.

As long as the registration procedures towards the securities register are in place, companies have no obligation as a result of shareholders' acquisition of substantial holdings. An exception to this is the duty of the board of the target company to submit a statement on a mandatory offer, as described under the section 'Procedural Requirements' of the 'Public Take-Over Bids', below.

Insider Trading and Fraud

Basis of Territorial Link. Norwegian law with respect to insider trading applies to 'anyone' with respect to financial instruments which are listed, or for which listings have been applied, with a Norwegian exchange or a Norwegian authorised market or instruments derived from such instruments.

Extraterritorial Application. As long as this requirement is fulfilled, there are no limits on extraterritorial application. Thus, if the Stock Watch of the Oslo Stock Exchange has revealed an illegal trade, it will normally notify Norwegian or foreign police, such as the Serious Fraud Office in the United Kingdom.

Public Take-Over Bids

Territorial Application (Foreign Bidder and Domestic Target). Anyone acquiring more than 40 per cent of the votes in a Norwegian company whose shares are listed on the Stock Exchange must make a mandatory take-over offer. Similar obligations exist for rights to shares which, in effect, transfer the ownership interest, ie, certain options.

International Private Law Aspects. If a voluntary offer has been made, a mandatory offer does not need to be made if the voluntary offer fulfilled the legal requirements of a mandatory offer and the offer document indicated that it should also be regarded as a mandatory offer.

Procedural Requirements. The acquirer must immediately notify the Stock Exchange and the target company. In the notification, it should be stated whether an offer will be made or whether the acquirer will sell down to below the 40 per cent threshold. Such sale must be made within four weeks of passing the threshold.

The offer must be made for all the other shares of the company, including shares with limited or without voting rights. The offer cannot be made subject to conditions, and the offer price must be at least equal to the highest consideration paid by the offeror or agreed in a period of six months prior to the passing of the 40 per cent threshold. If it is clear that the market price at the time of passing the 40 per cent threshold is higher than this, the offer price will be the market price. If the offeror has acquired shares after passing the 40 per cent threshold for a higher price, the offer price will be increased to the later price.

All offers must be made in cash, but the offeror may make alternative offers with non-cash additional alternatives. A financial institution licensed to operate in Norway must guarantee the settlement. Settlement must be guaranteed by a financial institution licensed to operate in Norway. Settlement must take place no later than 14 days after expiration of the offer period. The offer and the offer document must be approved by the Stock Exchange before the offer is made or published. The offer will then be sent by the offeror to all shareholders with known residences and made known to the employees. The target company must co-operate in distributing the offer document.

When an offer is made in accordance with the rules on mandatory offers, the company's board of directors will issue a statement on the offer including information on the employees' views and other factors of significance for assessing whether the shareholders should accept the offer. The board will inform about the views, if any, of the board members and the general manager in their capacity as shareholders in the company.

The statement will be available no later than one week prior to the expiry of the period of the offer. The statement will be sent to the stock exchange, and be made known to the shareholders and the employees. The target company cannot, after it has been notified that an offer will be made:

- Issue any shares or other financial instruments, directly or indirectly, to its subsidiaries;
- Merge directly or indirectly through its subsidiaries;
- Sell or acquire substantial activities directly or indirectly through its subsidiaries;

- Carry out any other dispositions of a substantial nature; or
- Buy or sell any of the shares of the company.

These restrictions do not apply if such actions form part of the ordinary business of the company or in cases where the general meeting has given the board or the general manager authority to pass the resolutions in question with a view to take-over situations.

Exemptions. Worth noticing is the acquirer's possibility of avoiding the mandatory offer by way of selling down below the 40 per cent threshold with four weeks of exceeding it. There are also exemptions for shares held prior to 1 December 1997 (the entering into the force of the regulation) for which a 45 per cent threshold applies. There also are exemptions for shares held prior to a listing.

Recognition of Foreign Take-Over Regulation. If the shares of a company are listed on several stock exchanges, the Norwegian stock exchange may grant exemptions from the take-over regulations.

Jurisdictional Conflicts

Genuine and False Conflicts

The Board of Directors of the Oslo Stock Exchange primarily settles disputes between the administration of the Oslo Stock Exchange and an issuer or other party. Most decisions by the Board of Directors may be appealed to the Stock Exchange Appeal Committee. The Appeal Committee is a body appointed by the Ministry of Finance and headed by a supreme court judge. The chairperson and the deputy chairperson of the Appellate Committee must be legal professionals. The Appeal Committee has its own secretariat within the Ministry of Finance.

If a dispute falls within the jurisdiction of the Financial Supervisory Authority a decision made by the Banking, Insurance, and Securities Commission may be appealed to the Ministry of Finance, and may then be subject to civil legal action.

Multilateral Approaches

Substantive Law Solutions

Harmonisation. As party to the EEA agreement, Norway has adopted all the current EC Directives. The Oslo Stock Exchange and the Financial Supervisory Authority have extensive co-operation agreements with the leading stock exchanges and supervising authorities in the OECD countries.

Recognition. Norway is a signatory to the Lugano Convention concerning civil judgments, and it has several reciprocal bilateral agreements with countries in Europe supplementing the Lugano Convention. Norway is also a signatory to the United Nations Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (New York, 10 June 1958).

Procedural Solutions

The Stock Exchange of the Appellate Committee also may function as an arbitration court. Other forms of arbitration also can be agreed, and there are no restrictions with respect to the number of arbitrators or procedural language.

Unilateral Approaches

International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) arbitration is seldom used in Norway because of the costs involved in establishing the court of arbitration. The experience of many, particularly within the field of securities, is that the same arbitrators will appear directly for substantially lower cost than ICC arbitration.

In Norway, few securities law disputes have not been settled amicably. Those disputes, which come before the normal courts, are usually with respect to wrongful settlement and collection, and they mostly involve minor trades and private citizens.

The Philippines

Vicente D Gerochi IV
SyCip Salazar Hernandez & Gatmaitan
Makati City, The Philippines

Introduction

The fundamental law governing securities offerings in The Philippines is Republic Act Number 8799, the Securities Regulation Code of 2000, under the administration of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Other significant laws and rules are the Implementing Rules and Regulations of the Securities Regulation Code (the 'Rules'), the Corporation Code of The Philippines, the other issuances of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the rules of the Philippine Stock Exchange.

As the administrative agency entrusted with the duty of implementing the laws and regulations on securities offerings, the Securities and Exchange Commission is vested with the following powers and functions:

- It has jurisdiction and supervision over all corporations, partnerships, and associations which are the grantees of primary franchises and/or a license or permit issued by the government;
- It formulates policies and recommendations on issues concerning the securities market, advises Congress and other government agencies on all aspects of the securities market, and proposes legislation and amendments thereto;
- It approves, rejects, suspends, revokes, and requires amendments to registration statements and registration and licensing applications;
- It regulates, investigates, and supervises the activities of persons to ensure compliance;
- It supervises, monitors, suspends, and takes over the activities of exchanges, clearing agencies, and other similar self-regulating organisations;
- It imposes sanctions for the violation of laws and the rules, regulations, and orders issued pursuant thereto;
- It prepares, approves, amends, and repeals rules, regulations, and orders and issues opinions and provides guidance on and supervises compliance with such rules, regulations, and orders;
- It enlists the aid and support of and/or deputises enforcement agencies of the government, civil or military, as well as private institutions, corporations, firms, associations, and persons in the implementation of its powers and functions under the Code;
- It issues cease and desist orders to prevent fraud or injury to the investing public;

- It punishes for contempt of the Securities and Exchange Commission, both direct and indirect, in accordance with the provisions of and penalties prescribed by the Rules of Court;
- It compels the officers of any registered corporation or association to call meetings of stockholders or members thereof under its supervision;
- It issues subpoena duces tecum and summons witnesses to appear in proceedings of the Securities and Exchange Commission and, in appropriate cases, orders the examination, search, and seizure of documents, papers, files and records, tax returns, and books of accounts of entities or persons under investigation, subject to the provisions of law;
- It suspends or revokes, after proper notice and hearing, the franchise or certificate of registration of corporations, partnerships, or associations, on any of the grounds provided by law; and
- It exercises such other powers as may be provided by law as well as those which may be implied from, or which are necessary or incidental to the carrying out of, the express powers granted the Securities and Exchange Commission to achieve the objectives and purposes of these laws.[1]

Public Offerings

In General

Except for certain classes of securities and transactions which are exempt from registration requirements, securities generally cannot be sold or offered for sale or distribution within The Philippines without a registration statement, accompanied by a prospectus and other supporting documents, duly filed and approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission.[2]

If the securities are intended to be listed in the Philippine Stock Exchange, a copy of the registration statement and all other pertinent documents must be simultaneously filed with the Philippine Stock Exchange, in addition to the application for listing. Copies of the application for listing also must be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

If an exemption from registration under section 10.1 of the Securities Regulation Code is available, a notice of exemption must be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission in the case of a private placement offering or a sale to 'qualified buyers'. Without such notice, a presumption that an exemption is not available may arise and subject the person claiming an exemption to sanctions under the Securities Regulation Code.

Alternatively, an application for confirmation of exemption under section 10.1 of the Securities Regulation Code may be submitted. This confirmation is not required for the validity of the exemption; however, the Securities and Exchange Commission may challenge the exemption at any time and, without such confirmation, the person claiming the exemption has the burden to establish that the same is available. The application for confirmation must be filed within 10 days after the sale of the securities concerned, and the corresponding filing fee paid.[3] The filing fee is equivalent to one-tenth of one per cent of the maximum aggregate price or issued value of the securities.[4]

2 Securities Regulation Code, s 8.

If an exemption is not available, a registration statement and its accompanying documents must be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission prior to the offering of securities. Within 45 days after the date of filing of the registration statement, or by such later date to which the issuer has consented, the Securities and Exchange Commission will declare the registration statement effective or rejected. An amendment filed prior to the effective date of the registration statement will recommence the 45-day period.

On the registration statement being declared effective by the Securities and Exchange Commission, the sale of the securities subject thereto will be commenced within two business days and be continued until the end of the offering period or until the sale has been terminated by action of the issuer. The registrant may, however, be granted exemption from this requirement on sufficient justification that compliance therewith will defeat its offering objective.[5] On completion or termination of the offering by the issuer, notification of such will be promptly given to the Securities and Exchange Commission. Such notification must include the number of securities sold.

Prospectus Delivery Rule

In General

Securities required to be, and which are, registered pursuant to the Securities Regulation Code will not be sold unless a prospectus, which has been filed with the registration statement in the form and containing the information hereinafter described, is widely disseminated and sufficient copies have been made available so that all who desire may obtain one.

A preliminary prospectus is submitted by a registrant to the Securities and Exchange Commission as part of a registration statement that is not yet rendered effective by the Securities and Exchange Commission. A final prospectus is submitted as part of registration statements rendered effective or recommended to be rendered effective under the Securities Regulation Code. A preliminary prospectus filed with the registration statement required by the Securities Regulation Code may be circulated to potential investors prior to effectiveness of the registration statement if:

- It conforms to the basic registration format provided in the Securities and Exchange Commission and uses the appropriate Securities and Exchange Commission form;

3 Securities Regulation Code, s 8.
4 Securities Regulation Code, r 10.
5 Securities Regulation Code, r 8.1(B).

- It contains the required statement in bold face print, at least 12-point type prominently displayed;[6]
- It is the only selling document utilised in the pre-offering period, with the exception that the information contained in Securities Regulation Code Rule 8.3 (see text, below) may be disseminated, in whole or in part, to summarise the offering;
- Its use is such that wide dissemination is assured;
- Sufficient copies are made available so that all who desire may obtain one; and
- It contains a statement whether the security is being offered in connection with a distribution by the issuer or by a security holder, or both, and whether the issue represents new financing or refunding, or both.[7]

A preliminary or final prospectus will be presumed to have been widely disseminated pursuant to paragraphs 1 and 3 of the Rule if copies have been distributed initially and additional copies have been furnished promptly, on request, to at least the following:

- Each participant in the distribution (e.g., underwriters and brokers);
- The main and extension offices of the Securities and Exchange Commission;
- A stock exchange, if the securities will be listed thereon; and
- More than 20 persons who are not qualified buyers under section 10.1(l) of the Code.[8]

All participants in the distribution of an offering of securities to the public will, when inquiries are made as to the offering, inform interested persons of the availability of preliminary prospectuses and final prospectuses and provide copies if requested. A notice will be placed on the front of the subscription agreement distributed in connection with the offering informing interested persons that they are entitled to receive a copy of a preliminary and/or final prospectus if they so desire and how and where one can be obtained.

Such information about where preliminary and final prospectuses may be obtained must include at least the addresses of extension and main offices of the Securities and Exchange Commission, any exchange wherein the securities may be listed, and that of the issuer company, and the telephone number and the person to be contacted at each such location. A statement also must be made that preliminary prospectuses and final prospectuses are available from all underwriters and brokers participating in the distribution.

6 The required statement is: 'A registration statement relating to these securities has been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, but has not yet been declared effective. No offer to buy the securities can be accepted and no part of the purchase price can be received until the registration statement has become effective, and any such offer may be withdrawn or revoked, without obligation or commitment of any kind, at any time prior to notice of its acceptance given after the effective date. An indication of interest in response hereto involves no obligation or commitment of any kind. This prospectus shall not constitute an offer to sell or the solicitation of an offer to buy'.

7 Securities Regulation Code, r 8.1-1(D).

8 Securities Regulation Code, r 8.1(E).

General Prospectus Format

The information required for the registration of any security must include the effect of the securities issue on ownership, including the mix of ownership, ie, foreign and local. The preliminary prospectus filed as part of the registration statement must contain:

- A brief description of the issuer's business and its securities;
- Financial information;
- Information regarding the issuer's management and certain security holders;
- Terms of the offer;
- Shares offered by current stockholders;
- Number of shares outstanding after the offering;
- Proceeds raised by the offering and their use;
- Risk factors;
- Offering price;
- Dilution;
- Dividend policy;
- Distribution plan; and
- Information on underwriter, broker, and dealer compensation.

There also are certain formal guidelines for the prospectus. All information included in the prospectus should be properly captioned or headed to reasonably indicate covered subject matter. The information must be divided into reasonably short paragraphs or sections (with the exception of financial statements and tabular data). Except as to information required in tabular form and financial statements, the information included in the prospectus may be expressed in condensed or summarised form.

Reference may be made to information in other parts of the prospectus instead of repeating the information in the form of notes to the financial statements. Each prospectus used after the effective date of the registration statement must be dated as of the effective date of the prospectus. An amended or revised prospectus used thereafter must bear the date of its issuance. Perhaps most important, all information that is required to be included in the prospectus must be clearly understandable without the necessity of referring to the appropriate Securities and Exchange Commission Form or to the general rules and regulations.

The chief goal of registration is disclosure for the benefit of investors. It thus involves the use of language that can be understood readily by the persons to whom it is addressed. Failure to use language that is clear and understandable to the investor may operate to defeat the purpose of the prospectus.[9]

The notice of filing of the registration statement must be in the prescribed format for publication and must state that a registration statement has been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, that the registration statement is open to inspection by interested parties during business hours at the Securities and Exchange Commission, and that copies of the registration statement will be furnished to everyone who requests such at a reasonable charge. The notice must be published in two newspapers of general circulation in The Philippines once a week for two consecutive weeks. The affidavit of publication must attest that publication of the notification of filing was or will be immediately taken.

Acceptable Documents

Under the Rules, the use of selling documents other than the final prospectus during the offering period is generally prohibited.[10] Likewise, any communication, other than the preliminary prospectus, which constitutes an offer or sale of securities cannot be published or transmitted until after the registration statement is declared effective by the Securities and Exchange Commission. By way of exception, however, the Securities Regulation Code Rules allow the dissemination of documents other than the prospectus, so long as they conform to the guidelines established under Securities Regulation Code, Rule 8.3, as follows:

> Securities Regulation Code, Rule 8.3. Written Communication Not Deemed an Offer for Sale
> 1. Any notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or other communication will not be deemed an offer for sale in violation of section 8 of the Securities Regulation Code if it is published or transmitted to any person after a registration statement has been filed and contains any or all of the following information:
> a. the name of the issuer of the security;
> b. the full title of the security and the amount being offered;
> c. a brief indication of the general type of business of the issuer;
> d. the price of the security, or if the price is not known, the method of its determination or the probable price range as specified by the issuer or the managing underwriter;
> e. in the case of a debt security with a fixed (non-contingent) interest provision, the yield or, if the yield is not known, the probable yield range, as specified by the issuer or the managing underwriter;
> f. the name and address of the sender of the communication and the fact that he is participating, or expects to participate, in the distribution of the security;
> g. the names of the underwriters;

10 Securities Regulation Code, r 8.1(G).

h. the approximate date on which it is anticipated the proposed sale to the public will commence;

i. whether the security is being offered through rights issued to existing security holders and, if so, the class of securities the holders of which will be entitled to subscribe, the subscription ratio, the actual or proposed record date, the date on which the rights were issued or are expected to be issued, the actual or anticipated date on which they will expire, and the approximate subscription price, or any of the foregoing;

j. with respect to any class of debt securities, any class of convertible debt securities or any class of preferred stock, the security rating or ratings assigned to the class of securities by any credit rating agency recognised or accredited by the Securities and Exchange Commission and the name of such rating agency/ies which assigned such rating/s.

2. Every communication used pursuant to this Rule must contain the following:

a. If a registration statement has not yet become effective, the following statement in bold-face prominent type:

A registration statement relating to these securities has been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, but has not yet become effective. These securities may not be sold nor may offers to buy be accepted prior to the time the registration statement becomes effective. This communication shall not constitute an offer to sell or the solicitation of an offer to buy.

b. A statement whether the security is being offered in connection with a distribution by the issuer or by a security holder, or both, and whether the issue represents new financing or refunding or both;

c. The name and address of a person or persons from whom a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 12 of the Securities Regulation Code may be obtained.

There are no restrictions on the ability of the underwriter to issue research reports, except that research reports issued prior to the effectiveness of the registration statement must satisfy the foregoing requirements and may not constitute an offer or sale of securities. If the research report includes projections, they must be supported by information from an independent expert.

Exempt Securities

The requirement of registration does not apply to any of the following classes of securities under section 9.1 of the Securities Regulation Code:

(a) Any security issued or guaranteed by the Government of The Philippines, or by any political subdivision or agency thereof, or by any person controlled or supervised by, and acting as an instrumentality of said Government.

> (b) Any security issued or guaranteed by the government of any country with which The Philippines maintains diplomatic relations, or by any state, province or political subdivision thereof on the basis of reciprocity: Provided, That the Securities and Exchange Commission may require compliance with the form and content of disclosures the Securities and Exchange Commission may prescribe.
> (d) Any security or its derivatives the sale or transfer of which, by law, is under the supervision and regulation of the Office of the Insurance Commission, Housing and Land Use Regulatory Board, or the Bureau of Internal Revenue.
> (e) Any security issued by a bank except its own shares of stock.[11]

The Commission may, by rule or regulation after public hearing, add to the foregoing any class of securities if it finds that the enforcement of the Code with respect to such securities is not necessary in the public interest and for the protection of investors. Registration requirements will likewise not apply to the following:

> (a) Any evidence of indebtedness issued by a financial institution licensed by the Central Bank, the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP) to engage in banking/quasi-banking, provided that the purchase and sale of any such security will not be exempt from anti-fraud, civil liability or other provisions of the Code.
> (c) Evidence of indebtedness issued to the following primary institutional lenders: banks, including their trust accounts wherein the bank-trustee is granted discretionary powers in the investment disposition of the trust funds, investment houses including their trust accounts wherein the investment houses-trustee is granted discretionary powers in the investment disposition of the trust funds, trust companies, financing companies, investment companies, pre-need companies, non-stock savings and loan associations, building and loan associations, venture capital corporations, insurance companies, government financial institutions, pawnshops, pension and retirement funds approved by the BIR, educational assistance funds established by the national government, and other entities that may be classified as primary institutional lenders by the BSP, in consultation with the Securities and Exchange Commission; provided all such evidence of indebtedness will only be negotiated or assigned to any of the aforementioned primary institutional lenders or the Development Bank of The Philippines with respect to private development banks in relation with their rediscounting privileges; provided further that in case of non-banks without underwriting licenses, such negotiation or assignment will be through banks or non-banks licensed to be an underwriter or a securities dealer; provided finally that in no case will said instrument be negotiated or assigned to non-qualified investors.

11 Securities Regulation Code, s 9.

(d) Bills of exchange arising from a bona fide sale of goods and services which are distributed and/or traded by banks or investment houses duly licensed by Securities and Exchange Commission and BSP through an organised market properly conventioned and governed by rules approved by the appropriate regulatory body.

(e) Evidence of indebtedness, such as short or long-term commercial papers, meeting the following conditions:

1. Issued to not more than nineteen (19) non-institutional lenders;

2. Payable to a specific person;

3. Neither negotiable nor assignable and will be held on to maturity; and

4. In an amount not exceeding Fifty Million Pesos (P 50 million) or such higher amount as the Securities and Exchange Commission may prescribe by resolution.[12]

Exempt Transactions

The requirement of registration does not apply to the offering or sale of securities in any of the following transactions under section 10.1 of the Securities Regulation Code:

(a) At any judicial sale, or sale by an executor, administrator, guardian or receiver or trustee in insolvency or bankruptcy.

(b) By or for the account of a pledge holder, or mortgagee or any other similar lien holder selling or offering for sale or delivery in the ordinary course of business and not for the purpose of avoiding the provisions of this Code, to liquidate a bona fide debt, a security pledged in good faith as security for such debt.

(c) An isolated transaction in which any security is sold, offered for sale, subscription or delivery by the owner thereof, or by his representative for the owner's account, such sale or offer for sale, subscription or delivery not being made in the course of repeated and successive transactions of a like character by such owner, or on his account by such representative and such owner or representative not being the underwriter of such security.

(d) The distribution by a corporation, actively engaged in the business authorised by its articles of incorporation, of securities to its stockholders or other security holders as a stock dividend or other distribution out of surplus.

(e) The sale of capital stock of a corporation to its own stockholders exclusively, where no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly in connection with the sale of such capital stock.

(f) The issuance of bonds or notes secured by mortgage on real estate or tangible personal property, where the entire mortgage together with all the bonds or notes secured thereby are sold to a single purchaser at a single sale.

12 Securities Regulation Code, r 9.2.

(g) The issue and delivery of any security in exchange for any other security of the same issuer pursuant to a right of conversion entitling the holder of the security surrendered in exchange to make such conversion: Provided, That the security so surrendered has been registered under this Code or was, when sold, exempt from the provisions of this Code, and that the security issued and delivered in exchange, if sold at the conversion price, would at the time of such conversion fall within the class of securities entitled to registration under this Code. On such conversion the par value of the security surrendered in such exchange will be deemed the price at which the securities issued and delivered in such exchange are sold.

(h) Broker's transactions, executed on customer's orders, on any registered Exchange or other trading market.

(i) Subscriptions for shares of the capital stock of a corporation prior to the incorporation thereof or in pursuance of an increase in its authorised capital stock under the Corporation Code, when no expense is incurred, or no commission, compensation or remuneration is paid or given in connection with the sale or disposition of such securities, and only when the purpose for soliciting, giving or taking of such subscriptions is to comply with the requirements of such law as to the percentage of the capital stock of a corporation which should be subscribed before it can be registered and duly incorporated, or its authorised capital increased.

(j) The exchange of securities by the issuer with its existing security holders exclusively, where no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly for soliciting such exchange.

(k) The sale of securities by an issuer to fewer than 20 persons in The Philippines during any 12-month period.

(l) The sale of securities to any number of the following qualified buyers:

(i) Bank;

(ii) Registered investment house;

(iii) Insurance company;

(iv) Pension fund or retirement plan maintained by the Government of The Philippines or any political subdivision thereof or managed by a bank or other persons authorised by the Bangko Sentral to engage in trust functions;

(v) Investment company; or

(vi) Such other person as the Securities and Exchange Commission may by rule determine as qualified buyers, on the basis of such factors as financial sophistication, net worth, knowledge, and experience in financial and business matters, or amount of assets under management.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has issued regulations on who could be considered as qualified buyers under the category cited above. Under the regulations, a qualified buyer is either a 'qualified individual buyer' or a 'qualified institutional buyer', and any individual or institution that intends to be considered as a qualified buyer must register as such with a self-regulatory organisation, such as the Philippine Stock Exchange, or other entity (such a bank, securities broker, or dealer or investment house) authorised by the Securities and Exchange Commission to maintain a registry of qualified buyers.

Under the regulations, a qualified individual buyer must have the following qualifications at the time of registration as a qualified buyer:

- The buyer must have a minimum annual gross income of P 25 million for at least two years prior to registration; or a total portfolio investment in securities registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission of at least P 10 million or a personal net worth of not less than P 30 million; and
- The buyer has been engaged in securities trading, in his personal capacity or through a fund manager, for a period of one year or has held for at least two years a position of responsibility in any professional or business entity that requires knowledge or expertise in securities trading, such as a legal consultant, financial adviser, sales person, or associated person of a broker-dealer, or a finance, treasury, or trust officer of a bank or other executive position with related responsibilities.

A juridical person will be considered a qualified institutional buyer if it has any of the following qualifications at the time of registration:

- A minimum annual gross income of at least P 100 million for at least two years prior to registration;
- A total portfolio investment in securities registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission of at least P 60 million; or
- A net worth of not less than P 100 million.

The Securities and Exchange Commission may exempt other transactions if it finds that the requirements of registration under the Securities Regulation Code is not necessary in the public interest or for the protection of the investors such as by reason of the small amount involved or the limited character of the public offering.[13]

Any persons claiming exemptive relief under section 10.1 of the Securities Regulation Code must provide to any person to whom they offer for sale or sell securities in reliance on such exemption written disclosure containing the following information:

- The provision of section 10.1 of the Securities Regulation Code under which exemption from registration is claimed;
- Whether the Securities and Exchange Commission's confirmation that such offer and sale qualifies as an exempt transaction has been obtained; and
- The required statement in bold-face, prominent type.[14]

13 Securities Regulation Code, s 10.

14 The required statement is: 'The securities being offered or sold have not been registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission under the securities regulation code. Any future offer or sale thereof is subject to registration requirements under the code unless such offer or sale qualifies as an exempt transaction.'

Exemptive relief under section 10.1(c) of the Securities Regulation Code, with regard to isolated transactions, will not be available to an issuer of securities who will not be considered as an 'owner' thereof. There are special requirements applicable to private placements exemption under section 10.1(k) of the Securities Regulation Code. Securities offered by an issuer to fewer than 20 'non-qualified' buyers in The Philippines during any 12-month period constitutes a private placement offering and is exempt from the registration requirements of the Securities Regulation Code. To effect a valid private placement offering:

- The issuer must file with the Securities and Exchange Commission a notice of exemption from the registration requirements, including therein all pertinent information required to be furnished to the investors, within 10 days after the initiation of any efforts to sell the securities;
- The issuer may not engage in any form of general solicitation or advertising in connection with the offering;
- The securities may only be sold to persons purchasing for their own account;
- Sales may be made to no more than 19 'non-qualified' buyers;[15] and
- The issuer provides any potential buyer with the information required under the Securities Regulation Code, as follows: (a) exact name of the issuer and its predecessor, if any, (b) address of its principal executive offices, (c) place of incorporation, (d) exact title and class of security, (e) par or issue value of the security, (f) number of shares or total amount of securities outstanding as of the end of the issuer's most recent fiscal year, (g) name and address of the transfer agent, (h) nature of the issuer's business, (i) nature of the products or services offered, (j) nature and extent of the issuers' facilities, (k) name of the chief executive officers and members of the board of directors, (l) the issuer's most recent balance sheet and profit and loss and retained earnings statement for each of the two preceding fiscal years or such shorter period as the issuer (including its predecessor) has been in existence, (m) whether the person offering or selling the securities is affiliated, directly or indirectly, with the issuer, (n) whether the offering is being made directly or indirectly on behalf of the issuer, or any director, officer, or person who owns directly or indirectly more than 10 per cent of the outstanding shares of any equity security of the issuer and, if so, the name of such person, (o) the provision of the Securities Regulation Code under which exemption from registration is claimed, (p) whether the Securities and Exchange Commission's confirmation that such offer and sale qualifies as an exempt transaction has been obtained, and (q) the required statement in bold face and prominent type.[16]

15 A corporation, partnership, or other entity will be counted as one buyer; however, if that entity is organised for the specific purpose of acquiring the securities offered and is not a 'qualified buyer' under section 10.1(l) of the Securities Regulation Code, each beneficial owner of equity securities in the entity will count as a separate buyer.

16 The required statement is: 'The securities being offered or sold have not been registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission under the Securities Regulation Code. Any future offer or sale thereof is subject to registration requirements under the code unless such offer or sale qualifies as an exempt transaction'.

If the issuer is a reporting company under section 17 of the Securities Regulation Code, a copy of its most recent annual report may be used to provide any of the required information.[17]

Other Registration Matters

In practice, the duration of the Securities and Exchange Commission's review process varies depending on the completeness of the documents submitted by the issuer and the latter's compliance with the Securities Regulation Code, the Rules, and other requirements issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

There are no special rules that differentiate between primary offerings and secondary offerings. Moreover, the liability issues of a seller of securities in a secondary offering are the same as the liability issues of a seller in a primary offering. The settlement process in a public offering is agreed on by the parties and is usually done through the facilities of a bank acting as a paying or settlement agent. Transfers of securities, whether certificated or not, may be validly made and consummated by appropriate book-entries in the securities accounts maintained by securities intermediaries, or in the stock and transfer book held by the corporation or stock transfer agent.

As a matter of policy, securities approved for listing and trading on the Philippine Stock Exchange must be registered and lodged with the Philippine Central Depositary, Inc, a private institution that provides depository and settlement facilities using the book-entry system of recording ownership. The Philippine Stock Exchange has two settlement banks and a clearing house known as the Securities Clearing Corporation of The Philippines through which all transactions are settled. The Securities Clearing Corporation of The Philippines coordinates with the Philippine Central Depositary and the settlement banks to ensure that all obligations necessary for settlement have been met.

Once the Securities Clearing Corporation of The Philippines has confirmed that all obligations have been settled, the transfer of any security from a Philippine Central Depositary participant to another may be effected via book-entry, by debiting one account and crediting another without the need to handle the physical certificates or documents. Stockholders who wish to have physical possession of their stock certificates may request their stockbrokers for the 'upliftment' of their shares from the Philippine Central Depositary and the issuance of stock certificates. For government securities, settlement is done through the Registry of Scriptless Securities.

Offshore Offerings

Offshore offerings of securities are not covered by the registration requirements of the Securities and Exchange Commission, which applies to securities sold or offered for sale or distribution within The Philippines.

17 Securities Regulation Code, r 10.1.

Particular Securities

Exchangeable or Convertible Securities

While the registration requirement under the Securities Regulation Code applies to the offering of exchangeable or convertible securities, the issuance of underlying securities through the following transactions is exempt from the registration requirement:

- In exchange for any other security of the same issuer with its existing security holders exclusively, where no commission or other remuneration is paid or given, directly or indirectly, for soliciting such exchange; or
- In exchange for any other security of the same issuer pursuant to a right of conversion entitling the holder of security to make such conversion, provided that the security so surrendered has been registered or was, when sold, exempt from the registration requirement, and that the security issued in exchange, if sold at the conversion price, would at the time of such conversion fall within the class of securities entitled to registration under the Securities Regulation Code.

As a general rule, only the underlying shares of stock or those which have already been actually converted can be listed on the exchange. However, listing may be permitted if the underlying shares of stock will come from the unissued authorised capital stock of the company.

Warrants

The registration of the warrants must include its underlying shares, and the issuer must disclose in its registration statement the terms of the warrant plan, including computational data relative thereto. Warrant holders may exercise the right granted under a warrant within the period set by the issuer. No extension of the period is allowed.

All registered warrants will be transferable without need of approval from the Securities and Exchange Commission. Non-detachable warrants may be transferred only together with the beneficial securities.

Warrants authorised for issuance by the Securities and Exchange Commission may be listed on an exchange together with the underlying or beneficiary securities. However, the warrants will be automatically de-listed on the lapse of the exercise period. Warrants issued by listed companies are required to be listed.

Options

The registration of the options must include the registration of the underlying shares, none of which will come from the treasury shares of the issuer. The issuer must disclose in its registration statement the terms of the option plan, including computational data relative thereto, and the plan must be submitted as an exhibit to the registration statement. In considering registration of stock options, the Securities and Exchange Commission will be guided by the following:

- Stocks granted to stockholders proportionately with their shareholdings may be allowed;

- Stock options may be granted to employees or officials who are not members of the board subject, however, to a review of the scheme by the board and subject to approval by the stockholders;
- Stock options granted to persons who are not stockholders may be granted only on showing that the board has been duly authorised to grant the same by its charter or by a resolution of the stockholders owning at least two-thirds of all the outstanding capital stock, voting or non-voting, excluding treasury shares; and
- Stock options granted to directors or managing groups and its officers must be approved in a meeting of stockholders owning at least two-thirds of all the outstanding capital stock, voting or non-voting, excluding treasury stock.

Exercise of options must be done within the period set by the issuer and disclosed in its registration statement. All schemes involving the issue or grant of options over shares by listed issuers to, or for the benefit of, executives and/or employees must comply with the Philippine Stock Exchange rules on stock-option plan/stock purchase plan.

Rights Offering

The security to be issued pursuant to a rights offering must be registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission, except when the said security is exempt from registration under section 9 or 10 of the Securities Regulation Code. If the issuer is a listed company, the application for listing of the securities to cover the rights offering and the application for registration with the Securities and Exchange Commission must be filed simultaneously.

When transactions result in the issuance by a listed company of new voting shares to subscribers amounting to at least 10 per cent, but not more than 35 per cent, of the total issued and outstanding capital stock of the issuer through a single or creeping transactions within a period of 12 months from initial disclosure, the Philippine Stock Exchange will generally not permit the listing of the additional shares subscribed by 'related parties' unless stockholder approval is obtained and a rights or public offering is first undertaken. Under Philippine Stock Exchange rules, the following cases are exempt from the rights or public offering requirement:

- The transaction price for the shares is set at a premium over the prevailing market price;[18]
- The requirement for a rights or public offering is waived by a majority vote representing the outstanding shares held by the minority stockholders present or represented in a special meeting of the transaction; and
- Issuers undergoing rehabilitation and bankruptcy will be exempted without prejudice to the provisions of the delisting rules.

18 'Market price' means the weighted average of the closing prices for a period of 30 trading days prior to the transaction.

Underwriting Arrangements

In General

A firm commitment underwriting arrangement and a best-efforts underwriting arrangement are the most common. For initial public offerings, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Philippine Stock Exchange require a firm commitment underwriting arrangement.

Indemnity

The issuer typically agrees to indemnify each underwriter and its directors, officers, employees, agents, and representatives from all losses, liabilities, claims, damages, costs, and expenses, or actions arising out of an untrue statement or alleged untrue statement of a material fact contained in the registration statement, the prospectus, or any amendment or supplement thereto, or arising out of the omission or alleged omission to state a material fact necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, or arising out of the failure of the issuer to comply with any of its undertakings, covenants, or other obligations under the underwriting agreement, or in connection with the lead underwriter's acceptance or administration of the underwriting agreement or its duties thereunder.

Force Majeure

The typical force majeure or 'market out' provisions provide that the underwriter or the issuer may terminate the underwriting agreement on the occurrence of any of the following events:

- Trading at the exchange is closed or suspended for a period of at least three consecutive banking days;
- There is material adverse change in local, national, or international financial, political, economic, or stock market conditions;
- There is a change or impending change in any law, rule, regulation, administrative practice, or interpretation within The Philippines that could materially and adversely affect the financial condition, operations, profitability, or business prospects of the issuer or the ability of an underwriter to perform lawfully its obligations under the underwriting agreement;
- There is a stop order respecting the offering issued by any competent government authority; and
- There is a general banking moratorium in The Philippines.

Success Fees

In The Philippines, a percentage fee is paid to the underwriter, the selling agent, and the issue manager.

Over-Allotment Options

The issuer typically grants the lead underwriter an option, exercisable within the offer period, to purchase and underwrite on a firm basis an additional amount of the security being offered to the public, on the same terms and conditions set forth in the prospectus, solely to cover over-allotments, if any.

The Omnibus Rules and Regulations for Investment Houses and Universal Banks Registered as Underwriters of Securities (the 'Omnibus Rules') provide several requirements. A book-building programme for the domestic market must be undertaken simultaneously with the international tranche, if any. The international tranche may not be sold in the Philippine market except through duly licensed investment houses or universal banks. Only qualified institutional buyers, as defined by the Omnibus Rules, may be allowed to participate in the book-building.

Since the book-building will be done after the registration statement is filed but before it becomes effective, sales, payments, or deposits on subscription and contracts to sell are prohibited. No offer to buy the securities can be accepted and no part of the purchase price can be received until the registration statement has become effective. Such offer may be withdrawn or revoked, without obligation of any kind, at any time prior to notice of its acceptance after the effective date.

In an initial public offering, 30 per cent of the amount of the initial public offering will be made available to qualified institutional buyers under the book-building exercise. This percentage may be adjusted, depending on the reception of the market to the initial public offering. At least 10 per cent of the amount of the initial public offering must be allocated to 'local small investors'. However, the Securities and Exchange Commission may prescribe a different percentage if warranted under prevailing market conditions. The balance of 60 per cent may be distributed directly to the general public or to the clients of underwriters, including institutional investors and high-net-worth individuals.

Underwriting agreements, including the fees to be charged, are subject to the prior approval of the Securities and Exchange Commission. However, in respect of the distribution of exempt securities, duly notarised and executed copies of the underwriting agreements must be submitted to the Securities and Exchange Commission only for its acknowledgement, notation, and reference.

All underwriters must exercise thorough due diligence investigations of all matters relating to the issuer and the issue whether in initial or additional offering to the public to ensure that investors receive complete and accurate material information prior to purchasing shares in the offering. An investment house may not undertake underwriting commitments in an amount exceeding 20 times its net worth and, except in highly meritorious cases as may be approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission, it may not collect underwriting fees in excess of five per cent of the amount generated by the underwriter for the issuer.

Ongoing Reporting Obligations

Continuing reportorial and disclosure provisions of the Securities Regulation Code apply to the following issuers:

- An issuer that has sold a class of its securities pursuant to a registration;[19]
- An issuer with a class of securities listed for trading on an exchange;
- An issuer with assets of at least P 50 million, or such other amount as the Securities and Exchange Commission will prescribe, and having 200 or more holders each holding at least 100 shares of a class of its equity securities;[20] and
- A non-reporting issuer (in connection with a succession by merger, consolidation, exchange of securities, or acquisition of assets) which issues equity securities to holders of equity securities issued by a reporting issuer. The non-reporting issuer will assume the same obligations as the reporting issuer to file reports.

Issuers subject to the reportorial and disclosure requirements must file with the Securities and Exchange Commission:

- An annual report for the fiscal year in which the registration statement was rendered effective by the Securities and Exchange Commission and for each fiscal year thereafter;
- A quarterly report after the end of each of the first three quarters of each fiscal year; and
- A current report, as necessary, to make a full, fair, and accurate disclosure to the public of every material fact or event that occurs, which would reasonably be expected to affect investor decisions in relation to those securities.

In addition, issuers of registered commercial papers must file the following until all the outstanding commercial papers have been paid and such obligation will not be suspended even when the number of holders of the issuer's commercial papers will be reduced to less than 100:

- A monthly report on commercial paper total issuances outstanding as at the end of each month, to be submitted within 10 business days following the end of the reference month; and
- A list of issuances, outstanding balance, and maturing commercial papers as at the end of each quarter.

All corporations whose shares are listed on the Philippine Stock Exchange must furnish the Philippine Stock Exchange with copies of all reportorial requirements submitted to the Securities and Exchange Commission and also must comply with the Disclosure Requirements of the Philippine Stock Exchange.

19 The obligation of such issuer to file reports will be suspended for any fiscal year after the year such registration became effective if such issuer, as of the first day of any such fiscal year, has less than 100 holders of such class of securities or such other number as the Securities and Exchange Commission will prescribe, and it notifies the Securities and Exchange Commission of such.

20 The obligation of such issuer to file reports will be terminated 90 days after notification to the Securities and Exchange Commission by the issuer that the number of its holders holding at least 100 shares is reduced to less than 100.

Anti-Manipulation Rules

In General

Pursuant to the law's objective to minimise, if not totally eliminate, insider trading and other fraudulent or manipulative devices and practices which create distortions in the free market,[21] the Securities Regulation Code prohibits the following manipulative practices:

- Insider trading;
- Making an untrue statement of a material fact or failing to state any material fact to induce the purchase or sale of a security;
- Creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading in any security;
- Raising or depressing the price of any security to induce the purchase or sale thereof through manipulative devices;
- Engaging in transactions for the purchase and/or sale of any security traded in the exchange for the purpose of pegging, fixing, or stabilising the price of such security, unless otherwise allowed by this Securities Regulation Code or by rules of the Securities and Exchange Commission; and
- Employing any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance, or executing any short sale or stop-loss order in connection with the purchase or sale of any security in violation of the rules prescribed by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

To enforce these prohibitions, the Securities and Exchange Commission is endowed with a number of powers specified in the law.

Investigatory Power

The Securities and Exchange Commission may, in its discretion, make such investigations as it deems necessary to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of the Securities Regulation Code, any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, or any rule of an Exchange, registered securities association, clearing agency, or other self-regulatory organisation, and may require or permit any person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise, as the Securities and Exchange Commission will determine, as to all facts and circumstances concerning the matter to be investigated.

The Securities and Exchange Commission may publish information concerning any such violations, and to investigate any fact, condition, practice, or matter which it may deem necessary or proper to aid in the enforcement of the provisions of the Securities Regulation Code, in the prescribing of rules and regulations thereunder, or in securing information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation concerning the matters to which the Securities Regulation Code relates, provided that any person requested or subpoenaed to produce documents or testify in any investigation will simultaneously be notified in writing of the purpose of such investigation, and that all criminal complaints for violations of the Securities Regulation Code, and the implementing rules and regulations enforced or administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission, will be referred to the Department of Justice for preliminary investigation and prosecution before the proper court.

In instances where the law allows independent civil or criminal proceedings of violations arising from the same act, the Securities and Exchange Commission will take appropriate action to implement the same, and the investigation, prosecution, and trial of such cases will be given priority.

For the purpose of any such investigation, or any other proceeding under the Securities Regulation Code, the Securities and Exchange Commission or any officer designated by it is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel attendance, take evidence, require the production of any book, paper, correspondence, memorandum, or other record which the Securities and Exchange Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry, and to perform such other acts necessary in the conduct of such investigation or proceedings. When it will appear to the Securities and Exchange Commission that any person has engaged, or is about to engage, in any act or practice constituting a violation of any provision of the Securities Regulation Code; any rule, regulation, or order thereunder; or any rule of an Exchange, registered securities association, clearing agency, or other self-regulatory organisation, it may issue an order to such person to desist from committing such act or practice.

The Securities and Exchange Commission may not charge any person with violation of the rules of an Exchange or other self-regulatory organisation unless it appears to the Securities and Exchange Commission that such Exchange or other self-regulatory organisation is unable or unwilling to take action against such person. After finding that such person has engaged in any such act or practice and that there is a reasonable likelihood of continuing, further, or future violations by such person, the Securities and Exchange Commission may issue ex parte a cease and desist order for a maximum period of 10 days, enjoining the violation and compelling compliance with such provision.

The Securities and Exchange Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning any violation of any provision of the Securities Regulation Code; or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder; to the Department of Justice, which may institute the appropriate criminal proceedings under the Securities Regulation Code.

Any person who, within his power but without cause, fails or refuses to comply with any lawful order, decision, or subpoena issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission under subsection 53.2 or 53.3 or section 64 of the Securities Regulation Code will, after due notice and hearing, be guilty of contempt of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Such person will be fined in such reasonable amount as the Securities and Exchange Commission may determine or, when such failure or refusal is a clear and open defiance of the Securities and Exchange Commission's order, decision, or subpoena, will be detained under an arrest order issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission until such order, decision, or subpoena is complied with.[22]

22 Securities Regulation Code, s 53.

Administrative Sanctions

The law also grants the Securities and Exchange Commission the power to impose administrative penalties on offending parties if, after due notice and hearing, the Securities and Exchange Commission finds that:

- There is a violation of the Securities Regulation Code, its rules, or its orders;
- A registered broker, dealer, or associated person thereof, has failed reasonably to supervise, with a view to preventing violations, another person subject to supervision who commits any such violation;
- Any registrant or other person has, in a registration statement or in other reports, applications, accounts, records, or documents required by law or rules to be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, made any untrue statement of a material fact, or omitted to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading; or, in the case of an underwriter, has failed to conduct an inquiry with reasonable diligence to insure that a registration statement is accurate and complete in all material respects; or
- A person has refused to permit lawful examinations into its affairs.

In such cases, the Securities and Exchange Commission will, in its discretion, and subject only to the limitations hereinafter prescribed, impose any or all of the following sanctions as may be appropriate in light of the facts and circumstances:

- Suspend or revoke the registration for the offering of securities;
- Impose a fine of not less than P 10,000 or more than P 1 million, plus not more than P 2,000 for each day of continuing violation;
- In the case of a violation of sections 19.2, 20, 24, 26, and 27, disqualify officers, members of the board of directors, or persons performing similar functions, of an issuer required to file reports under section 17 of the Securities Regulation Code or any other act, rule, or regulation administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission;
- In the case of a violation of section 34, impose a fine of not more than three times the profit gained or loss avoided as a result of the purchase, sale, or communication proscribed by such section; and
- Impose other penalties within the power of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The imposition of the foregoing administrative sanctions will be without prejudice to the filing of criminal charges against the individuals responsible for the violation. The Securities and Exchange Commission will have the power to issue writs of execution to enforce the provisions of this section and to enforce payment of the fees and other dues collectible under the Securities Regulation Code.[23]

Liabilities and Enforcement

The most common bases of liability for a securities transaction are:

- Filing of a false registration statement;

23 Securities Regulation Code, s 54.

- Violating rules on prospectus, communications, and reports;
- Engaging in fraud in connection with securities transactions;
- Manipulating security prices; and
- Engaging in insider trading.

There are a number of remedial measures available under Philippine law for those who have been victimised by unscrupulous entities. The main mechanisms for seeking remedies and sanctions for improper securities activities, which are cumulative, are:

- Administrative proceedings under sections 54 and 64 of the Securities Regulation Code;
- Civil proceedings on account of false registration statement, violation of rules concerning prospectus, communications, and reports, fraud in connection with securities transactions, manipulation of security prices, violation of rules covering commodity futures contracts and pre-need plans, and insider trading; and
- Criminal proceedings for any violation of the provisions of the Securities Regulation Code or the rules and regulations promulgated by the Securities and Exchange Commission, or for making any untrue statement of material fact in a registration statement or omitting to state any material fact required or necessary to be stated to make the statements therein not misleading.

The penalty for violation of the Securities Regulation Code is a fine of not less than P 950,000 or more than P 95 million, or imprisonment of not less than seven years or more than 21 years, or both, in the discretion of the court. If the offender is a corporation, partnership or association, or other juridical entity, the penalty may in the discretion of the court be imposed on such juridical entity and on the officer or officers of the corporation, partnership, association, or entity responsible for the violation and, if the officer is an alien, he will, in addition to the penalties prescribed, be deported without further proceedings after service of sentence.

Securitisation Act of 2004

Structure

The Securitisation Act of 2004 defines securitisation as a process by which assets are sold on a without-recourse basis by a seller to a special-purpose entity and asset-backed securities (special-purpose entity) are issued by the purpose-purpose entity in accordance with an approved plan, which securities depend, for their payment, on the cash flow of the assets.

Assets that may be sold to a purpose-purpose entity include loans and other financial assets with an expected cash payment stream. Future receivables may be sold to a purpose-purpose entity subject to the Securities and Exchange Commission or the BSP (the Philippine central bank), if the originator is a bank or other BSP-regulated entity. The Act does not cover the securitisation of government receivables arising from royalties, fees, or tax and duties. The transfer of assets to a purpose-purpose entity must be a ‘true sale’ where:

- The assets are legally isolated from the originator or seller and its creditors;

- The special-purpose entity has the right to encumber or dispose of the assets; and
- The transferee receives the profits with respect to the assets, and assumes the risks associated with these assets.

Securitisation must be undertaken pursuant to a Securities and Exchange Commission-approved plan that must include:

- The nature and mechanics of the asset transfer;
- The credit enhancements for the purpose-purpose entity;
- The identities and qualifications of the parties to the transaction;
- The amount, structure, and terms of the purpose-purpose entity;
- A description of the asset pool;
- A description of how the purpose-purpose entity issuer will collect payments on the assets; and
- A plan for the management of the assets.

The purpose-purpose entity must be registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission under the registration requirement of the Securities Regulation Code. Where the class of the purpose-purpose entity to be issued, or the transaction under which they are sold, is exempt from this requirement, the issuer must file a notice of exemption and a disclosure statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission. In all cases, the purpose-purpose entity may be sold only after the Securities and Exchange Commission approves the securitisation plan.

Parties

The Act provides for the qualifications and limitations of the parties. The originator is the original obligee of the assets. The seller is the entity that conveys the assets to a purpose-purpose entity. Neither entities nor their affiliates may provide credit enhancements for the purpose-purpose entity. The purpose-purpose entity must be created and operated solely for securitisation. It can be a stock corporation or a trust administered by a BSP-licensed trust entity.

The activities of a purpose-purpose entity are restricted to those contained in the securitisation plan, although it can engage in other activities with the approval of the Securities and Exchange Commission and holders representing at least two-thirds of the outstanding amount of the purpose-purpose entity.

The servicer is the entity designated by a purpose-purpose entity to collect payments on the assets. It must be a stock corporation with a minimum capitalisation of P 10 million. It may not share common ownership, officers, or directors with the purpose-purpose entity, and it cannot function as the manager of the assets. The originator or seller can act as servicer only with the approval of the Securities and Exchange Commission or the BSP, in certain cases.

The Act contemplates the creation of secondary mortgage institutions to provide liquidity to primary mortgage lenders and to develop a secondary market for a housing-related purpose-purpose entity. For this purpose, these institutions may:

- Purchase, on a wholesale basis, residential mortgages and housing-related receivables;

- Buy and sell residential mortgages and housing-related purpose-purpose entities; and
- Provide loans to primary lending institutions secured by residential mortgages.

Incentives

Any yield from a purpose-purpose entity is subject to a 20 per cent final withholding tax, except a purpose-purpose entity held by tax-exempt investors. However, to encourage the securitisation of housing-related receivables of government housing agencies, any yield or income of investors from socialised housing-related purpose-purpose entities is exempted from income tax.

The transfer of assets and related security interests to a purpose-purpose entity is exempted from value-added tax and documentary stamp tax or other taxes imposed to replace value-added tax. Except for registration fees payable to the Securities and Exchange Commission, all registration and annotation fees in connection with the transfer of assets will be 50 per cent of the applicable fees. The transfer of assets (in the form of lands or buildings) by an obligor to a purpose-purpose entity (in satisfaction of such obligor's money debt to the purpose-purpose entity) is exempted from capital gains tax.

The original issuance of a purpose-purpose entity and other securities related to the securitisation is exempted from value-added tax or other tax imposed in lieu of value-added tax. All sales or transfers of a purpose-purpose entity and related credit enhancements in the secondary market are exempted from documentary stamp tax and value-added tax or other taxes imposed to replace them. The foregoing benefits provided to transactions entered into by a purpose-purpose entity also are granted to the same transactions entered into by a secondary mortgage institution.

Introduction

Regulatory System

The first Securities Market Code[1] established the Markets and Securities Commission (CMVM), a public agency, independent at both administrative and financial levels, granting it regulatory and supervisory powers previously held by the government. A second major reform was carried out in 1999 with the enactment of the Securities Code,[2] which has been in force since 1 March 2000.

In 2004, the Securities Code was revised to promote the competitiveness of the Portuguese securities markets at an international level. The Securities Code has been subject to major reorganisations as a consequence of the Portuguese implementation of European Union (EU) legislation.

Legal Sources

The Securities Code embodies the main rules of securities regulation and provides legal support for the enactment of other regulatory instruments. This set of rules is complemented by the enactment of the CMVM Regulations (Regulamentos), Instructions (Instruções), and Ministerial Decrees (Portarias). The CMVM also issues general 'soft law' instruments, such as recommendations and assessments. Other relevant legal instruments regulating the Portuguese securities markets include:

- The particular legal instrument regulating each type of securities;
- The Companies Code (Código das Sociedades Comerciais, CSC), approved by Decree-Law Number 262/86, of 2 September, as amended;
- The General Framework on Credit Institutions and Financial Companies (Regime Geral das Instituições de Crédito e das Sociedades Financeiras), approved by Decree-Law Number 298/92, of 31 December, as amended; and

1 Decree-Law Number 142-A/91, of 10 April.
2 Decree-Law Number 486/99, of 13 November, as last amended by Decree-Law Number 40/2014, of 18 March.

- The access to insurance activity, approved by Decree-Law Number 94-B/98, of 17 April, as amended.[3]

Authorities

The Ministry of Finance (Ministério das Finanças) defines the policies relating to the securities markets, exercises administrative supervision over the CMVM, and coordinates securities supervision and regulation between public authorities.

The CMVM is responsible for regulating and exercising supervision of the securities markets, public offerings of securities, settlement systems, and central securities systems.

Without prejudice to the competence granted to other authorities, the following entities are supervised by the CMVM in relation to activities involving securities:

- Management entities of regulated markets, MTFs, settlement systems, clearing houses, central securities depositories, and central counterparties;
- Financial intermediaries and investment advisers;
- Issuers of securities;
- Qualified investors and holders of qualifying holdings;
- Guarantee funds and investor compensation schemes and their respective managing entities;
- Auditors and rating agencies, registered with the CMVM;
- Securitisation firms;
- Venture capital firms;
- Entities proposing to enter into or mediate insurance agreements linked to investment funds or to market individual agreements to open-ended pension funds, under such activities;
- Holders of short positions on relevant shares and sovereign debt and acquirers of protection in sovereign credit default using swaps;
- Other persons whose main or secondary activity relates to the issue, distribution, trading, registration, or deposit of financial instruments or, generally, with the organisation and functioning of the markets in financial instruments.

The CMVM has jurisdiction to supervise foreign entities exercising cross-border activities to the extent that such activities have some relevant connection to markets, operations, or securities subject to Portuguese law.

3 The Securities Code, as well as some complementary legislation, is available in English on the CMVM's website (http://www.cmvm.pt). It is stressed that this translation is for information purposes only and bears no legal value, and therefore it should not be the basis for any legal assessment or deemed as replacing proper legal advice.

The CMVM's supervisory duties also include prudential supervision over operators of markets, settlement systems, central securities systems, central counterparties, collective investment funds, and the operators of guarantee funds and investor compensation schemes. This prudential supervision seeks the preservation of the solvency and liquidity of the institutions, prevention of systemic risk, and control of ethical standards of members of management bodies and holders of qualifying participations.

The Bank of Portugal (Banco de Portugal) oversees the banking sector, regulating and supervising all credit institutions and investment companies (ie, most of the financial intermediaries operating in the securities markets), officially acknowledges monetary securities (ie, short-term debt securities), regulates and manages the settlement systems, and acts as lender of last resort. The Portuguese Insurance Institute (Instituto de Seguros de Portugal) regulates and supervises insurance, reinsurance, pension funds activities, and insurance intermediation.

Portuguese Markets

In General

Since 1 November 2007, investment orders can be executed not only in regulated markets (formerly designated as exchanges) but also within multilateral negotiation systems and systematic internalisation schemes. Financial intermediaries can promote the matching of their own financial instrument portfolio with orders submitted by their clients within a systematic, organised, and frequent framework but out of any regulated market or multilateral negotiation systems. This procedure is designated by the Securities Code as a systemic internalisation and is regulated by EC Commission Regulation 1287/2006, which is directly applicable in Portugal.

Multilateral negotiation systems are subject to the rules applicable to regulated markets on registration, securities admission, membership, operation, and supervision powers but, unlike such markets, they do not necessarily operate on a regular basis and can either be managed by regulated market operators or by financial intermediaries which are registered with the CMVM.

The opening of a regulated market is subject to government authorisation, at the operator's request and following consultation with the CMVM. The list of regulated markets operating in Portugal is conveyed to the European Securities and Markets Authority and to all EU Member States and available at the regulator's website. The regulated markets operating in Portugal are:

- Eurolist by Euronext Lisbon (Mercado de Cotações Oficiais), the official quotations market managed by Euronext Lisbon — Sociedade Gestora de Mercados Regulamentados, S.A.;
- Futures and options market (Mercado de Futuros e Opções), managed by Euronext Lisbon — Sociedade Gestora de Mercados Regulamentados, S.A.;

- Special Public Debt Market (Mercado Especial de Dívida Pública, MEDIP), managed by MTS Portugal — Sociedade Gestora do Mercado Especial de Dívida Pública, SGMR, S.A.; and
- Energy Commodities Market (Mercado Ibérico de Electricidade, MIBEL), managed by OMIP — Pólo Português, Sociedade Gestora de Mercados Regulamentados, S.A.

Operational Rules and Membership

The operating rules of regulated markets are set out by each operating entity and are subject to prior registration with the CMVM. Operators of regulated markets located or operating in Portugal should agree among themselves as to any informative or operative connections necessary for the proper functioning of the markets they manage and for the protection of the interests of investors. Operators of regulated markets located or operating in Portugal may enter into agreements with similar entities in other states, which ensure that securities listed on any of the relevant markets are also admitted to trading on the other markets or that members of one regulated market are permitted to participate in another market. Such agreements are no longer subject to registration, although the CMVM may oppose its execution if the regulated market located or functioning in a foreign state does not impose requirements similar to those of the regulated market located or operating in Portugal.

Regulated markets function by means of public sessions, which may be ordinary or extraordinary. Ordinary regulated market sessions are held at the time and on the days defined by the regulated market operator, for regular trading. Extraordinary sessions take place as a result of a judicial decision or a decision made by the regulated market operator, at the request of specific interested parties.

Following the implementation of the MiFID Directive, membership in a regulated market is not limited to financial intermediaries. Any entities that evidence to be professionally apt and have adequate negotiation capacity, organisation method, and financial resources can be admitted as members of a regulated market. The operator of the market will have responsibility for the admission of market members, in accordance with the principles of equality and respect for the rules of healthy and fair competition. Regulated market members who merely exercise trading functions may only be admitted after having entered into an agreement with one or more of the members which guarantee settlement of transactions carried out by them.

Admission Requirements and Procedures

The admission of securities to a specified regulated market is determined by each operator. However, the Securities Code imposes minimum requirements with regard to admission to trading on the official quotations market regarding both the issuer and the securities issued.

As a general rule, the issuer must show conformity with the law to which it is subject, with regards to both its incorporation and operation, and demonstrate that its financial and economic situation is compatible with the nature of the securities to be admitted and with the market on which listing is being requested.

Nevertheless, only issuers that, in addition to these requirements, have been conducting their business for at least three years and have published their annual financial statements in accordance with the applicable law for the three preceding financial years can apply for official listing of securities.

Any fungible, assignable, unencumbered securities or other financial instruments enabling an orderly price formation are eligible to be admitted to trading on a regulated market to the extent that they have been issued in conformity with the issuer's statutory law and the respective content and form of representation complies with the applicable law.

Once they have been admitted to a regulated market, securities may be subsequently traded on other regulated markets without the need of the relevant issuer's consent or further information provision (although notice will be provided to the relevant issuer). The listing of each type of securities entails additional requirements, such as:

- Shares must evidence an adequate level of public dispersal ascertainable at admission and forecasted market capitalisation of at least €1 million or (alternatively, if the capitalisation criteria cannot be ascertained) own capital, including the results of the previous financial year, amounting to at least €1 million;
- The amount of the loan represented by a bond financing cannot fall below €200,000; and
- The admission of convertible securities entitling the holder to subscribe for shares is conditional on the previous or simultaneous admission to trading of the underlying securities (this requirement may be waived by the CMVM if so permitted by the personal law governing the issuer, should the issuer demonstrate that the holders of the relevant securities possess the necessary information to make a reasonable assessment of the value of the shares into which the bonds are convertible).[4]

When the securities are subject to a foreign law (with the obvious exception of all EU Member States), the CMVM may require a legal opinion confirming compliance with the aforementioned requirements.

The admission of securities subject to the governing law of any EU member state may not be conditioned on previous admission to a regulated market operating in such state. The application for admission to trading on a regulated market must be filed with the respective operator by:

- The issuer;

4 If the underlying securities are already admitted to trading on a regulated market located or operating in an EU Member State where the issuer has its head office, admission to listing will involve prior consultation of the authorities of the relevant member state.

- The holders of at least 10 per cent of issued securities belonging to the same category; or
- The Agency for Exchequer and Public Debt Management (Agência de Gestão da Tesouraria e da Dívida Pública — IGCP, E. P. E.) if the securities in question are bonds issued by the Portuguese State, together with the necessary information and documentation required to prove that all the above referred requirements have been met.

Applications can be submitted before such requirements are met, provided that the issuer indicates how and when these will be met. The operator must provide the CMVM with a copy of the admission application, as well as with any documents necessary for the approval of the admission prospectus. The application for listing must include reference to the means by which the issuer is to disclose information to the public, the identification of the member of the settlement system approved by the market operator through which the payment of the rights (conferred by the securities to be admitted) is guaranteed, and the designation of an attorney to represent the issuer before the market and the CMVM.

Notice of approval or denial of the application must be served by the operator to the applicant within 90 days and subsequently to the CMVM, identifying the securities admitted, describing their characteristics and the means of accessing the prospectus. Admission to trading on a regulated market can only be denied where there is a confirmed:

- Non-fulfilment of the requisites set by law, regulations, or rules of the respective market;
- Non-fulfilment by the issuer of duties to which it is subject in other markets, located or operating in Portugal or abroad, where the securities in question are listed; or
- Admission to trading not being advisable in the investors' interest, based on the issuer's situation.

Admission Prospectus

Prior to the admission of securities to trading, the issuer must publish (either (i) in a major newspaper or (ii) by means of providing copies at the registered office or website of the issuer, the branches or websites of the relevant financial intermediaries, and the registered office or website of the operator of the market where the securities are to be listed or, finally, (iii) in the CMVM website) a prospectus approved by the CMVM or by the competent authority of another member state, in line with the criteria described below applicable to the offer prospectus.

The Securities Code foresees some admission prospectus exemptions in relation to certain types of securities, which include, among others, non-equity securities issued or unconditionally guaranteed by a member state (including regional or local authorities), member state Central Banks, public international entities, associations with legal status or non-profit-making bodies recognised by a member state; securities where the total consideration of the offer is less than €5 million (limit calculated over a 12-month period) and provided certain conditions are met; shares securities offered, allotted, or to be allotted free of charge to existing shareholders or to former directors or employees by their employer, by a company in a control or group relation, or by a company subject to joint control; and securities already admitted to trading on another regulated market.

The admission prospectus may, in whole or in part, be written in a language (other than Portuguese) currently used in the international financial markets if:

- The securities to be listed have a nominal value equal to or over €100,000 or, in cases where the securities do not have a nominal value, where the unitary subscription or sale price is equal to or over such value;
- The listing was directed to markets in several different states;
- The issuer is not domiciled in Portugal; or
- It is destined for a market or market segment which, due to its characteristics, is only accessible to institutional investors.[5]

The form and contents of the prospectus, as well as the responsibility for its contents, are very similar to those outlined below in relation to the public offers prospectus.

Information Disclosure Duties

The information to be compulsorily disclosed under the rules described below must be disclosed at least through a specific broad access communication channel, ie, the CMVM Information Disclosure System (Sistema de Difusão de Informação).[6]

Additionally, issuers of securities admitted to a regulated market must release such data on their corporate website for at least one year counted as from such mandatory disclosure. The CMVM may require defaulting entities to provide the missing or incomplete information and publish it at their expense.

In some cases, it also may waive the disclosure of information whenever the relevant release is contrary to public interest and likely to cause damages to the issuer, provided that the non-disclosure does not lead to a deficient evaluation of the relevant securities by the investor.

Compliance with these requirements must be made in Portuguese, or certified Portuguese translations of the relevant documents must be submitted, unless otherwise waived by the CMVM.

5 The CMVM may, however, require a summary in Portuguese that describes the offering and the risk factors.
6 See http://www.cmvm.pt.

Periodic Disclosure Requirements

The following issuers of securities must submit to the CMVM an extensive list of periodic information relating mainly to economic and financial data:

- Issuers of securities with a nominal value of less than €1,000 if such securities are admitted to trading on a regulated market operating in Portugal or other EU member state, when such issuers are subject to Portuguese lex personalis[7] or are exclusively admitted to trading on a regulated market operating in Portugal, when such issuers are subject to an EU member state lex personalis; and
- Issuers subject to a lex personalis other than that of an EU member state of securities with a nominal value of less than €1,000 if such securities are admitted to trading on a regulated market operating in Portugal or other EU member state and the CMVM is designated as the competent authority to supervise the relevant disclosure.

The issuers identified above must publish and make available to the public for a five-year period the following documentation:

- Within four months as of the end of the financial year, the management report, annual accounts, the legal certificate of accounts, and other accounting documents required by law or regulation even if such documents have not yet been approved by the issuer's general shareholders' meeting, the list of qualified holdings, and the entire text of a report of an auditor registered with the CMVM (which should include an opinion relating to growth forecasts for the business and the financial and economic situation of the issuer and elements corresponding to the legal certification of accounts, if not required by another legal rule or if not drawn up by an auditor registered with the CMVM); and
- Within two months as of the end of the first semester of the financial year, half-year information relating to the activity and results of such semester, including the list of qualified holdings, the condensed financial demonstrations, a half-year management report, a list of securities issued by the company or the issuer group, and a description of material-related parties' transactions if share issuers are concerned.

In each case, the documentation set must include an officers' certificate (identifying the name and status of each officer) confirming that, to the best of the officers' knowledge, the disclosed information was prepared in accordance with the applicable accounting principles, providing a truthful and appropriate description of the issuers' financial condition and that the management report adequately describes such issuer's business evolution and forecasts and includes a risk factor identification. The documentation in such cases must also include:

- Quarterly information relating to operations, profit/loss situation, and economic and financial situation where the issuers subject to Portuguese lex

7 In practice, the issuers which are subject to Portuguese lex personalis are companies with registered head office in Portugal.

personalis exceed, for two consecutive years, two of the following three limits: (a) a €100 million balance sheet, (b) €150 million profits, and (c) 150 workers;[8] and

- An annual statement summarising the information made available to the public in the preceding year under the mandatory disclosure provisions, including detailed information on the source of such requirements.

Issuers that are Member States (or regional or municipal authorities) or Central Banks, as well as issuers of debt securities with a nominal value exceeding € 100,000, are exempt from the above-mentioned disclosure duties. Other data which triggers disclosure obligations includes:

- Amendments to the company's by-laws (which must be notified to the CMVM and the relevant regulated market operator(s) before their approval);
- Issue of securities;
- Amendments to any right inherent to the respective issued securities;
- Acquisition or disposal of own shares, whenever as a result thereof the proportion of same exceeds or falls below the thresholds of 5% and 10%;
- Approval of annual accounts by the general shareholders' meetings;
- Calling of general meetings;
- Attribution and payment or exercise of any rights conferred by listed securities or by the shares to which these give the right to;
- Modification of the rights of bondholders which result, specifically, from changes to the conditions of the loan or to the interest rate; and
- Issue of other shares and of other bonds, with an indication of the beneficial privileges and guarantees associated with them.

There is a duty of managers of issuing companies admitted to trading on a regulated market (and on any persons closely related to such managers, as defined under the Securities Code) to disclose to the CMVM acquisitions of a company's shareholding exceeding €5,000, or of any securities related to such company entered into on their behalf, on behalf of third parties or of third parties on the former's behalf within five business days after reaching the €5,000 threshold.

Corporate Governance Disclosure Requirements

The corporate governance disclosure requirements reflect European and Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD)

8 Issuers that do not meet these requirements have nonetheless to release each semester management board declarations, including a description of material transactions affecting such issuer's financial condition as well as of the company's half-year business performance.

recommendations, particularly in the context of the Takeover Directive implementation.

The CMVM has regulated on these specific disclosure duties[9] and published a Corporate Governance Code. Issuers of shares admitted to trading on a regulated market must include in their annual management report the following detailed information:

- Share capital structure (including the identification of shares which are not admitted to trading, with an indication of the different classes of shares and, in relation to each share class, identification of the rights and obligations attaching to it, and the percentage of share capital represented by each class);
- Share transfer restrictions, such as disposal consents clauses or restrictions on the ownership of shares;
- Qualified holdings in the issuer's share capital;
- Identification of any shareholders that hold special rights and description of such rights;
- Control mechanisms of eventual employee share schemes when the voting rights are not directly exercised by the employees;
- Voting rights restrictions, such as limitations on the voting rights of the holders of a given percentage or number of votes, deadlines for exercising voting rights, or systems whereby the financial rights incorporated in the securities are detached from such securities;
- Shareholders' agreements acknowledged by the company and which may result in restrictions on the transfer of securities or voting rights;
- Rules governing the appointment and replacement of board members and amendment of the articles of association;
- Powers of the board, notably in respect of resolutions to increase equity;
- Significant agreements to which the company is a party and which take effect, are modified, or terminate on a change of control of the company following a takeover bid, as well as the effects thereof, except where their nature is such that this disclosure would be seriously harmful to the issuer (this exception not applying where the company is specifically obliged to disclose such information on the basis of other legal requirements);
- Agreements between the company and its board members or employees providing for compensation on resignation, dismissal without valid reason, or redundancy of such entities following a takeover bid;
- Implemented internal control and risk-management systems with regard to financial information disclosure;
- Declaration detailing the aspects of the Corporate Governance Code which are and which are not being complied with and grounds for any non-compliance, to the extent applicable;

9 Originally through CMVM Regulation Number 1/2007, which has since been repealed by CMVM Regulation Number 1/2010.

- Identification of the location where applicable corporate governance reports are made available to the public;
- Description of the composition and operation of the company's corporate bodies, as well as of any commissions created within such corporate bodies; and
- Remuneration policy of the management corporate body, including the individual and aggregate annual wage amount perceived by its members.

Issuers of securities other than shares admitted to trading on a regulated market operating in Portugal also are subject to some of the corporate governance requirements listed above, but the list of data to be disclosed can be less stringent.

The issuers of shares admitted to trading on a regulated market which are companies subject to Portuguese lex personalis are further required to publish a detailed report on their corporate governance structure and practices, in accordance with a specified standard model approved by the CMVM. The report must specifically identify the CMVM's recommendations on corporate governance that are complied with and those that are not. All recommendations that are not fully adopted are understood not to be complied with.

Additional stringent information obligations are imposed on these particular issuers, with a view to ensure a permanent contact with the market with respect to the shareholders' equality and to avoid investor information asymmetries. These include the obligations to:

- Create an investor assistance service;
- Submit to the CMVM information relating to plans for the allotment of shares and/or stock options to employees and/or members of the board of directors during the seven days following the respective approval; and
- Make available an easily accessible website in clearly identified terms, and updated with information including the corporate statutory data, the identity of the office-holders of corporate bodies and the market liaison representative, financial reports (accessible for at least five years), a semester calendar of company events (including general meetings, disclosure of annual, half-yearly and, if applicable, quarterly financial reports), calls and proposals presented for discussion, and voting in the general shareholders' meeting.

Privileged (Qualified) Information

Issuers of shares admitted to trading on a regulated market must immediately disclose any privileged information (as well as any changes to information disclosed as such), which is defined as any information that:

- Directly concerns the issuing company or the securities issued by such company;
- Has a precise nature (including past and present data as well as future facts to the extent that such facts are predictable);

- Is not public; and
- Would affect the price of the same if it were made public (ie, price sensitive in light of the judgment of a reasonable investor).

Issuers must keep (for a five-year period) an updated list with all persons that have access to privileged information. Issuers may elect to postpone the disclosure of such privileged information to the extent that such disclosure would prejudice their legitimate interests (as in the case of a material negotiation procedure requiring a certain degree of secrecy) provided that the disclosure postponement does not have a misleading effect on the public and the issuer ensures the confidentiality of the information until its disclosure. For this purpose, the Securities Code sets out the minimum procedures which must be adopted to guarantee that the confidentiality is preserved and that the information is immediately disclosed following confidentiality breach.

Disclosure of Qualified Holdings Acquisition in Public Companies

Each time a shareholder reaches or exceeds a holding of 10 per cent, 20 per cent, one-third, 50 per cent, two-thirds, and 90 per cent of the voting rights in the share capital of a public company[10] subject to Portuguese lex personalis (or decreases such holding to any of those limits), it must, within four trading days (days on which the relevant regulated market is open for trading) after the occurrence of such fact, inform:

- The CMVM and the company to which such voting rights pertain; and
- The entities referred to above of those situations that determine the attribution to the shareholder of voting rights inherent to securities belonging to third parties.

A public company must immediately publish any disclosure communication received in this context by making it available at the CMVM Information

10 The Securities Code sets up a specific public company concept (Sociedade Aberta), defined as a company whose share capital is dispersed among the general public and that has been incorporated through an initial public subscription offering specifically addressed at individuals or entities resident or established in Portugal, which issues shares or other securities that grant the right to subscribe or to acquire shares that have been the object of a public subscription offer specifically addressed at individuals or entities resident or established in Portugal; issues shares (or other securities that grant the right to their subscription or acquisition) that are or have been listed on a regulated market situated or operating in Portugal; issues shares that have been sold by public offer of sale or exchange in a quantity greater than 10 per cent of the company's share capital directed specifically to individuals or entities resident or established in Portugal; or has been incorporated as the result of the de-merger of a public company or a company that incorporates, through merger, all or part of its assets. The status of a public company must be mentioned in all its external acts. The most significant implication of such status (other than the duty to disclose qualified shareholdings) is the possibility of being subject to mandatory takeovers (which are only applicable to public companies).

Disclosure System. Together with the shares or voting rights held, the Securities Code also deems attributed to the relevant holder those rights:

- Held by third parties in their own name, but on behalf of the relevant holder, a company with which the relevant holder is in a control position, holders of voting rights with whom the relevant holder has entered into a voting agreement except if, by virtue of this same agreement, the relevant holder is bound to follow a third party's instructions and, if the relevant holder is a company, by members of its management and statutory audit boards;
- That the relevant holder can acquire pursuant to an agreement executed with the respective shareholders;
- Held by persons that have entered into any agreement with a shareholder aimed at either acquiring control of the company or frustrating any changes to its control or otherwise constituting an instrument of concerted exercise of influence over the company in which they own shares;
- Attached to shares granted and held as security in favour of the relevant holder or administered by or deposited with the relevant holder, if the voting rights have been attributed to the relevant holder or if discretionary powers for their exercise have been granted to the relevant holder; and
- Attributable to any person or entity referred to in one of the previous paragraphs by application, with due adaptations, of the criteria referred to in any of the foregoing bullets.

Accordingly, shareholder agreements that aim at acquiring, maintaining, or reinforcing a qualified holding in a public company or to secure or frustrate the success of a takeover must be disclosed to the CMVM by any of the contracting parties within three days of their execution. The CMVM will determine the full or partial publication of the agreement, according to its relevance to the control over the company.

Company resolutions based on express votes exercised pursuant to agreements that have not been disclosed or published are voidable, except where one is capable of proving that the resolution would have passed without said votes. The duty to disclose qualified holdings also applies to the following categories of companies:

- Portuguese public companies which issue shares or other securities granting the right to their subscription or acquisition, admitted to trading on a regulated market situated or operating in Portugal when each of the following thresholds is attained: 2 per cent, 5 per cent, 10 per cent, 15 per cent, 20 per cent, 25 per cent, one-third, 50 per cent, two-thirds, and 90 per cent;
- Companies incorporated in other EU Member States that issue shares or other securities granting the right to their subscription or acquisition, exclusively admitted to trading on a regulated market situated or operating in Portugal, whenever each of the following thresholds is attained: 5 per cent, 15 per cent, and 25 per cent; and

- Companies incorporated in non-EU countries that issue shares or other securities granting the right to their subscription or acquisition, exclusively admitted to trading on a regulated market situated or operating in Portugal, and in relation to which the CMVM has been chosen by the issuer as the competent authority at the time of its admission to trading, whenever each of the following thresholds is attained: 5 per cent, 15 per cent, and 25 per cent.

Key exemptions are provided for parent undertakings of management/ investment companies where voting rights are exercised independently (subject to CMVM notification), for usual short settlement cycle and for market makers. However, the Securities Code no longer foresees the possibility of applying for specific exemptions (the CMVM could previously waive disclosure obligations in relation to holdings of 2 per cent and 5 per cent of the voting rights).

If the duty of disclosing qualified holdings is not complied with in accordance with the terms foreseen under the Securities Code, or should there be doubts as to the identity of shareholders of qualified holdings, the CMVM may notify the relevant issuer of such fact and request additional clarifications to be provided within 30 days, after which the CMVM may publish an announcement through its official Disclosure System stating that a specified shareholding is lacking transparency.

As a consequence of such declaration, the voting rights inherent to such shareholdings become automatically suspended. The following information regarding public companies must be disclosed:

- Exercise of subscription rights;
- Exercise of rights of conversion of securities into shares;
- Modification of the imputation title of voting rights in qualified holdings;
- Insolvency declaration application, judicial declaration of insolvency, or judicial refusal of such declaration and approval of the insolvency plan;
- Share capital increase and reduction;
- Applications to admissions to a regulated market and decisions thereunder; and
- General shareholders' meeting to consider the loss of public company status.

Market Participants

In General

The implementation of the MiDIF Directive has streamlined the Portuguese legislative approach to the protection of market participants both from the consumer and service provider perspective.

Qualified and Retail Investors

The most significant conduct of business rules imposed on the financial intermediaries by the MiFID requires that they categorise all clients (by assessing their previous experience in dealing with financial instruments, as well as their financial condition and investment objectives) and adjust the level of client protection according to each client's expertise level when providing advice and services and choosing the complexity of the investment instruments that can be offered to such entities.

Accordingly, each financial intermediary must come to a decision on whether its client is a qualified or retail customer and let him be aware of such classification ahead of rendering any services. Retail clients are granted further information, assistance, and advice on the available financial instruments and agreements with such clients must be formalised in writing.

Qualified investors include credit institutions, investment firms, collective investment funds and their respective managing companies, insurance companies, pension funds and their respective managing companies, and other authorised or regulated financial institutions (including securitisation funds and their managing entities, and other financial companies) of non-EU Member States, traders in commodities derivatives, state entities, central banks, public entities that administer state debt and supra-national institutions (such as the World Bank, International Monetary Fund, European Investment Bank, and European Central Bank), and companies with a significant dimension for this purpose (ie, which meets two requirements out of €40 million net turnover, €20 million assets, and €2 million net assets).

The CMVM also may, by Regulation, tag as qualified investors other entities (including issuers) with particular experience and competence in relation to securities, by setting out economical-financial indicators to define when such is the case.

Retail customers can request to be re-characterised as qualified investors if they comply with two of the following requirements: have carried out at least 10 transactions of a significant amount per trimester in the last four trimesters, hold a portfolio exceeding €500,000, including deposits in cash, and have one year of professional financial experience.

Financial Intermediaries

The revised regulation on financial intermediation evidences a substantial effort in harmonising the organisation and conduct of business by investment firms, which was one of the main achievements intended by the MiFID implementation. The scope of the definition of 'financial intermediation' has been widened to include:

- Services and investment activities in financial instruments (such as order reception and execution, portfolio management, underwriting, book building, negotiation, multilateral negotiation systems management, and investment advice);
- Ancillary services to investment services and activities such as orders registration, custody, investment studies, or advice in the context of a public offer; and

- Management of collective investment schemes and custody of such entities' securities portfolio.

Credit institutions and investment firms, collective investment schemes managers, companies carrying out similar activities authorised to operate in Portugal, securities investment companies, and real estate investment companies are characterised as 'financial intermediaries', while brokers, dealers, asset management companies, foreign exchange agents, investment advisors, and multilateral negotiation systems operators are regarded as 'investment companies'. The Securities Code also holds consultants providing personalised investment advice services (either acting individually or as consultancy companies) as financial intermediaries.

In any of the cases described above, the performance of financial intermediation activities must be authorised by the competent authority and preceded by registration with the CMVM. An official list of authorised financial intermediaries and activities subject to CMVM supervision is permanently available on the regulator's official website.[11] The CMVM informs the European Securities and Markets Authority on the registration of investment companies and credit institutions that provide services or carry out investment activities and management companies of securities investment funds and of securities investment companies that manage collective investment in transferable securities.

Any financial intermediary based in a member state and authorised to carry out activities by one of the EU member state regulators can now freely provide intermediation services in Portugal under the European passport. A list of such authorised intermediaries also is available at the Committee of European Securities Regulators website.[12] The following information must be provided in writing by the financial intermediaries to enable the formation of a conscientious client investment decision:

- The financial intermediary's identification and the services provided;
- The nature of the retail or professional investor or eligible counterparty, for the possible right of requesting a different treatment and any restriction on the level of protection that such implies;
- The source and the nature of any interest that the financial intermediary or persons who act on behalf of same have in the services to be provided, whenever the organisational measures introduced by the intermediary are not sufficient to ensure with reasonable confidence that the risk of the clients' interests being prejudiced shall be avoided;
- The financial instruments and the proposed investment strategies;
- The specific risks involved in the transactions to be carried out;
- The order execution policy and, if applicable, provision for the possibility that clients' orders may be executed outside a regulated market or MTF;

11 See http://www.cmvm.pt.
12 See http://www.cesr-eu.org.

- The existence or non-existence of any guarantee scheme or similar protection that covers the provision of services; and
- The costs of the provision of services.

The information provided to clients must be sufficient to enable a non-qualified investor to assess the risks involved in a specified investment and must include at least a description of concepts such as volatility, 'leverage effect' of some financial instruments (ie, the risk of the exposure being higher than the amounts invested), or other risks associated with specific financial instruments (market, liquidity, credit or foreign exchange risks, and mandatory collateral provision) or markets.

The Securities Code also prescribes specific information check lists for each type of activity. Before receiving and executing any client order, the financial intermediary must request its client to expressly approve a document describing the financial intermediary's 'orders execution policy' (including to any amendments thereto), which must be adapted to the client's level of sophistication. Finally, financial intermediaries must forward their clients, up to the following business day after its execution, a detailed 'order completion report' and provide at any time information on the status of executed orders if so requested by their clients.

The provision of portfolio management services also must be preceded by specific support information, such as the identification of the relevant reference benchmarks enabling the investor to evaluate the performance of its portfolio, the provision of periodic reports on such performance (at least bi-annually), and alert notices each time pre-defined loss thresholds are achieved.

Good practice rules also require that financial intermediaries set up segregated client securities accounts so that these can be ring-fenced on insolvency of the former. Trading in client securities on the financial intermediary's or third parties' behalf is prohibited unless such client otherwise expressly consents to such utilisation, in which case he will have to be provided with details on the transactions involving his securities (responsibilities, risks involved, and restoring conditions).

Central Counterparties, Clearing, and Settlement

The trading on regulated markets or multilateral negotiation systems of options, futures, swaps, future contracts, and other derivatives over underlying securities, currencies, interest rates, indexes commodities, climatic variables, licenses, or other derivatives requires the mandatory intervention of a central counterparty.[13] Authorised credit institutions, settlement system operators, and clearing and central counterparties' operators can act as central counterparties.

13 The rules over the settlement of transactions in securities have been altered (ie, upgraded) in order to encompass the new reality of settlement systems now being intertwined, and a number of related issues have since been regulated (for instance, regulating where the liability ultimately lies in such intricate scenarios).

Securities settlement systems of capital markets operating in Portugal are created by written agreement under which common rules and standard procedures are adopted for the execution of transfer orders for securities between participants (which may include credit institutions, authorised investment companies, public entities, clearance agents, central counterparties, and settlement agents). With the exception of those managed by the Bank of Portugal, settlement systems must be recognised by way of registration with the CMVM. Only authorised credit institutions with activity in Portugal and centralized securities systems can act as settlement agents.

The settlement system that operates in the Portuguese regulated markets is managed by Interbolsa — Sociedade Gestora de Sistemas de Liquidação e de Sistemas Centralizados de Valores Mobiliários, S.A. Interbolsa settles market operations involving stocks, bonds, and notes and Eurosystem credit operations collateralised by Treasury bonds and private paper. In addition to its tasks as central securities depositary (registration, deposit, and safekeeping of securities) and settlement system, Interbolsa acts as the national securities numbering agency.

LCHClearnet, S.A. operates as a clearing house and as central counterparty for the operations carried out in the Euronext group markets, including Euronext Lisbon, in the spot market, and in the derivative market. In its capacity as clearing house and central counterparty, LCHClearnet's functions include registration, clearing, settlement, collateral management, and risk management associated with the operations carried out in Euronext Lisbon.

Public Offerings

In General

The Portuguese regulation of public offers reflects the conciliation achieved by the EU Member States covered by the Takeover Directive, the Prospectus Directive, and the Transparency Directive. Public offers are offers of securities addressed, in whole or in part, to unidentified addressees. The following offers are always deemed public:

- Offers addressed to all the shareholders of a public company, even if its share capital is represented by nominative shares;
- Offers that, in whole or in part, are preceded or accompanied by promotional material or book-building with unidentified addressees; and
- Offers addressed to at least 150 non-qualified investors who are domiciled in Portugal.

Offers concerning securities only addressed to institutional investors and subscription offers by non-public companies, addressed to their shareholders, and except for those cases described in the preceding paragraph, are considered private. The regulations are applicable to all offers specifically addressed to investors resident or established in Portugal (irrespective of the law regulating the securities object of the offer or the applicable statutory law of the offeror or issuer). The following types of offers are excluded from the provisions of the Securities Code:

- Public distribution offers of debt securities issued by an EU member state or one of its regional or local authorities and public offers of securities that are unconditionally and irrevocably guaranteed by one of such states or authorities;
- Public distribution offers of securities issued by the European Central Bank or by the central bank of one of the EU Member States;
- Offers on securities issued by an open-ended collective investment fund, made by the issuer or on its behalf;
- Offers on or through a market registered with the CMVM that are presented exclusively through the market's own means of communication and that are not preceded or accompanied by promotional material or prospecting or book building from unspecified addressees;
- Public offers of securities with a nominal value of €100,000 or more or with a subscription or purchase price equal or above such amount;
- Public offers of debt securities issued by international public bodies to which one or more Member States belong;
- Public offers issued by associations or non-profit entities, recognised by a member state, with the purpose of obtaining funds for their non-profit activities;
- Public offers of debt securities issued in a sequential or repeated manner by credit institutions, so long as these securities are not subordinated, convertible, or exchangeable; do not grant the right to acquire other securities or are associated with a derivative instrument; certify the receipt of reimbursable funds; and are covered by the Bank of Portugal Deposit Guarantee Fund or a similar deposit guarantee scheme;
- Public offers of debt securities issued in a sequential or repeated manner by credit institutions with a total value (in the previous 12-month period) of below €75 million, so long as these securities are not subordinated, convertible, or exchangeable and do not grant the right to subscribe or acquire other securities or are associated with a derivative instrument;
- Public offers of securities with a total value below €5 million in a 12-month period;
- Public offers of shares issued to replace shares already issued in the same class, if the issue of these new shares does not imply a share capital increase;
- Public offers of securities issued by collective investment undertakings; and
- Public offers of debt securities with a maturity of less than one year.

Registration, Approval, Documentation, and Publicity

Without prejudice of the above exclusions, distribution offers prospectuses are subject to prior approval and takeover bids are further subject to prior registration with the CMVM.

The request for approval of the prospectuses or registration must include the following documents (unless updated versions of the same are already in the possession of the CMVM):

- Resolution launching the offer adopted by the offeror's competent statutory body, and of the required management decisions;
- Issuer's and offeror's up-to-date by-laws and commercial registry certificates;
- Management and financial reports of the statutory auditing body as well as the audit reports covering the issuer's accounts for the periods set out in EC Regulation Number 809/2004 (ie, 2004 onwards);
- Report or statement from an independent auditor;
- Identification code (ISIN) of the securities which are the object of the offer;
- Copy of the agreement entered into with the financial intermediary assisting in the operation;
- Copy of the underwriting agreement and the underwriting consortium agreement, if applicable;
- Copy of the market placement agreement, stabilisation agreement, and the 'greenshoe' (over-allotment) agreement, if such agreements exist;
- Draft prospectus;
- Pro forma financial information (if applicable);
- Draft public offer announcement; and
- Expert reports (if applicable).

The CMVM also may request from the offeror or the issuer any complementary information that it thinks useful. The offeror must be informed within eight days of the takeover registration or its respective refusal and within 10 days of the public distribution offer prospectus approval or refusal, save in the cases where the issuer has not previously carried out any public distribution offer or admission to a regulated market, in which case the period is extended to 20 working days.

Registration of the takeover and approval of the prospectus may only be refused when (having given the applicant the opportunity to remedy the same) any of the documents used in the preparation of the request is false or does not conform to the legal or regulatory requirements or, in the case of takeover registrations only, registration of the offer is illegal or fraudulent.

All of the publicity materials related to a specified public offer are subject to prior approval by the CMVM, which may authorise advertising in advance of the approval of the prospectus or registration of the offer, as long as it does not cause problems to the addressees or to the market.

Launch, Execution, and Amendments

All public offerings of securities in relation to which the drafting of a prospectus is mandatory require the intervention of a financial intermediary, who will provide at least assistance and placement services, in public offers for distribution and assistance services in the context of takeover bids, following the preliminary announcement as well as receipt of acceptance orders. Compulsory intermediation can nevertheless be provided by the offeror itself if it is duly authorised to act as a financial intermediary.

The price of the offer is a single one, except for the possibility of different prices according to different classes of securities or addressees, fixed in objective terms and in the legitimate interest of the offeror. The offer can only be subject to conditions that correspond to the offeror's legitimate interest and that do not affect the normal functioning of the market — it can never be subject to conditions the verification of which depends on the offeror.

The acceptance of the offer by the addressees is made through an order addressed to a financial intermediary, which can be revoked up to five days before the offer's deadline or within a shorter term if set out in the offer documentation. At the end of the offer period, the offer result is immediately assessed and disclosed by a financial intermediary who gathers all the acceptances received, or in a special regulated market session. In the case of a public distribution offer, the financial intermediary or the operator of the regulated market also must inform if admission to trading on a regulated market has been applied for.

In the case of an increase in the risks of an offer due to an unforeseen and substantial modification of the circumstances on which, as known to the addressees, the decision to launch the offer was based, the offeror may, within a reasonable period and by means of the CMVM's authorisation, modify or revoke the offer. This is the only circumstance under which the offeror may revoke the offer. The offeror may also modify the offer by reducing the price initially announced by at least 2 per cent and by reviewing the consideration as to its nature and amount up to five days before expiry of the bid period (a reviewed bid cannot contain conditions making it less favourable and its consideration must be at least 2 per cent greater than the preceding offer as to its amount.)

Prospectus Requirements and Liability

As a general principle, the launch of any public offer of securities must be preceded by the publication of a prospectus approved by the CMVM, but the following types of public offers are exempt from this requirement:

- Offers of securities as a result of a merger or de-merger, to at least 150 shareholders who are not qualified investors (so long as a document is made available to these with information that the CMVM considers equivalent to that of a prospectus);
- Payment of dividends in the form of shares of the same class as those that granted the right to the dividend (so long as an informative document is prepared containing the number and nature of the shares and the reasons and characteristics of the offer); and

- Offers of securities to management or employees by their employer (or a subsidiary of their employer) when the latter has listed securities (so long as an informative document is prepared containing the number and nature of the shares and the reasons and characteristics of the offer).

The issuer also may prepare a basic prospectus (which must be the subject of an addendum whenever updated information is available), for public offers of debt securities, including warrants, issued in the context of a programme (ie, at least two issues during a 12-month period) or debt securities issued continuously or repeatedly by a credit institution (so long as the amounts received are used to invest in assets that secure the liabilities of these securities until their maturity date and, in case of insolvency of the issuer, the amounts are used on a priority basis to pay the principal and interest of the securities). The contents of such base prospectus are defined in EC Regulation Number 809/2004.

A prospectus must include information on the individuals who are responsible for its content, the objectives of the offer, the issuer and its activity, the offeror and its activity, the issuer's corporate governance structure, the name of the members of the issuer's and the offeror's statutory bodies, and the financial intermediaries that are members of the underwriting consortium, when such exists. In addition to these, specific information requirements must be included according to each type of offer as described below.

The prospectus of a public distribution offer (to which EC Regulation 809/2004 also applies) must include a summary that refers to the essential characteristics of the offer and the risk factors associated with the issuer, the guarantor (if applicable), and the securities object of the offer. If the public distribution offer affects securities already admitted or expected to be admitted to trading on a regulated market situated or functioning in Portugal or in any other EU member state, a single prospectus satisfying the requirements for both effects can be approved and used.

When the definitive price or the number of the securities object of the offer cannot be stated precisely, the prospectus may omit this information so long as the criteria for determining these factors is set out, and the addressees may cancel their orders within at least two working days after the factors are fixed. Takeover prospectuses also must include information on:

- The consideration offered and its justification;
- The minimum and maximum amounts of securities that the offeror intends to acquire;
- The percentage of voting rights that can be exercised by the offeror in the target company and by the target company in the offeror company as well as the identification of the persons that may be related with qualified shareholders of the offeror or the offeree;
- An indication of the securities that have been acquired in the previous six months by the issuer, of the same class as those that are the object of the offer, with acquisition dates, amount, and consideration paid;

- The offeror's intentions with regard to continuity or modification of the business activity developed by the target company and, insofar as it is affected by the bid, the offeror company and, in the same terms, companies that have a control or group relationship with the offeror or offeree, consequences in terms of personnel policy, place of business, and financial strategy, maintenance of the public company status, and admission on a regulated market of the securities which are the object of the offer;
- The possible implications of the success of the offer on the offeror's financial situation as well as in the funding of the bid;
- The shareholders' agreements entered into by the offeror with significant influence over the target company;
- The agreements entered into between the offeror and any persons related with qualified shareholders or members of the corporate bodies of the target company;
- The method of payment of the consideration when the securities that are the object of the offer are also admitted to trading on a regulated market situated or functioning abroad;
- The compensation proposed in the event of removal of rights with the form of payment and method used to calculate its amount;
- The domestic legislation that will apply to agreements entered into by the offeror and holders of securities in the offeree company, following acceptance of a bid, as well as the courts having jurisdiction to resolve any disputes resulting therefrom; and
- Any charges to be borne by the addressees of the bid.

If the consideration consists of securities, issued or to be issued, the prospectus must include all information which would be required if the securities were the object of a public offer for sale or subscription. At the request of the issuer or offeror, the CMVM may authorise the omission from the prospectus of information the disclosure of which would be contrary to the public interest, or seriously detrimental to the issuer, as long as such omission would not be likely to mislead the public with regard to facts or circumstances, the knowledge of which is essential for the assessment of the securities which are the object of the offer or if such information is not material. The prospectus may only be disclosed after approval by the CMVM, and must be made available to the public in reasonable advance of the offer launch by way of:

- Publication in one or more newspapers of mass circulation throughout the country;
- In the form of a brochure available, free of charge, to the public, in particular at the offeror's and issuer's headquarters, at the headquarters and branches of the financial intermediaries in charge of gathering the addressee's orders, and at the headquarters of the operator of the regulated markets in which the securities are or will be admitted to trading; or

- In the website of the issuer, the financial intermediaries responsible for underwriting the offer, the regulated market where listing has been sought, or the CMVM.

If either of the first two methods is used, the prospectus also must be made available in electronic format in one of the sites referred to in the last point. The CMVM is the competent entity to approve a prospectus of public distribution offers where the issuers have their registered offices in Portugal, in the case of shares and other securities that give right to their subscription (and as long as the issuer also is the issuer of the underlying securities), with a par value of below €1,000.

The member states where the issuer has his registered office or in which the securities have been or will be admitted to trading or offered to the public are, at the option of the issuer or the offeror, competent in relation to distribution offers of debt securities and other securities that give right to their subscription or equivalent cash amounts (as long as the issuer of such securities is not simultaneously the issuer of the underlying securities or a group member of such issuer) with a par value of more than €1,000. The CMVM may delegate its approval powers in relation to a prospectus to an authority in another member state, with the latter's agreement and with notice to the European Securities and Markets Agency.

A prospectus approved in another member state for a public distribution offering to be made in Portugal and in another member state is valid in Portugal so long as the CMVM receives an approval certificate from the authority of the other member state and a copy of the approved prospectus (with a translation of the summary).

The prospectus of a takeover bid over securities admitted to trading on a regulated market situated or operating in Portugal and approved by a competent authority of another member state will be recognised by the CMVM, provided that such prospectus is translated into Portuguese and that a certificate, issued by the competent authority responsible for approval of the prospectus, stating that the prospectus meets the relevant Community and national provisions, accompanied by the approved prospectus, is made available to the CMVM. The CMVM may require that any supplementary information resulting from the specificities of the Portuguese regime concerning formalities relating to consideration payment, acceptance of the bid, and tax regime applicable thereto be added to the prospectus.

The offeror, the members of the offeror's management body, the issuer, the members of the issuer's management body, the promoters (in the case of offer for subscription for the incorporation of a company), the members of the auditing body, accounting firms, and any other individuals that have certified or, in any other way, verified the accounting documents on which the prospectus is based, the financial intermediaries in charge of assisting with the offer, and any other entities that agree to be named in the prospectus as being responsible for any information, forecast, or study included in the same are potentially liable for damages caused by errors or inaccuracies in the prospectus, unless they prove they have acted without fault.

Liability can be avoided if any of the individuals concerned prove that the addressee knew or should have known about the deficiency of the prospectus' content on the date of issue of the contractual declaration or when cancellation of the securities transaction was still possible, or if the damages arose from the summary of the prospectus or its translation, unless when read with the rest of the documentation it contained erroneous, misleading, or incompatible information or it doesn't provide fundamental information to allow the investors to determine if and when they should invest in the mentioned securities.

Distribution, Subscription, and Public Sale Offers

Following the implementation of the Prospectus Directive, the former principle of prior registration of all offers was revoked, the current approval of public distribution and subscription offers resulting now from the corresponding prospectus approval.

In relation to public distribution offers, the Securities Code set out a specific information disclosure duty: the issuer, the offeror, and financial intermediaries must, until the information relating to the offer is made public, limit the disclosure of information related to the offer to what is necessary to fulfil the objectives of the offer, warning the addressees as to the privileged nature of the information issued, and limit the use of privileged information to such purposes as necessary for the preparation of the offer.

Additional documentation requirements are imposed for the application for approval of a public subscription offer to incorporate a company, which must include the identification of the promoters, evidence of the subscription of the minimum share capital by the promoters, a copy of the draft by-laws, and a provisional commercial registration certificate. The launch by the same entity of a new public subscription offer of securities of the same kind as those which had been the object of a previous offer, or the launch of a new series, is subject to the prior full payment of the subscription price by all addressees (or giving notice to those that have not yet paid up) of the previous series or issue.

The application for approval of the prospectus of a public sale offer is submitted with documents that evidence that the securities offered have been blocked. The issuer of securities distributed in a public sale offer must provide the offeror, at the latter's expense, with the information and documentation necessary to prepare the prospectus. The Securities Code allows a reduction of not more than 2 per cent of the price first announced in the context of a public sale offer.

The Securities Code allows bookbuilding to determine the viability of a proposed public distribution offer but never in cases of takeovers. Bookbuilding may only commence after the disclosure of the preliminary prospectus, and no offers may be or are made through the bookbuilding process, although more favourable subscription or purchase rights may be offered to those consulted. The preliminary prospectus for bookbuilding purposes is subject to approval by the CMVM.

Takeover Bids

The CMVM will have powers to supervise any takeover bids where the target issuers:

- Have their registered offices in Portugal, provided the securities concerned by the bid are admitted to trading on a regulated market situated or operating in Portugal or are not admitted to trading on a regulated market at all; or
- Are subject to a foreign law, provided that the securities concerned by the bid are admitted exclusively to trading on a regulated market located or operating in Portugal; or, if these are not admitted to trading in the member state where the registered office of the issuer is located, have been first admitted to trading on a regulated market situated or operating in Portugal.

If the admission to trading of the securities concerned by the bid is simultaneous in more than one regulated market of several Member States but does not include the member state where the registered office of the issuer is located, the issuer must, on the first day of trading, choose the competent authority to supervise the bid from among the authorities of such Member States and notify such decision to the regulated markets in question and the corresponding supervisory authorities.

The following rules concerning public offer announcements, duties to report any transactions carried out, issuers' duties, competing offers, and mandatory takeovers are not applicable to takeover bids over securities other than shares or securities incorporating the right to acquire shares. As soon as the decision to launch a takeover is taken, the offeror must address a notice to the CMVM, to the issuer, and to the operators of the markets in which the securities object of the offer or included in the consideration are admitted to trading, and publish a preliminary announcement giving notice as to:

- The identity and head office of the offeror, the target, and the financial intermediary in charge of assisting with the offer;
- The securities object of the offer;
- The consideration offered;
- The percentage of voting rights held in the target company directly by the offeror or by related entities;
- A summary statement of the offeror's intentions, notably with regard to continuity or alteration of the business of the target company and, insofar as it is affected by the bid, the offeror company, and, in the same terms, companies which have group or control relationships with the offeree or offeror companies; and

- The status of the offeror with respect to the management limitations imposed on the target following the offer announcement and on the suspension of statutory limitations to transfer of shares and voting rights.

The determination of a maximum or minimum limit of the quantity of securities to be acquired and the subjection of the offer to any conditions will only be effective to the extent that they are included in the preliminary announcement. The preliminary announcement binds the bidder to launch the offer in terms not less favourable than those disclosed in such document, to apply for the takeover registration within 20 days (this term can be extended up to 60 days by the CMVM), and to inform the workforce representative of the contents of the offer document following its disclosure. Until the publication of such announcement, the offeror, the target, its shareholders, and its service providers are subject to a confidentiality duty.

Consideration for the securities that are the object of the offer can consist of cash, securities (already issued or to be issued), or both. The offeror must deposit the relevant cash amount in a financial institution or present an adequate bank guarantee, before registering the offer. Securities eligible to incorporate the consideration must have adequate liquidity and be easy to value. Should these have already been issued, they must be registered or deposited frozen to the order of the offeror in a centralised securities system or with a financial intermediary.

If these are not issued by the offeror, the preliminary announcement and the public offer announcement of the takeover also must indicate the information relating to the issuer and the securities issued or to be issued by the same, similarly to that contained in the offer announcement. In addition to the above general requirements on prospectuses approval, the application for registration of takeovers submitted to the CMVM should include documents evidencing the following facts:

- Submission of the preliminary announcement, the draft public offer announcement, and the draft prospectus to the target company and to the competent authorities of the regulated markets in which the securities are admitted to trading;
- Deposit of the consideration in money or issue of a bank guarantee which guarantees its payment; and
- Freezing of issued securities comprised in the offer consideration.

As from the publication of the preliminary announcement and until the assessment of the offer's result, the offeror and its entities related to such offerors for the purposes of qualified shareholdings attribution become subject to certain limitations. They cannot trade, outside the regulated market, securities of the class of those which are the object of the offer or of those which comprise the consideration except if authorised by the CMVM with a previous report from the target company, and must inform the CMVM daily of the transactions carried out by each of them relating to the securities issued by the target company or of the class of those which make up the consideration offered.

The securities of the class of those which are the object of the offer, acquired after the publication of the preliminary announcement, will be included in the calculation of the minimum amount which the offeror proposes to acquire. In the context of voluntary takeovers, the CMVM may determine the review of the consideration (if, due to such offeror acquisitions the initial consideration does not appear reasonable) while, in mandatory takeovers, the offeror must raise the consideration up to an amount equal to the highest price paid for the securities acquired. During this same offer period, the target management members must inform the CMVM of any dealings by such entities (or related entities thereto) in securities issued by the target.

The publication of the takeover preliminary announcement also triggers limitations and obligations from the target's perspective. The management body of the target company cannot carry out any acts that materially affect the net asset situation of the target company and which can significantly affect the objectives announced by the offeror (excluding the normal day-to-day management of the company) from the moment it has knowledge of the bid launch decision for a takeover for more than one-third of the securities of the respective class, and until the assessment of the result or until the termination of the respective process.

The scope of this restriction includes execution acts of decisions approved before the above-referred acknowledgment which have not yet been partially or totally implemented (excluding, nevertheless, obligations assumed by the target before such period, acts authorised by a general shareholders' meeting convened for this purpose, and acts intended to seek competing bids).

In addition, within eight days of receipt of the draft prospectuses and announcement of the bid and within five days of disclosure of any addenda to the offer documents, the board of directors of the target company must send to the offeror and the CMVM and disclose to the public a report on the opportunity and terms of the offer, which must include an opinion on the following aspects: type and amount of the consideration offered, offeror's strategic plans for the target company, consequences of the bid on the interests of the target company in general and, in particular, on the interests of its employees and their terms of employment as well in the company's places of business, and the intentions of members of the boards who are simultaneously shareholders in the target company in respect of acceptance of the bid. Should the board receive from the target's employees an opinion on the repercussions of the bid on employment, it must enclose such opinion as an appendix to the board report.

The Takeover Directive also contemplates the abolition of a series of defensive barriers in the context of takeover bids, including non-application of restrictions to the transfer of voting rights or restrictions concerning voting rights or multiple votes. These were implemented by the Securities Code, which now foresees the possibility of public companies introducing statutory suspensions of the effectiveness of restrictions on transfers and voting rights (which will therefore not apply to transfers resulting from acceptance of a bid) if following the launch of a takeover bid the offeror holds at least 75 per cent of the target's voting rights.

This 'breakthrough rule' is nevertheless not mandatory (it can be adopted at the public companies' shareholders' criteria) and subject to the principle of reciprocity (ie, the by-laws can state that the suspension regime does not apply to takeover bids conducted by offerors which are not subject to the same rules). Amendments to public companies' by-laws for the purposes described above must be disclosed to the CMVM and the public when such companies are subject to Portuguese law.

Following approval of the takeover prospectus and registration of the takeover bid by the CMVM, the offeror of a takeover bid must publish a public offer announcement containing the essential elements of the offer, including:

- The identification of offeror, issuer, and financial intermediaries;
- Capacity in which the financial intermediaries act in the offer;
- The type and number of securities object of the offer;
- The type of offer;
- The price and terms of payment;
- The duration of offer period;
- The criteria for over-subscription;
- The conditions precedent for the validity of the offer;
- The percentage of voting rights held by the offeror and related parties in the target company;
- The locations where the prospectus is available; and
- The identification of the entity responsible for the calculation and disclosure of the results of the offer.

The public offer announcement must be published, at the same time the prospectus is disclosed, in a communications media with wide circulation in the country and in a communications media indicated by the operator of the regulated market where the securities are listed.

The offer period for the takeover can vary between two and 10 weeks, counting from the disclosure of the offer announcement. The CMVM, at its discretion or at the request of the offeror, can extend the offer period in case of modifications, launches of competing offers, or when the protection of the interests of the addressees so justifies. Until five days before the end of the term of the offer, the offeror may revise the consideration, in relation to its type or amount. The revised consideration must be at least 2 per cent greater in value than the previous one. The declarations of acceptance of the offer prior to the revision are considered effective for the revised offer.

As from the publication of the preliminary announcement of the takeover for securities admitted to trading on a regulated market, any other takeover of the same class of securities may only be carried out through a competing offer, which will also be subject to the rules applicable to takeover bids. The competing offer must be launched up to five days before the end of the offering period of the initial offer, for a scope at least equivalent to that of the initial offer and for a consideration amount 2 per cent higher than such offer. Entities holding voting rights which can be deemed attributed to the initial offeror are not allowed to launch any competing offer.

Mandatory Takeover Bids and Squeeze-Out Provisions

In accordance with the reasoning that the benefits resulting from the control over public companies should be shared with minority shareholders, the Securities Code sets out a duty to launch a mandatory takeover bid (over the remaining shares and other securities conferring the right to subscribe shares issued by the target) each time a shareholder exceeds, directly or indirectly, one-third and 50 per cent of effective voting rights attributable to the existing share capital of a public company.

However, an effective dominium criteria is adopted, which means that the launch of an offer is not required when the shareholder exceeding the limit of one-third proves that it has neither control of target nor is in a group relationship with such target (but will be under the obligation to notify the CMVM of any increase in aggregate of more than 1 per cent in its voting rights). The one-third trigger can be overruled by the company's by-laws.

The consideration offered in a mandatory takeover context is subject to rigid determination criteria. The amount offered must be the higher of the highest price paid by the offeror (or by any person holding rights which are deemed attributable to the offeror) for acquisition of shares in the six months preceding the publication of the offer announcement or the average price of those securities on the regulated market during the same period.

Furthermore, if the bidder chooses to offer securities as consideration, it must designate a cash alternative of equivalent value. If the consideration cannot be calculated by reference to the criteria referred to above or if the CMVM decides that the consideration, in cash or securities, proposed by the offeror is not justified or equitable, or is insufficient or excessive, the minimum consideration will be calculated, at the offeror's expense, by an independent auditor designated by the CMVM.

Exemptions to the mandatory bid rule are foreseen when the thresholds are exceeded as a result of the acquisition of securities in the course of a takeover launched without any restriction relative to the quantity or maximum percentage of securities to be acquired, the execution of a financial redress plan, or the merger of companies, as long as the resolution of the general meeting of the potential target expressly specifies that the merger would result in the duty to launch a mandatory takeover. The exemption must be recognised by way of a declaration issued by the CMVM at the request of the interested party and published immediately. The duty to launch a takeover can otherwise be suspended if the entity bound by it undertakes to terminate the situation triggering the duty to launch the takeover in the following 120 days, by way of written notice addressed to the CMVM.

Squeeze-out procedures apply to bidders that, following a takeover offer, acquire (directly or indirectly) 90 per cent of the voting rights (up to the determination of the outcome of the bid) corresponding to the share capital of a public company subject to Portuguese statutory law and 90 per cent of the voting rights covered by the bid, and who may compulsorily acquire the remaining shares of the company for a fair consideration in cash, within three months after the assessment of the offer's result.

The squeeze-out procedure entails the publication of a preliminary announcement which must be sent to the CMVM for registration and deposit of the consideration on behalf of the holders of the remaining shares with a credit institution. The compulsory acquisition becomes effective on publication of the offer registration with the CMVM and implies the immediate loss of public company status, as well as the exclusion of the securities from the relevant regulated market.

If the squeeze-out procedure is not timely initiated by the offeror, the holders of the remaining shares can, within three months after the assessment of the offer's result, exercise their rights to sell out, addressing the controlling shareholder an invitation to make a proposal to acquire their shares within eight days.

If no offer or a non-satisfactory offer is received, the remaining shareholders can decide to compulsory sell out by providing the CMVM with a notice to this end with evidence enclosed of the deposit or freezing of the shares and account of the consideration calculated according to criteria set in the Securities Code. In such cases, the sale becomes effective from the date of CMVM notification to the controlling shareholder.

Criminal Offences

Insider Dealing and Market Manipulation

Any one who holds privileged information due to their capacity as member of a managing or supervisory body of an issuer or as shareholder, or due to their profession or public function or having otherwise obtained the information illicitly, and who passes on this information to someone outside the regular scope of its functions or, based on this information, trades or advises someone to trade in securities or in other financial instruments, or orders their subscription, acquisition, sale, or exchange, directly or indirectly, on their own account or for third parties, is punishable with imprisonment for a maximum of five years or with a fine up to a maximum of 360 days.

For the purposes of insider-dealing provisions, privileged information is understood to be all non-public information that, being accurate and with respect to any issuer or securities or other financial instruments, would be capable, if it were given publicity, of influencing in a sensitive manner its price in the market.

Entities which are not listed above but who have access and pass on such information or trade or advise someone to trade in similar conditions (tippers) are also subject to imprisonment for a maximum of four years and fines of a maximum of 240 days.

Market manipulation practices include disclosure of false, incomplete, exaggerated, or biased information and effecting fictitious operations or fraudulent practices capable of artificially varying the regular functioning of the securities or other financial instruments market so as to change the conditions of price development, the regular conditions of offer or demand, or the normal conditions of issue and acceptance of a public offering. Such actions are punishable with imprisonment for a maximum of five years or a fine up to a maximum of 360 days.

The members of the managing entity and those responsible for the direction or inspection of areas of activity of a financial intermediary who, being aware of the facts above described, performed by persons directly subject to their direction or inspection and in the performance of their functions, do not stop them immediately, will be co-liable and subject to imprisonment for a maximum of four years or a fine payable up to a maximum of 240 days, if a more serious punishment is not applicable under any other legal provision.

Proceedings

The attempt of any of the two above crimes also will be punished, even if the criminal act does not reach its execution. Once the facts that may be qualified as crimes against the securities or other financial instruments have been established, the executive board of the CMVM may determine the commencement of preliminary investigation proceedings. The process of investigation is initiated and directed by the executive board of the CMVM, which can require the defendant to present all necessary explanations, information, documents, objects, and elements required to confirm or deny the suspicion of crime against the securities or other financial instruments market.

For this purpose, the CMVM may proceed with the seizure and inspection of any documents, independently of their media, assets, or objects associated with the possible practice of crimes against the securities or other financial instruments market, or proceed with the sealing of objects not seized in the premises of the persons and entities subject to their supervision, to the extent necessary for the investigation of the possible existence of crimes against the securities or other financial instruments market.

The CMVM also may apply the following accessory penalties to any insider dealer or market manipulator disqualification, for a period not exceeding five years, of the practice by the agent of the profession or activity associated with the crime, including prohibition of the practice of management, direction, command, or inspection and, in general, representation of any financial intermediary, in the scope of some or all intermediary activities in securities or in other financial instruments, and publication of the condemnation sentence, at the expense of the defendant, in locations adequate to satisfy the objectives of general prevention of the legal system and the protection of the securities or other financial instruments market. The perpetrator of the crime will also be obliged to deliver any benefits received from the committed crimes.

Misdemeanors

The Securities Code also contains a long list of actions qualified as misdemeanors which may incur fines, quantified depending on the seriousness of the action:

- Between €25,000 and €5 million when very serious;
- Between €12,500 and €2.5 million when serious; and
- Between €2,500 and €500,000 when qualified as less serious.[14]

Very serious misdemeanors include the following actions: disclosure of information that is not complete, true, updated, clear, objective, and licit; the failure to submit documents to the Information Disclosure System of the CMVM; and failure to communicate or publish qualified holdings, transfer of frozen securities, execution of a public offering without approval of the prospectus or prior registration with the CMVM, and non-launching of a mandatory takeover.[15]

Jurisdictional Conflicts

In General

The revised Securities Code recognised the inadequacy of the existing general rules adopted by law or international conventions such as the Rome or Hague Convention to determine the law which should govern multinational situations arising from the internationalisation of the securities markets.

Accordingly, the Securities Code has adopted specific rules on jurisdiction conflicts, setting out both multilateral and unilateral techniques to settle potential jurisdiction conflicts.

14 Misdemeanors are punishable whether intentional or solely negligent, and attempt also is punishable.

15 On 24 May 2011, Law Number 46/2011 was enacted and, as from its entry into force, a new court (specialised in competition, financial regulation, and supervision) has been set up in order to, notably, rule on appeals of decisions or any other legally challengeable measures taken by the CMVM, under misdemeanor procedures.

Multilateral Approaches — Procedural Solutions

The Securities Code provides bilateral conflict of laws rules which do not provide material solution to the relevant situation but, instead, determine the law which should govern such situation (which in actual fact can either be Portuguese or foreign law) according to a specified connection factor.

As a general principle, the conflict of law rules in the Securities Code also allocate directly the material law rules applicable by the foreign system, therefore excluding the possibility that the resolution of the conflict be forwarded to another system of law by the foreign conflict of law rules. Among the unilateral solutions adopted are:

- The capacity to issue securities where the form of its representation will be ruled by the lex personalis of the issuer, which is primarily determined by the company's head office;
- As a general rule, the contents of the securities will also be ruled by the lex personalis, but the Securities Code grants the issuer of bonds or debt security the possibility to elect another jurisdiction, as long as the choice of law is mentioned in the offering registration; and
- The assignment and granting of security over specified securities will be governed, as to securities integrated in a centralised system, by the law of the state in which the entity managing such system is located; as to registered or deposited securities not integrated in a centralised system, by the law of the state in which the entity where such securities are registered or deposited is located; and, as to securities which are neither integrated in a centralised system nor registered or deposited, by the lex personalis of the issuer.

Unilateral Approaches

In most cases, the private international law solutions adopted in the Securities Code represent unilateral approaches, where substantive material law solutions (which directly regulate international situations, instead of designating the applicable law) are provided.

Rules of Mandatory Application

The Securities Code also provides rules which demand mandatory application, even in the context of international situations that would otherwise be subject to foreign law in accordance with the general Portuguese conflict of law rules, provided that a material connection can be established between such situations and the Portuguese jurisdiction.

Such material connection to the Portuguese territory will be likely to exist when orders are addressed to regulated markets members or multilateral negotiation systems (multilateral negotiation systems) members registered with the CMVM, and operations are carried out therein, activities are carried out, and acts are performed in Portugal, or diffusion of information is made accessible in Portugal making reference to situations, activities, or acts regulated by Portuguese law.

Introduction

Regulatory System

The Romanian securities system is placed under the authority of the National Securities Commission (Comisia Naţională a Valorilor Mobiliare, the CNVM), which is one of the four regulatory and supervisory authorities in the Financial Services sector (together with the National Bank of Romania, the Insurance Supervisory Commission, and the Commission for Supervision of the Private Pensions System).

The first law to regulate (in a somewhat consistent manner) the securities system was Government Ordinance Number 18/1993 regarding the regulation of off-market transactions with securities and the organization of intermediation institutions. This legislation established the Securities Agency (Agentia de Valori Mobiliare) as a general department within the Ministry of Finance and introduced some general rules as regards intermediation activities, investors' protection and public offers.

However, it would be reasonable to argue that the first major piece of legislation of the securities sector was Law Number 52/1994 on securities and stock exchanges, which regulated the statute of the CNVM as an autonomous administrative authority with legal personality and laid down the general rules applicable to securities, public offers, intermediation of securities, organization and functioning of stock exchanges, stock exchange operations, and investor protection.

It was repealed by Government Emergency Ordinance Number 28/2002 on securities, investment services, and regulated markets, which brought a substantially wider regulation of the securities system. In consideration of the expected accession of Romania to the European Union (EU) in 2007, Law Number 297/2004 on capital market (the "Capital Market Law") repealed Government Emergency Ordinance Number 28/2002 and implemented EU rules in the securities sector, mainly:

- Council Directive 93/22/EEC of 10 May 1993 on investment services in the securities field (the "Investment Services Directive");

- Directive 2003/71/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 4 November 2003 on the prospectus to be published when securities are offered to the public or admitted to trading and amending Directive 2001/34/EC (the "Prospectus Directive");
- Council Directive of 20 December 1985 on the coordination of laws, regulations, and administrative provisions relating to undertakings for collective investment in transferable securities (UCITS) (the "UCITS III Directive"); and
- Directive 2003/6/EEC on market abuse (the "Market Abuse Directive").

Regard also should be had to Law Number 31/1990 on trading companies (the "Company Law"), which is the core regulation for companies, laying down the basic rules regarding the establishment and functioning of companies, their administration, corporate governance rules and specific provisions concerning share capital alterations, amendments of the articles of incorporation, mergers and spin-offs, and liquidation and dissolution.

Legal Sources

As mentioned above, the most important legislation in the securities area is the Capital Market Law, which sets out the general rules as regards:

- Intermediaries;
- Regulated Markets for financial instruments and the Central Depository;
- Market operations;
- Issuers; and
- Market abuse.

The Capital Market Law no longer regulates the statute of the CNVM, which is currently governed by Government Emergency Ordinance Number 25/2002 regarding the approval of the Statute of the National Securities Commission (the "the CNVM Statute"). Other important legislation includes:

- Law Number 253/2004 on settlement finality in payment and securities settlement systems, implementing Directive 98/26/EC on settlement finality in payment and securities settlement systems;
- CNVM Regulation Number 1/2006 on issuers and securities operations by which there were implemented, partially or entirely, the provisions of the Prospectus Directive, the Market Abuse Directive, Directive 2004/39/EC on markets in financial instruments (the "MiFID"), Directive 2004/25/EC on takeover bids, and Directive 2004/109/EC on the harmonization of transparency requirements in relation to information about issuers whose securities are admitted to trading on a regulated market;
- CNVM Regulation Number 2/2006 on regulated markets and alternative trading systems, by which some of the provisions of MiFID were implemented and which regulates in a detailed manner the set-up, authorization and functioning of regulated markets, market operators (ie, stock exchanges), alternative trading systems, and system operators;

- CNVM Regulation Number 15/2004 on the authorization and functioning of management companies, undertakings for collective investments and depositories, partially transposing into the Romanian legislation the provisions of the UCITS III Directive; and
- CNVM Regulation Number 13/2005 on the authorization and functioning of the central depository, clearinghouses, and central counterparty.

The Government enacted GEO 32/2012 on undertakings for collective investments in transferrable securities and asset management companies, as well as amending Law Number 297/2004 (the 'UCITS Ordinance'). The legislation repealed the UCITS chapter formerly regulated by the Capital Market Law and is the main legislative act regulating UCITS and asset-management companies.

Moreover, the UCITS Ordinance implemented the provisions of Directive 2009/65/EC on the coordination of laws, regulations, and administrative provisions relating to undertakings for collective investment in transferable securities (the 'UCITS IV Directive').

Authorities and Procedure

The securities system's regulatory authority is the CNVM. According to the CNVM Statute, the CNVM is an autonomous administrative authority, independent, self-financed, and having a legal personality. The CNVM regulates and supervises the capital market, commodities and financial derivatives regulated markets, as well as the institutions, instruments and specific operations of those markets and represents the competent regulatory authority in Romania, as indicated under article 22 in Regulation (EC) 1060/2009 on credit rating agencies. The CNVM has the fundamental objectives to:

- Establish and maintain the framework for development of financial instruments markets;
- Promote confidence in financial instruments markets and investments in financial instruments;
- Ensure protection for operators and investors against unfair, abusive and fraudulent practices;
- Promote a correct and transparent functioning of financial instruments markets;
- Prevent the fraud and manipulation of the market and to ensure the financial instruments markets' integrity;
- Set standards of financial soundness and honest practice on financial instruments markets;
- Adopt the necessary measures in order to avoid systemic risk on the financial instruments markets;

- Prevent the impairment of equal information and treatment of investors on financial instruments markets; and
- Cooperate with similar international authorities, in order to achieve its objectives.

In order to meet its most important objectives, the CNVM must be previously consulted by any public authority that intends to issue a legislative act that has an impact over the capital market, commodities and financial derivatives regulated markets, as well as the institutions, instruments, and specific operations of those markets. The CNVM is competent to supervise the activity of the regulated entities and may apply various sanctions for breaches of the securities legislation, such as warning, fine, and complementary contravention sanctions, such as suspension of authorization, withdrawal of authorization, or temporary prohibition of performance of activities and services that fall under the remit of the law.

The National Bank of Romania is the regulatory authority of the banking sector, thus regulating and supervising an important category of the intermediaries that are allowed to perform investment services, i.e., credit institutions. The National Bank of Romania performs its supervisory attributions under Government Emergency Ordinance Number 99/2006 on credit institutions and capital adequacy, as well as Law Number 312/2004 on the Statute of the National Bank of Romania.

Legal Order and Regulatory Interests

Admission

Market Participants

Domestic Exchanges. Two stock exchanges operate in Romania. The Bucharest Stock Exchange[1] (Bursa de Valori Bucureşti, the BVB) was founded and inaugurated in 1882, but was dissolved after the taking over of the Communist regime in Romania in 1948. Its re-inauguration took place in 1995, as a consequence of the Romanian Revolution in December 1989 that led to the abolishment of the Communist regime.

The BVB's role "is to provide a marketplace for securities transactions, to enhance liquidity of securities by concentrating a large volume of supplies and demands to the market, to form fair prices that appropriately reflect such supply-demand relationship, and to distribute such prices to the public".

The BVB is both a market operator and a system operator. The BVB operates the Regulated Market, including a well-developed spot market and less-utilized derivatives market. The BVB also operates the RASDAQ market, which was initially an electronic market established based on the public pattern of the 1 See http://www.bvb.ro.

American NASDAQ and which for a very long period holds an uncertain legal regime, without being qualified as a regulated market, whilst some of the legal provisions applicable to the regulated market are also applicable to RASDAQ.

On the RASDAQ market, there are listed many Romanian companies which have undergone a privatization process in the 1990s. It is envisaged that by the end of 2012 the RASDAQ listed companies which have the best performance will be transferred to the Regulated Market operated by the BVB, while the rest of the companies will be included in the Alternative Trading System (ATS) which also is operated by the BVB in its capacity as system operator.

The most recent initial public offering within the BVB was that of Fondul Proprietatea (Property Fund), a sui generis closed-end investment company which was established by the Romanian State with a view to indemnify past owners which had been expropriated by the Communist regime in the late 1940s and 1950s. Fondul Proprietatea has a capitalization of approximately €4 billion.

The Sibiu Stock Exchange (SIBEX) is the second Romanian stock exchange and was known as the Monetary Financial and Commodities Stock Exchange in Sibiu (BMFM). SIBEX was established in 1994 but was only authorized by the CNVM as a market operator in 2003. As with the BVB, SIBEX is a market operator and a system operator, operating a regulated market and an alternative trading system. Contrary to the BVB, the strongest market operated by SIBEX is the derivatives market. In 1997, it launched the first derivatives products, futures contracts. In 1998, options on futures were implemented; in 2009, CFDs (contracts for difference); in 2010, shares; and, in 2011, binary options.

Transborder Electronic Trading Systems. Pursuant to the Capital Market Law, the central depository is a legal person, established as a joint-stock company, authorized and regulated by the CNVM, which performs deposit operations in connection with securities, as well as other related operations. The central depository also carries out clearing and settlement operations in relation to securities transactions.

The BVB and SIBEX have their own central depositories, which perform all the relevant operations provided by the law for the transactions taking place on the respective markets. The Central Depository[2] (Depozitarul Central) is a privately owned company controlled by the BVB as its majority shareholder. It was founded and started its activity in 2007 and is a member of the European Central Securities Depositories Association (ECSDA).

Crossborder transactions have only recently been implemented, mainly by means of bilateral agreements between the Central Depository and other depositories in Europe and the United States. The Central Depository established a direct connection with Clearstream Banking Luxemburg in 2009 (which only allows trading of bonds issued by the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development). The Central Depository has crossborder connections with 18 countries (South Africa, Austria, Belgium, Czech Republic, Denmark, Switzerland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Luxemburg, the United Kingdom, The Netherlands, Poland, Spain, the United States, Sweden, and Hungary) and provides the possibility of settlement operations in 11 foreign currencies.

Off-Market Transactions. The Over-the-Counter (OTC) system is not widely functional in Romania, despite public pressure from the largest investment firms on the market. The Romanian regulatory framework allows over-the-counter transactions, but such transactions are not practically possible due to the lack of rules issued by the Central Depository, which would be necessary for the transactions to be effectively implemented.

A single OTC transaction was performed in January 2012 (and it only involved shares of a foreign issuer primarily listed on a foreign market and listed on the BVB) since January 2012, approximately 20 over-the-counter transactions have been concluded. The Central Depository has approved rules implementing OTC turnaround transactions, which also must be approved by the CNVM before becoming applicable.

Securities

National Treatment and Reciprocity. The admission requirements for securities are determined by each market or system operator (BVB or SIBEX), by means of their internal regulations (which need to be approved by the CNVM, in order to enter into force). The Capital Market Law only states some general principles as regards admission to trading on a regulated market and states that securities which do not qualify for being admitted to trading on a regulated market may be admitted to trading on an alternative trading system.

Market and system operators are responsible for adopting specific regulations regarding the requirements for admission to trading. The CNVM issues regulations regarding the admission to trading on a regulated market of securities issued by non-residents. The general principle remains that the admission to trading on a regulated market can only be performed subject to the publication of a prospectus pre-approved by the CNVM.

Issuer Requirements. Pursuant to the Capital Market Law, in order for an issuer's securities to be admitted to trading on a regulated market, the issuer must observe the following requirements:

- The company must be established and function in accordance with the legal provisions;
- The company must have an anticipated capitalization of at least €1 million in RON equivalent or, to the extent that the capitalization cannot be anticipated, the capital and reserves, including profit and loss from the last financial year, of at least €1 million equivalent in RON calculated according to the National Bank of Romania exchange rate, at the date of application for admission to trading; and

- The company must have functioned for the last three years prior to application for admission to trading and must have drafted and submitted financial statements for that period, in accordance with the legal provisions.

Subject to obtaining an approval from the CNVM, the above-mentioned requirements may be circumvented, in case it is recognized that:

- There will be an adequate market for such shares; and
- The issuer will be able to fulfill the continuous and periodic information requirements arising from the admission to trading, and investors will have the necessary information in order to knowingly evaluate the company and shares admitted to trading.

The BVB Code (the internal regulation, approved by the CNVM, which regulates the organization and functioning of the BVB) provides more details with regard to the conditions that must be observed by the issuers, depending on the specific category in which the securities are intended to be traded. For example, in order for the issuer to trade shares on the first category of the Regulated Market, it must:

- Be a company which has completed a public offer for sale of shares, in order to be admitted to trading, under an offer prospectus approved by the CNVM or a company that has a prospectus prepared for the purpose of being admitted for trading, approved by the CNVM;
- Submit to the BVB, through the initiating company, all required documents;
- Pay all the charges due to the BVB, in accordance with its rules, and have no debts towards the BVB;
- Appoint two individuals to maintain a permanent contact with the BVB;
- Adhere to the conditions and terms of admission and maintenance of shares trading commitment;
- Own capital value from the last financial year of at least of €30 million in RON equivalent, calculated at the National Bank of Romania exchange rate from the date of request for admission to trading submitted to the BVB or have anticipated capitalization of at least of €30 million in RON equivalent, calculated at the National Bank of Romania exchange rate from the date of request for admission to trading submitted to the BVB;
- Have gained net profit in the last two years of activity;
- Present a business plan for at least the next three calendar years; and
- Submit to the BVB a presentation memorandum with its informational structure approved by the BVB Council.

Second-category issuers must own capital value from the last financial year to be at least €2 million in RON equivalent, calculated at the National Bank of Romania exchange rate from the date of request for admission to trading submitted to the BVB or have anticipated capitalization to be at least €2 million in RON equivalent, calculated at the National Bank of Romania exchange rate from the date of request for admission to trading submitted to the BVB.

A third-category issuer must be a innovative and dynamic company with growth potential, have, in principle, in its business activity the development and implementation of new technologies in areas such as medicine, biotechnology, agriculture technology, telecommunications, and computer technology, and own capital value from the last financial year of at least €1 million in RON equivalent, calculated at the National Bank of Romania exchange rate from the date of request for admission to trading submitted to the BVB or have anticipated capitalization of at least €1 million in RON equivalent, calculated at the National Bank of Romania exchange rate from the date of request for admission to trading submitted to the BVB.

In the case of bonds issued by companies, public authorities, or international bodies, it is necessary for the issuer to be set up and perform its activity in compliance with the relevant legislative framework. For shares which will be admitted to trading on the international category of the Regulated Market, besides the general conditions to be observed by all issuers, the issuer must own capital value from the last financial year to be at least €1 million in RON equivalent, calculated at the National Bank of Romania exchange rate from the date of request for admission to trading submitted to the BVB or have anticipated capitalization to be at least €1,000,000 in RON equivalent, calculated at the National Bank of Romania exchange rate from the date of request for admission to trading submitted to the BVB.

Securities Requirements. In accordance with the Capital Market Law, shares that are to be admitted to trading on a regulated market must be freely negotiable and fully paid. In order for their admission to trading to be approved, a sufficient number of shares must be distributed to the public. Such sufficient number of shares is deemed to have been distributed if:

- Shares in respect of which the application for admission has been made are distributed to the public to the extent of at least 25 per cent of the subscribed capital, represented by this category of shares; and
- Proper market operation is ensured, with a lower percentage of shares than that provided in subparagraph a), due to the large number of shares put into circulation and to their allocation to public.

The request for admission to trading must be made with regard to all the shares of the same class that have been issued at the date of the request. In the case of bonds to be admitted for trading on a regulated market, the minimum amount of the issuance is €200,000 in RON equivalent. This requirement is not applicable to continuous issuances and, if approved by the CNVM, if it is considered that, for the respective bonds, an orderly market exists. Convertible bonds may be admitted to trading on a regulated market provided that the securities in which they can be converted are themselves already listed on a regulated market.

The CNVM may exempt bonds from this condition if it considers that investors have all the necessary information to form an opinion regarding the value of the shares into which the bonds would be converted. According to the BVB Code, shares to be admitted to trading on the Regulated Market, on the first, second, and third categories, must be:

- Registered with the CNVM;
- Freely transferable, fully paid, issued in dematerialized form, and highlighted with book entry;
- In the same class and the public spread of shares to be at least 25 per cent.

First-category shares also must be publicly distributed to at least 2.000 investors.

Prospectus Requirements. As mentioned above, the general rule resulting from the Capital Market Law (and from the Prospectus Directive) is that admission to trading on the regulated market can only be made further to addressing a request to the relevant market operator, after publishing a prospectus already approved by the CNVM. The procedures for the purpose of admission to trading on a regulated market must be performed by means of an intermediary. The obligation to publish a prospectus and to resort to an intermediary will not be applicable for the admission to trading of the following types of securities:

- Shares representing, in a period of 12 months, less than 10 per cent of the shares of the same class already admitted to trading on the same regulated market, provided that a simplified prospectus is available;
- Shares issued for substitution of other shares, of the same class, already admitted to trading on the same regulated market, if this new issue of shares does not imply a capital increase and provided that a simplified prospectus is made available;
- Securities offered in connection with a public takeover offer of exchange, provided that a document is available containing information considered by the CNVM as similar to the information contained in the public sale offer;
- Securities offered, allocated, or to be allocated, in connection with a merger, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available;
- Shares offered, allocated, or to be allocated, freely to existing shareholders, as well as issued shares where dividends are paid by the issuance of shares of the same class for which dividends are paid, provided that such shares are in the same class with the shares already admitted to trading on the same regulated market and that a simplified prospectus is made available;
- Securities offered, allocated, or to be allocated, to current or former members of management or employees of a company admitted to trading on a regulated market or one of its subsidiaries, provided that such securities are in the same class with securities already admitted to trading on the same regulated market and that a simplified prospectus is available;

- Shares arising from the conversion or exchange of other securities or the exercise of rights conferred by other securities, provided that such shares are in the same class with shares already admitted to trading on the same regulated market and that a simplified prospectus is made available;
- Securities already admitted to trading on other regulated market, observing the following cumulative conditions: (a) such securities or securities of the same class were admitted to trading on that regulated market for more than 18 months; (b) the prospectus under which the admission to trading of securities for the first time was performed was published with the observance of the law; (c) for securities admitted to trading for the first time, the prospectus drafted for admission to trading was approved as per the applicable EC law; (d) the company observed its reporting obligations due to the fact that securities are admitted to trading on that regulated market; (e) the person requesting admission to trading of securities on a regulated market in Romania drafted a brief document available to the public in Romanian language and which contains required information; (f) the document referred to in item (e), above, is available to the Romanian public; and (g) the document referred to in item (e), above, will contain the information comprised in the summary of a public offer prospectus, as well as information regarding where the latest available prospectus can be obtained and where the financial reports published by the issuer are available; and
- Shares offered, allocated, or to be allocated, in connection with a change in the capital of a company whose shares are admitted to trading on the same regulated market, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available.

After its approval, the prospectus must be made available to the public. A prospectus is deemed available to the public if:

- It may be obtained by a potential investor, free of charge, in a printed form, at least at the premises of the issuer and of the intermediary of such offer, or at the head office of the operator of the regulated market where the securities are admitted to trading;
- It is published in an electronic form on the issuer's web site and on the intermediary's web site;
- It is published in electronic form on the web site of the market operator, on the market where admission of such securities to trading is sought; and
- It is published in electronic form on the website of the CNVM, if it has decided to provide this service.

The prospectus must contain all information which, according to the particular nature of the issuer and of the securities offered to the public, is necessary to enable investors to make an informed assessment of: the assets and the liabilities, financial position, profit and loss, and prospects of the issuer and of any guarantor to the fulfillment of the obligations undertaken by the issuer, if necessary, and of the rights related to such securities.

In the case of a foreign issuer from an EU Member State, the shares of which are already admitted to trading on an EU-based regulated market, the prospectus approved by the regulatory authority from the respective EU Member State also is valid for the admission to trading on a regulated market in Romania, provided that the foreign regulatory authority notifies the CNVM.

In the case of an issuer from a third state, the CNVM will approve the prospectus which is drafted based on the legislation of the respective third state if the prospectus is drafted in accordance with international standards set by international organizations of securities commissions and contains information observing IOSCO transparency and information requirements, including those of financial nature equivalent to those required under the provisions of this Regulation. According to the Capital Market Law,[3] the liability for the veracity, preciseness, and accuracy of the information enclosed in the prospectus/bid document rests with:

- The bidder;
- The members of the bidder's board of directors;
- The issuer;
- The members of the issuer's board of directors;
- The founders, in case of public subscription;
- The financial auditor that certified the annual financial statements;
- The intermediaries of the offer; and
- Any other entity that assumed liability for the information in the prospectus.

Corporate Governance. Under the Romanian legislation, only joint-stock companies may be admitted to trading on a regulated market. Joint-stock companies can be subject either to a one-tier administration system (where the company would have a board of directors with mainly supervisory powers and one or more managers holding executive attributions) or to a two-tier system (in which supervision is performed by the supervisory board and managers are grouped in a management board).

Listed companies are obliged to audit their annual financial statements and their consolidated financial statements, where applicable. Directors and managers are obliged to present the shareholders precise and true information with regard to the economical standing of the company. Shareholders that do not agree with the company's decisions as regards mergers or spin-offs, resulting in the allocation of shares that are not admitted to trading on a regulated market, have the right to retire from the company and to obtain the value of their shares from the company.

Certain decisions to be adopted by the general meeting of shareholders (GMS) — as regards share capital increase through contributions in kind or regarding the waiver of the shareholders' preference right for the subscription of new shares — may be passed only with the observance of very strict requirements of quorum and voting majority, which practically make them impossible to be adopted.[4]

The shareholders have the right to participate in the GMS by simple proof of their identity. Shareholders also may be represented in the GMS by other shareholders or by other natural persons, not having a shareholder capacity, on the basis of a special power attorney, which must mandatorily include the vote to be expressed for each point of the agenda of the GMS.

Companies which are admitted to trading on the first category of the regulated market operated by the BVB must comply with at least 14 of the 19 principles enclosed in the Corporate Governance Code of the BVB. In their annual report, companies listed on the first category of the BVB must include a distinct section whereby they must confirm their compliance with the principles of the BVB's Corporate Governance Code, or provide explanations for their non-compliance with some of the principles thereof (as stated, not more than five).

Reporting. Companies which have their shares admitted to trading on a regulated market must observe certain reporting (disclosure) obligations, prescribed by the Capital Market Law and by Regulation Number 1/2006. The main reporting obligations can be classified into periodical disclosing and ad hoc disclosing.

Issuers of securities which are registered with the CNVM must submit to the CNVM the relevant reports, in electronic format, with electronic signature or, if the case, in hard copy. Reporting obligations are ceased at the moment of deregistration of the securities from the CNVM's registry. Issuers must make public the availability of all the required reports. The CNVM has the right to request additional information and documents from issuers, for the purpose of verifying, clarifying, or completing the reports. Furthermore, the CNVM may request to the issuer that it amends the relevant reports. In order to ensure that the investors are informed, the CNVM publishes the reports of the companies which are admitted to trading on a regulated market on its own website.[5] The issuer must submit to the CNVM, the market operator, and make available to the public, within four months as of the end of the financial year, the annual report which must include:

- Annual financial statements, audited, and approved by the competent corporate body;
- Report of the board of directors or equivalent;

4 In both cases, the quorum requirement is for at least three-quarters of the total number of shareholders to participate in the GMS which, in the case of a listed company, is practically impossible to fulfill, given the very large number of shareholders of these companies.

5 See http://www.cnvmr.ro.

- Statement of the responsible persons whereby it is stated that the annual financial statements reflect in a true and precise manner the assets, liabilities, financial standing, and profit and loss account of the issuer and of the subsidiaries included in its scope of consolidation; and
- Financial auditor's report.

The issuer must file a half-yearly report for the first semester of the financial year. The report will be submitted to the CNVM and the market operator and will be made available to the public within two months as of the lapse of the first semester.

The half-yearly report must include the half-yearly accounting report, drafted based on the applicable legislation, report of the board of directors; statement of the responsible persons, whereby it is stated that the half-yearly financial statements reflect in a true and precise manner the assets, liabilities, financial standing, and profit and loss account and that the report of the board of directors truly and completely reflects the information regarding the listed company; and report of the financial auditor and its full comments, in case the half-yearly financial statements have been audited.

The issuer must file a quarterly report for the first and third quarter of the financial year. The report will be submitted to the CNVM and the market operator and will be made available to the public within 45 days as of the lapse of the relevant trimester. The report must include the profit and loss account, as well as other financial indicators; the report of the financial auditor and its full comments, in case the quarterly financial statements have been audited; and, optionally, the report of the board of directors.

Pursuant to the Capital Market Law,[6] an issuer must inform the public and the CNVM, with no delay, as regards privileged information which directly concerns it. The information must be notified to the public, the stock exchange, and the CNVM within 24 hours from its occurrence, and it is published in the electronic bulletin of the CNVM. Privileged information includes (without being limited to) the following:

- Resolutions of the board of directors or other bodies, on the summoning of the general meeting of shareholders or holding a board of directors' meeting in order to deliberate for the exercise of the GMSs' attributions delegated to the board of directors;
- Summoning of the GMS;
- Resolutions of the GMS or of the board of directors, regarding the exercise of attributions delegated by the GMS;
- Changes in control of the company, including changes in control of the entity that controls the company;
- Changes in the management of the company;

6 Capital Market Law, art 226.

- Replacement of the company's auditor and reasons which lead to this replacement;
- Termination or decrease of contractual relations which generated at least 10 per cent of company revenues in the previous financial year;
- Publication of merger or spin-off project in the Official Gazette;
- Changes in the characteristics and/or rights for different classes of securities, including changes in rights attached to the issuer's derivatives conferring rights on shares issued by it;
- Litigation involving the company;
- Initiation of a termination or resuming of activity procedure, initiation and closing of the dissolution procedure, reorganization, or bankruptcy; and
- Off-balance-sheet operations with significant effects on the issuer's financial results.

Reports regarding the EGMS decision on mergers and spin-offs, changing the main scope of business of the issuer, movement of the statutory office or changing the legal form of the company, as well as the withdrawal from trading on the regulated market also must be published in a national newspaper.

Reports on any major new developments in the issuer's sphere of activity and which may lead to substantial movements in the prices of its shares must be submitted to the CNVM and the market operator within maximum 48 hours as of the occurrence of the event and are published in at least one national newspaper. The information includes, without being limited to, the following:

- Changes in the company's obligations that can significantly affect the activity or the patrimonial standing of the company;
- Acquisitions or disposals of substantial assets;[7]
- Contracts whose value exceeds 10 per cent of net turnover for the last annual financial accounts or contracts concluded outside of the company's current activity; and
- Development of a product or introduction of a new service or a development process that affects the company's resources.

At the request of shareholders which hold at least five per cent of the shares of an issuer, the financial auditor of the issuer is obliged to draft a report with regard to the operations and transactions indicated by the respective shareholders. The directors of the issuers are obliged to provide information to 7 The term "acquisition" refers not only to purchases, but also includes procurement such as leasing or any other way of obtaining assets. Similarly, the term "disposal" does not refer only to sales, but may include leasing or exchange contracts, as well as abandon or destruction of assets. Acquisitions or disposal of assets will be considered substantial if the assets represent at least 10 per cent of the total value of the company's assets either before or after the transaction.

the financial auditor. The report must further on be submitted to the CNVM and the market operator within maximum 30 days as of the receipt of the request by the financial auditor. The report will be made public on the CNVM's website.

Prior to the date on which dividends will be paid, the issuer is obliged to publish a press release in a national newspaper which must indicate the value of the dividend per share and the due date for payment, as laid down by the EGMS and payment methods and, if the case, identification data of the payment agent.

Directors of listed companies are compelled to report, with no delay, any legal deed concluded by the company with its directors, employees, shareholders holding control over the company, as well as with any other persons involved with them, in case the value of the legal deed is at least equal to €50,000 in RON equivalent. Reports must be submitted to the CNVM and the market operator within five days as of concluding the legal deed and will be published in the CNVM's bulletin. Provided that listed companies conclude such legal deeds with companies from their own group on a regular basis, they will be permitted to file the report on a monthly basis, indicating the list of the intra-group agreements concluded in the respective month.

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

Public Offer

Performance of public offers through the trading system of the market operator or system operator is regulated by CNVM Instruction Number 3/2007, while other relevant provisions are included in the BVB Code. Subscriptions made in a public purchase/sale offer must be performed only with the strict observance of the conditions laid down in the prospectus/bid document approved by the CNVM.

Intermediaries (intermediaries are credit institutions and investment firms authorized as such) have the obligation to inform the investors with regard to the conditions of performing the offer and are responsible for the observance of the provisions of the prospectus/bid document. At the moment of filling in the order sheets, intermediaries must verify the compliance with the provisions of the prospectus/bid document and they certify such compliance by placing the orders enclosed by the order sheets in the trading system of the market operator.

The intermediary of the offer, the intermediaries involved in the unwinding of the offer, the bidder, and the market operator bear the liability regarding the operations performed during the offer, each according to its attributions. However, the responsibility for setting out the allocation index is borne exclusively by the intermediary of the offer. Allocation is made subsequent to the closing date of the offer, as per the provisions of the prospectus/bid document. The settlement will be performed at T+3, where T is the date of the transactions afferent to the offer. The transfer of the ownership of the financial instruments (except for securities) is performed at the date of settlement, based on the principle of delivery versus payment.

Place of Order

According to the BVB Code, financial instruments which are subject to a public offer must be traded on the Offer and Special Operations Markets. Offer and Special Operations Markets are classified into primary public sale offers, secondary public sale offers, secondary public purchase offers, special "sales at order", and other methods of transferring ownership over financial instruments.

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Holdings

Shareholder Duties

The Capital Market Law[8] provides for the persons who acquire or dispose of securities of a listed company, resulting in a shareholding which exceeds or falls below five per cent, 10 per cent, 20 per cent, 33 per cent, 50 per cent, 75 per cent, or 90 per cent of the total number of voting rights, an obligation to report such acquisition or disposal to the company, the CNVM, and the market operator. The report must be submitted within a maximum of three business days as of the acquisition/disposal.

Company Duties

In addition to the report submitted by the acquirer, mentioned above, the company whose securities were acquired must make the information on the acquisition public within three days as of the moment when it has been informed with regard to the acquisition.

Insider Trading and Fraud

Basis of Territorial Link

The provisions regarding market abuse and the regime of privileged information are a very precise transposition of the corresponding provisions of the Market Abuse Directive and the directives which implement it. Pursuant to the Capital Market Law, any issuer must inform the public and the CNVM, with no delay, as regards the privileged information which directly concerns it.

However, an issuer is allowed to delay the public disclosure of the information, in case it would harm its own interests, on the condition that such deferral does not mislead the public and that the issuer may ensure the confidentiality of the information. The issuer must immediately inform the CNVM in connection with the deferral of disclosing the information and the CNVM may oblige the issuer to disclose the information, in order to ensure the transparency and integrity of the market.

8 Capital Market Law, art 228.

Issuers or persons acting in their name or on their behalf must draft a list of persons working for them which have access to privileged information. The list shall be regularly updated and submitted to the CNVM, upon request. “Inside information” is defined as information of a precise nature which has not been made public, relating, directly or indirectly, to one or more issuers of financial instruments or to one or more financial instruments and which, if it were made public, would be likely to have a significant effect on the prices of those financial instruments or on the price of related derivative financial instruments.

In relation to derivatives on commodities, “inside information” will mean information of a precise nature which has not been made public, relating, directly or indirectly, to one or more such derivatives and which users of markets on which such derivatives are traded would expect to receive in accordance with accepted market practices on those markets. For persons charged with the execution of orders concerning financial instruments, ‘inside information’ shall also mean information conveyed by a client and related to the client's pending orders, which is of a precise nature, which relates directly or indirectly to one or more issuers of financial instruments or to one or more financial instruments, and which, if it were made public, would be likely to have a significant effect on the prices of those financial instruments or on the price of related derivative financial instruments.

Information will be deemed to be of a “precise nature” if it indicates a set of circumstances which exists or may reasonably be expected to come into existence or an event which has occurred or may reasonably be expected to do so and whether it is specific enough to enable a conclusion to be drawn as to the possible effect of that set of circumstances or event on the prices of financial instruments or related derivative financial instruments.

"Information which, if it were made public, would be likely to have a significant effect on the prices of financial instruments or related derivative financial instruments" will mean information a reasonable investor would be likely to use as part of the basis of his investment decisions. “Market manipulation” will mean:

- Transactions or orders to trade which give, or are likely to give, false or misleading signals as to the supply of, demand for, or price of financial instruments or which secure, by a person, or persons acting in collaboration, the price of one or several financial instruments at an abnormal or artificial level, unless the person who entered into the transactions or issued the orders to trade establishes that his reasons for so doing are legitimate and that these transactions or orders to trade conform to accepted market practices on the regulated market concerned;
- Transactions or orders to trade which employ fictitious devices or any other form of deception or contrivance;
- Dissemination of information through the media, including the Internet, or by any other means, which gives, or is likely to give, false or misleading signals as to financial instruments, including the dissemination of rumors and false or misleading news, where the person who made the dissemination knew, or ought to have known, that the information was false or misleading;

- Conduct by a person, or persons acting in collaboration, to secure a dominant position over the supply of or demand for a financial instrument which has the effect of fixing, directly or indirectly, purchase or sale prices or creating other unfair trading conditions, or the buying or selling of financial instruments at the close of the market with the effect of misleading investors acting on the basis of closing prices; or
- Taking advantage of occasional or regular access to the traditional or electronic media by voicing an opinion about a financial instrument (or indirectly about its issuer) while having previously taken positions on that financial instrument and profiting subsequently from the impact of the opinions voiced on the price of that instrument, without having simultaneously disclosed that conflict of interest to the public in a proper and effective way.

It is prohibited for any person who possesses inside information to use that information by acquiring or disposing of, or by trying to acquire or dispose of, for his own account or for the account of a third party, either directly or indirectly, financial instruments to which that information relates. It also is prohibited to disclose privileged information to any other persons, except for when the disclosing has been performed in the normal course of business or in consideration of its duties. Moreover, persons possessing inside information are forbidden to recommend or induce another person, on the basis of inside information, to acquire or dispose of financial instruments to which that information relates. Breach of the above-mentioned provisions on illegal use of inside information or market manipulation is considered a criminal offence and is punished with imprisonment from six months to five years or criminal fine.

Extraterritorial Application

As a general rule, stated by the Capital Market Law, the provisions of the Capital Market Law are only applicable to operations performed in Romania. However, there are specific provisions regulating possible extraterritorial application issues as regards market abuse aspects.

Pursuant to article 253 in the Capital Market Law, provisions regarding market abuse (which include use of inside information and market manipulation) will be applicable to any financial instrument admitted to trading on a Romanian regulated market or on a regulated market of an EU member state, or for which a request for admission to trading has been filed, irrespective whether the transaction occurred on the respective regulated market or not.

The provisions also will be applicable to any other financial instrument which has not been admitted to trading on a Romanian regulated market or on a regulated market of an EU member state, but whose value is dependent on the value of a financial instrument which has been admitted to trading on a

Romanian regulated market or on a regulated market of an EU Member State, or for which a request for admission to trading has been filed. Paragraph (3) of article 253 states that the provisions related to inside information and market manipulation also will apply to:

- Operations performed in Romania or abroad, with financial instruments admitted to trading on a regulated market which is situated or operates in Romania, or for which a request for admission to trading on the respective market has been filed; and
- Operations performed in Romania with financial instruments admitted to trading on a Romanian regulated market or on a regulated market of an EU member state, or for which a request for admission to trading on the respective markets has been filed.

The Capital Market Law adds that the CNVM is the only authority competent to enforce the provisions regarding inside information and market manipulation, provided that the conduct occurs in the conditions described by the Capital Market Law. The CNVM has the attribution to take any necessary measures and impose any relevant sanctions to the persons responsible for such breaches.

Public Take-Over Bids

Territorial Application (Foreign Bidder-Domestic Target)

Regulation Number 1/2006 includes specific provisions on takeover bids with extraterritorial elements (defined as crossborder bids). Where securities issued by the target company headquartered in Romania are not listed on a Romanian regulated market, the authority competent to approve the bid document and/or to supervise the bid is that of the EU member state where the regulated market is located.

The authority competent to approve the bid document and/or to supervise the bid is that of the EU member state where the target company is registered, if the securities are listed on a regulated market located in the respective member state. Where securities issued by a target company headquartered in another EU member state are only listed on a regulated market located in Romania, the CNVM will be competent to approve and supervise the bid.

Where securities issued by a target company are listed on multiple regulated markets located in Romania and in other EU Member States, the authority competent to approve the bid document and/or to supervise the bid is that of the state where the securities had been listed first.

Procedural Requirements

The general rule stated by the Capital Market Law is that any person who intends to make a public offer (bid) must previously submit to the CNVM a request for approval of the prospectus (in case of public sale offers) or of the bid document (in case of public purchase offers). Further to the approval of the prospectus or of the bid document, this must be made available to the public, no later than the initiation of the public offer. Except for contrary provisions of the law, any public offer performed in the absence of an approved prospectus/bid document or by breaching the conditions laid down in the decision of approval is void and may cause sanctions to be applied to the responsible persons.

The public offer notice may be launched at any moment after the approval of the prospectus/bid document by the CNVM and must be published in at least two national daily newspapers. The public offer notice will enclose information regarding the specific ways in which the prospectus/bid document is available to the public. The prospectus will be deemed available to the public if it:

- It is published in at least one printed newspaper or online, in compliance with European regulations as regards the content and publication of prospectuses, as well as advertising dissemination;
- Can be obtained free of charge, on paper, by a potential investor, at least at the premises of the bidder or broker, or at the premises of the market operator where the securities are admitted to trading;
- Is published on the bidder's and broker's website;
- Is published on the market operator's website; or
- Is published on the CNVM website, if the CNVM has decided to offer that service.

All advertising items related to a public offer must be pre-approved by the CNVM. The occurrence of a new event or the amendment of the information initially enclosed in the prospectus/bid document which is likely to affect the investors' decision must be inserted in the prospectus and must be approved by the CNVM within seven days. As a classification, public offers are divided by the Capital Market Law into four categories, namely:

- Public sale offers;
- Public purchase offers;
- Voluntary takeover bids; and
- Mandatory takeover bids.

Public purchase offers are defined as the offer to buy securities made by a person and addressed to all holders of the respective securities, broadcast through the intermediary of mass media or other specific means, but on the condition that it can be equally received by all securities holders. The public purchase offer must be performed through an authorized intermediary (ie, a credit institution or an investment firm) and must ensure equal treatment for all investors.

Voluntary takeover bids are public purchase offers whereby a person who is not obliged to do so addresses an offer to all securities holders, for their entire holdings, with a view to acquiring more than 33 per cent of the voting rights. In order to perform the voluntary takeover bid, the acquirer must submit to the CNVM a preliminary notice.

After the approval by the CNVM, the preliminary notice must be submitted to the target company, to the regulated market and will be published in at least one national newspaper and one local newspaper. Subsequent to the receipt of this preliminary notice, the board of directors is prohibited from concluding any legal deed or taking any measure which would impact the patrimonial state of the target company. The voluntary bidder is obliged to submit the voluntary takeover bid to the CNVM within 30 days as of publishing the preliminary notice.

Mandatory takeover bids must be made in the case where a person, further to its acquisitions alone or together with other persons acting in concert, holds more than 33 per cent of the voting rights of a listed company. In such case, the respective person is obliged to launch a takeover bid, addressed to all holders of the respective securities and for their entire participations, within two months as of exceeding the 33 per cent participation.

Further to performing a voluntary or mandatory takeover bid, the bidder has the right (and the investors have a corresponding obligation) to require those investors which did not subscribe during the bid to sell their shares for a fair price, if at least one of the bidders owns more than 95 per cent of the target company's share capital or the bidder acquired, during the previous bid, more than 90 per cent of the available shares. Where a mandatory or voluntary takeover bid occurred and the bidder resulted in owning more than 95 per cent of the target company's share capital, minority shareholders are entitled to request the majority shareholder to buy their shares in exchange for a fair price.

Exemptions

The obligation to publish a prospectus in case of public sale offers is generally applicable, save for certain exemptions provided by the relevant legislation.[9] Exemptions apply to offers addressed only to qualified investors, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available; offers addressed to less than 100 investors, natural or legal persons, other than qualified investors, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available; securities offers addressed to investors who purchase each, within the offer, securities of at least €50.000 in RON equivalent, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available; securities offers whose nominal value per unit is of at least €50,000 in RON equivalent, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available; and securities offers whose total value, in a period of 12 months, is less than €100,000 in RON equivalent, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available.

Exemptions apply to securities offered, allocated, or to be allocated, in connection with a merger, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available; securities offered, allocated, or to be allocated, freely to existing shareholders, where dividends are paid by issuing new shares, in the same class with the shares for which the dividends are paid, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available; shares issued for the substitution of other shares, in the same class, already issued, if this new issuance of shares does not imply a share capital increase, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available; securities offered in exchange of other securities subject to a public sale/exchange offer, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available; securities offered, allocated, or to be allocated, to actual or former members of management or to employees of a company, or one of its subsidiaries, whose securities are already admitted for trading on a regulated market, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available; and shares offered, allocated, or to be allocated, in connection with a change of the share capital, other than share capital increase by cash, by free allocation of shares to current shareholders or as a result of payment of dividends by issuing new shares in the same class with the shares for which the dividends are paid, provided that a simplified prospectus is made available.

As to the obligation to carry out a mandatory takeover bid, certain exemptions are provided by the Capital Market Law. A mandatory takeover bid need not be carried out where the holding of more than 33 per cent of the target's shares was acquired further to an exempted transaction. Pursuant to the Capital Market Law, exempted transactions represent the acquisition of the holding by means of the privatization process, acquisition of shares from the Ministry of Public Finance, or other legally authorized entities, in the context of enforcing budgetary receivables, transfer of shares between a parent-company and its subsidiaries or between the subsidiaries themselves, and where a voluntary takeover bid has been performed.

Jurisdiction Conflicts

The general rule stated by the Capital Market Law is that it is applicable to the incorporation and functioning of financial instruments and markets and the activities and operations specific to those markets which are performed in Romania. The CNVM is the only competent authority to enforce the provisions of the Capital Market Law.

As to private international law regulations, the New Civil Code stipulates that the capacity of a legal person is governed by the law of its organic statute, which is the national law of the legal person, defined as the law of the country where the legal person is headquartered. Specific provisions refer to collaterals over shares, where it is stated that in case of shares which are traded on an organized market, the law of the country where the organized market is located will be applicable. The Capital Market Law states that, with regard to the breaches of provisions concerning market abuse, inside information regime, and market manipulation, the CNVM is the only authority competent to ensure the application of these provisions.

Introduction

Regulatory System

In General

Russian law does not have a term equivalent to the notion of 'security' in the Common Law. The definition of a valuable paper (tzennaya bumaga), which is sometimes translated as 'security', is far more general in comparison with a Common Law 'security', ie, a special type of investment interest. In this respect, Russia belongs to those legal systems in which the regulation on 'valuable papers' applies to numerous types of documents, including investment securities. Russian legislation relating to valuable papers in general is applicable directly or implicitly to investment securities.

The notion of valuable papers also includes various commercial papers, negotiable instruments, documents of title, and other commercial instruments which meet established requirements. Several attempts were made in the 1990s to legally define the concept of valuable papers and a class of valuable papers similar to securities. In 1990, the Regulation on Securities approved by Decree Number 590 of 19 June 1990 defined valuable papers as:

> . . . monetary documents certifying the vested interests or loan relations, which define the relations between a person issuing them and their holders and provide, as a rule, for distribution of yield as dividend or interest, as well as possibility to transfer monetary and other rights resulting from this documents to other persons.

With the adoption of the Russian Soviet Federative Socialist Republic (RSFSR) Regulation on Securities Issue and Circulation and Stock Markets in the Russian Federation, securities (valuable papers) were defined as:

> . . . monetary documents certifying the proprietary rights or the monetary claim of the document holder against the person issuing these documents.[1]

1 Confirmed by Regulation of the Government of the Russian Federation Number 78 of 28 December 1991, art 1, item 1.

A better definition was incorporated in the Fundamentals of Civil Legislation of the Soviet Union and Union Republics accepted by the Supreme Soviet of the USSR on 31 May 1991. According to item 1, article 31, of the Fundamentals, 'documents certifying proprietary rights which can be exercised only on presentation of originals of these documents are recognised as valuable papers'. The definition of securities effective at present is contained in the Civil Code of the Russian Federation, which describes valuable papers as the:

> . . . documents certifying, in compliance with the requirements as to them and necessary requisite elements, the proprietary rights, realisation, or transfer of which is possible only at sight of these documents.[2]

Investment Securities

The Law in the securities market (as amended by the Federal Law of 26 November 1998) defines the investment (issued) security as a valuable paper (security), including the non-documentary, which certifies the complex of property and non-property rights placed by issues where each security provides equal rights to the owner, regardless of when acquired. Investment securities are distinguished by the following features:

- They certify the complex of economic and non-proprietary rights which can be transferred and utilised in compliance with them and the procedure established by the special Federal Law;
- They are placed by issues; and
- Each paper of the issue is issued on the same terms, irrespective of the time when it is acquired.

An issue of securities is the series of securities of one issuer that give the same rights to their holders and are issued on the same terms (initial placement). All securities within the issue have the identical state registration Number. Investment securities and, under certain conditions, other securities also are subject to rules governing investment activity.[3]

The term 'securities market' is used to describe activity associated with securities issues and trade. The securities market is split in two parts, ie, primary and secondary. The primary market is for initial public offerings, ie, the sale of securities by an issuer to their first owners (investors); all subsequent transactions constitute the secondary market. One also may distinguish the 'organised' market, ie, floor trade in exchanges and electronic trading systems, and the unorganised (out-of-exchange) market. The stock market also can be classified as to the type of securities.

2 Russian Federation Civil Code, art 142.
3 Federal Law Number 1488-1 (as amended) of 26 June 1991, arts 1 and 3; Federal Law Number 39-FZ of 25 February 1999, art 1.

Legal Sources

Russia is a Civil Law jurisdiction where legislation is the most important source of law. The Constitution and the Civil Code are two primary sources of law. Securities transactions are governed by a number of regulations subordinate to the Civil Code. The following statutes lay down the framework of Russian securities regulation:

- The Civil Code of the Russian Federation (Parts 1 and 2);
- The Law on Joint-Stock Companies of 31 December 1995;
- The Law on Protection of Rights and Lawful Interests of Investors at the Securities Market of 5 March 1999 (hereinafter, the Law on Investors' rights); and
- The Law on Securities Market of 22 April 1996.

Federal Law Number 39-FZ of 22 April 1996 and the Law on Investors' Rights define not only the status of investment securities as instruments certifying certain economic and other related interests, but also many aspects of transactions with such securities and regulatory compliance. The Securities Market Law is a blanket regulation. It provides for adoption of delegated legislation, as developed by the Federal Securities Market Commission, the Central Bank, and the Finance Ministry.

Rules relating to securities also are found in the Russian Federation Criminal Code.[4] Federal Law Number 119-FZ of 21 July 1997, in articles 51 and 59, establishes a special procedure for the arrest of and execution against securities.[5] The Budget Code[6] includes a section devoted to public debt, including regulation of government and municipal securities and guarantees.

Certain legislation is devoted exclusively to a particular group of instruments (eg, government and municipal securities or registered stocks) or securities of a particular kind (eg, shares, promissory notes, and bills of exchange).[7]

Authorities

Federal Securities Market Commission

In General. The Federal Securities Market Commission[8] is a federal body of executive power implementing the state policy as to the securities market, controlling the activity of professional participants and determining standards for securities issue. The principal functions of the Federal Securities Market Commission are summarised in article 42 of the Securities Market Law.[9] The functions of the Federal Securities Market Commission are legislative, organisational, and supervisory.

4 Federal Law of 1 July 1996, as amended, arts 177, 184–187, 204, 290, and 304.

Legislative Function. The Federal Securities Market Commission regulates two principal aspects of securities market. It issues normative acts on placement and circulation of securities, ie, creates the rules applicable to securities themselves, and establishes standards of conduct applicable to parties to securities transactions, ie, issuers, intermediaries, and investors.

Central Bank of Russia

The second part of the 1990s were marked by the struggle between the Federal Securities Market Commission and the Central Bank over the competence to regulate securities issue and trading by the banks. The struggle was resolved in 1997 in a compromise by which the Federal Securities Market Commission formally remained the ultimate regulatory authority while the Central Bank received a general mandate to resolve all issues related to the involvement of banks in securities issue and trading. The banks also may engage in professional activities in the securities market subject to the licence issued by the Central Bank.

According to the Federal Law of 2 December 1990 on the Central Bank of the Russian Federation (Bank of Russia), as amended (the Central Bank Law), the Central Bank executes the functions of state management of the activity at the market of securities of credit organisations.[10] The Central Bank has normative, organisational, and supervisory powers, which follow from its general competence as a state body responsible for organisation of financial relations and control over them. In addition, in some cases, the law specifies the Central Bank functions relating to securities market. The Central Bank of the Russian Federation:

- Registers the issue of securities by credit organisations;[11]
- Establishes the terms of operation for cumulative accounts where the assets used by credit organisations for issuing shares are accumulated;[12]
- Establishes the procedure of formation and use of surplus funds, including the funds for possible securities appreciation;[13]

- Advises the Finance Ministry of the Russian Federation with the schedule of issue of state securities and redemption of the state debt in connection with their influence on the state of the bank system and priorities of the common state monetary and credit policy;[14]
- Issues loans for a term no longer than one year which back up securities and other assets, unless otherwise stated by the Federal Budget Law;[15]
- Buys and sells state securities at the market;
- Seconds a representative to participate in the work of the Federal Securities Market Commission Board;[16] and
- Reviews together with the Federal Securities Market Commission draft normative acts which specifically mention credit organisations, as well as regulations governing transactions with financial assets denominated in foreign currency (securities in foreign currency).[17]

Finance Ministry of Russia

The Finance Ministry exercises both general steering and specific technical functions in the securities market.[18] The Finance Ministry:

- Establishes rules for bookkeeping and statutory reporting for issuers and professional participants of the securities market (in co-operation with the Federal Securities Market Commission);
- Develops proposals on internal and external state borrowings of the Russian Federation;
- Issues state securities;
- Clears the total amount and conditions of issue of bonds of subunits of the Federation and other administrative and territorial formations;
- Takes part in the development of proposals on development of the securities market in the Russian Federation;
- Implements, together with the Central Bank of Russia, the state policy in the sphere of issue and placement of state securities;
- Registers issues of certain securities (notably, government and municipal securities); and
- Organises and provides for publication of securities forms.

President of the Russian Federation Number 730 of 16 July 1997 (as amended) on the State Commission on Protection of Rights of Investors on the Financial and Stock Markets of Russia in implementation of the Decree of the President of the Russian Federation Number 416 of 26 April 1995 on Measures on Providing for Interests of Investors and Setting the Activity of Juridical Persons at the Financial and Stock Markets without Required Licences in Compliance with the Law of the Russian Federation and the Complex Program of Measures on Providing for Rights of Depositors and Shareholders, approved by the Decree of the President of the Russian Federation Number 408 of 21 March 1996.

The State Commission is a collegiate body whose activity is aimed at organisation of development and realisation of the system of state measures for Protection of Rights of Investors on the financial and stock markets of Russia.[19] The State Commission is subordinate and accountable to the President of the Russian Federation. The functions of the State Commission include:

- Co-ordination and control of the activity of federal bodies of executive power responsible for regulation of the activity on the financial and stock markets of Russia, in the sphere of protection of legal interests of investors;
- Development and realisation of measures on attraction of investments to the Russian economy and their protection, with priority given to foreign investments in an amount greater than US $100 million, as well as investments directed to the 100 largest enterprises of Russia;
- Analysis of the procedures of bankruptcy and liquidation of juridical persons, including banks, other credit organisations, and financial companies acting on the financial and stock markets of Russia, as well as analysis of supervision over safety of arrested assets and the order of their sale in the process of execution; and
- Analysis of the procedures of transformation of voucher (privatisation) investment funds into share investment funds, as well as the procedures of liquidation of juridical persons accumulating individuals' funds (performing investment activity), without the corresponding licence.

The State Commission has a right to audit compliance with investors' rights by organisations operating at the financial and stock markets of Russia; decisions of the State Commission are binding for the federal bodies of executive power which have representatives working in the Commission.

Legal Order and Regulatory Interests

Admission

Market Participants

In General. The main players in the securities market are companies issuing securities (issuers), as well as persons purchasing securities (investors). Intermediaries (agents) facilitate capital circulation and creation of conditions for more efficient interaction between the issuer and the investor. Entities which render services on securities and capital markets as a main and/or exclusive activity, ie, professionally, are the professional participants in the securities market.

19 Decree of 16 July 1997, Number 730.

Article 1 of the Securities Market Law establishes special requirements applicable to professional participants. Article 2 of the Securities Market Law provides for the following general qualifications of professional participants of the securities market.

Only juridical persons or citizens registered as individual entrepreneurs can be professional participants in the securities market. Their activity must fall within the following categories:

- Brokering;
- Dealing;
- Managing securities;
- Clearing;
- Performing depository (custodial) functions:
- Maintaining securities holder registers; and
- Organising trade in securities.[20]

For some activities, the Securities Market Law stipulates additional requirements. For example, certain functions may only be carried out by legal entities incorporated as stock companies, while others may be carried out only by non-commercial entities. A professional registrar may not engage in any other professional activity in the securities market.[21]

Professional participants in the securities market should be distinguished from other intermediaries acting on this market. For instance, a commodity exchange may act as a non-professional intermediary in the securities market, because securities such as bill of lading are sold using the infrastructure provided by it.[22] Banks also can act as non-professional intermediaries when performing operations on collecting bills.[23]

Not every activity on the securities market qualifies as professional in the meaning of the Securities Market Law.[24] When a commercial company purchases securities, such as bills of exchange, bills of lading, or shares, and resells them to gain profit, such an activity is not qualified as professional. However, if the company routinely performs such operations on the instruction of third parties by a contract of commission or a contract of agency (broker's activity) or as a dealer, under certain conditions, it can be held liable for acting as a professional participant without the necessary licence. Article 38 of the Securities Market Law deals with prohibition and suspension of the activity of entities engaging in business activity in the securities market without a corresponding licence.[25] Provision of services related to the securities market is deemed to be a financial activity. Therefore, the activity is subject to regulation by other special legislation, ie, on financial services.

Domestic Exchanges. Both exchanges and electronic trading systems are classified in Russian law as 'organisers of trade'. Certain requirements also apply to the stock exchange itself and its members.[26] The activity of a securities exchange, as well as securities departments of commodity exchanges and currency markets, requires a licence for the activity on organisation of trade in the securities market.[27]

The organisation of trade must be the exclusive activity of an entity, with the exception of depository services and activity on determination of mutual obligations (clearing) which are compatible with the status of securities exchange. Securities exchange renders services that directly facilitate the conclusion of civil law transactions with securities between the participants of the securities market.[28] The Securities Market Law does not provide an exhaustive list of functions, execution of which constitutes the securities exchange activity on organisation of trade at the securities market. The principal functions in practice are:

- Creation of conditions for assembly of professional participants of the securities market on the premises;
- Concentration of sell and buy offers; and
- Formation of a certain system (organisation) of trade in compliance with the special rules and regulations.

Securities exchanges are not major players on the Russian securities market. Their role is not so important in comparison to that played by the securities exchanges in foreign countries where these organisations provide the vehicle for significant financial transactions in the securities market.

Securities exchanges must be incorporated as non-profit partnerships.[29] This requirement does not apply to stock departments of commodity exchanges and currency markets.[30] Only members of the exchange are admitted to trading sessions. Other participants of the securities market can trade at a securities exchange only through its members. Special features of the functioning of a securities exchange as a non-profit organisation, including its rights and obligations towards its members, are established in articles 11–15 of the Securities Market Law and can be refined in local normative rules issued by the securities exchange. As a trade organiser in the securities market, a securities exchange is obliged to provide information about its activity to any interested person. Evidently, this rule refers to not only securities exchange members, but also outsiders.[31]

Transborder Electronic Trading Systems. Electronic trading systems (save transborder ones) are at the very early stages of development in Russia. The first steps in this direction have already been made.[32]

In January 2000, the Federal Securities Market Commission adopted Recommendation Number IB-02/229 on Possible Fraudulent Securities Trading Schemes on the Internet, which alerts Russian users to fake Internet services offering brokerage and other services in overseas markets. These services are apparently specifically oriented to a Russian audience and offer Russian interface.

Off-Market Transactions. The organised market has existed for shares and bonds (debentures) only. However, the Federal Securities Market Commission has published provisions for organised trade on the debt market in veskels (promissory notes). According to published estimates, the daily turnover of unorganised trade in veskels (promissory notes) was estimated in January 2000 to have a nominal value of US $400 million to US $1 billion. The market itself was estimated to be worth US $21 billion.

The two leading organisers of trade, the Russian Trading System (RTS) and the Moscow Interbank Exchange, have expressed readiness to commence regulated trade in promissory notes when the corresponding legislation becomes effective. The rules for this market are developed by the Federal Securities Market Commission in cooperation with the Association of the Veskel Market (AUVER).[33]

Self-Regulatory Organisations. Self-regulatory organisations were formed in the early 1990s as private counterparts to government regulatory agencies. Self-regulatory organisations support the Federal Securities Market Commission in its efforts to regulate the security markets. Self-regulatory organisations are private, non-profit corporations, their operations financed by membership fees and, to some extent, grants and income from certain activities.

To receive the status of a self-regulatory organisation, an entity must be certified as such by the Federal Securities Market Commission. Only three organisations have been licensed as self-regulatory organisations, namely:

- PARTAD;
- NAUFOR; and
- NSMA.

Membership is voluntary. NAUFOR includes approximately 1,000 participants, PARTAD and NSMA approximately 200 each. Membership in self-regulatory organisations does not eliminate the requirement of licensing, and it does not relieve securities professionals from scrutiny by the Federal Securities Market Commission and other regulatory authorities.

Clearing Agents and Depositories. Clearing activity is understood as the activity on determination of mutual obligations (eg, collection, checks, correction of information on securities transactions, and preparation of documents for them) and clearance of securities delivery and payments for them.[34] Only juridical persons can deal with clearing in Russia.[35]

Taking into account that clearing organisation perform operations on setting off of mutual claims for securities transfer and payment, part 3 of article 6 of the Securities Market Law requires a clearing organisation to set aside special (reserve) funds for payments under securities transactions. These funds serve to decrease the risk of non-execution of securities transactions. The minimal volume of reserve funds of clearing organisations is established by the Federal Securities Market Commission in agreement with the Central Bank of Russia.

Depository activity includes rendering services relating to custody of securities certificates and/or recording the transfer of title to securities. A professional participant in the securities market performing such functions is called a depository. Only a juridical person can be a depository.[36] The relations between a depository and a client (depositor) are governed by a depository contract (contract of a depo account). A depository contract must be concluded in writing and contain the following material terms:

- Unambiguous determination of a subject of the contract, encompassing provision of services for the custody of securities certificates and/or accounting of rights to securities;
- Procedure for providing information about transfer of the depositor's securities to a depository;

34 Securities Market Law, art 6.

- Duration of contract;
- Depository fees and the procedure for payment;
- Periods for reporting by a depository; and
- Depository obligations.[37]

A depository has no right to dispose of the depositor's securities, manage them, or perform any actions with securities on behalf of a depositor, except where it performs a depositor's instructions in the cases provided for in the depository contract.

Brokers and Dealers. 'Brokerage' is defined by the Securities Market Law as execution of civil law transactions with securities as an attorney or an agent, acting on the basis of a commission agency contract, a contract of delegation, or power of attorney to perform such transactions with no indications as to a power of attorney or agent in an agreement.[38] A broker may be a natural person or organisation. A professional participant in the securities market which is engaged in brokerage is called a broker.

The Securities Market Law provides special regulations applicable to the commission or agency performed by a broker compared to general regulations foreseen in the Civil Code. When a broker acts as a commission agent, the contract of a commission may provide for the obligation to record client funds destined for investment into securities or recovered from securities sales on the broker's off-balance accounts and the right of the broker to use them until such time as when they are returned to a client under the contract conditions. A part of the profit realised from use of the above, the balances of a client's funds must be paid to the client in accordance with the contract. However, a broker cannot guarantee or promise to a client future profits from investment of funds.

'Dealing' is defined by the Securities Market Law as the execution of buying and selling transactions on behalf of oneself and at one's own expense by offering public buy or sell quotes of certain securities with an obligation to buy or sell the securities at a declared price.[39] A professional participant in the securities market who performs dealing is called a dealer. A dealer, in contrast to a broker, can be only a juridical person established as a commercial organisation. Individual businessmen have no right to act as dealers.

A dealer has no right to escape entering the transaction on terms publicly declared by him. Therefore, such public declaration is none other than a public offer.[40] However, the Securities Market Law establishes not only the peculiarity of the dealer offer, but also acceptance. First, for an offer to be considered as declared, it must quote a price. Second, if a dealer did not stipulate in the sale or purchase offer such conditions as the number of securities, as well as the period of validity, he is obliged to accept a tender on terms offered by a client.[41]

Underwriters. The Federal Securities Market Commission normative acts regulating dealing use the term 'underwriting'.[42] 'Underwriter' is defined as a person undertaking to place securities on behalf of an issuer or in its own name, but at the expense of an issuer after its commission.[43]

Other Market Participants. The Securities Market Law does not limit the possibility to create organisations which professionally, ie, deliberately and on a permanent basis, carry out other types of operations in the securities market. However, such organisations are not considered to be professional participants in the securities market.

This group is represented by non-profit organisations set up for protection of rights of investors and shareholders.[44] These organisations include:

- The Federal Public-State Foundation on Safeguarding the Rights of Depositors and Shareholders;[45]
- Regional and local foundations for safeguarding the rights of depositors and shareholders;[46] and
- The Federal Compensation Fund.

Capital of such foundations is formed by promoters' contributions, voluntary payments of organisations and citizens, earnings from use of foundation funds, and income from business and other activity performed by foundations. Assets of the foundations are used for compensation payments to depositors and shareholders. They may be invested in securities and other liquid assets, provided that the earnings are directed into compensation payments.

Securities

National Treatment and Reciprocity. The Federal Law on Foreign Investments[47] provides for a limited national treatment of foreign investments. Analogous provisions are found in bilateral investment treaties of the Russian Federation. These provisions are applicable to portfolio investments as well as other investments.

Restrictions relating to acquisition and holding of shares of businesses in certain industries by foreigners may be introduced by federal laws where it is necessary to protect the fundamentals of the constitutional system and public moral, health, rights, and lawful interests of other persons and to safeguard the defence and national security of the state.

Listed Securities. 'Listed securities' are understood in Russia as securities traded through 'an organiser of trade in the securities market'. To be admitted to the floor for trading on the stock exchange, the securities must pass the procedure of listing and be included in the special quotation list.[48] Unlisted securities may be traded if they are admitted by the internal regulations of the stock exchange. Rules of trading adopted by an organiser of trade may provide for certain requirements for an issuer of unlisted securities.

Quotation lists must include two classes (types of admission), ie, class 'A' (the 'first' and 'second' sub-classes) and class 'B'. For securities to be eligible for listing on the quotation list as A or B class securities, issuers must satisfy certain standards.[49]

Issuer Requirements

Investment securities may be issued only by legal entities (private issuers) or by government or local self-governmental bodies (public issuers). An issuer is an entity which assumes obligations to the owners of securities (investors), ie, the persons who may exercise the rights certified by securities. Private issuers are normally commercial legal entities. It is specified in Federal Law Number 46-FZ of 5 March 1999 that issue of investment securities by non-commercial organisations is permitted only in cases specifically authorised by legislation and is subject to provision of collateral. To qualify as an issuer, a person must meet the requirements established in the normative acts of the Federal Securities Market Commission and the Central Bank of Russia.

Only legal entities incorporated as joint-stock companies may issue shares of stock. Open joint-stock companies may carry out both private and public offerings. Closed joint-stock companies are only eligible for private offerings. Bonds may be offered to the public by joint-stock companies of any types, as well as by limited-liability companies. Bonds may be issued by any issuer only after its charter capital is paid in.[50]

The paid-in capital of an open joint-stock company (representing the required initial investment by incorporators before the company may go public) may not be less than 1,000 Minimum Statutory Wages (MSW), as stipulated by the federal law at the date of registration of a company.[51] For most corporations, however, a right to carry out public offerings is contingent on the condition that their paid charter capital at the date of the issue is not less than 10,000 MSW.[52] This restriction does not apply to open joint-stock companies created in the process of privatisation of state and municipal enterprises. Acquisition of the shares publicly offered in violation of the above requirements may be considered invalid (void) under article 168 of the Civil Code.

Securities Requirements

In General. Investment securities can be issued in one of the following forms:

- Registered securities of documentary form of issue (registered documentary securities);
- Registered securities of non-documentary form of issue (registered non- documentary securities); or
- Bearer securities of documentary form of issue (bearer documentary securities).

When taking a decision to issue securities in the documentary form, an issuer may determine that securities certificates may be released to holders (securities without mandatory centralised keeping) or be kept in depositories and not be given at hand to any holder (securities with compulsory centralised keeping). Most public issues of investment securities are accompanied by a single global certificate, and trades or change of ownership occurs through a depositary.

Investment securities to the bearer can be issued only in documentary form. Registered investment securities may be issued in documentary or non-documentary form. Investment securities with the same state registration number must be issued in the same form.

Shares of Stock. Shares of stock are investment securities certifying the rights of the owner (shareholder) to receive a part of a profit of a joint-stock company as a dividend, to participate in management of a joint-stock company, and to collect a share of assets remaining after liquidation of the company and settlements with creditors.[53] The list of rights certified by shares of stock is not closed. Article 96 of the Civil Code provides that the rights and obligations of shareholders must be defined by the Joint-Stock Company Law. Additional shareholder rights also may be granted in the charter of the company pursuant to article 67 of the Civil Code and article 32 of the Joint-Stock Company Law.

All shares of Russian companies are registered shares.[54] This a great impediment to free trade in securities. The Securities Market Law provides for the possibility of issue of bearer shares by joint-stock companies 'in a certain ratio to the amount of paid nominal capital of an issuer in accordance with the regulation established by the Federal Securities Market Commission'.[55] These normatives have not been passed and, therefore, bearer shares are not issued by Russian joint-stock companies.

Russian law recognises the traditional classification of shares as common and preferred. Holders of common shares have ordinary rights. These rights are enumerated in article 31

53 Securities Market Law, art 2.
54 Joint-Stock Company Law, art 25.
55 Securities Market Law, art 21.

of the Joint-Stock Company Law. Among them is the right to participate in a meeting of shareholders with voting power on issues of its competence, the right to receive dividends, and the right to a share of the company's assets in the case of liquidation. By virtue of article 31(1) of the Joint- Stock Company Law, all holders of common shares of all issues have the same rights. Therefore, the nominal value of equity shares is the same regardless of the sequence of issue.[56]

Preferred shares grant some preferences to shareholders in terms of dividend and asset distribution as compared to common shares. As a general rule, preferred shares cannot vote.[57] Exceptions to this rule are provided for in article 32(4) and (5) of the Joint-Stock Company Law. Different issues of preferred shares may confer different rights on the shareholder. The Joint-Stock Company Law offers several examples of such differentiation. Thus, a holder of a preferred share can have the priority to receive so-called liquidation value[58] or the priority right to distribution of dividends.[59]

The preferred shares of the same type give to shareholders the same rights and have the same nominal value. Nominal values of preferred shares of different types can differ from each other and from the nominal value of common shares. The nominal value of all placed preferred shares of all types cannot exceed 25 per cent of the total amount of the charter capital.

Not every joint-stock company is entitled to issue common and preferred shares or registered and bearer shares. So-called 'popular enterprises' may have only common shares in circulation.[60] The same restriction applies to investment funds which are set up in the form of open joint-stock companies. They may issue only common registered shares.[61]

One of the most prominent examples of peculiar rights of a holder of shares of a joint-stock company formed as a result of privatisation was the 'golden share',[62] which gave its holder (the state) veto power in respect of most significant decisions by a general shareholders' meeting. The Privatisation Law approved in 1997 provided that joint-stock companies formed as a result of privatisation issue essentially the same categories of shares as other joint-stock companies. The Law effectively transformed what used to be a 'golden share' into special rights of the state to take part in the management of the privatised company. The concept of 'golden share' remains in the new Privatisation Law of 21 December 2001.

When classifying shares, one should keep in mind that the Joint-Stock Company Law operates with the categories of authorised and issued shares.[63] Russian law defines shares which are purchased (even if the full payment of the purchase price was not received by the issuer) as issued or placed. Authorised are shares which can be, from time to time, placed with shareholders or third persons according to a decision of a general shareholders' meeting or the board of directors. The notion of authorised shares actually refers not to the securities, but to the provision in the charter of the company allowing issue of securities within certain limits. Authorised shares do not exist as such, being in essence the nominal category. The purpose of this category is to outline the amount and other conditions of shares that may be further issued by a joint-stock company.

Finally, the Joint-Stock Company Law refers to 'additional shares'. These are newly issued shares of a joint-stock company that are offered, but not acquired by an investor. This distinguishes them from placed shares, ie, shares which already have a specific owner.

Bonds (Debentures). Bonds are a type of investment securities certifying the right of their holder to receive nominal value of a bond or other equivalent assets from a person who has issued a bond, at a certain time. A bond entitles its holder to interest indicated therein and sometimes for other proprietary rights.[64] A similar definition of a bond is given in article 2 of the Securities Market Law. Issue of bonds by any issuer is allowed only after its charter capital is paid in full.[65]

Bonds are essentially a form of the loan agreement. The use of this form is restricted. The issue of bonds as a means of borrowing may be used only in cases specifically authorised by law. Bonds may be issued for loans by joint-stock companies, limited-liability companies, the Central Bank of the Russian Federation, and certain other organisations.

Offering of bonds by a company requires a decision of the board of directors, unless otherwise provided for by the charter of a joint-stock company.[66] A bond must have a declared nominal value. The nominal value of all bonds issued by a company may not exceed the company's own charter capital or the value of security provided by a third party for the issue of bonds.

A company has the right to issue bonds secured by company assets or a security provided by a third party. Issue of unsecured bonds is allowed only three years after incorporation and under condition of proper certification of financial reports. Both registered and bearer bonds may be issued. A company which issues registered bonds must keep a register of holders. Issue of bonds is barred for joint-stock companies engaged in certain types of activity.[67]

Limited-liability companies may issue bonds subject to the requirements of the Limited-Liability Company Law, article 31. Regulations applicable in this case are essentially the same as those applicable to bonds issued by a joint-stock company. However, some differences exist. A limited-liability company issuing bonds is obliged to publish its financial reports, a requirement which does not apply to other companies in this form. A company has a right to place bonds for a sum not exceeding the amount of its nominal capital or the amount of security given to a company by a third party. In all other aspects, for which the Limited-Liability Company Law offers no guidance, such companies should follow the special laws on securities and, in particular, the Securities Market Law.

Federal Law Number 139-FZ of 8 July 1999 has authorised that bonds may be issued by the Bank of Russia, in its name, for the purpose of implementation of its monetary policy. Bonds of the Central Bank may be traded only between financial institutions. The procedure of issue is approved by the Government of the Russian Federation Decision Number 1142 of 12 October 1999, as amended. However, the regulation is effective only until 1 January 2003.

State and Municipal Securities. Trading of state investment securities is the largest sector of the securities market in Russia in terms of volume. State investment securities include the following instruments:

- State short-term coupon-less bonds;[68]
- State treasury bonds;[69]
- State bonds of internal currency loans;[70]
- State bonds of external loans;[71]
- State bonds of savings loans;[72]
- State saving bonds;[73]
- Gold certificates of the Ministry of Finance of the Russian Federation;
- Bonds of federal loans with variable and permanent coupon yield;[74]
- State federal bonds;[75]
- State gold bonds;[76]
- State commodity bonds;[77]
- Treasury bills of exchange;[78] and
- State bonds of non-market loans.[79]

General provisions on state loan contracts are found in article 817 of the Civil Code, which provides that a state loan contract is concluded when a creditor purchases state bonds or other state securities. The state securities certify the creditor's right to receive from a debtor (the state) the money or, depending on the loan conditions, other assets, interest, or proprietary rights on the terms provided for in the conditions of the loan.

In a state loan contract, the public entity (the Russian Federation or a sub-unit of the Russian Federation) is a debtor. Both legal persons and individuals may be creditors. Certain restrictions apply to participation of foreign investors. State loans are voluntary, and unilateral modification of their terms is not allowed. Regulations governing state loan contracts are equally applicable to borrowing by municipalities. The state may offer bonds both domestically and internationally. Altogether, these borrowings constitute the bulk of internal and external debt of the Russian Federation. The legal nature of state securities as a specific borrowing by the state is expressly recognised in article 98 of the Budget Code.[80]

State and municipal securities can be issued in the form of bonds or other securities qualifying as investment securities. These securities may entitle the holder to claim money or, depending on issue conditions of these securities, other assets, declared interest, or other proprietary rights.

Secondary Securities Requirements. Derivative (secondary) securities are mentioned in article 19 of the Securities Market Law. Derivative securities certify the right of their holder to sell or buy other securities of issue and circulation of securities and stock exchanges in Russia approved by the Decision of the Government of the Russian Federation Number 78 of 28 December 1991. Issue of derivative securities is prohibited until the report on issue of underlying (primary) investment securities has been registered.

The Federal Securities Market Commission recognises option certificates as derivative securities. An option certificate in Russia is defined as a registered investment security certifying the right of its holder to buy (call option) or to sell (put option) shares or bonds under certain conditions.[81] An option certificate may only be issued in respect of a joint-stock company that complies with certain requirements stipulated by the Federal Securities Market Commission. In particular, the issuer of the mentioned shares must have access to the quotation of securities, at least at one stock exchange or trade system of an organiser of trade; the issuer may not have taken decisions on reorganisation, consolidation, or split of the shares, on increase of their nominal value, on payment of dividends on the shares, 'as well as other corporate events at the moment of taking a decision on issue of option certificates'.[82]

Prospectus Requirements. Registration and disclosure of the issue prospectus is mandatory in case of public offerings (an offering of securities to the unlimited range of owners or holders) in all cases and private offerings (among investors, known in advance) but only if the number of investors exceeds 500 and, regardless of the number of the potential holders, in cases where the total volume of issue exceeds 50,000 minimum statutory wages. The issue prospectus must contain the following:

- Data on the issuer;
- Data on the financial position of the issuer; and
- Information about the securities issue.

The data on the issuer must include:

- The full and abbreviated name of the issuer or the names of the founders;
- The legal address of the issuer;
- The number and data of the certificate of state registration as a legal entity;
- Information about the persons possessing not less than five per cent of the issuer's authorised capital;
- The structure of the issuer's governing bodies, indicated in its constituent documents, including the list of all the members of the council of directors, the board, or the administrative bodies of the issuer who perform similar functions at the time of the adoption of a decision on the securities issue with an indication of the surname, name, and patronymic of each member and all the posts held by each at the present time and during the last five years, and the decision on the issue of shares in the issuer's authorised capital belonging to those members who are personally its participants;
- The list of all legal entities in which the issuer possesses more than five per cent of the authorised capital; and
- The list of all the branches and representative offices of the issuer containing their full names, date and place of registration, and the legal addresses, surnames, names, and patronymics of their managers.

Information on the issuer's financial position must include:

- The balance sheets;
- The report on the formation and use of the reserve fund resources during the last three years;
- The amount of the overdue indebtedness of the issue to creditors and in payments to the corresponding budget on the date of the adoption of a decision on the securities issue;
- Data on the authorised capital of the issuer; and
- The report on the previous issues of securities of the issuer, including the types of the issued securities, the number and data of state registration, the name of the registration body, the size of the issue, the number of issued securities, and the conditions of payment of incomes, and other rights of owners.

Corporate Governance. Most private issuers have a three-level management structure. A joint-stock company's business is conducted by the following governing bodies:

- The general shareholders' or members' meeting;
- The board of directors or supervisory council;
- The managing bodies: and
- The collegial or individual executive body.

Registration of Public Offerings. Public offerings and private offerings of investment securities are subject to registration with the state. At the time of such registration, each issue is assigned a For the state registration of a securities issue, an issuer must present to the registration body an application and certain other documents:

- An application for registration;
- A decision on the securities issue;
- An issue prospectus (if the registration of the securities issue must be accompanied by the registration of the issue prospectus);
- Copies of by-laws (in the case of the issue of shares for the setting up of a joint-stock company); and
- Documents certifying the authorisation of the competent public government body (in cases where such authorisation is required under the legislation of the Russian Federation).

The issue procedure also must correspond to the Issue Standards approved by the Federal Securities Market Commission.[83]

An exhaustive list of the grounds for denying the registration of securities issues is provided in article 21 of the Securities Market Law. It includes:

- Violation of the securities legislation by the issuer, including ambiguity of the submitted documents which makes it impossible to make a conclusion on the compliance of the terms of the issue and circulation of securities with the legislation of the Russian Federation and the disparity between the terms of the securities issue and the legislation on securities; and
- Submission of false information in the issue prospectus, the decision on the securities issue, and/or other documents which are the grounds for registration of the securities issue.

83 Standards of Issue of Stock at Incorporation of Joint-Stock Companies, Additional Stock, Bonds, and Issue Prospectuses, approved by Federal Securities Market Commission Regulation Number 19 of 17 September 1996 (as amended); Instruction of the Central Bank of Russia Number 8 of 17 September 1996 (as amended) on Rules of Issue and Registration of Securities by Credit Organisations at the Territory of the Russian Federation; Standards of Issue of Shares and Bonds and Their Issue Notes at Reorganisation of Commercial Organisations, approved by the Federal Securities Market Commission Decree of 12 February 1997, Number 8; Federal Securities Market Commission (part 2, item 1 of the Standards).

A decision on the refusal to register the securities issue and the issue prospectus may be appealed to a court. If the offering is declared invalid, all securities of the issue must be returned to the issuer, and an issuer must refund proceeds from the offering to securities holders. In such a case, securities holders have an option to recover, in addition to the principal amount paid for shares, interest[84] and damages.[85] Claims for declaring a placement invalid are subject to a shortened limitation period. They must be filed within one year after the commencement date of the offering.[86]

Registration of Placements. The issuer must submit its report on the results of the securities issue to the registration body within 30 days after completion of placement of issued securities. The report must contain:

- The dates of opening and closing of placement;
- The price of placement of securities;
- The number of placed securities; and
- The total amount of raised funds, including the amount of national currency (roubles) paid for securities, the amount of foreign currency paid for securities with the equivalent in the currency of the Russian Federation at the rate of the Central Bank of Russia at the time of contribution, and the value of tangible and intangible assets, contributed as payment for the securities expressed in the currency of the Russian Federation.

Where an issue of securities is not registered, such securities may not be traded on the secondary market. As a general rule, the transfer of title to the security to the first owner does not depend on the full payment for the security. However, further transfers of title are prohibited, until the security is paid in full and the report on results of issue is registered with the state.[87]

Registration of Secondary Trades. A transaction with shares is not deemed closed until the transfer of title is registered with the registrar. To facilitate development of the securities market, the institution of specialised depositories (custodians) was introduced, and the transaction may be closed on the depository books.

Registration of Trade in Organised Market. An organiser of the trading must maintain the register of all transactions closed at the trading sessions, including the following information:

- The transaction identification number;
- The date and time the trade was registered in the trading system;

84 Civil Code, art 395.
85 Civil Code, art 835; Regulation on the Procedure for Reimbursement to the Securities Holders of Money (Other Property) Received by the Issuer against Payment for the Securities which Issue was Recognised Null or Void, approved by Order of the Federal Securities Commission Number 36 of 8 September 1998.
86 Law on Protection of Investors' Rights, art 13.
87 Law on Protection of Investors' Rights, art 5, item 2.

- The names and individual codes of participants of the trade who effected the trade;
- The name of the issuer, type (category) of the security, or name of the other financial instrument;
- The par value of a security;
- The cash value of the transaction; and
- The quantity of securities or financial instruments.

Periodic Disclosure

Public Issuers

In General. An issuer and securities market professionals participating in placement of investment securities must provide potential investors an opportunity to access disclosed information prior to the acquisition of investment securities. Issuers which were required to register an issue prospectus for at least one issue of investment securities are obliged to disclose information about all investment securities issued by them, and their financial and economic activity in the following forms:

- Quarterly reports of an issuer;[88]
- Statements on essential facts affecting the financial and economic activity of an issuer.[89]

According to the Securities Market Law, the contents and procedure of the reporting forms differ for issuers who have already completed the placement of shares and issuers who have ongoing public placements as of the reporting date. However, the Federal Securities Market Commission claims that the second, more extensive set of requirements must apply to all issuers, including those which have already completed the placement. The Federal Securities Market Commission has approved an extended, unified, and mandatory form for the quarterly report.[90]

Quarterly Reports. According to the Securities Market Law, the quarterly report of the issuer which has completed the placement must contain the following:

- The registration codes assigned by the registration body to statements about the essential facts of the issuer's financial and economic activity, filed during the reporting quarter;
- Data on the issuer's financial and economic activity, the balance sheet, and the profit-and-loss accounts at the end of the reporting quarter;

88 Regulations on the Quarterly Report of the Issuer of Securities, approved by Decision of the Federal Securities Market Commission Number 31 of 11 August 1998.

89 Regulations on the Procedure for Disclosure of Information on Essential Facts Affecting the Issuer's Financial and Economic Activity, approved by Federal Securities Market Commission Decision Number 32 of 12 August 1998; Regulation of the Central Bank of Russia Number 43-P of 2 July 1998.

90 Federal Securities Market Commission Decision Number 31 of 11 August 1998.

- Information on facts relating to increase in the issuer's net profits or losses by more than 20 per cent during the reporting quarter (as compared with the previous quarter); and
- Data on the formation and use of reserves and other special funds.

Statements of Essential Facts. According to the Securities Market Law, the list of situations requiring periodic disclosure in the form of the statement on essential facts affecting the issuer's financial and economic activities also differs for issuers who have already completed the placement of shares and for issuers who are still in a process of public placement. Both groups of issuers must file statements in the following situations:

- Reorganisation of the issuer and its subsidiary and dependent companies;
- Distributions on issuer's securities which are declared or paid; and
- Registration of a person who owns more than 25 per cent of issued securities of any particular type.

For issuers which do not have a securities placement in progress, the statement must be filed if the following take place:

- Changes in the list of the issuer's officers (persons who serve in the issuer's management bodies other than the general participants' or shareholders' meeting);
- Changes in the ownership of the issuer and in its subsidiary and dependent companies by the issuer's officers;
- Changes in ownership of the issuer's officers in capital of other legal entities where they hold a stake of 20 per cent or more;
- Changes in the list of owners (shareholders) having a share of 20 per cent of the issuer's authorised capital or more;
- Changes in the list of legal entities which are 20 per cent or more owned by an issuer;[91] and
- The securities are cancelled, suspended, or recognised as void.

The Federal Securities Market Commission has approved an extended, unified list of situations requiring statements of essential facts for issuers who have completed a placement and issuers who have an ongoing public placement.[92] Statements must be submitted to the Federal Securities Market Commission, or the body authorised by it, and be published in the Appendix to the Bulletin of the Federal Securities Market Commission and another publication accessible to most owners of the issuer's securities within five working days after the relevant development takes place.[93]

92 Federal Securities Market Commission Decision Number 32 of 12 August 1998.
93 Federal Securities Market Commission Decision Number 32 of 12 August 1998.

Disclosure by Joint-Stock Companies. In addition to the above requirements, open joint-stock companies must disclose[94] the following:

- The annual report of the company, balance sheet, and other annual accounting;[95]
- An issue prospectus for shares of stock in cases provided for by the normative acts;
- Notices of convening of the general meeting of shareholders according to the procedure provided for by the Law on Joint-Stock Companies;[96] and
- Other information specified by the Federal Securities Market Commission.[97]

The Federal Securities Market Commission, by Decision Number 9 of 8 May 1996, has supplemented the list of information subject to mandatory disclosure with the following data to be published in the mass media:

- Correlation of the value of net assets and the size of authorised capital;
- Number of shareholders;
- Details concerning registrars maintaining the register of securities owners (name, corporate form, location, mailing address, contact telephone numbers, number of a licence issued by the Federal Securities Market Commission (if the register is kept by a specialised registrar); and
- Details concerning the department of the joint-stock company in charge of keeping the register of securities owners of the shareholders: its location, mailing address, and contact telephone numbers (if the joint-stock company keeps the register itself).

Disclosure by Joint-Stock Companies Issuing Bonds. Both public (opened) and private (closed) joint-stock companies, in the event of the public issue of bonds or other investment securities, must publish information on the scope and procedure established by the Federal Securities Market Commission.[98]

Disclosure by Limited-Liability Companies. Limited-liability companies, in contrast to joint-stock companies, are generally not obliged to publish information on their activity.[99]

This rule is reversed, however, for limited-liability companies which carry out public placement of bonds and other securities. In such a case, the company must publish annual reports and balance sheets, as well as other data on its activity.

Disclosure by Issuers of State and Municipal Securities. Disclosure of information on the issue of state and municipal securities includes publication of the normative act under which the securities were issued, reports on performance of the relevant state or municipal budgets of each quarter, and certain other data.[100]

Securities Owners (Investors)

The Securities Market Law provides for disclosure of operations with securities by holders (investors) when:

- The holder has taken possession of 20 per cent or more of the issuer's securities of any type;
- The holder has increased his share of possession of any type of issued securities of one issuer beyond the threshold levels amounting to multiples of each five per cent above 20 per cent of this type of securities (eg, 25 per cent, 30 per cent, or 35 per cent); and
- The holder has reduced his share of possession of any type of issued securities of one issuer below a threshold set at each multiple of five per cent of the overall number of securities of the type in excess of 20 per cent of this type of securities (eg, 25 per cent, 30 per cent, or 35 per cent).

The holder must send to the Federal Securities Market Commission, or another body appointed by it, a notice disclosing the name of the holder, type and registration number of securities, the name of the issuer, and the quantity of securities in his possession within five days after the corresponding transactions. A commercial organisation which has acquired more than 20 per cent of the voting shares of the joint-stock company must publish this information without delay.[101]

Affiliated persons must comply with special disclosure obligations. They must inform an issuer about their ownership of its stock, specifying quantity and categories (or types) of shares of stock owned by them within 10 days from the date of acquisition of the stock.[102] This rule corresponds to the obligation of an issuer to disclose information on affiliated persons described above. An affiliated person who has failed to provide a notice must reimburse an issuer for resulting damages.

Securities Market Professionals

Securities market professionals are obliged to disclose information about their operations with securities when:

- A securities market professional was involved in operations with one type of securities of one issuer during one calendar quarter, provided that the aggregate number of securities involved in the operations exceeded 100 per cent of the total number of the securities; and
- A securities market professional was involved in a single operation with one type of securities of one issuer if the number of securities in this operation constituted not less than 15 per cent of the total number of the securities.

Securities market professionals must disclose operations by sending to the Federal Securities Market Commission, or another body appointed by it, a notice specifying the name of the securities market professional, type and registration code of securities, the name of an issuer, the price of one security, and the number of securities in relevant transactions within five days after the completion of the relevant quarter or after closing of the relevant single operation.

When securities market professionals offer securities and/or announce buy or sale prices, they must disclose the generally accessible information in their possession (ie, the information which is disclosed by the issuer of these securities) or at least explain that such information is available. Article 6 of the Federal Law on Investors' rights imposes further disclosure obligations on the securities market professionals. They are obliged to inform potential investors about prices of transactions with relevant securities during the six preceding weeks or at least indicate that such information is available and will be provided on request.

Other Disclosure Obligations

Issuers of certain securities have passive disclosure obligations, ie, a duty to provide information on request. Such issuers are obliged to collect and store the relevant information and make it available to investors and other participants in the market. For example, a joint-stock company must provide access to some internal documents of the company (excluding bookkeeping records and minutes of meetings of a collegial executive body) to its shareholders. On request of a shareholder, a company must furnish copies of these documents for a fee, which may not exceed the copying and postal costs.

In addition, shareholders must be notified on various corporate events, such as the calling of the general shareholders' meeting, its agenda, information to be considered at the meeting, and their right to demand redemption of shares by the company.

Foreign Issuers with Primary and Secondary Admission

Neither primary nor secondary securities of foreign issuers are admitted to trade in Russia.

Issuers without Ongoing Disclosure Duties

An issuer does not have ongoing disclosure duties in the forms of quarterly reports of an issuer and statements of essential facts if, for no one issue of securities by the issuer, an issue prospectus was required. Issuers still have certain obligations regarding disclosure of information.

Issuers and securities market participants facilitating an offering must provide potential investors an opportunity to examine the information subject to disclosure before acquisition of corresponding investment securities. Acquisition by residents of shares issued by foreign issuers also must be reported the Federal Securities Market Commission by the parties.

Privileged 'Foreign Private' Issuers

Acquisition by residents of the shares issued by foreign issuers also must be reported the Federal Securities Market Commission by the parties.

Proxy Disclosure

There are no rules in Russia requiring proxy disclosure.

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

Offer. Legislation provides certain procedures for the issuer to comply with to complete the issue. The procedure of securities issue itself is defined as a sequence of actions of an issuer with the purpose of placement of investment securities.

The securities issue should be accompanied by the registration of the securities issue prospectus if the investment securities are placed among an unlimited group of investors (public placement) or among a closed group of investors known in advance (private placement), but the number of subscribers exceeds 500 or the aggregate amount of issue exceeds 50,000 minimum statutory wages.

Public Offerings. A public offer of the stock of shares is only available to open joint-stock companies. A public offer of the investment securities by private issuers requires registration of the issue prospectus. Otherwise, the procedure of the public offer is essentially the same standard procedure.

Place of Offer. The domicile of an issuer is deemed to be the place of offer.

Licensing of Transactions with Securities. For circulation of shares through professional participants in the securities market, legislation requires a licence.[103]

103 Securities Market Law, art 9; Decree of the Federal Securities Market Commission Number 22 of 19 December 1996; Decree of the Federal Securities Market Commission Number 16 of 9 September 1996.

Absence of such a licence in certain conditions can serve as a basis for the invalidity of the corresponding transaction.[104]

Shareholders of both closed and open joint-stock companies in certain cases have a priority right on acquisition of the company's shares. In connection therewith, it is required to follow a certain order of enforcing of the right while alienating the shares.[105] Violation of the right on priority acquisition of the shares gives to a shareholder whose rights are violated or to the company to claim in court a transfer of the rights and obligations of a buyer of such shares to the corresponding interested party.

Crossborder Trade

Trade in Russian Securities by Foreigners. Trade in shares and bonds of Russian issuers by non-residents is subject to certain restrictions. Currency regulation restrictions were relaxed as the Central Bank has authorised payments by non-residents in foreign currency for Russian stock.

Acquisition of shares of Russian issuers by foreigners must be reported by the parties to the Federal Securities Market Commission.[106] Transactions with Russian securities outside the Russian Federation are allowed, subject to authorisation by the Federal Securities Market Commission. Article 16 of the Securities Market Law provides that:

> . . . securities issued by the issuers domiciled in the Russian Federation are admitted to circulation outside the Russian Federation on the decision of the Federal Securities Market Commission.

Federal Securities Market Commission Decision Number 7/ps of 22 March 2002 provides that securities of Russian issuers are allowed for circulation outside the Russian Federation without limitations except for two cases. A prior authorisation by the Federal Securities Market Commission is required for initial placement and circulation of Russian securities outside the Russian Federation if such securities will be traded through foreign organisers of trade. Prior authorisation also is required for circulation outside the Russian Federation of Russian securities deposited with a foreign issuer, by means of issue and placement by such foreign issuer of securities, and which certify rights to the Russian securities deposited with him.[107]

Acquisition of the shares of Russian issuers, for which the privatisation is not yet completed (ie, the government holds more than 25 per cent of stock) by non-residents is subject to additional formal requirements.

Trade in Foreign Securities. Trade in foreign securities, other than debt instruments with a maturity term of less than 180 days, has been virtually non-existent in Russia due to currency regulation restrictions. Acquisition of voting shares, convertible shares, and derivative instruments of foreign issuers, subject to some exemptions, is considered to be a capital account operation and requires permission from the Central Bank.

An exemption is made for acquisition of shares by authorised Russian banks, which was allowed by Central Bank Directive Number 193 of 27 March 1998. Another exemption is made for acquisition of shares in companies domiciled in the Commonwealth of Independent States for the amount up to US $10 million.[108]

Recently, the currency regulations were relaxed by allowing Russian residents (natural persons) to transfer foreign currency into or outside the Russian Federation as payment for securities denominated in foreign currency up to US $75,000 per year, without permission from the Central Bank.[109]

Trade in Shares of Russian Banks. Terms of organisation of banks with participation of foreign investments in the Russian Federation were issued by the Letter of the Central Bank of Russia of 8 April 1993, Number 14. Banks acting in the Russian Federation and wishing to increase their charter capital on the account of non-residents' contributions must obtain preliminary consent of the Central Bank. This also applies to sale ('assignment') by shareholders-residents of already-issued shares (existing shares in the capital) to non-residents. Sales or issues of shares of banking institutions to non-residents without permission from the Bank of Russia are invalid and can result in withdrawal of the banking licence.

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Holdings

Shareholder Duties. A holding company is obliged to publish information of acquisition of more than five per cent of the stock of any company (including a holding company's subsidiary) within a week after the execution of the transaction. The failure of a holding company to file notification may be the basis for invalidation of the transaction.

There are certain limitations in respect of the ownership structure and corporate forms of companies in particular industries. Audit firms cannot be created in the form of open joint-stock companies.[110]

Natural monopolies are understood as commodity markets which, due to the nature of the product, function more efficiently in the absence of competition (eg, utility companies and railways). Special regulations apply to transactions with shares of natural monopolies. A person or a group of persons is obliged to notify respective authorities regulating natural monopolies in the case of acquisition of shares which, together with shares already owned, gives it a control over more than 10 per cent of the voting stock of a natural monopoly. Such notices must be made within 30 days from the date of the transaction. The same requirement is applied to a natural monopoly which has acquired more than 10 per cent of the voting stock of any company.[111]

Acquisition of more than five per cent of the stock (shares) of a credit organisation by a person or a group of legal and/or physical persons in the course of one or a series of transactions requires notification to the Bank of Russia.[112] Preliminary approval by the Central Bank of Russia is required for acquisition of more than 20 per cent of the shares. The Bank of Russia must inform the applicant in writing of its decision no later than within 30 days from receiving a request for clearing the transaction.

Incorporators of a bank may not cease to be members of the bank within the first three years from the date of its registration.[113] Shareholders who are the founders of a bank do not have a right to sell or assign the shares belonging to them within the mentioned period.

Professional securities market-makers are obliged to disclose certain information about their operations by giving notice to the Federal Securities Market Commission.

Disclosure of acquisition of substantial holdings may entail a duty by the owner to notify the Federal Securities Market Commission or to publish information about its shareholding interest. Any owner must disclose information about his possession of the securities of any issuer by sending notice to the Federal Securities Market Commission when:

- The owner has acquired ownership of 20 per cent or more of any class of securities of a given issuer;
- The owner has increased his share of ownership of a given class of securities beyond a threshold set at each multiple of five per cent of the overall number of securities of the class (in excess of 20 per cent of the class of securities); and
- The owner has reduced his share of ownership of any class of the issued securities of the issuer below a threshold set at each multiple of five per cent of the overall number of securities of the class (in excess 20 per cent of the class of securities).

The owner must disclose the information (containing the name of the owner, the type and state registration number of the securities, the name of the issuer, and the quantity of securities belonging to him) not later than five days after the corresponding event.

A duty to publish information about acquisition of more than 20 per cent of voting stock applies only to legal entities such as joint-stock companies and limited-liability companies. It attaches to such entities in the case of direct acquisition of ownership in respect of more than 20 per cent of the voting shares of other issuers. A company is obliged to publish information about acquiring more than 20 per cent of another company's voting stock in the manner determined by the Federal Securities Market Commission and the federal antimonopoly authorities.[114]

A person or a group of affiliated persons intending to carry out transactions which would push the cumulative ownership of the target company beyond the threshold of 30 per cent of issued voting shares is obliged to send to the company a written notice of its intention to acquire the shares not earlier than 90 days and not later than 30 days before the date of acquisition of the stock.[115] The rule also applies to acquisition of each five per cent in excess of 30 per cent of voting shares. Companies with less than 1,000 shareholders are exempt from the requirement.

Dependent and Subsidiary Companies. Acquisition of a large shareholding by a person or a group of related persons enables them to control the companies as if they were the sole owners, as well as the possibility to influence decisions of a joint-stock company's management bodies. If, as a result of the acquisition of a large share interest of a company, the latter becomes a dependent or subsidiary company,[116] such transaction may affect ensuring of a joint-stock company's creditors.

A company is dependent if more than 20 per cent of its voting shares is owned by another company. A company is a subsidiary if, by virtue of owning a controlling block of shares or pursuant to an agreement between it and another company or otherwise, another (principal) company can determine the business acts of a subsidiary.

Company Duties. Joint-stock companies and professional participants in the securities market are obliged to notify the Federal Securities Market Commission about acquisitions of a certain portion of shares.[117] In general, any information materially affecting the business of an issuer is subject to periodic disclosure, provided that at least one issue of shares of this issuer was offered publicly, or offered privately to more than 500 persons or for the amount exceeding 50,000 minimum standard wages.

The disclosure has two forms, ie, periodic reporting and notices regarding essential facts. Periodic disclosure encompasses quarterly reports which must include:

- The list of owners (shareholders) of the issuer owning 20 per cent and more of the issuer's shares;
- The list of legal entities 20 per cent or more of whose shares is owned by the issuer; and
- Other data specified in the Law on Securities Market and Federal Securities Market Commission Decision Number 31 of 11 August 1998.

A quarterly report must be submitted to the Federal Securities Market Commission within 45 calendar days after the end of the corresponding quarter. It also must be sent to any of the securities holders on their request at a nominal fee covering reproduction and mailing costs. A detailed regulation of quarterly reporting is provided by the Regulations on the Quarterly Reports of Securities Issuers, approved by Decision of the Federal Securities Market Commission Number 31 of 11 August 1998.

Notice must be made by an issuer when its shareholders' register indicates concentration of more than 25 per cent of a certain class of issued securities in the hands of one owner.[118]

Insider Trading and Fraud

Material Rules

Transactions with an Interest. The regulation of 'transactions with an interest' is a device intended to prevent insider transactions and is found in the Law on Joint-Stock Companies. This device is particularly effective in respect of securities offerings and in transactions with treasury stock. A special clearance procedure must be followed for transactions where a company sells its shares and the counter-party (buyer) is deemed to be a 'person with an interest' (an insider). The following persons are deemed to 'have an interest':

- Members of the board of directors (or supervisory board) of the company;
- The general manager, members of the collective executive body of the company or shareholders holding jointly with their affiliated person(s) 20 per cent or more of the voting shares of the company, or persons who may give binding instructions to the company;
- Spouses, parents, children, brothers, sisters, adoptive parents, and adopted children of the persons indicated above;
- Affiliated persons;
- Companies which are 20 per cent or more owned by persons described above; and/or
- Companies wherein above-mentioned persons hold office(s) in management bodies.

In addition, the charter of the company may provide for other cases when a person is deemed to 'have an interest'. A transaction with an interested party must generally be approved prior to entering into it by a majority of votes of directors (supervisory board) of a company who do not have an interest in the transaction. However, the decision is within the exclusive competence of the general shareholders' meeting in the following cases:

- The book value of property sold or the price of property acquired is two per cent or more of the company's assets; and
- The number of voting shares of the company or of other convertible securities conveyed under the transaction or several related transactions exceeds two per cent of the overall number of voting shares previously issued by the company and voting shares into which previously issued securities can be converted.

118 Federal Law on the Securities Market, articles 23 and 30; Federal Securities Market Commission Decision Number 32 of 11 August 1998.

The Securities Market Law expressly provides that insiders, ie, persons possessing proprietary information, cannot use such information for entering into transactions. Such transactions are invalid and unlawful.[119]

Proprietary information is understood to be such data about the issuer and its the securities which is not publicly available and which gives the persons possessing it a competitive advantage vis-à-vis other securities market participants.

Russian law protects commercial secrets (ie, information which has actual or potential commercial value, is not publicly available, and is safeguarded by an owner who exercises efforts to maintain its secrecy).

A person who has disclosed or used information constituting a commercial secret in violation of statutory or contractual duty must compensate damages caused by these acts. These rules apply to information in the securities market.

Professional participants in the securities market are obliged to offer to their customers (investors) the following information:

- A copy of the licence for professional activity in the securities market;
- A copy of the document of state registration of the securities market professional;
- Information on the body issuing the licence for professional activity at the securities market (name, address, and telephone numbers); and
- Information on the registered capital, owned assets of the securities market professional, and its reserves.

In case of the failure of a securities market professional to offer or disclose information or in case of provision of incorrect, incomplete, and/or misleading information, the investor has the basis for demanding termination or modification of the contract with the securities market professional and compensation for damages.

Criminal liability is provided by the Criminal Code for persistent failure to provide information to investors and regulatory authorities or the provision of false or incomplete information, if such failures or actions have caused major damage to citizens, organisations, or the state.

Basis of Territorial Link. The basis of a territorial link in cases of insider trading and fraud has not been tested in the courts. However, judging by the overall tradition of the Russian legal system, the law will be applied depending on the nationality (domicile) of an issuer. For companies incorporated in Russia, that will be the law of the Russian Federation; for companies incorporated in other countries, it will be the law of the corresponding country.

119 Civil Code, art 169; Decree of the Presidium of the High Arbitration Court of the Russian Federation of 2 July 1996, Number 757/96.

Extraterritorial Application. The rules on conflict of laws provide two principal rules, depending on the nature of violations. The law of the country where the infringement has taken place applies to torts. The law applicable to contracts is determined in accordance with rules found in article 166 of the Fundamentals of Civil Legislation. Extraterritorial application of Russian laws relating to insider trading has not been tested.

Public Take-Over Bids

Territorial Application (Foreign Bidder–Domestic Target). Take-over regulations apply to all bids for acquisition of domestic targets, regardless of the nationality of the bidder and the seller of stock.

Procedural Requirements. A person or a group of affiliated persons intending to carry out transactions which would push the cumulative ownership of the target company beyond the threshold of 30 per cent of issued voting shares is obliged to send to the company a written notice of intention to acquire the shares not earlier than 90 days and not later than 30 days before the date of acquisition of the stock.[120]

If the bidder succeeds in acquiring, independently or jointly with his affiliated person, 30 per cent or more of issued voting shares of the company, it is obliged within 30 days from the date of acquisition of shares to make a buyout offer to other shareholders. Shareholders have 30 days, from the day they receive an offer to sell their shares to a successful bidder, to accept or refuse it.

The offer to sell shares must include information on the bidder and quote buyout price and the deadline for transfer and payment of shares if the offer is accepted. The buyout price quoted by a successful bidder must be the market price of such shares, but it may not be lower than the average weighted price for the acquisition of stock of the company during the six months immediately preceding the date of the acquisition of 30 per cent or more of the stock of the company by the bidder.

A bidder's failure to comply with the notice or buying offer requirement will not render the transaction invalid. However, the voting power of the bidder will be limited to the number of voting shares, which were acquired in compliance with the take-over regulations. Shares acquired in breach of such regulations will not be taken into account for voting. This rule also applies to acquisition of each five per cent in excess of 30 per cent of voting shares.

Exemptions. Joint-stock companies with 1,000 or less shareholders are exempt from the above take-over regulations.

The application of take-over regulations to a buyout of minority shares may be waived by the charter of a joint-stock company or an ad hoc decision of a shareholders' meeting. Shares owned by a successful bidder and its affiliated persons do not count in voting on this issue.

Recognition of Foreign Take-Over Regulation. There is no practice regarding recognition of foreign take-over regulations.

Introduction

Regulatory System

Prior to 1973, Singapore shared a common stock exchange with its immediate northern neighbour, Malaysia, and there was no statutory regulation of the stock exchange. In 1973, the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd, a public limited-liability company, was incorporated.

It was then that the Securities Industry Act 1973, based largely on corresponding Australian legislation, was enacted. However, the Act adopted a largely laissez- faire approach, and the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd essentially regulated its own affairs and the stockbroking industry.

Legislative overhaul ensued in 1985 when the Pan-Electric group of companies collapsed due to reckless and ill-fated speculation in forward contracts in securities, and the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd had to be closed for three days. This debacle prompted the enactment of the new Securities Industry Act, which was again based on Australian legislation. This new regime ended the hitherto effectively self-regulated stockbroking industry.

The Monetary Authority of Singapore was charged with the responsibility of administering the Securities Industry Act, and it was given extensive powers of regulation, supervision, and investigation over the securities industry. Statutory licensing requirements for stockbroking companies, investment advisers, and their representatives also were introduced. Furthermore, more comprehensive rules for the conduct of securities business and the trading of securities were established.

In particular, the influence of the Monetary Authority of Singapore over the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd has become apparent under the existing regulatory regime. The Monetary Authority of Singapore has the power to approve amendments to the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd rules and listing rules and to issue directions to the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd with which the Exchange has a statutory duty to comply.

Furthermore, the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd has statutorily obliged to provide reasonable assistance to the Monetary Authority of Singapore for the performance of the latter's functions, and the Monetary Authority of Singapore has the power of review over any disciplinary action taken by the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd. While the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd remains very active in regulating and monitoring the securities market and its participants and is probably to be regarded as the primary regulator in practice, all this is done in close consultation with the Monetary Authority of Singapore. On a day-to-day basis, the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd maintains responsibility, of course, for the administration and implementation of its internal rules, for example, the listing rules and the rules governing the conduct of securities business by its member stockbroking firms.

Apart from the Securities Industry Act, which is the principal piece of legislation regulating the securities industry, the other relevant piece of legislation is the Company Act, which deals with the general statutory duties of companies and their officers, including public listed companies. The Company Act also contains basic provisions in relation to the specialised field of take-overs and mergers, but essentially delegates authority to a specialised body of rules enacted under the Company Act called the Singapore Code on Take-overs and Mergers. The Securities Industry Council, a statutory body established under the Securities Industry Act, is the principal body responsible for administering the Code.

Legal Sources

In General

Singapore inherited the legal system of her former colonial master — England — and has a Common Law system. The main sources of law are therefore legislation and judge-made law.

However, much of the securities industry is governed by rules which do not have the force of law, chiefly, the rules promulgated by the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd. These will be described here as well, since in practice they have as much, if not more, impact on securities trading in Singapore.

Securities Industry Act

The Securities Industry Act is the primary piece of legislation that regulates the securities industry, and one also must take note of the Securities Industry Regulations, which is subsidiary legislation passed under the authority of the Securities Industry Act. Briefly, the Securities Industry Act deals with the following:

- The general powers of the Monetary Authority of Singapore in relation to investigations, inspections, and the obtaining of documentary evidence;
- The establishment and Ministerial approval of securities exchanges;
- The powers of the Monetary Authority of Singapore in relation to the supervision and control of securities exchanges and the trading of securities;
- The licensing of dealers, investment advisers, and their representatives and their duty to maintain a register of interests in securities;
- The conduct of securities business by licensed persons;

- The duty of dealers and investment advisers in relation to the maintenance of proper accounts and audit requirements;
- The establishment and administration of fidelity funds; and
- The prohibition of insider trading, market manipulation, and other securities frauds.

Companies Act

The Companies Act is the basic corporations legislation, and it deals with the fundamental incidents of corporate activity. The Company Act deals with the following aspects which are relevant to the securities industry:

- The public offering of securities and other interests, prospectus requirements, and exemptions;
- The notification requirements and the maintenance of registers in relation to substantial shareholdings;
- The trustee requirements and the maintenance of registers in relation to debentures;
- The establishment and operation of the Central Depository System, the scripless shares trading system used by the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd;
- The duties of companies in relation to the holding of meetings, the maintenance of proper accounts, and audit requirements;
- The qualifications and duties of company directors and officers; and
- The conduct of take-overs and mergers.

Code on Take-overs and Mergers

Under the authority of the Company Act, a non-statutory code has been declared to apply to the conduct of take-overs and mergers. The Code on Take-overs and Mergers is similar in nature to the London Code on Take-overs and Mergers, and it is couched in non-technical language. Administered by the Securities Industry Council, the Code supplements the Company Act's basic provisions on the conduct of take-overs and mergers.

The Code essentially contains a number of General Principles and Rules which are to be complied with in the conduct of a take-over or merger of a public company. It does not deal with the commercial merits of a take-over or merger, but it lays down the proper practice to be followed by the parties involved in a take-over and merger, including the following aspects:

- The provision of sufficient time and accurate information and advice to shareholders to decide on the merits of a take-over offer;
- The equality of treatment of shareholders;
- The duties of the directors of the offeror and offeree in relation to the conduct of the take-over or merger;
- The documentation required to accompany a take-over or merger;
- The timetables for the various procedures to be completed during a take-over or merger;

- A prohibition against the use of certain defensive tactics to defeat a take-over;
- The prevention of insider trading and market manipulation; and
- The triggering of an obligation to make a mandatory general take-over offer.

Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Rules

In General. There are four bodies of rules prescribed by the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd which are of importance, namely:

- The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Memorandum and Articles of Association;
- The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Rules;
- The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Listing Manual; and
- The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Bye-Laws.

Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Memorandum and Articles of Association and Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Rules. The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Memorandum and Articles of Association and the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Rules are concerned with the internal regulation of the membership of the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd.

They deal with the rights and liabilities between the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd and the member stockbroking companies and provide for certain internal and disciplinary procedures with respect thereto.

Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Listing Manual. The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Listing Manual, on the other hand, contains the rules with which companies the securities of which are listed on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd are contractually obliged to comply.

Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Bye-Laws. Finally, the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Bye-Laws contain comprehensive provisions dealing with the conduct of securities trading business on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd.

Common Law

The Supreme Court of Singapore comprises of the Court of Appeal and the High Court. The former is the highest court in Singapore, appeals to the Privy Council in England having been abolished in 1994. The law as laid down in the decisions of the High Court and the Court of Appeal is binding in Singapore. However, perhaps due to the size of the jurisdiction, to date there have not been many Singapore decisions in relation to securities regulation.

Where a situation is not covered by law laid down by the Singapore courts, reference may be made to case law from other Commonwealth jurisdictions. For example, English cases are treated with respect and regarded as highly persuasive in Singapore. Furthermore, in the context of securities regulation and company law, decisions from Australia may be relevant where they relate to statutory provisions which are identical or similar to the corresponding Singapore provisions.

Authorities

In General

The main regulatory authorities in relation to the securities industry in Singapore are:

- The Monetary Authority of Singapore;
- The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd;
- The Securities Industry Council;
- The Registry of Companies; and
- The Commercial Affairs Department.

Monetary Authority of Singapore

The Monetary Authority of Singapore is a body corporate established by statute. It is the de facto central bank of Singapore and has general supervisory powers over the securities, insurance, banking, and futures sectors. In relation to the securities industry, the Monetary Authority of Singapore is the primary regulator with wide statutory powers conferred by the Securities Industry Act, a brief description of which has been set out above.

However, as also pointed out above, in practice, it is the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd that has assumed the responsibility to deal with most regulatory matters in relation to the securities industry, although no doubt in close consultation with the Monetary Authority of Singapore.

Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd

The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd, a public limited-liability company, was incorporated in 1973, and it remains the only licensed stock exchange in Singapore. Its members are the stockbroking companies, and the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd regulates closely the constitution and operations of its members through the Memorandum and Articles of Association and the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Rules.

The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd also regulates the conduct of securities trading business by the stockbroking companies and their representatives through the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Bye-Laws.

The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd maintains two boards, the Main Board and the Stock Exchange of Singapore Dealing and Automated Quotation System (SESDAQ). SESDAQ, which was established in 1987, has less stringent listing criteria in comparison to the Main Board, and it is designed for local stocks with a smaller capitalisation and a shorter track record.

Until September 1999, the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd also maintained a Foreign Board for the purpose of providing access for promising foreign enterprises that have good prospects for profitability but have yet to meet the criteria for listing on the Main Board. The Foreign Board has since been abolished, and foreign enterprises are now able to list on the Main Board or SESDAQ, depending on their track record or size. All the companies the securities of which are listed on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd boards are contractually bound to comply with the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Listing Manual, the provisions of which are administered and enforced by the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd.

The powers of the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd in relation to the enforcement of the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Listing Manual are, therefore, basically contractual in nature, although there is statutory provision allowing applications to the court to enforce the provisions of the Listing Manual.

The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd also maintains a market linkage with the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD) in the United States. This system allows for the trading of stocks quoted on NASDAQ to be bought or sold through the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd.

The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd further provides an over-the-counter market for trading in the securities of foreign companies called 'CLOB International'. These securities are not listed on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd and Singapore brokers make a market for such shares. Accordingly, these foreign companies are not obliged to comply with the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Listing Manual and the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd has no regulatory powers over them.

The bulk of the securities that were traded on CLOB International used to be the securities of Malaysian companies shares but trading in such securities halted abruptly recently when the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange of Malaysia announced that it regarded the market as illegal and that it would not recognise such trades. The Malaysian securities formerly traded on CLOB International are now frozen by the Kuala Lumpur Stock Exchange, and the crisis has yet to be resolved.

Securities Industry Council

The Securities Industry Council is a body established under the Securities Industry Act, and it consists of representatives of business, government, and the Monetary Authority of Singapore as the Minister of Finance may appoint. Its general function is to advise the Minister of Finance on all matters relating to the securities industry. The Monetary Authority of Singapore also may consult the Securities Industry Council for the proper and effective implementation of the Securities Industry Act.

The specific and practically most significant function of the Securities Industry Council is to administer the Singapore Code on Take-overs and Mergers. In this connection, however, the Securities Industry Council has few statutory powers and performs this function in a way somewhat similar to the approach of the celebrated London Panel on Take-overs and Mergers.

Registry of Companies

The Registry of Companies is the statutory body established under the Company Act which is responsible for maintaining statutory records of local and foreign companies carrying on business in Singapore.

In the realm of securities regulation, the key function of the Registry of Companies is to regulate the form and contents of prospectuses for securities issues and the statutory statements and documents required to be issued in a take-over.

Commercial Affairs Department

The Commercial Affairs Department is a department of the Ministry of Finance, and it is charged with the responsibility of investigating and prosecuting offences under the Securities Industry Act and the Company Act.

Legal Order and Regulatory Interests

Admission

Market Participants

Domestic Exchanges. As stated above, there is only one domestic securities exchange in Singapore, which is operated by the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd. The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd is a public company limited by shares incorporated under the Company Act and its members are the stockbroking firms through which securities are traded on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd.

Various forms of securities may be listed and traded on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd, including equity securities, equity-linked securities, such as warrants, and debt securities, such as bonds, debentures, loan stock, and notes.

Virtually all the securities traded on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd are in electronic 'book-entry' form rather than scrip form. The scripless securities accounts and the central book-entry clearing system are operated by the Central Depository (Pte) Ltd.

Transborder Electronic Trading Systems. There is no transborder electronic trading system operating in Singapore.

Off-Market Transactions. Transactions in scripless securities may be effected 'off-market' in 'married deals' through brokers, when a seller and buyer are matched not through the market but through one or more brokers.

In such a situation, securities from one account may be transferred directly to another account without going through the market. Alternatively, an investor may withdraw his scripless securities from the Central Depository (Pte) Ltd, receive them in scrip form, and then enter into a transaction 'off-market'.

Securities

Issuer Requirements. Both local and foreign equity securities may be listed on the Main Board of the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd. Securities designated for listing may be denominated in Singapore dollars or foreign currencies (with certain qualifying restrictions for local equity securities).

Local issuers also have the option of listing on SESDAQ which, as described earlier, is a market established to enable companies that do not yet meet the requirements for a Main Board listing to raise funds from the stock market. Prior to September 1999, foreign equity securities had the option of listing on the Foreign Board, which was a market established to enable foreign enterprises that do not yet meet the requirements for a Main Board listing to raise funds from the stock market. The Foreign Board has since been abolished, and foreign enterprises are now able to list on the Main Board or SESDAQ, depending on their track record or size.

Requirements for Primary Listing on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Main Board. Both local and foreign corporations may seek a primary listing on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd. An issuer applying for the primary listing of its equity securities on the Main Board is generally required to meet the following requirements:

- In the case of companies with a market capitalisation of S $300 million or less, at least 25 per cent of its issued and paid-up capital is to be in the hands of not less than 1,000 shareholders;
- In the case of companies with a market capitalisation of more than S $300 million, the percentage of shares which are to be in the hands of not less than 1,000 shareholders is at the discretion of the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd, subject to a minimum of 10 per cent;
- It must satisfy one of the following three criteria in relation to its track record: (a) cumulative consolidated pre-tax profit of not less than S $7.5 million for the last three years and a minimum pre-tax profit of not less than S $1 million for each of those three years, (b) an aggregate pre-tax profit of not less than S $10 million for the preceding one or two years, or (c) market capitalisation of not less than S $80 million calculated based on issue price and post-floatation issued capital;
- The group must be in a healthy financial position with no shortfall in working capital;
- A subsidiary or parent company of an existing listed issuer will not normally be considered suitable for listing if the assets and operations of the applicant are substantially the same as those of the existing listed issuer; in arriving at a decision, the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd will consider the applicant's business or commercial reasons for listing; and
- There must not be other factors which make a primary listing unsuitable, for example, the make-up of the management of the company and the character and integrity of the directors and management and controlling shareholders of the company, the vulnerability of the company to specific factors or events, and the percentage of related-party transactions which are unable to be removed.

Requirements for Secondary Listing on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Main Board. The equity securities of an issuer seeking a secondary listing on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd must already be quoted or will be quoted concurrently on the issuer's home exchange or an overseas stock exchange, and there must be an open market in the securities for which listing is sought. The issuer is expected to have at least 2,000 shareholders worldwide.

Requirements for a Listing on SESDAQ. An issuer applying for listing of its equity securities on SESDAQ need not meet any minimum profit or share capital requirements. However, the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd will consider various factors, such as the integrity of the management and controlling shareholders, the prospects of the company, and whether there are any conflicts of interest.

An issuer applying for the primary listing of its securities on SESDAQ is generally required to meet the following requirements:

- While there are no minimum profit or share capital requirements, a company with no track record at all will normally be expected to show that it requires funds to finance a project or the development of a new product, which must have been fully researched and costed;
- At least 500,000 shares or 15 per cent of the issued and paid-up capital (whichever is the greater) should be held by not less than 500 public shareholders;
- The company must be engaged in a business which is expected to be viable and profitable, with prospects for future growth and expansion;
- A company listed on SESDAQ may be considered for transfer to the Main Board after it has been listed for at least two years on SESDAQ and meets the minimum share capital and track record requirements applicable to Main Board Companies.

Listing of Local Debt Securities. In relation to an application for the listing of an issue of local debt securities by an issuer whose equity securities are listed on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd, the issue of debt securities must have a nominal value of at least S $750,000 and be held in the hands of at least 100 holders. In relation to an application from an issuer whose equity securities are not listed on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd, the issuer also is expected to be able to meet the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd's requirements for the listing of equity securities.

Listing of Foreign Debt Securities. An issuer seeking to list its foreign debt securities is expected to be:

- A supranational body;
- A government, or a governmental agency whose obligations are guaranteed by a government;
- A corporation which has a cumulative consolidated pre-tax profit of at least S $50 million for the last three years, or a minimum pre-tax profit of S $20 million for any one of the three years, and consolidated net tangible assets of at least S $50 million; or

- A corporation whose obligations under the issue are guaranteed by a corporation which meets any of the above requirements.

The minimum number of holders of the debt securities should not be less than 100.

Listing of Investment Funds. An investment fund applying for listing should comply with the following requirements:

- An investment fund denominated in Singapore dollars should have a minimum asset size of at least $20 million and at least 25 per cent of the investment fund's share capital or units should be held by at least 500 public shareholders (100 in the case of a venture capital fund);
- An investment fund denominated in a foreign currency should have a minimum asset size of US $20 million, and a spread of holders necessary to enable an orderly market in the shares or units of the fund to develop, and may be required to establish facilities for the transfer and registration of shares or units in Singapore;
- An investment fund denominated in Singapore dollars must comply with certain restrictions, such as caps on investments in companies related to the fund's substantial shareholders and investments in unlisted securities;
- A newly formed investment fund should not change its investment objectives and policies in the first three years unless otherwise approved by shareholders through a special resolution in a general meeting; and
- The management company and the persons managing the investments of the investment fund must be reputable and have a track record of at least five years, with satisfactory experience in managing the particular types of funds for which listing is sought.[1]

Securities Requirements. There are certain restrictions on the form of securities which may be issued in Singapore. These restrictions are contained in the Company Act and, in the case of securities listed on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd, in the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Listing Manual.

Under the Company Act, a company incorporated in Singapore is not permitted to issue bearer share warrants, which are warrants which state that the bearer of the warrant is entitled to the shares specified therein and which enable the shares to be transferred by delivery of the warrant. Furthermore, options granted in respect of shares in public companies must have an exercise period of not more than five years; otherwise, the option is void.

This stipulation does not apply to certain employee share option offerings, for which the exercise period may be 10 years, and does not apply in the case where holders of debentures have an option to take up shares of the company by way of redemption of the debentures.

1 A venture capital fund is exempted from complying with certain restrictions on investments, such as the cap on investments in unlisted companies, but such an investment fund should be offered for sale and be quoted for trading in denominations of at least S $5,000.

Prospectus Requirements. Under the Company Act, a prospectus is required to be registered with the Registry of Companies before securities may be offered to the public in Singapore. There is no statutory definition of what constitutes the 'public' under Singapore law. It is a question of fact to be determined by reference to all the material circumstances of each case.

The relevant factors which may be considered include the number of persons the securities are offered to, the relationship or nexus between the offeror and the offerees, and the nature of the offer. Generally, it may be prudent to consider an offer to more than 15 to 20 persons in Singapore as an offer to the public in Singapore, unless there are very persuasive reasons to reach a different conclusion.

The prospectus must comply with the requirements of the Company Act, which are fairly extensive, as to its form and content. These include the following:

- Particulars of all the directors or proposed directors of the issuer;
- Nature of the company's business and names of related corporations;
- Particulars of any property which is to be purchased or acquired by the company and which is to be paid for wholly or partly out of the proceeds of the issue;
- Particulars of every material contract, not being a contract entered into in the ordinary course of the company's business, entered into in the two years preceding the date of issue of the prospectus;
- Particulars of the nature and extent of the interest of every director and expert in the promotion of the company or the property proposed to be acquired by the issuer;
- A report by an approved company auditor together with the relevant financial statements for the preceding five financial years, to be dated no more than nine months (unless otherwise extended by the Registrar) before the issue of the prospectus; and
- A report by the directors as to whether, after due inquiry by them in relation to the interval between the date to which the last accounts have been made up and a date not earlier than 14 days before the issue of the prospectus, (a) the business of the corporation and its subsidiaries has in their opinion been satisfactorily maintained, (b) there have in their opinion arisen since the last annual general meeting of the corporation any circumstances adversely affecting the trading or the value of the assets of the corporation or any of its subsidiaries, (c) the current assets of the corporation and of its subsidiaries appear in the books at values which are believed to be realisable in the ordinary course of business, (d) there are any contingent liabilities by reason of any guarantees given by the corporation or any of its subsidiaries, or (e) there are, since the last annual report, any changes in published reserves or any unusual factors affecting the profit of the corporation and its subsidiaries.

If the securities are equity securities proposed to be listed on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd, the prospectus must contain further categories of information, including:

- Issue statistics, including net tangible assets before and after flotation, premium, or discount of the issue price over the net tangible assets per share before and after flotation, historical and prospective net earnings per share and issue price earnings ratio, and forecast dividend and dividend cover;

- Particulars of directors, promoters, and executive officers, including details on past convictions (if any), option schemes, aggregate remuneration paid to directors in the last financial year, terms of existing and proposed service contracts, and interests of directors and substantial shareholders in equity securities of the issuer;
- Detailed history and business of the issuer, including description of major customers and suppliers, competition in the industry, full and candid disclosure of specific factors to which the issuer is vulnerable, and information on transactions involving related parties and any conflicts of interest;
- Particulars of total borrowings and indebtedness and contingent liabilities, and a statement by the directors that in their opinion the working capital is sufficient or, if not, how the additional working capital thought by the directors to be necessary will be provided;
- Discussion on past earnings and trading and financial prospects; and
- Information on pending or threatened litigation or arbitration proceedings.

A rights issue which is renounceable in favour of persons other than existing members or debenture holders of the company and in respect of which an application is made for permission to list the securities on a stock exchange is deemed to be an offer to the public for which an abridged prospectus must be registered. Advertisements which contain information in excess of certain prescribed categories are deemed to be prospectuses, with the attendant requirements as to form and content and liability for misstatements in prospectuses.

An exemption from the requirements as to the form and content of a prospectus relating to shares or debentures may be obtained from the Registrar. The Registrar may make such an order either unconditionally or on such terms and conditions as he may think fit to impose. An exemption order may be made by the Registrar if he is of the opinion that compliance with the requirements in respect of which exemption has been applied for would be unduly burdensome.

The Registrar also may make an exemption order if the securities are shares or debentures denominated in a currency other than Singapore dollars and issued by a body corporate incorporated outside Singapore, or by a foreign government or an international organisation, and an application is being made for the securities to be listed or quoted on an approved stock exchange in Singapore, if the Registrar is of the opinion that compliance with the particular requirement is unnecessary for the protection of persons who may normally be expected to buy or deal in those securities, being persons who are sufficiently expert to understand the risks involved.

If the securities to be offered to the public comprise debentures, in addition to the prospectus requirements, a trustee corporation approved by the Registrar must be appointed as trustee for the holders of the debentures pursuant to the debentures or in a trust deed relating to the debentures, unless the issuer is a prescribed corporation (defined to mean a banking corporation or a corporation or class of corporation which has been declared by the Minister by notification in the Government Gazette).

Exemptions from Prospectus Requirements. There are certain exemptions to the prospectus registration and trustee corporation requirements of the Company Act, contained in Division 5A of the Company Act. These include the exemptions in the following circumstances, where such offers would otherwise be deemed to be offers to the public and would require the registration of a prospectus (and, if applicable, the appointment of a trustee corporation):

- Offers of shares or debentures pursuant to an offer to enter into an underwriting agreement;
- Certain offers made to existing members or debenture holders of a corporation and which relate to shares in or debentures of that corporation;
- Offers made in connection with a take-over scheme made in compliance with the Company Act;
- Offers made in accordance with a certain employee share investment scheme (including a share option scheme);
- Offers of shares or debentures which have not been previously issued and are uniform in all respects with shares and debentures previously issued and listed on a stock exchange (a statement of material facts in accordance with a prescribed format in the Company Act would have to be registered in place of a prospectus);
- Offers of debentures by a body incorporated in a country outside Singapore where the offer is made by a recognised dealer to such institutional, professional, or business investors as the Minister of Finance of Singapore may specify, being persons or bodies that appear to him sufficiently expert to understand any risk involved in buying or selling those debentures (subject to certain conditions, including the condition that the debentures are denominated in a currency other than the Singapore dollar that is equivalent in value to at least US $5000);
- Offers of debentures made by or guaranteed by the Government of Singapore or an international financial institution of which Singapore is a member;
- Offers of shares or debentures where, on the application of any person interested, the Minister of Finance declares that the cost of providing a prospectus outweighs the resulting protection to investors, or otherwise it would not be prejudicial to the public interest if a prospectus were dispensed with; and
- Offers of shares or debentures to institutional or sophisticated investors.

The exemptions for offers of shares or debentures to institutional or sophisticated investors are commonly invoked. Offers of shares or debentures, whether or not previously issued, to the following institutional investors, who, or which, pursuant to the offer, acquire the shares or debentures as principal or as a trustee for accounts fully managed by it, shall not require the registration of a prospectus (and, if applicable, the appointment of a trustee corporation):

- A licensed bank or merchant bank;
- A registered insurance company or trust company;
- The Government of Singapore or a statutory board;
- A person whose ordinary business it is to buy or sell shares or debentures;
- A licensed investment adviser;

- A pension fund or unit trust;
- An investment company or an approved fund manager; and
- Such other persons as the Minister for Finance of Singapore may declare to be exempt purchasers.

Similarly, offers to sophisticated investors, subject to the following conditions, shall not require the registration of a prospectus (and, if applicable, the appointment of a trustee corporation):

- The offer is not made to more than 50 sophisticated investors;
- The offer is not accompanied by an advertisement offering or calling attention to the offer or intended offer, which is defined to mean a written or printed communication, a communication by radio, television, or other communication medium, or a communication by means of a recorded telephone message published in connection with the offer, but does not include an information memorandum, which is defined to mean a document lodged with the Registrar describing the business and affairs of the issuer and prepared for sophisticated investors to assist them in making an investment decision;
- No selling or promotional expenses are paid or incurred in connection with the offer other than those incurred for administrative or professional services or incurred by way of commission or fee for services rendered by a dealer or investment adviser; and
- The offeror has not invoked the exemption in the preceding 12 months.

A sophisticated investor is defined to mean:

- A person who acquires the shares or debentures, pursuant to the offer, as principal if the aggregate consideration for the acquisition is not less than S $200,000 or its equivalent in foreign currencies for each transaction, whether such amount is paid for in cash, or by exchange of shares or other assets;
- A person who acquires the shares or debentures pursuant to the offer as principal and whose total net personal assets exceed S $1 million or its equivalent in foreign currencies, or whose income in the preceding 12 months is not less than S $200,000 or its equivalent in foreign currencies;
- A corporation whose total net assets exceed S $5 million in value or its equivalent in foreign currencies as determined by its last audited balance sheet; or
- An officer of the offeror or a spouse, parent, brother, sister, son, or daughter of that officer or of the person making the offer, if he is a natural person.

Offers of Participatory Interests. Offers of participatory interests are governed by a separate regime in the Company Act. Participatory interest includes a right to participate or interest in any investment contract, which is defined to mean any contract, scheme, or arrangement which in substance involves the investment of money in circumstances that the investor acquires an interest in or right in respect of property. Common examples of such interests include unit trusts and investment funds.

Before the issue or offer of interests to the public, a statement similar in nature to a prospectus must be issued, which is treated for all purposes as a prospectus (with the attendant procedural requirements and liability for misstatements). The particulars required in the statement include:

- Relevant particulars of the deed constituting the interests;
- Particulars of the management company and its directors;
- Particulars of the undertaking, scheme, enterprise, or investment contract in respect of which the interest is to be issued or offered to the public and the general nature of the property to which the interest relates;
- Nature of the interest to be issued or offered and of any units or sub-units into which the interest is divided and the rights in relation thereto of the persons who come holders thereof;
- Method of calculation provided by the deed of the price at which the management company may sell the interest or any right in respect thereof or any unit or sub-unit of the interest;
- Obligations imposed on the management company or any other person to purchase from any holder the interest or any rights in respect thereof of the interest for which he has subscribed or purchased, and a statement of the method provided by the deed for the calculation of the purchase price;
- Information as to whether the interests or any rights in respect thereof are transferable by the holders thereof and, if so, a summary of the provisions of the deed regulating such transfer; and
- Particulars of every other undertaking, scheme, enterprise, or investment contract involving the issue of interests to the public conducted by the management company within the five years immediately preceding the date of the statement.

Corporate Governance. Under the Company Act, a listed company incorporated in Singapore is required to have an audit committee. The audit committee is to be appointed by the directors from among their number and shall be composed of not fewer than three members, of which a majority may not be:

- Executive directors of the company or any related corporation;
- Family members of an executive director of the company or of any related corporation; or
- Any person having a relationship which, in the opinion of the board of directors, would interfere with the exercise of independent judgment in carrying out the functions of an audit committee.

In May 1998, the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd introduced a Best Practices Guide which incorporates the views of financial market participants on the principles and practices which listed issuers should endeavour to adhere to. Compliance with the principles and practices set out in the Best Practices Guide is encouraged, but not compulsory.

However, shareholders should be provided with adequate understanding of listed issuers' corporate governance standards. The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd also requires each listed issuer to disclose in its annual report whether, and how, it has complied with the principles and best practices in the Best Practices Guide. The disclosure should include the listed issuer's corporate governance processes and activities.

The Listing Manual requires each listed issuer to set up an Audit Committee which reports to the Board of Directors. The Best Practices Guide sets out the parameters within which the Audit Committee is expected to perform:

- The Audit Committee is expected to serve as a useful channel of communication between the Board of Directors and the external auditors on matters related to and arising out of the external audit;
- The Audit Committee, when making decisions, should have the benefit of the views of members who are independent of management;[2]
- The Audit Committee should have full access to and cooperation by the management, including internal auditors, and have full discretion to invite any director and executive officer to attend its meetings;
- The Audit Committee should be given reasonable resources to enable it to discharge its functions properly; and
- The Audit Committee should review with the internal and external auditors their findings on their evaluation of the listed issuer's system of internal controls.[3]

The Best Practices Guide recommends that listed issuers devise and adopt their own internal compliance codes to provide guidance to their officers with regard to dealings by officers in relation to the issuers' securities. Listed issuers also are encouraged to remind their officers of the prohibitions against insider dealing as set out in the Securities Industry Act.

Officers are expected to refrain from dealing in their companies' securities on short-term considerations, and during the period commencing one month before the announcement of annual or half-year results to the date of the announcement of the results.

The Listing Manual also sets out guidelines on the appointment of auditors. A listed issuer is expected to appoint a suitable accounting firm to meet its audit obligations. In determining the suitability of an accounting firm as auditor, regard should be given to the adequacy of the resources and experience of the accounting firm and the persons assigned to the audit, taking into account the firm's audit engagements, the size and complexity of the listed group being audited, and the number and experience of supervisory and professional staff assigned to the particular audit. The audit partner in charge must be named in the company's annual report, and the partner must be changed at least once every five years.

2 For this purpose, a majority of members of the Audit Committee, including its chairman, should be independent of management. The Board can consider a director as independent if any relationship he may have would not, in the individual case, be likely to affect the director's exercise of independent judgment.

3 The review would assist the Board in developing policies that would enhance the controls and operating systems of the listed issuer.

Other than in certain exceptional cases, a listed issuer is expected to engage the same auditing firm based in Singapore to audit its accounts and those of its Singapore-incorporated subsidiaries and associated companies.

Registration of Public Offerings. Under the Company Act, a prospectus is required to be registered with the Registrar of Companies before securities may be offered to the public in Singapore.

If the securities to be offered to the public comprise debentures, in addition to the prospectus requirements, a trustee corporation approved by the Registrar must be appointed as trustee for the holders of the debentures pursuant to the debentures or in a trust deed relating to the debentures, unless the issuer is a prescribed corporation. A prospectus need not be registered if an exemption is invoked under Division 5A of the Company Act.

In relation to an offer to the public of participatory interests, a statement similar in nature to a prospectus must be issued, which is treated for all purposes as a prospectus.

If the securities are proposed to be listed on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd, a listing application in compliance with the requirements set out in the Listing Manual will have to be made.

Registration of Placements. There is no separate regime in Singapore governing the registration of placements of securities. However, the prospectus registration requirements in the Company Act may be dispensed with when invoking an exemption under Division 5A of the Company Act, for example, in an offer of securities to sophisticated or institutional investors.

Private placements of securities which do not amount to a public offer of securities need not comply with the prospectus registration requirements of the Company Act.

Registration of Secondary Trade. When securities acquired under the exemption in Division 5A of the Company Act relating to offers to sophisticated and institutional investors are first sold, unless the securities are sold to sophisticated or (as the case may be) institutional investors, the offer for sale is considered an offer to the public unless the shares are listed on an approved stock exchange and certain conditions are met.

Apart from the foregoing, there is no system of registering secondary trade in Singapore.

Periodic Disclosure

In General

An issuer with a primary listing on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd must comply with the continual listing requirements set out in the Listing Manual. The requirements relating to disclosure are summarised below.

Immediate Announcements

The following must be immediately announced to the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd for public release:

- Any information known to the issuer concerning itself or its subsidiaries or associated companies necessary to avoid the establishment of a false market in the issuer's securities or which would be likely to materially affect the price of its securities;
- Change of address, proposed alteration of memorandum and articles of association, notice of substantial shareholdings or changes thereof received by the issuer, and calls to be made on partly paid share capital;
- Appointment or resignation of directors, chief executive officers, general manager or executive officers of equivalent rank, company secretary, registrar, or auditors of the issuer;
- Date, time, and place of any general meeting;
- Acquisition and realisations of assets above certain thresholds;
- Application filed in court for the winding up of the issuer or its subsidiaries, or the appointment of a receiver, judicial manager, or liquidator of the issuer or its subsidiaries;
- Recommendation or declaration of a dividend; and
- Books closure.

Financial Statements and Annual Report

The Listing Manual requires that a financial statement for the first half of the financial year and a financial statement for the full financial year in the specified format is to be provided no later than three months after the relevant financial periods.

An annual report also is to be issued within six months of the end of the issuer's financial year.

Take-Overs

A listed issuer which is involved in a take-over offer must comply with the detailed procedures set out in the Listing Manual. The Listing Manual sets out particulars which must be included in all offer documents, in addition to the requirements set out in the Singapore Code on Take-overs and Mergers.

A listed issuer also is required to submit to the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd drafts of all circulars and announcements to be issued by the issuer to holders of its securities in connection with a take-over offer.

Acquisitions and Realisations

According to the size of the acquisition or realisation relative to the assets of the issuer, the issuer must comply with certain requirements in the Listing Manual. Generally speaking, an acquisition or realisation which amounts to five per cent to 20 per cent of the issuer's assets may oblige the issuer to furnish the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd with an announcement for public release concerning the details of the transaction.

A transaction which exceeds 20 per cent of an issuer's assets requires an announcement, and must be made conditional on shareholders' approval at a general meeting, and a circular must be sent to all shareholders. A transaction amounting to 100 per cent or more of the issuer's assets or which would result in a change of control of the issuer will also be subject to the approval of the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd, and listing of the securities may be suspended during the relevant time.

Corporate Disclosure Policy

A listed issuer is expected to keep the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd and shareholders informed of any material information relating to the group which:

- Is necessary to appraise the position of the group;
- Is necessary to prevent the establishment of a false market in its securities; or
- Might reasonably be expected to materially affect market activity in and the price of its securities.

Material information is any information of a factual nature relating to the business and affairs of a listed issuer that will have an effect on the market price or value of the issuers' securities. Examples of such information include information, known to the issuer, concerning the issuer's property, assets, business, financial condition, and prospects and mergers and acquisitions.

Occasionally, a listed issuer may temporarily refrain from publicly disclosing material information, provided that complete confidentiality is maintained, where:

- Immediate disclosure would prejudice the ability of the listed issuer to pursue its corporate objectives;
- The facts are in a state of flux and a more appropriate moment for disclosure is imminent; or
- The listed issuer is holding negotiations and has not reached an agreement in principle.

Where rumours or reports indicate that material information has been leaked, a frank and explicit announcement is required. If rumours are in fact false or inaccurate, they should be promptly denied or clarified.

A listed issuer is expected to monitor the trading in its securities to detect any unusual trading activity. The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd also monitors trading, and if it appears that any unusual trading activity cannot be explained by known factors, the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd will normally require the listed issuer to make an announcement promptly, stating whether the issuer and its directors are aware of the reasons for the unusual trading activity and whether there is any material information which has not been publicly disclosed.

Foreign Issuers with Secondary Admission

A listed issuer with a secondary listing of its equity securities on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd must simultaneously provide the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd with any announcement released to its home exchange or primary exchange.

Apart from the foregoing, the other continuing listing requirements applicable to listed issuers with a primary listing on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd are not applicable to issuers with a secondary listing on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd.

Privileged 'Foreign Private' Issuers

There is no concept of 'foreign private' issuer in relation to compliance requirements set out in the Company Act, in terms of the definition adopted by the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States.

However, the Registrar of Companies may make an exemption order as to the form and content of a prospectus, if the securities are shares or debentures denominated in a currency other than Singapore dollars and issued by a body corporate incorporated outside Singapore, or by a foreign government or an international organisation, and an application is being made for the securities to be listed or quoted on an approved stock exchange in Singapore.

Apart from the different listing criteria set out in the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Listing Manual for local and foreign securities (as discussed above), there is no concept of 'foreign private' issuer recognised by the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd.

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

Offers of Shares and Debentures. Offers of securities by issuers can either be public or private offers. A company which is incorporated under Singapore law as a private company is prohibited from making any offers of its shares and debentures to the public. Such a company may only make private offers of its shares and debentures, and no regulatory requirements apply to such private offers.

Other types of entities are permitted to invite the public to subscribe for its shares and debentures, subject to a prospectus requirement. Singapore companies incorporated as public companies are permitted to invite the public in Singapore to subscribe for its shares and debentures, provided that such invitation is accompanied by a prospectus.

A foreign company also may, subject to the law of incorporation, make public offers of its shares and debentures in Singapore provided the prospectus requirement is fulfilled. The foreign company need not be registered under Singapore law if it is not carrying on business in Singapore. The mere establishment of a share transfer or share registration office in Singapore to become a listed corporation does not amount to the carrying on of business in Singapore.

Furthermore, a person who holds shares or debentures in any corporation also may offer the shares and debentures for sale to prospective purchasers. Such an offer for sale can be made to the public only if a prospectus is issued. Of course, the holder of the shares or debentures also can make a private offer for sale, and no regulatory requirements will apply to the making of such private offers.

A public offer of shares or debentures must be accompanied by a prospectus. Any application form for shares or debentures in a corporation which is issued, circulated, or distributed to the public must be accompanied by a prospectus. Any invitation made to the public to deposit money with or lend money to a corporation also must be accompanied by a prospectus. The failure to issue a prospectus when one is required constitutes an offence. The contracts made in pursuance of an offer to the public which are made in contravention of the prospectus requirement may be set aside as being illegal and unenforceable.

There is a general prohibition against 'share hawking'. It is an offence for a person to go from place to place, whether by appointment or otherwise, offering shares for subscription or purchase to the public or seeking or receiving offers to subscribe for or to purchase shares from the public. This is irrespective of whether a prospectus has been issued.

Public Offers of Other Interests. Companies incorporated under Singapore law as public companies and foreign companies which are public companies under the law of a proclaimed country and which are registered as foreign companies in Singapore may issue public offers of interests other than shares and debentures. These interests are rights to participate or interests in the following:

- Any profits, assets, or realisation of any financial or business undertaking or scheme, whether in Singapore or elsewhere;
- Any common enterprise whether in Singapore or elsewhere in which the participant is led to expect profits, rent, or interests from the efforts of the promoter of the enterprise or a third party; and
- Any investment contract, ie, any contract, scheme, or arrangement involving the investment of money such that the investor acquires or may acquire an interest in or right in respect of the property used or employed in common with any other interest in or right in respect of property acquired in or under like circumstances.

However, the above rights and interests are defined to exclude:

- Any share in or debenture of a corporation;
- Any interest in or arising out of a policy of life insurance; and
- Any franchise (not being a unit trust scheme or an investment contract).

Such public offers of interests are subject to two main regulatory requirements. First, the offeror must issue a written statement in connection with the public offer which complies with the requirements of a prospectus applicable in the case of a public offer of shares or debentures. Secondly, there must be established an approved deed in relation to the interest to be offered.

An approved deed is one which is approved by the Registrar of Companies and the appointed trustee or representative of which has received Ministerial approval. The approved deed must further contain a number of covenants binding on the issuer of the interests and the trustee or representative with respect to the proper discharge of their responsibilities and functions.

Meaning of 'Offer to Public'. It is provided that an offer of shares or debentures to a section of the public is generally sufficient to amount to an offer of shares or debentures to the public. Beyond this, there is no definition of what amounts to an offer to the public. It would seem that the question whether a particular group of persons constitutes a section of the public is a question of fact involving the consideration of several factors.

The relationship between the members of the group as well as between the offeror and the members of the group is probably relevant. The size of the group and whether the members are indiscriminately chosen also are likely to be relevant. The question of whether the members of the chosen group require the statutory protection of the prospectus requirement may be a further consideration to be taken into account.

It also is not clear whether the public in this context refers only to the public in Singapore. Presumably, there will be a territorial link requirement in that the offer of shares or debentures is made at least to some persons in Singapore. Once this is satisfied, however, it seems likely that the fact that the offer has been made to other persons abroad will be relevant to determining whether the offer has the quality of being a public as opposed to a private offer.

Listed Securities. In relation to an initial offering of securities for listing, the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd requires the offering to be made on a fixed-price basis, or on the basis of a combination of fixed price and tender methods, and generally the issue should be underwritten.

The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd should be consulted at an early stage if it is intended to offer securities by other methods or if it is intended to make the issue without underwriting. At least 30 per cent of the public offer is to be allotted to small applicants and, in the event of over-subscription, all applications are subject to balloting.

The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd may allow an issue made in connection with a listing on the Main Board to be distributed in whole or in part by way of placing if there is insufficient demand for the securities and it is in the interests of the issuer to permit a placing.

However, a placing will normally not be allowed if there is likely to be significant public demand for the securities, and not more than 25 per cent of any placing may be allocated to discretionary managed portfolios. In addition, unless prior written consent of the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd is obtained, no allocations will be permitted to the following persons:

- Directors or existing shareholders of the issuer or their associates;
- Nominee companies, unless the name of the ultimate beneficiary is disclosed; and
- Connected clients of the lead broker or any distributor.

Securities also may be initially listed by way of an introduction that is, an application for listing of securities already in issue where no marketing arrangements are required. This is possible where the securities for which listing is sought are already of such amount and so widely held that their adequate marketability when listed can be assumed. Introductions are appropriate in the following circumstances:

- Where the securities for which listing is sought are already listed on another stock exchange;
- Where the securities of an issuer are distributed in specie by a listed issuer to the shareholders of that listed issuer or to the shareholders of another listed issuer; and
- Where a holding company is formed and its securities are issued in exchange for those of one or more listed issuers.

Generally, the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd requires an initial public offering to be made in Singapore to satisfy the demand for such securities in Singapore, but it may agree to a portion of an issue being offered outside Singapore if it considers that the issuer has good reason to do so.

However, no company incorporated in Singapore which is listed with the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd will be allowed to be listed on a foreign stock exchange if the foreign stock exchange prohibits companies incorporated in that foreign country from listing their securities with the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd, unless such prohibition applies to the listing of the foreign companies on all stock exchanges outside that foreign country.

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Shareholdings

Definition of 'Substantial Shareholdings'. A person who holds a substantial shareholding in a company, ie, a substantial shareholder, is defined as a person who has an interest or interests in voting shares which comprise five per cent or more of the aggregate of the nominal value of the company's voting shares.

In a case where the company has two or more classes of voting shares, a person is a substantial shareholder if he has an interest or interests in voting shares in a class which comprises five per cent or more of the nominal amount of all the voting shares in the class.

There is a wide definition of an interest in shares. A person has an interest in shares, inter alia, where:

- He knows, or has reasonable grounds for believing, that he has an interest under a trust which consists of or includes the shares;
- He has a controlling interest in a body corporate which has an interest in the shares, or where such body corporate or its directors are accustomed, or under an obligation to act in accordance with his directions, instructions or wishes;
- He and/or his associates are entitled to exercise or control the exercise of not less than 20 per cent of the votes attached to the voting shares in a body corporate which has an interest in the shares;
- He has entered into a contract to purchase the shares;

- He has a right to have a share transferred to himself or to his order, whether the right is exercisable presently or in the future and whether on fulfilment of a condition or not;
- He has the right to acquire the shares or an interest in the shares under an option, whether the right is exercisable presently or in the future and whether on fulfilment of a condition or not; or
- He is entitled to exercise or control the exercise of a right attached to a share, not being a share of which he is the registered holder.

An interest in a share is not disregarded by reason of its remoteness, the manner in which it arose, or the fact that the exercise of a right conferred by the interest is or is capable of being made subject to restraint or restriction. However, the following, inter alia, are not regarded as interests in shares:

- Interests in shares held by a bare trustee;
- Interests in shares held by a person whose ordinary business includes the lending of money if he holds the interests only way of security for the purposes of a transaction entered into in the ordinary course of business in connection with the lending of money; and
- Interests held by a company in its own shares pursuant to a repurchase of shares.

Disclosure Regime Relating to Substantial Shareholdings. There is a statutory regime of disclosure in relation to the acquisition of substantial shareholdings in two types of entities: firstly, a company all or any of the shares of which are listed on a Singapore stock exchange and, secondly, any other entity (regardless of whether incorporated or formed in Singapore) which has been specifically declared by the Minister of Finance to be a company subject to the disclosure regime.

In general, the regime requires that acquisitions of and changes in substantial shareholdings are to be notified to the company or entity concerned and that such company or entity are to maintain a register of substantial shareholders.

These obligations extend to all natural persons, whether resident in Singapore or not and whether citizens of Singapore or not, and to all bodies corporate, whether incorporated or carrying on business in Singapore or not. Furthermore, they apply to acts done or omitted to be done outside Singapore.

Shareholder Duties. A person who becomes a substantial shareholder in a company or entity must give notice in writing to the company or entity concerned stating full particulars of the voting shares in which he has an interest or interests and full particulars of each such interest and of the circumstances by reason of which he has that interest.

Such notice is to be given within two days of his becoming a substantial shareholder. Subsequent notification is required where there is a change in the interest or interests of the substantial shareholder. Such shareholder must, within two days after the date of such change, give notice in writing to the company or entity concerned stating the full particulars of the change, including the date of the change and the circumstances by reason of which that change occurred.

Written notice also is required to be given where a substantial shareholder ceases to be so. A person who ceases to be a substantial shareholder of a company or entity also must give written notice to the company or entity concerned stating the date on which he ceased to be a substantial shareholder and full particulars of the circumstances by reason of which he ceased to be a substantial shareholder. Such notice is to be given within two days of his ceasing to be a substantial shareholder.

A person who holds voting shares in a company or entity, being voting shares in which a non-resident has an interest, is required to give the non-resident a statutory notice of the requirements of the disclosure regime. In this connection, a non-resident is a person who is not resident in Singapore or a body corporate that is not incorporated in Singapore.

Failure to comply with the above notification requirements constitutes an offence punishable with a fine. It is a defence, however, if such failure is due to ignorance of any fact the existence of which is necessary to constitute the offence, provided that such fact could not have been discovered using reasonable diligence.

Company Duties and Powers. A company or entity to which the disclosure requirements apply must keep a register of the names of its substantial shareholders and the information contained in the relevant notices served by such substantial shareholders. The register must be kept at the registered office or principal place of business and must be kept open for inspection by any person.

A company all of the shares of which are listed on a Singapore stock exchange may by notice require any member to inform the company, within such reasonable time as specified in the notice, whether he holds any voting shares in the company as beneficial owner or as trustee.

If the member holds the voting shares as trustee, the company may require him to indicate so far as he can the persons for whom he holds them and the nature of their interest. The company may then serve a similar notice on such a person requiring him to inform the company whether he holds the interest in the shares as beneficial owner or as trustee. If he holds the interest as trustee, the company may further require him to indicate, so far as he can, the persons for whom he holds it and the nature of their interest.

The company also may, by notice in writing, require a member to inform the company, within such reasonable time as is specified in the notice, whether any of the voting rights carried by any voting shares in the company held by him are the subject of an agreement or arrangement under which another person is entitled to control his exercise of those rights. If there is such an agreement or arrangement, the company may require particulars of the agreement or arrangement and the parties to it.

Failure to comply with any of the above notices served by the company and the making of a false statement in response to a notice are offences punishable with a fine or imprisonment. Failure to comply with a notice is not an offence, however, if it is shown that the information in question was already in the possession of the company or that the requirement to give it was for any other reason frivolous or vexatious.

Insider Trading and Fraud

Insider Trading Offences. In general, the insider trading offences prohibit dealings in a body corporate's securities by a person if he is in possession of price-sensitive confidential information relating to those securities. In order for such prohibition to apply, such a person must be an insider in that he must be in possession of such information by virtue of his connection with that body corporate or another body corporate which has dealings with that body corporate.

In this context, a person is connected with a body corporate if he is an officer or substantial shareholder of that body corporate or a related body corporate, or he occupies a position that may reasonably be expected to give him access to confidential price-sensitive information by virtue of any professional or business relationship or his being an officer of a substantial shareholder. It also is a general offence for an officer or agent of a company to make improper use of any information acquired by virtue of his position as an officer or agent of the company to gain, directly or indirectly, an advantage for himself or for any other person or to cause detriment to the company.

A person who is not an insider may be prohibited from dealing in a body corporate's securities if he has received price-sensitive confidential information relating to the securities from an insider of the body corporate. This is provided that he was aware or ought reasonably to be aware that the person from whom he received the information was precluded from dealing in the securities and he was associated with that person or had an arrangement with him for the communication of confidential price-sensitive information.

There also are provisions prohibiting a person precluded from dealing in a body corporate's securities from procuring another person to deal in those securities and from communicating the price-sensitive confidential information to another person. In addition, it is an offence for a body corporate to deal in the securities of another body corporate when an officer of the first body corporate is precluded from dealing in those securities.

These offences apply to insider trading in securities issued by any body corporate and not only by companies incorporated under Singapore law or registered foreign companies. Indeed, there is no express requirement that the securities must be issued in Singapore. The term 'securities' includes debentures, shares, stocks or bonds, or any right or option therein or any other participatory business interest issued or proposed to be issued by a government or a body corporate. Furthermore, there is no requirement that the relevant securities must be of a class traded on a Singapore securities exchange or, for that matter, any securities exchange.

However, there is probably a territorial link requirement to be met before the insider trading offences would apply. It would seem that there must be sufficient activity conducted in Singapore which amounts to 'dealing' in the relevant securities for the purposes of the insider trading provisions. In this respect, it is noteworthy that the term 'dealing' is defined widely to mean, whether as principal or agent, making or offering to make with any person, or inducing or attempting to induce any person to enter into or to offer to enter into:

- Any agreement for or with a view to acquiring, disposing of, subscribing for, or underwriting securities; or
- Any agreement the purpose or pretended purpose of which is to secure a profit to any of the parties from the yield of securities or by reference to fluctuations in the price of securities.

Legislative changes also have been proposed to enable civil proceedings to be commenced without requiring a criminal conviction under the statutory regime.

Market-Rigging Offences. There are several offences dealing with certain market-rigging activities which are regarded as undermining the integrity and proper functioning of the stock market. It is an offence for a person to create a false or misleading appearance of active trading in any securities on a securities exchange in Singapore or a false or misleading appearance with respect to the market for, or the price of, any such securities.

It is to be noted that a Singapore securities exchange must be affected. No offence is committed if a false or misleading appearance is created with respect to a foreign securities exchange, even if the principal acts are committed in Singapore. However, if a false or misleading appearance is created with respect to a Singapore securities exchange, the offence is likely to have been committed notwithstanding that the principal acts are committed outside Singapore.

A further offence stipulates that a person must not effect two or more transactions in securities of a body corporate being transactions that have, or are likely to have, the effect of raising, lowering, or maintaining the price of securities of the body corporate on a securities exchange in Singapore, with intent to induce other persons to deal in the securities of the body corporate or of a related body corporate.

Another similar offence prohibits a person, by means of purchases or sales of any securities of a body corporate that do not involve a change in the beneficial ownership of those securities or by any fictitious transactions or devices, to maintain, inflate, depress, or cause fluctuations in the market price of securities on a Singapore securities exchange. In relation to both offences, the relevant securities (the definition of which is that set out in the preceding section) may be issued by any body corporate and need not be issued by companies incorporated under Singapore law or registered foreign companies.

However, presumably the securities must be of a class listed or traded on a Singapore securities exchange. There is no express requirement that the transactions in question must be performed in Singapore, but it is likely that such a territorial link requirement will be implied.

False and Misleading Statements. It is an offence for a person to make a statement or disseminate information which is false or misleading and is likely to induce the sale or purchase of securities by other persons or to affect or maintain the market price of securities, if he knew or ought reasonably to have known or did not care that the statement or information was false or misleading.

There is no express requirement that the securities in question be listed or traded on any securities exchange in Singapore or elsewhere, but of course this will often be the case where the false or misleading statement or information is alleged to have affected or maintained the market price of securities. Probably, it must be shown that the act constituting the offence was committed in Singapore, ie, the making of the statement or the dissemination of the information in question took place in Singapore.

However, the likely consequences of inducing the sale or purchase of securities or of affecting or maintaining the market price of securities presumably need not relate to Singapore but may be with respect to sale and purchase transactions or the market price of securities in another jurisdiction.

Other similar offences stipulate that a person must not knowingly or recklessly make or publish any statement, promise, or forecast which is misleading, false, or deceptive, or dishonestly conceal material facts to induce another person to deal in securities.

There appears to be no requirement that the securities in question be listed or traded on any securities exchange in Singapore or elsewhere, and it follows that the securities in question may be unquoted securities or securities which are quoted in a foreign stock exchange. However, presumably the making or publication of the statement, promise, or forecast, or the concealment of material facts, must take place in Singapore.

It also is an offence for a person to circulate or disseminate any statement or information to the effect that the price of any securities of a body corporate will or is likely to rise or fall or be maintained by reason of any transaction entered into or other act done in contravention of the prohibitions relating to market-rigging and the making of false and misleading statements.

This is provided that either such person or his associated party is party to the contravention or he has received or expects to receive some consideration or benefit for circulating or disseminating such statement or information. The territorial link requirement is likely to be met as long as the act of circulation or dissemination of the statement or information is performed within Singapore.

Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Requirements. The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Listing Manual contains a Corporate Disclosure Policy which requires listed companies to disclose all information necessary to avoid the establishment of a false market in listed securities.

A listed issuer is required to keep the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd and its shareholders informed, as soon as reasonably practicable, of any material information which is necessary to enable them and the public to appraise the position of the listed issuer's group and to avoid the establishment of a false market in the issuer's securities, and which might reasonably be expected to materially affect market activity and the price of the securities.

Occasionally, a listed issuer is permitted to temporarily refrain from publicly disclosing material information, provided that complete confidentiality is maintained. This is usually where immediate disclosure would prejudice the ability of the listed issuer to pursue its corporate objectives, where the facts are in a state of flux and a more appropriate moment for disclosure is imminent, or where the listed issuer is holding negotiations and has not reached an agreement-in-principle.

The Corporate Disclosure Policy also requires any public circulation of information by a party other than the listed issuer which is likely to have an effect on the price of the listed issuer's securities to be clarified or confirmed promptly. If material information has been leaked, a frank and explicit announcement is required while, if the rumours are false or inaccurate, they should be promptly denied or inaccurate. A listed issuer also is required to undertake a review to seek the causes of any unusual trading activity in its securities.

The Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd has also issued a Best Practices Guide in relation to dealings by a listed issuer's officer in the listed issuer's securities. The Guide states that it is desirable that each listed issuer devise and adopt its own internal compliance code to provide guidance to its officers with regard to dealing by the officers in its securities.

However, an officer should not deal in his company's securities on short-term considerations. Furthermore, he should not deal in his company's securities during the period commencing one month before the announcement of the company's annual or half-year results, as the case may be, and ending on the date of announcement of the relevant results.

Public Take-Over Bids

Regulatory Regime of Take-Overs. Take-overs in Singapore are governed partly by statutory provisions and partly by the Singapore Code on Take-overs and Mergers. The statutory provisions lay down the framework for the conduct of take-overs and authorise the Minister to promulgate the Code which sets down the detailed rules, procedures, and timetables to be observed by the parties involved in a take-over.

Being modelled on the original London City Code on Take-overs and Mergers, the Code is drafted in non-statutory language and is required to be complied with in letter and in spirit. It represents the collective opinion of those professionally concerned in the field of take-overs and mergers on the proper standard of conduct to be observed in a take-over or merger transaction. In addition, there are further rules in the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd Listing Manual which companies listed on the Stock Exchange of Singapore Ltd must comply with either when making a take-over offer or becoming a target company in a take-over.

Generally, the regulatory regime does not concern itself with the financial, commercial, and socio-economic merits and demerits of take-overs, and takes the position that this is a question to be decided by the offeree company and its shareholders. Rather, the regulatory regime focuses on the orderly and fair conduct of take-overs and the full provision and disclosure of relevant information and advice. Emphasis also is placed on equal treatment of all shareholders.

The central regulatory body responsible for administering the take-over regulatory regime is the Securities Industry Council, a body established under statute and whose members are made up of representatives from the government, the Monetary Authority of Singapore, and the private sector.

The Council is charged with the task of enforcing the Code and has the power to issue rulings on the interpretation of the Code and the practice to be followed in take-overs. The Council also has limited powers to investigate breaches of the Code and acts of misconduct in relation to take-overs, and may impose sanctions such as public censure. The Council has no formal powers, however, to impose penalties or civil remedies. In practice, the Council works closely with the Monetary Authority of Singapore, the ultimate regulator of the securities industry in Singapore, and the Stock Exchange of Singapore.

In an appropriate case, the Council may recommend to the Authority or the Stock Exchange of Singapore that the facilities of the market should be denied to a delinquent party in a take-over, or that some other appropriate remedial, corrective, or penal measures should be taken. To date, these powers have rarely been exercised and the level of compliance with the Code has generally been high.

Territorial Application. Generally, the regulatory regime applies to take-overs and reverse take-overs of public companies incorporated in Singapore. The statutory provisions expressly apply to the take-over of public companies only. The Code is stated to be drafted with listed public companies in view, but unlisted companies are expected to observe the letter and spirit of the Code wherever possible and appropriate.

Strictly speaking, the regulatory regime does not apply to a take-over of a foreign company, even if the shares of such foreign company are listed on the Stock Exchange of Singapore. However, in such a case, the Securities Industry Council may take the view that the provisions of the Code would have to be complied with. The Council has stated that it will endeavour to grant the protection of the Code in any case where residents of Singapore hold a substantial proportion of the shares or a company incorporated or quoted abroad.

The identity of the offeror is irrelevant to the question of whether the regulatory regime is applicable. The regulatory regime applies regardless of whether the offeror is a natural person or a body incorporate or unincorporate. It also is irrelevant whether the offeror is resident or carrying on business in Singapore or incorporated outside Singapore.

Procedural Requirements. The statutorily prescribed procedure must be complied with once a person has a firm intention to make a take-over offer or where a person triggers the obligation to make a mandatory take-over offer. With respect to the latter, a person is compelled to launch a mandatory take-over offer in two situations.

The first situation is where he, together with persons acting in concert with him, acquires shares carrying 25 per cent or more of the voting rights of a company. The statute also conclusively presumes a person who acquires control of 25 per cent of the voting shares of a company to be conclusively presumed to have a firm intention to make a take-over offer.

The second situation is where a person who, together with persons acting in concert with him, holds not less than 25 per cent but not more than 50 per cent of the voting rights and such person, or any person acting in concert with him, acquires in any period of 12 months additional shares carrying more than three per cent of the voting rights.

The mandatory offer must be in cash or be accompanied by a cash alternative at not less than the highest price paid by the offeror and persons acting in concert with him within the preceding 12 months.

Persons acting in concert comprise individuals or companies who, pursuant to an agreement or understanding (whether formal or informal), co-operate, through the acquisition by any of them of shares in a company to obtain or consolidate control of that company.

The parties which are presumed to be acting in concert are a company with its subsidiaries and associated companies, a company with its directors and their close relatives and related trusts, a company with its pension funds, a fund manager with the fund that he manages on a discretionary basis, and a financial adviser with its clients under certain circumstances.

Once there is a firm intention to make a take-over offer, a public announcement of such firm intention must be made. The board of the offeree company also must inform its shareholders without delay when any firm intention to make an offer is notified to the board from a serious source.

Within 14 days of the public announcement, the offeror must give to the offeree company written notice of the particulars of the terms of the take-over scheme. Within 14 days of the receipt of the written notice, the offeree must give to the offeree a statement containing the recommendation of the offeree's board of directors as to whether the offer should be accepted.

The board must obtain competent independent advice on the offer and the substance of the advice must be made known to the shareholders. The offeror must then send the offer to each shareholder of the offeree company not later than 28 days and not earlier than 14 days after the date of the giving of the written notice. The offer must be accompanied by a copy of the written notice and the recommendation by the offeree's directors.

Alternatively, the offeree company may choose not to give the directors' recommendation to the offeror for despatch by the offeror together with the offer document. The offeree company may instead give each of its shareholders a copy of the directors' recommendation within 14 days after the offers are first made to the shareholders.

An offer must be conditional on the offeror acquiring shares carrying over 50 per cent of the voting rights attributable to the equity share capital of the offeree company. In addition, offers for less than 100 per cent of the equity share capital of an offeree company not already owned by the offeror or any of its subsidiaries are regarded as generally undesirable and the Council's approval must be obtained in advance before such an offer is made.

An offer must initially be open for at least 21 days after its posting. The offer may be revised by increasing the consideration (in which case all shareholders who accepted the original offer must receive the revised consideration) or by extending the period for acceptance. If there is such a revision, the offer must be kept open for at least 14 days from the date of posting of the written notification of the revision to the shareholders. The maximum period for acceptance is up to 60 days after the offer is initially posted unless the Council grants an extension (usually in the case of a competing offer having arisen).

Once the offeror receives acceptances in respect of more than 50 per cent of the voting rights in the equity share capital of the offeree company, the offer is declared unconditional. The offer may then remain open until further notice, and 14 days' notice must be given before it is closed. Until this 14 days' notice of the closing of the offer has been given, a shareholder who has accepted the offer is entitled to withdraw his acceptance after the expiry of 21 days from the first closing date of the initial offer.

If, however, the offer has not become unconditional by the closing date, the offeror may not make another offer or trigger the obligation to make an mandatory take-over offer within 12 months from the date on which the offer lapses.

Where an offeror, within four months of the making of the take-over offer, secures acceptances from the holders of 90 per cent or more of the nominal value of the shares in the offeree company (other than the shares already held by the offeror or its nominee at the date of the take-over offer), the offeror has, within two months thereafter, the right to compulsorily acquire the remaining shares on the same terms as under the take-over offer.

This is done by the offeror giving notice to the dissenting shareholders and, if no application for relief against the compulsory acquisition is brought by any dissenting shareholder within one month, the offeror may execute an instrument of transfer on behalf of the dissenting shareholders and the offeree company is then obliged to register the offeror as the holder of those shares.

Exemptions. Exemptions from the requirements of the statute may be given by the Minister on a case-by-case basis. The Minister may, by order, exempt a corporation or an individual from compliance with the statutory provisions where, in any particular case, he is satisfied that compliance therewith is inappropriate or would impose an unreasonable burden on the corporation or individual or is not in the public interest.

With regard to the Code, the Securities Industry Council has in some instances the power of dispensation where it is expressly provided, for instance, the waiver of the requirement to launch a mandatory take-over offer. The Council also welcomes the submission of draft documents to the Council in advance to clear unusual features where there is doubt as to whether some aspects of the documents or the proposals contained in them conform to the Code.

Jurisdictional Conflicts

Multilateral Approaches

Substantive Law Solutions

Harmonisation. There have been recent government initiatives to revamp the securities industry regulatory regime to bring it more in line with the regimes of the leading financial centres of the world. In particular, there seems to be a perceptible shift towards deregulation in a bid to attract foreign investments into Singapore, and active steps have been taken to model disclosure requirements on those of other major financial centres with high disclosure standards.

In 1998, the prominent Corporate Finance Committee ('the Committee') recommended a fundamental shift towards a predominantly disclosure-based philosophy of regulation. The recommendations appear to have been warmly received by the government, although they have not been implemented.

The old merit-based approach, which required the securities regulator to review transactions and decide on their merits, is expected to increasingly give way to disclosure-based regulation and facilitate harmonisation with internationally recognised standards. Of particular interest is that one of the recommendations of the Committee was that Singapore adopt the Disclosure Standards to Facilitate Cross Border Offerings and Listings by Multinational Issuers adopted by the International Organisation of Securities Commission (IOSCO).

Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Judgments. A foreign judgment may be recognised or enforced in Singapore in two ways: firstly, by bringing a Common Law action based on the foreign judgment (so as to secure a Singapore judgment) and, secondly, by registration of the foreign judgment under the Reciprocal Enforcement of Commonwealth Judgments Act (RECJA) or the Reciprocal Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act (REFJA).

Common Law Action. Unlike in England, in Singapore, a cause of action is not merged in a foreign judgment. A litigant may choose to restart the legal action but this may be expensive and time-consuming. It is often more convenient to enforce the foreign judgment in Singapore by getting judicial sanction to execute the judgment without a retrial of the merits of the claim.

A foreign judgment does not create a valid cause of action unless it is res judicata by the law of the country where it was given. This means that in the court by which the foreign judgment was pronounced, it must conclusively and finally establish the existence of a debt. If it may be altered in later proceedings between the same parties in the same court, it is not enforceable by action in Singapore.

The court giving the judgment also must, according to Singapore's rules of private international law, have international jurisdiction over the parties and full authority to conclude the matter. Furthermore, the foreign judgment must be one on the merits and not based on technical grounds, such as time-bar.

The judgment debtor may, of course, resist recognition or enforcement by pleading that the substantive requirements are not fully established. He also may plead other defences, eg, that the foreign judgment was obtained by fraud, the proceedings in the foreign court were contrary to natural justice, or that the enforcement of the foreign judgment would be contrary to the public policy of the Singapore Court.

Reciprocal Enforcement of Commonwealth Judgments Act. Under the Reciprocal Enforcement of Commonwealth Judgments Act, only foreign judgments from a superior court of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the specified courts of gazetted Commonwealth countries are registrable. Arbitral awards from those countries are registrable if it is enforceable in the foreign country in the same way as a court judgment in that country.

The application for registration under the Reciprocal Enforcement of Commonwealth Judgments Act must be made within 12 months from the date of judgment or such other longer period which the court allows. The court may order the judgment to be registered if it thinks it just and convenient that the courts should enforce the judgment in Singapore.

Once registered, the foreign judgment has the same force and effect as if it had been a judgment originally obtained from the Singapore Court on the date of registration. Costs reasonably incurred in relation to the registration of the judgment are recoverable as if they were sums payable under the judgment.

No one is compelled to rely on the Reciprocal Enforcement of Commonwealth Judgments Act, and it operates alongside the Common Law rules on enforcement. However, if the judgment is registrable, but the plaintiff chooses to enforce the judgment at Common Law, then he must bear the costs of enforcement unless the court otherwise orders.

The judgment must satisfy certain requirements under the RECJA before it may be registered. The judgment may not have been obtained by fraud; it may not offend against principles of Singapore public policy; and the foreign court must have acted within its jurisdiction.

Furthermore, the judgment debtor must have been duly served with the process from the original court, ie, duly served in accordance with the procedural law of the original court unless the procedural law of the original court or its application is shown to be repugnant to the sense of justice of the registering court. There also must be no appeal pending on the judgment.

Reciprocal Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act. The Reciprocal Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act only applies to superior courts of foreign countries gazetted under the Act. The Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (SAR) is the first and only jurisdiction thus far gazetted under the Reciprocal Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act.

The judgment of the superior court should not be given on appeal from a court which is not a superior court, and it must be final and conclusive as between the parties. A judgment is deemed to be final and conclusive notwithstanding that an appeal may be pending against it, or that it may still be subject to appeal, in the courts of the country of the original court. However, a judgment shall not be registered if, at the date of the application, it has been wholly satisfied or it could not be enforced by execution in the country of the original court.

The application to register the foreign judgment should be made to the court within six years after the date of the judgment. A judgment registered under the Reciprocal Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act shall, for the purposes of execution, the taking of proceedings on the registered judgment, the levying of interest and the control the registering court shall have over the execution of a registered judgment, be of the same force and effect as a judgment originally given in the registering court and entered on the date of registration.

The registered judgment may be set aside if the registering court is satisfied that the courts of the country of the original court had no jurisdiction or the judgment debtor did not receive notice of those proceedings notwithstanding that process may have been duly served on him in accordance with the law of the country of the original court.

It also may be set aside on the grounds of fraud or that the enforcement of the judgment would be contrary to public policy in the country of the registering court, or that the matter in dispute in the proceedings in the original court had previously to the date of the judgment in the original court been the subject of a final and conclusive judgment by a court having jurisdiction in the matter, or that the rights under the judgment are not vested in the person by whom the application for registration was made.

The Common Law action does not exist in parallel with the Reciprocal Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act. Unlike the Reciprocal Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act, the Common Law action is not available if the Reciprocal Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act is applicable, except in so far as the Minister directs.

Unilateral Approaches

Antisuit Injunctions

Under Singapore law, it is possible to obtain an antisuit injunction, ie, an injunction which requires a party not to commence or continue proceedings in a foreign court or to discontinue them. The jurisdiction of the court operates in personam and, accordingly, the court's injunctive power arises only when the enjoined party is personally subject to the court's jurisdiction.

Antisuit injunctions are not readily granted since, in a sense, they interfere with the jurisdiction of the foreign courts. Furthermore, the court's jurisdiction is to be exercised only when the 'ends of justice' require it. Generally, a Singapore court will restrain a party from pursuing the foreign proceedings only if the pursuit of such foreign proceedings is vexatious or oppressive.

Role of Comity

Comity of nations is a relevant consideration in the grant of discretionary relief by the Singapore courts, and it has been held that the Singapore courts should not assume the role of an 'international busybody'. The effect of comity is most evidently felt as an inhibiting consideration in relation to the grant of antisuit injunctions.

Comity also plays a role in relation to application to stay local proceedings on the ground of forum non conveniens so that the dispute may be resolved in a foreign court. Of course, other factors also are taken into account to determine with which jurisdiction the action has the most substantial and real connection, such as the choice of law and the location of the parties and the witnesses.

Introduction

In General

The master outline of the Spanish stock market is found in Law Number 24/1988 of 28 July 1988 (the 'Stock Market Law', or Ley del Mercado de Valores). Following original publication of the Stock Market Law, numerous legal provisions have been introduced to complete the Spanish stock market system.

The Stock Market Law has been thus amended, inter alia, by Law Number 37/1998 of 16 November 1998, which implements the European Community (EC) Investment Services Directive, Law Number 44/2002 of 22 November 2000 on the reform of the Financial Market, Law Number 26/2003 of 17 July 2003 on the transparency of listed companies, Law Number 6/2007 of 16 April 2007 on the legal regime applicable to takeover bids, Law Number 47/2007 of 19 December 2007, which implements the provisions of the MiFID Directives in Spain and, more recently, Royal Decree-Law 10/2012 of 23 March 2012 on the amendment of certain rules in relation to the powers of the European Supervisory Authorities, and Royal Decree-Law 24/2012 of 31 August (validated by means of Law 9/2012 of 14 November on restructuration and resolution of credit entities, as amended by Royal Decree-Law 3/2013 of 22 February), which implemented in Spain Directive 2010/73/UE; as well as Law 14/2013 of 27 September on Entrepreneurs; Royal Decree-Law 14/2013 of 29 November, by means of which those measures that needed to be in place as a matter of urgency pursuant to Regulation (EU) Number 575/2013 of 26 June 2013 on prudential requirements for credit institutions and investment firms and Directive 2013/36/UE of 26 June 2013 on access to the activity of credit institutions and the prudential supervision of credit institutions and investment firms are implemented; and Law 10/2014 on regulation, supervision, and solvency of credit entities.

Law Number 24/1988 amounted to a notable progress in the development of our stock market as pointed out on many occasions by the most prestigious Spanish scholars.[1] It has been stated that 'above all, the Law sets out a comprehensive and modern vocation which is translated into a system of rules oriented towards establishing a stock market with internal coherence and which comprises a set of profoundly innovative regulations in comparison to our traditional rules for this market'.[2]

Objectives

The purpose of the Stock Market Law, as provided for in its article 1, is to regulate all matters relating to the Spanish trading systems available to financial instruments, including the establishment of the principles applicable to their organization and functioning, the financial instruments traded in those systems and the issuers thereof, the provision in Spain of investment services, and the supervision, inspection, and sanctioning regime.

Following the implementation in Spain of the MiFID Directives, the Stock Market Law is based on the concept of 'financial instruments', which includes negotiable securities (which basic features are their negotiability and collective issuance) and a wide range of derivative instruments. A key point of the regime set out by the Stock Market Law is the creation of the National Stock Market Commission (Comisión Nacional del Mercado de Valores, CMNV), which is a public law organism with its own legal entity. The National Stock Market Commission is a watchdog entity entrusted with the supervision and inspection of the stock market activities, and it has the power to take part in regulatory tasks and to carry forward reforms. It is the Spanish equivalent of the United States' Securities Exchange Commission, the United Kingdom's Financial Services Authority, the Italian CONSOB, and the French Autorité des marchés financiers.

Trading System Categories and Proceedings

In General

Pursuant to the Stock Market Law, financial instruments can be traded in regulated markets and multilateral trading facilities.

Regulated Markets

Regulated markets are those which allow the match of sale and purchase orders over financial instruments, give rise to contracts with respect to the instruments traded therein, are authorized to operate on an ongoing basis, and are subject to access, admission to trading, operational procedures, and information and publicity requirements. The existing regulated markets in Spain are:

- Those stock exchanges existing at any given time, with the governing body of each being their operating company;
- The book entries public debt market, with its governing body being the Central de Anotaciones, which is administered by the Bank of Spain;

2 Uría, Derecho Mercantil (25th ed, 1998), at p 684.

- The futures and options market (MEFF); and
- The fixed rent market (AIAF).

Operation in the regulated markets is governed by each of the markets' regulator. However, in case of transfers of financial instruments traded on a regulated secondary market, it is compulsory that a member entity of the relevant market participates in or mediates the transfer.

The Stock Market Law also establishes the basic principles of the Spanish Clearing and Settlement of Securities Service (IBERCLEAR), which is organized as a limited liability company and, pursuant to the Stock Market Law, carries out clearing and settlement activities in the stock exchanges and the public debt market (although, in practice, it clears and settles in the fixed rent market as well).

Multilateral Trading Facilities

The Stock Market Law defines multilateral trading facilities as systems that allow the match of sale and purchase purposes over financial instruments of multiple third parties in order to give rise to contracts. As distinct from the regulated secondary markets, multilateral trading facilities are to be authorized by the National Stock Market Commission (and not the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness), can be freely created, and their management company can be an investment firm, a management company of a regulated secondary market (Sociedad Rectora), or a special purpose entity incorporated by one or more management companies of regulated secondary markets.

In addition, 'fictitious' markets can be created by investment firms or credit entities by way of the provision of the so-called systematized internalization services (internalización sistemática), which consist of the execution by those entities, outside of a regulated secondary market or multilateral trading facilities, and against their own books, of customers' orders in relation to shares admitted to trading in a regulated secondary market, provided that such way of proceeding is maintained on an organized, frequent, and systematic basis and the amount of the orders is equal to or below the standard volume in the relevant market.

Stock Market Regulations

In General

Many development regulations have been enacted to complete the provisions of the Stock Market Law, both by the Spanish Government and the National Stock Market Commission, including:

- Royal Decree Number 726/1989 of 23 June 1989, relating to management companies (Sociedades Rectoras) and members of stock exchanges (Bolsas de Valores), governing entities (Sociedad de Bolsas), and group guarantees (Fianza Colectiva);

- Royal Decree Number 1416/1991 of 27 September 1991, covering special securities transactions and the non-exchange transfer of quoted securities and average weighted prices;
- Royal Decree Number 116/1992 of 14 February 1992, regarding the representation of securities by way of accounting entries and the clearance and settlement of securities transactions;
- Royal Decree Number 948/2001 of 3 August 2001, on the investors' guarantee fund;
- Royal Decree Number 1310/2005 of 4 November 2005, on admission of securities to trading in regulated secondary markets, public offers of sale or subscription, and the prospectus required for those purposes;
- Royal Decree Number 1333/2005 of 11 November 2005, on market abuse;
- Royal Decree Number 1066/2007 of 27 July 2007, relating to public offers for the acquisition of securities;
- Royal Decree Number 1362/2007 of 19 October 2007, on the transparency requirements relating to the issuers of securities admitted to trading in a regulated secondary market;
- Royal Decree Number 217/2008 of 15 February 2008, on the legal regime applicable to investment firms and all entities rendering investment services;
- Royal Decree Number 1282/2010 of 15 October 2010, concerning the regulation of the official markets for futures, options, and other derivative financial instruments;
- Royal Decree Number 303/2012 of 3 February 2012, relating to the Consultative Committee of the National Stock Market Commission;
- Royal Decree Number 1082/2012 of 13 July 2012, developing the regime on undertakings for collective investment;
- Royal Decree-Law 24/2012 of 31 August (validated by means of Law 9/2012 of 14 November, on restructuration and resolution of credit entities, as amended by Royal Decree-Law 3/2013 of 22 February), which implemented in Spain Directive 2010/73/UE;
- Royal Decree Number 1698/2012 of 21 December (by means of which Directive 2010/73/UE is implemented in Spain), modifying the previous regulations on prospectuses and transparency requirements of issuers; and
- Circular of the National Stock Exchange Commission Number 3/2013 of 12 June, by means of which certain obligations as to the information that must be provided to clients of investment services for purposes of the suitability and appropriateness test are developed.

National Stock Market Commission

The control, supervision, and inspection of the operation of the Spanish primary and secondary markets and of the activities of those private individuals and legal entities related to these markets are entrusted to the National Stock Market Commission.

The National Stock Market Commission is a public law organism with its own legal entity and full capacity to act as a private enterprise or a public authority. In the exercise of its public functions, and where the Stock Market Law and any other law is silent on any matter, the National Stock Market Commission will act in accordance with the provisions of Law Number 30/1992 of 26 November 1992 relating to the legal regime of the public administration and the ordinary administrative proceedings.

The National Stock Market Commission is governed by the Stock Market Council, which has those powers granted by the Stock Market Law and those others which may be given by the government or the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness in accordance with regulations developing the Stock Market Law. The Council is composed of the following members:

- A chairman and vice-chairman appointed by the government on a proposal made by the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness;
- The General Director of the Treasury and Financial Policy and the Sub-Director of the Bank of Spain, who are ex officio members; and
- Three directors appointed by the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness.

A Secretary with no voting rights must be appointed and must participate in the meetings of the Council. The Executive Committee is composed of the chairman, the vice-chairman, and the directors appointed by the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness.

The Consultative Committee of the National Stock Market Commission is a body responsible for advising the Council on certain specific matters, including the rules enacted by the National Stock Market Commission and the imposition of sanctions because of very serious infringements. The Committee is chaired by the vice-chairman of the council and includes representatives of the regulated secondary markets, the issuers, the investors, and the Spanish regions (Autonomous Communities) where a regulated secondary market is located. The National Stock Market Commission's functions include:

- Supervise and inspect the stock markets and any activities undertaken by any private individual or legal entity connected with their transactions;
- Register the issuances and public offers relating to traded financial instruments;
- Impose sanctions;
- Provide information to enhance the transparency of the securities markets, ensure adequate price formation, and protect investors;
- Advise the central and, if applicable, the Autonomous Communities on matters connected with the securities markets; and

- Enact rules developing the provisions contained in regulations approved by the government or the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness. These regulations are known as Circulars.

In addition to the control exercised by the National Stock Market Commission, the Autonomous Communities have the power to control, inspect, and impose sanctions to companies operating within their territories and in relation to securities admitted to trading in markets located in their areas. The National Stock Market Commission may enter into agreements with those regions that are competent in these matters relating to the securities markets for the purpose of coordinating their respective areas.

Legal Regime

Stock Exchanges

In General

There are four stock exchanges in Spain: Madrid, Bilbao, Barcelona, and Valencia. The creation of a stock exchange needs to be authorized by the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness, unless the Autonomous Community where the stock exchange is located has express statutory power to create an exchange in its region.

The object of the stock exchanges is the trading of securities, although financial instruments traded in other regulated secondary markets can be traded as well in the stock exchanges. Each stock exchange is governed and administered by a limited-liability company known as a management company (Sociedad Rectora).

The management company directs and controls the activities undertaken on a stock exchange and, as manager, shall be responsible for the organization of the resources needed to operate the stock exchange. Some of the functions and duties of management companies are to:

- Clearly state and publish the conditions for the admission of securities to trading in the stock exchange;
- Resolve the admission of securities to trading in the stock exchange;
- Ensure that the price formation process is correct and open and that the regulations applicable to transactions are strictly observed;
- Notify the National Stock Market Commission and, where applicable, the corresponding Autonomous Community, of any matter that might amount to a breach of or a deviation from the basic principles of the Spanish stock market legislation;
- Render such assistance to the National Stock Market Commission or to the Autonomous Community as may be requested in connection with the duties of supervision, inspection, and control;

- Request from the National Securities Exchange Commission the suspension of any securities to trading when reporting or other obligations are breached by the issuer or other circumstances which may disturb the normal trading of the securities arise whereby, in urgent circumstances, the management company could unilaterally suspend the trading;
- Propose the exclusion from trading of those securities in relation to which the volume, frequency, or spreading criteria established in the relevant regulations are not fulfilled;
- Ensure that the members of the stock exchanges require clients to give the minimum guarantees and conform to applicable coverage ratios for credit and term transactions; and
- Receive and transmit certain information.

Membership

The following entities can become a member of a stock exchange:

- Investment firms authorized to execute orders on behalf of clients or to operate on their own account (ie, dealers or brokers);
- Credit entities;
- Credit entities or investment firms domiciled in another European Union (EU) member state, provided that they are authorized to execute orders on behalf of clients or to operate on their own account (even on a cross-border basis and without having to hold an establishment in Spain);
- Credit entities or investment firms domiciled outside the EU, provided that their home regulator has authorized them to execute orders on behalf of clients or to operate on their own account;
- The public administration (through the General Directorate of Treasury and Financial Policy); and
- Those other entities as determined by the relevant stock exchange management company in accordance with objective criteria.

It is not necessary that the member entities are shareholders of the management company of the stock exchange.

Stock Exchange Interconnection System

The four Spanish stock exchanges are connected through the Stock Exchange Interconnection System (Sistema de Interconexión Bursátil — SIBE), which is a national computer-aided communication system in which listed securities as resolved by the National Stock Market Commission may be traded, provided that they are listed in at least two stock exchanges.

The Stock Exchange Company (Sociedad de Bolsas) is a limited liability company in charge of the management of the Stock Exchange Interconnection System. Its share capital is distributed in equal parts among the four management companies of the existing Spanish stock exchanges, which have an equal representation in the board of directors and appoint an extra member to act as chairman thereof.

Latibex and MAB

Latibex was authorized in 1999 and is an organized system for the trading, clearing, settlement, and registration of transactions over Latin American securities that are expressly admitted for these purposes. It is not a different regulated secondary market with a separate legal entity. The securities admitted to this market are traded in the four stock exchanges.

The main conditions that the securities need to fulfill in order for them to be admitted in Latibex are being admitted to trading in a Latin American official stock exchange, having a capitalization value of at least €300 million, providing evidence of compliance with the applicable obligations in the home stock exchange, and assuring that the information submitted to the home stock exchange is immediately available in the market.

MAB (Mercado Alternativo Bursátil) is a system for the trading, clearing, settlement, and registry of shares and other securities in undertakings for collective investment, securities or financial instruments issued or related to entities with a small capitalization, and other securities or financial instruments which, in light of their nature, deserve a singular regime. It is noteworthy that the current regime of MAB is being revised by Spanish authorities and is likely to be amended before the year end in order to enhance supervision and control of the securities that are traded in it and their issuers.

Transactions

The settlement of stock exchange transactions, ie, the completion of agreed sales and purchases, is undertaken by way of multilateral clearing through IBERCLEAR. This service deals with the clearance of all credit and debit balances as between securities and cash amounts that have arisen due to purchase and sale transactions undertaken by each of the entities adhered to the service (entidades adheridas) either on their own behalf or on behalf of customers.

IBERCLEAR is a limited-liability company where shareholders are the four stock exchange management companies and the entities adhere to the service. The brokerage firms and agencies that are members of one or more stock exchanges are automatically members of IBERCLEAR. Additionally, the following entities can adhere to IBERCLEAR:

- The credit institutions, the Bank of Spain, and the General Deposits Corporation;
- The Sociedades and Agencias de Valores y Bolsas (ie, brokers and broker-dealers) which are not members of a stock exchange; and

- The non-resident entities which undertake activities analogous to the Servicio de Liquidación y Compensación de Valores, provided that a reciprocity agreement is entered into where the entity is not domiciled in the EU.

Book Entries Public Debt Market

The sole object of the Book Entries Public Debt Market is the trading of fixed rent securities represented through book entries and issued by the State, the Official Credit Entity (ICO) and, at their request, the European Central Bank, EU central banks, development multilateral banks which Spain is a member of, the European Investment Bank, Autonomous Communities or other public entities, as well as other financial instruments as approved from time to time.

The Bank of Spain is the management body of the Book Entries Public Debt Market. The registry of the securities traded in this market has been entrusted to IBERCLEAR, which manages the issuance and redemption of the securities, coupon payments, and balance transfers resulting from transactions in the secondary market. Additionally, IBERCLEAR holds the accounts, which can be individual (in the name and on behalf of the member entities) or global (opened in the name of the member entities but on behalf of their customers). Only those entities complying with the requirements set forth in the Stock Market Law can qualify as members of the Book Entries Public Debt Market.

Futures and Options Markets

In accordance with articles 31 and 59 of the Stock Market Law, the government, pursuant to Royal Decree Number 1282/2010 of 15 October 2010, has developed the regulation for the futures and options markets. In the futures and options markets a wide range of derivative instruments are traded, the underlying being defined by the relevant market management company. The purpose of these markets is the trading, registration, clearing, and settlement of futures, options, and other derivative financial instruments, eligible in accordance with the relevant market regulations.

Futures and options are standardized contracts where the only terms that are subject to negotiation between the parties are price and settlement date. Fulfillment of the agreements is guaranteed by the management company; in other words, each of the parties contracts with the market, so there is no counterparty risk.

Financial futures and options markets need to be authorized by the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness, except where their scope is regional, in which case they shall be authorized by the relevant Autonomous Community. The options and futures markets currently existing in Spain include MEFF Renta Variable (in Madrid), MEFF Renta Fija (in Barcelona), and Olive Oil Futures Market (in Jaén).

Fixed Rent Market

Enterprise promissory notes, notes, bonds, and other fixed rent securities are traded in the Fixed Rent Market (AIAF). The management company of the market is the Mercado Renta Fija, S.A. Only credit entities, broker-dealers (sociedades de valores), or brokers (agencias de valores) can become members of this market.

Entities Authorized to Operate in Securities Market

The following types of investment firms exist pursuant to the Stock Market Law:[3]

- Broker-dealers (sociedades de valores), which can provide all investment services;
- Brokers (agencias de valores), which can only provide investment services on behalf of clients but not dealing for their own account;
- Portfolio management companies (sociedades gestoras de cartera), which can only provide portfolio discretionary management and investment advisory services; and
- Financial advisory firms (empresas de asesoramiento financiero), which can only provide investment advisory services.

Additionally, credit entities will be entitled to render all investment services, while investment funds management companies can provide specific investment services. EU credit institutions and investment firms are able to provide investment services in Spain (provided that their legal regimes, articles of association, and specific authorizations enable them to do so) by:

- Opening a branch in Spain (subject to a passporting procedure and without a prior authorization being required in Spain); or
- Rendering services on a cross-border basis in the Spanish market (subject to a passporting procedure and without prior authorization being required in Spain).

Non-EU investment firms may provide services in Spain by opening a branch, provided that an administrative authorization from the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness, on proposal of the National Stock Market Commission, is obtained or by rendering services on a cross-border basis, provided that an administrative authorization from the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness, on proposal of the National Stock Market Commission, is obtained.

Under the Stock Market Law, the establishment by a Spanish investment firm of a branch or the provision by a Spanish investment firm of investment services abroad will require a mere prior notice to the National Stock Market Commission (if the host country is a EU jurisdiction) or the authorization by the National Stock Market Commission (if the host country is not a EU jurisdiction).

It is the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness that, on a proposal from the National Stock Market Commission, grants the relevant license so that the investment firms can provide investment services, except in the case of advisory companies, where the National Stock Market Commission is the one that grants the authorization. The requirements necessary to enable an entity to obtain and maintain the above license include:

- Their corporate object must be limited to those investment services which they are able to render according to their authorization;
- Their registered address and main place of business must be located in Spain;
- They must be open limited-liability companies (sociedades anónimas) except for the advisory companies, which can be closed limited-liability companies (sociedades de responsabilidad limitada) with indefinite duration and share capital divided into registered shares;
- They must have at all times a minimum share capital, fully paid up in cash, whose amount depends on the type of investment firm (it goes from €2,000,000 for securities companies to €50,000 for advisory companies);
- They must have a board of directors of at least three members;
- All members of the board of directors, including the private individuals who represent legal entities which are directors, and all managing directors and similar officers must have a recognized business or professional background;
- The majority of the members of the board of directors and all managing directors and similar officers must have sufficient knowledge and experience in matters related to securities markets;
- They must have an adequate organization, personal means, internal control procedures, and departments and technical support sufficient to deal with the nature and volume of their activities, including without limitation to those necessary to prevent money laundering activities;
- They must have an internal code of conduct and a specific regime for self-dealing by directors, managers, employees, and attorneys;
- Save for certain exceptions, they must fulfill certain ratios of volume of investments in low risk and high liquidity assets;
- They must adhere to the Investment Guarantee Fund (see text, below); and
- They must also comply with the applicable capital requirements as set out in Regulation (EU) Number 575/2013 of 26 June 2013.

Investment firms can appoint agents which can act on their behalf and which can only operate on an exclusive basis for the relevant investment firm and its group. Investment firms remain liable for the performance of their agents. The following investment services in relation to financial instruments can be provided by investment firms and credit entities pursuant to the Stock Market Law:

- Receive and transmit orders in relation to one or more financial instruments;
- Execute orders on behalf of clients;
- Deal on own account transactions;
- Provide portfolio management;
- Offer investment advice;
- Underwrite financial instruments and/or placing of financial instruments on a firm commitment basis;
- Place financial instruments without a firm commitment basis; and
- Provide multilateral trading facilities management services.

The following ancillary services can be provided by investment firms and credit entities pursuant to the Stock Market Law:

- Offering safekeeping and administration of financial instruments for the account of clients, including custody and related services such as cash/collateral management;
- Granting credits or loans to an investor to allow him to carry out a transaction in one or more financial instruments;
- Giving advice to undertakings on capital structure, industrial strategy, and related matters and advice and services relating to mergers and the purchase of undertakings;
- Engaging in investment research and financial analysis or other forms of general recommendation relating to transactions in financial instruments; and
- Providing services related to underwriting or placement of financial instruments.

The Stock Market Law and Royal Decree Number 948/2001 regulate the creation of the Investors' Guarantee Fund, which is a separate entity with its own legal entity aimed at, under certain circumstances (mainly, insolvency of an investment firm, or express declaration by the National Stock Market Commission in the sense that an investment firm is not able to fulfill its obligations), covering the value of the assets deposited by the investors at the affected firm, up to a certain amount.

All Spanish investment firms other than advisory companies and branches of non-EU investment firms must adhere and contribute to the Investors' Guarantee Fund, while adhesion and contribution by branches of EU investment firms is voluntary. The coverage provided by this fund is complemented with the one granted by the Deposit Guarantee Fund of the credit entities.

Public Offer of Securities, Admission of Securities to Trading, and Prospectuses

Rules on the public offer of securities, and the admission of securities to trading are set forth in articles 25–30 ter of the Stock Market Law, Royal Decree Number 1310/2005 of 4 November 2005, and Order Number EHA/3537/2005 of 10 November 2005.

A public offer is defined as a communication to persons by any means or any way which includes sufficient information on the terms of an offer and the offered securities, which allows an investor to decide on the acquisition or subscription of those securities; however, an offer may not be considered in any event as a public offer when:

- It is only addressed to qualified investors (including credit entities, pension funds, investment firms, investment funds, governments, central banks, supranational institutions, and large corporations);
- The number of persons to which it is addressed (excluding the qualified investors) is less than 150 per member state;
- The nominal value per security or the minimum investment in securities is at least €100,000; or
- The aggregate amount of the offer (calculated within the last 12 months if the offer is continuing or made in respect to the same securities more than once) is below €5,000,000.

Any on-sale of securities which has been previously the object of a public offer shall be deemed a separate offer and the same definition of public offer must be used in order to determine whether the public offer regime is applicable to that second offer.

A public offer of securities and the admission of securities to trading in a Spanish regulated secondary market requires compliance with certain requirements, except for certain specific cases set forth in Royal Decree Number 1310/2005 (including exchange of shares, shares offered as part of the price of a takeover bid or in the context of a merger, dividends in shares, and debt securities issued or guaranteed by public bodies). The National Stock Exchange Commission would be the competent authority to supervise a public offer or the admission of securities to trading in these cases:

- For issuances of debt securities with a nominal value of at least €1,000 each and debt securities which entitle the holder to acquire negotiable securities or receive a cash amount as a result of their conversion or the exercise of rights attached to them, when the issuer of the underlying securities is not the issuer of the debt securities or another entity of the same group, if the issuer of the securities is domiciled in Spain, or the securities are to be traded in a Spanish regulated secondary market, or the securities are publicly offered in Spain (and the issuer, offeror, or the applicant selects Spain as home country);

- For securities other than those referred to above, if the issuer of the securities is domiciled in Spain; and
- For securities other than those referred to above, if the issuer of the securities is domiciled outside the EU and the securities are to be traded in a Spanish regulated secondary market, or the securities are publicly offered in Spain (and the issuer, offeror, or the applicant selects Spain as home country).

The documentation to be provided to the National Stock Exchange Commission in the context of a public offer or an application to trade securities in a Spanish regulated secondary market is, in general, the following: (a) the by-laws, (b) the corporate resolutions, (c) audited financial statements of the last three years (for equity securities) or two years (for debt securities) and (d) an informative prospectus which has to be verified and registered with the National Stock Exchange Commission (such verification not meaning any recommendation to buy or an opinion on the solvency of the issuer or the quality of the securities).

The contents of the prospectus are equivalent for public offer and admission to trading purposes (and the same prospectus could be used for both purposes during one year), and are determined by Commission Regulations (EC) 809/2004 of 29 April 2004. As a general principle, a prospectus shall contain all necessary information in relation to the issuer and the securities so that the potential investors may make an informed assessment of the investment.

A prospectus can be a single document or be composed of separate documents: registration document, securities note, and summary. When an updated registration document is already registered with the National Stock Exchange Commission, an issuer can use it and just prepare the securities note and the summary when new securities are going to be admitted to trading. That said, a summary will not be required when the prospectus relates to debt securities for an individual nominal value of at least €100,000.

The summary must be drawn up in a common format (in accordance with the applicable regulations, as provided under Annex XXII to the Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) Number 486/2012 of 30 March), as well as in a brief and non-technical way; reflect the features and essential risks associated to the issuer, the guarantors (if any), and the securities; and contain a statement clarifying that it must be read as an introduction for the prospectus and that a decision to invest will be based on the assessment of the complete prospectus. An investor cannot claim on the basis of the summary, unless it is misleading or inconsistent with the rest of the sections of the prospectus.

A base prospectus can be used for issuances of debt securities or warrants which are issued under an issuance program, or debt securities issued by a credit entity on an ongoing or continuous basis provided that certain conditions are met. A base prospectus contains all information except for the final terms of the securities, which are deposited at the National Stock Exchange Commission afterwards. It is an efficient process as the National Stock Exchange Commission just verifies and registers the base prospectus, but all issuances made thereunder do not require any further approval.

A supplement of a prospectus (either a base prospectus or an ordinary one) needs to be made when the prospectus contains an inaccuracy or a new significant factor arises in relation to the information contained in the prospectus (for instance, interim financial information) that can influence the assessment of the securities.

There is an obligation to publish all prospectuses and their supplements. Several alternatives are available for these purposes, although in Spain the National Stock Exchange Commission publishes all prospectuses in its website and this requirement is thus automatically fulfilled.

A prospectus verified by and registered with the competent securities market authority of an EU member state can be used for the public offer or admission to trading in other EU member states (without the host member state being entitled to impose any additional requirement). This process, which is called passporting procedure, just involves a notification between supervisors enclosing a certificate evidencing that the prospectus was prepared in accordance with the Prospectus Directive, a copy of such prospectus, and a translation of its summary into the language of the host member state. Additionally, issuers that wish to launch a tender offer or request for the admission to trading of debt securities under a base prospectus previously filed with the competent authorities of the other member states must communicate the final terms to the competent authority of the relevant host member state.

On top of potential criminal and administrative liability, the Stock Market Law and Royal Decree Number 1310/2005 establish a specific liability regime in connection with the prospectus. This liability is imposed on the issuer, offeror, or the person applying for the admission to trade in a regulated secondary market, as the case may be, as well as on its directors, the guarantor (where applicable and in respect of the information prepared by it), the arranger for the information in the securities note in initial public offering, and any other person who accepts to assume liability in connection with the prospectus and that circumstance is reflected therein.

These persons will be liable for the damages caused to those investors that acquire the relevant securities as a consequence of false information included in the prospectus or the omission of significant information therein.

Periodic Returns

Entities which issue securities traded in any secondary market (for these purposes, listed entities) must submit, when Spain is the host member state, certain information on an annual, semi-annual, and quarterly basis to the National Stock Exchange Commission, and shall disclose it on their website. Such information shall be prepared in accordance with Circular of the National Stock Exchange Commission Number 1/2008 of 30 January 2008.

Within four months as from the end of the fiscal year, listed entities must prepare and publish their individual and, if applicable, consolidated annual accounts and management report (which must include a report on corporate governance), as verified by their auditors, together with a statement on their contents signed by its directors.

Within two months as from the end of the first half of the fiscal year, listed entities shall prepare and publish an individual and, if applicable, consolidated summarized balance sheet and interim management report for the first six months, together with a statement signed by their directors on their contents.

Additionally, within two months as from the end of the fiscal year, listed entities must prepare and publish an individual and, if applicable, consolidated summarized balance sheet and management report for the full year, together with a statement signed by its directors on their contents. This obligation may not be applicable if the listed entity has published the annual information referred to above within the first two months.

Within 45 days as from the end of the first and third quarter of the fiscal year, listed entities shall prepare and publish information on the financial position and results of the issuer and its subsidiaries, as well as on significant events (together with its impact on the financial position or results of the group) occurring during the first quarter and the first three quarters, respectively. All transactions of a listed entity with related parties must be disclosed in the semi-annual reports.

Significant Shareholdings

In General

Pursuant to article 53 of the Stock Market Law and Royal Decree Number 1362/2007, those persons who directly or indirectly purchase or transfer shares or financial instruments attributing voting rights in an entity whose shares are listed on a regulated secondary market and, as a consequence, its voting rights reach, exceed, or are reduced to below 3 per cent, 5 per cent, 10 per cent, 15 per cent, 20 per cent, 25 per cent, 30 per cent, 40 per cent, 45 per cent, 50 per cent, 60 per cent, 70 per cent, 75 per cent, 80 per cent, or 90 per cent of the voting rights, must inform the issuer and the National Stock Exchange Commission within four stock exchange working days as from the date when the obligor knew or should have become aware that any of the above thresholds have been crossed.

As an exception, where the acquirer or transferor is domiciled in a tax haven or in a territory with no taxation or with which no effective tax information exchange exists, the obligation to report is triggered each time a 1 per cent or any of its multiples are crossed. Additionally, directors of the affected company are obliged to report all purchases and transfers of shares within five stock exchange working days, as well as the shareholding they have when they are appointed and removed, whereas directors and managers must inform of the stock-options plans and any other plan linked to shares of the listed company (as well as of the operations with shares and derivatives over shares where they or specially-related persons are involved).

In addition to the acquisition or transfer of listed shares, the acquisition or transfer of financial instruments which entitle the holder in its own initiative to acquire existing shares attaching voting rights also trigger the obligation to report. Moreover, even where no acquisition or transfer exists, certain other events would trigger the obligation to report:

- When the proportion of voting rights of a certain person reaches, exceeds, or is reduced below the relevant thresholds as a consequence of a change in the total number of voting rights of the affected company;
- The first listing of a company in a regulated secondary market;
- In the case of a capital increase to be freely allotted by shareholders (ampliación de capital liberada), if voting rights are altered because of the purchase or sale of the right to subscribe the new shares; and
- Where a takeover bid is launched, shareholders in the affected company, shareholders with one per cent or more of the voting rights, and shareholders with more than three per cent that modify its shareholding shall make the corresponding notification.

Who Must File

In addition to the direct or indirect shareholders, other persons may have the obligation to report when the voting rights involved reach the thresholds set forth above:

- Regardless of the ownership of the shares, those who acquire, transfer, or have the possibility to exercise voting rights attached to the shares as a consequence of certain transactions set forth in Royal Decree Number 1362/2007, including agreements to syndicate the exercise of the vote in certain circumstances, the temporary transfer of voting rights, and the granting of usufruct rights over the shares;
- The custodian of the shares provided that it can discretionally exercise the voting rights attached to the deposited shares;
- The person who uses an intermediate company or person to hold the shares and voting rights;[4]
- The attorneys, when they can discretionally exercise the voting rights, in absence of specific instructions from the shareholders;
- The undertakings for collective investments management companies in respect of the voting rights attached to the shares held by the undertakings for 4 In particular, in an arrangement where one person leaves the holder of the shares totally or partially covered against the risks inherent to the holding, purchase, or transfer of the shares, the holder of the shares will be an intermediate company and the person assuming the risk would be obliged to report.

collective investments managed by them, except where they expressly waive the exercise of voting rights; and

- Where there is a co-ownership of shares, the person designated to exercise the voting rights.

Notice of Acquisition of Own Shares

The purchase by a listed entity in a single transaction or successive transactions of own shares, either directly or through a controlled or intermediate entity, representing one per cent of the share capital or any of its multiples, must be notified to the National Stock Market Commission.

Significant Information

Listed entities shall disclose significant information (see Rules of Conduct, below) by means of a notice to the National Stock Exchange Commission (Hecho relevante) when such significant information may affect the quotation price of the listed company.

Rules of Conduct

In General

Articles 78–83 quater of the Stock Market Law, Royal Decree Number 217/2008, and Royal Decree Number 1333/2005 contain the main conduct rules applicable to the securities market, which can be classified into rules of conduct applicable to the rendering of investment services, rules addressing market abuse, and rules concerning a sanctioning regime.

Client Classification

Depending on the type of entity and the experience, knowledge, and qualification in the field of the securities markets, the customers shall be classified as eligible counterparties, professional customers, or retail customers. Those customers classified as retail customers enjoy a higher level of protection under the applicable legislation (for instance, investment firms and credit entities are obliged to furnish the retail customers with extensive information in relation to themselves and the services rendered, the financial instruments and investment strategies, and the platform for the execution of orders and associated costs and expenses).

Inducements

The only fees and benefits permitted under the Stock Market Law and Royal Decree Number 217/2008 are fees and non-cash benefits paid or delivered to entities acting on behalf of the investment firm or the customer; fees and non-cash benefits paid or delivered to third parties or by third parties, provided that certain information on the existence, nature, and amount of those fees or benefits is provided to the customer and payment thereof contributes to an increase in the quality of the service provided to the customer and does not affect the obligation of the firm to act always in the best interest of the customer; and fees necessary or adequate to properly provide the investment service (such as custody, settlement, currency exchange, or legal fees) and which, because of their nature, cannot conflict with the duty of the firm to act with the necessary honesty, impartiality, diligence, and transparency in the best interest of the customer.

Suitability and Appropriateness

With respect to investment advice and portfolio management services, the investment firm is obliged to obtain as much information from the customer as necessary in relation to its objectives, financial position, risk aversion, experience, and knowledge with the aim of being able to recommend those services and financial instruments which best suit the relevant customer. When it comes to the rest of investment services, the firm must request the information necessary to assess the customer's knowledge and experience and therefore to determine if the product or service requested by the customer is appropriate and warn the customer accordingly.

Best Execution

The investment firms must adopt all reasonable measures to obtain the best possible result for the client's transactions, considering price, other costs, speed, and certainty of the execution, and have a best execution policy in place summarizing the weighted importance of these criteria in the decision on how the orders from customers should be executed.

Insider Trading

Privileged information is any information of a specific nature which directly or indirectly refers to one or more financial instruments or securities or to one or more issuers thereof which has not been made public and which, had it been made public, could have considerably influenced the quotation of such security or securities. Pursuant to article 81 of the Stock Market Law, any person or entity who possesses privileged information (as defined above) may not undertake, whether directly or indirectly, any of the following activities for its own benefit or for the benefit of anyone else:

- Prepare or undertake any kind of transaction in the market relating to the securities or financial instruments to which the information refers, or derivative agreements having those securities or financial instruments as underlying asset;
- Communicate such information to any third party, save in the normal course of work, profession, office, or function; and
- Recommend any third party to acquire or transfer securities or financial instruments or to make any other transaction based on the privileged information.

Disclosure of Significant Information

Under article 82 of the Stock Market Law, significant information is defined as that whose knowledge can affect a reasonable investor in order to acquire or transfer securities or financial instruments and, therefore, can influence significantly their price in secondary regulated markets.

Issuers of securities and financial instruments are obliged to communicate any significant information to the National Securities Exchange Commission prior to the disclosure in any other way, and as soon as the event has been known, the decision has been taken, or the agreement has been executed. Significant information shall also be immediately uploaded to the listed entity's website. The National Securities Exchange Commission can require a listed entity to publicly disclose information that the regulator deems significant.

Exceptionally, the issuer may delay the publication of the significant information when it deems that disclosure would damage its legitimate interests, provided that the non-disclosure does not produce a misleading effect, the issuer can guarantee the confidentiality of that information, and the National Securities Exchange Commission is immediately informed.

The above notwithstanding, there is a broad duty to keep confidential those analysis, preparatory, and negotiation acts prior to the execution of an agreement or taking a decision which may qualify as significant information and, in particular, ongoing negotiations which could be affected if they were disclosed, and resolutions adopted by any corporate body of the listed entity which need to be ratified by another one in order for the decision or agreement to be effective.

During that previous phase, the listed entity shall adopt all necessary measures to ensure confidentiality of that information and, in particular, restrict the access to that information only to those persons as strictly necessary and keep a record of the persons who are aware of the information. If prices or volumes traded in relation to the shares of the listed company become abnormal and there are signs that the confidentiality has been breached, the listed entity shall disclose the significant information.

Distortion of Prices in Market

All persons or entities operating in or related to the securities market must refrain from preparing or carrying out transactions that distort the free formation of prices. For those purposes, operations or orders using fictitious mechanisms or any other way of deception or which provide or may provide false or misleading signs in connection with the offer, the demand or the price of a financial instrument, as well as the spread of misleading information, are considered acts which distort the free formation of prices. Among the activities that are particularly considered as distorting the formation of prices, Royal Decree Number 1333/2005 includes the following:

- The individual or concerted action to retain a dominant position over the offer or demand of a financial instrument with the result of determining non-balanced trading conditions;

- The sale or purchase when the market has closed with the effect of misleading the investors;
- The use of the media to expose an opinion on a financial instrument after taking a position on it and benefiting from the effects of that opinion; and
- Any other specific practices as established by the National Securities Exchange Commission.

Sanctioning Regime

Finally, the Stock Market Law defines a very broad sanctioning regime which extends to all entities or persons that are involved in any way in the securities markets. As aforementioned, the National Securities Exchange Commission is vested with all supervision and inspection powers necessary for the exercise of the sanctioning regime, which include physical inspections and unlimited access to documentation. All information obtained by the National Securities Exchange Commission exercising its functions is subject to a strict secrecy duty that applies to all officials involved.

Takeover Bids

Takeover bids are regulated by articles 60, 60 bis, 60 ter, 60 quáter, and 61 of Stock Market Law and Royal Decree Number 1066/2007 of 27 July 2007, as amended (specifically, pursuant to Royal Decree-Law 4/2004 of 7 March). There are two types of takeover bids, ie, mandatory takeover bids and voluntary takeover bids.

Persons who achieve control of a company listed in Spain are required to launch an offer addressed to all equity securities of the affected company and at a fair price. For these purposes, control is deemed to exist in the following circumstances:

- Through the acquisition of shares and other securities granting, directly or indirectly, voting rights in the listed company in an aggregate percentage of at least 30 per cent. Some rules on computation of voting rights are provided in the applicable regulations (eg, call options over listed shares are not considered for purposes of this threshold until they are exercised);
- Through the designation, within 24 months after the acquisition of shares, of a number of board members which, together with those already appointed by the same person, represent more than half the board; and
- Through an agreement (tacit or express, written or verbal) with other shareholders so that the joint shareholding reaches the 30 per cent threshold, provided that the agreement is aimed at establishing a joint policy in relation to the management of the listed company or at influencing it significantly, or regulates the exercise of the vote in the board of directors or the executive committee.

Additionally, the offeror shall provide a third-party report on the valuation criteria to reach the offer price and offer an alternative cash price if the proposed consideration is securities, when the target company has been affected in the previous two years by special circumstances (including arguable market manipulation, force majeure, or expropriations).

There are cases where, even where control is acquired, the obligation to launch a mandatory takeover bid is not triggered; for instance, in restructuring transactions, or when the control is achieved following the completion of a voluntary takeover bid launched at a fair price or accepted by shareholders representing at least 50 per cent of the shares to which the offer is addressed, excluding those held by the offeror or by those which had a binding commitment to accept. The breach of the obligation to launch a mandatory takeover bid involves a suspension of the exercise of political rights in relation to the shares held by the relevant shareholder.

It is noteworthy that, last March 2014, an amendment to the takeover bids regime in Spain was introduced to clarify that no bid should be launched in those cases where lenders capitalize their debts and convert them into shares of listed companies to the extent that: (a) the relevant company is in serious and imminent financial trouble (even thought it has not yet filed for insolvency) and (b) the transaction is conceived to secure the long-term financial recovery of the company. The National Securities Exchange Commission shall be entitled to decide if those requirements are met on a case-by-case basis, unless the capitalization takes place within the context of a refinancing agreement pursuant to which dissident creditors have been crammed-down.

When a mandatory takeover bid is not required, voluntary takeover bids can be launched, in which case the offer would not have to be at a fair price, may not be addressed to all securities (in certain cases), could include conditions (for instance, the deletion of restrictions in the target company's by-laws or a minimum number of acceptances), and would not have to include an alternative in cash when the consideration consists totally or partially in securities.

Specific sub-types of public offer for acquisition of shares are deemed mandatory takeover bids: the offer for the exclusion of the shares for trading in the Spanish stock exchange, and the public offer for the share capital decrease through the acquisition of treasury stock.

Takeover bids can be totally or partially structured as purchases or exchange of securities, and an equal treatment of all addressed shareholders must be ensured. The offer can include different alternatives at the targeted shareholder's choice, although, if a mandatory offer applies, an alternative in cash is always required.

Fair price is defined in the applicable regulations as follows: (a) where, during the 12 months prior to launching the bid, the offeror or the persons acting in concert with it have acquired shares of the affected company, the fair price cannot be below the highest purchase price during that period; and (b) in any other circumstance, the fair price will not be below that calculated through different methods contemplated in the regulations (including last semester market price track-record and book value). Fair price is subject to supervision and control by the National Securities Exchange Commission, which shall have the power to modify it in certain cases and request a report on the methodology and criteria used for its determination.

Upon the launch of the offer, the offeror must provide evidence to the National Securities Exchange Commission as to the existence of a sufficient guarantee of the fulfillment of the obligations resulting from the offer, that is, of the payment or delivery of the offer consideration. Such a guarantee shall be different depending on the nature of the consideration (bank guarantees for cash consideration and securities blocking certificates for consideration in securities). The following milestones and features can be highlighted in relation to the takeover proceedings:

- The takeover announcement must be made once the triggering event of the mandatory takeover bid has occurred or the decision to launch a voluntary bid has been taken;
- Within one month as from the announcement, an application for authorization by the National Securities Exchange Commission shall be submitted, including, among the rest of supporting documentation, the takeover prospectus. The trading of the shares of the affected company will be suspended until the National Securities Exchange Commission admits the application;
- The National Securities Exchange Commission must resolve on the application within 20 working days as from the date when all necessary documentation has been filed to its satisfaction;
- The offer must be published within five working days as of the authorization, and at that moment the acceptance period shall be initiated;
- Within the first 10 days after the commencement of the acceptance period, a report must be issued by the board of directors of the affected company, on its position in respect of the offer;
- The offer can be modified through a supplement of the takeover prospectus no later than five days before the expiration of the acceptance period, provided that the modification implies a better treatment for the shareholders (in terms of scope, price, and/or elimination of conditions); and
- Competing offers will be permitted until five days before the expiration of the acceptance period, provided that their scope is at least the same as that of the preceding offer and improves their conditions in terms of scope and/or price.[5]

During all these proceedings, the board of directors and any other management body or attorney of the affected company and other entities within its group shall refrain from carrying out any act which can impede success of the offer, except for looking for competing offers.

5 The first offeror will have certain advantages if the proceedings are to be decided through a closed envelopes procedure.

In particular and without limitation, those under this passivity duty may not resolve any issue of securities, execute or promote operations related to the affected securities, transfer or charge assets of the company, or distribute extraordinary dividends or a special remuneration to the shareholders against the usual policy, where any of these actions can impede the success of the offer.

When, as a consequence of a takeover bid addressed to all the securities, the offeror is owner of securities representing more than 90 per cent of the share capital with right to vote, and more than 90 per cent of the addressed shareholders have accepted the offer, the offeror will be entitled to squeeze out the remaining shareholders at a fair price and the remaining shareholders will be entitled to sell their securities at a fair price. For these purposes, the fair price will be the consideration of the previous takeover bid.

Introduction

Regulatory System

Switzerland, as a federal state composed of 26 cantons, has a division of legislative authority between the federal government and the cantons.[1] The federal government is authorised to enact laws only in the areas specifically enumerated in the Constitution.

Capital markets and securities laws fall under the federal legislative authority.[2] In the past, as long as the federal government had not exercised such authority, the cantons were free to regulate stock exchanges; therefore, until 1996, several stock exchanges existed in different cantons. Since then, the main stock exchange activities have been combined, at first, in a civil law association and, subsequently, in a joint-stock company, SIX Swiss Exchange Ltd (formerly SWX Swiss Exchange Ltd), which conducts the SIX Swiss Exchange (formerly SWX Swiss Exchange), in Zurich. SIX Swiss Exchange Ltd is a subsidiary of SIX Group Ltd (formerly SWX Holding Ltd), which holds other subsidiaries such as SIX x-clear Ltd and SIX SIS Ltd, through which clearing and settlement of securities transactions as well as central securities depository services are provided. SIX Group Ltd also holds participations in international joint ventures, such as Scoach and STOXX. Another, less important stock exchange in Switzerland is the BX Berne eXchange in Berne.

The Swiss regulatory system is based on two pillars, namely, on the laws and ordinances of the formal legislator, constituting the legal framework, on the one hand, and on the self-regulation of private organisations, on the other hand. The second pillar is of major importance, particularly to the stock exchanges, which are required to ensure that their operations, administration, and supervision are organised in a manner that is adequate for their business activities.

Legal Sources

Stock Exchanges

The main legal source in the field of securities regulation is the Federal Act on Stock Exchanges and Securities Trading (Stock Exchange Act) of 24 March 1995, as amended. It was brought into force in two steps on 1 February 1997 and 1 January 1998. The Stock Exchange Act constitutes the legal basis for the enactment of several ordinances and reflects three principles, namely:

- The replacement of the previous cantonal stock exchange laws;
- The establishment of the first fully electronic stock exchange in the world; and
- The most important move from a mainly organisational to a more transactional regulatory regime.

Consequently, the rules of the Stock Exchange Act are not only designed to govern and protect the players in the capital market (i.e., stock exchanges, securities dealers, issuers, and investors), but they also take into account the functions of the financial markets in the economy.

In general, the Stock Exchange Act contains provisions with regard to the admission and organisation of stock exchanges, the admission and organisation of securities dealers, the disclosure of acquired or sold important participations in companies listed in Switzerland, and the takeover of listed companies.

The Stock Exchange Act only regulates transactions on the secondary market; after some consideration, the legislator decided that the primary market should be left to the rules of the Swiss Federal Code of Obligations (Code of Obligations); nevertheless, it must be noted that these rules are much less transaction-oriented, and they do not provide for the same degree of transparency as the provisions of the Stock Exchange Act.

An extension of the legislation, however, does not seem to be likely in the near future. The legal framework for the operation of a securities exchange and for trading in securities can be shown as follows (source: SIX Swiss Exchange):

The most important ordinances and regulations enacted on the basis of the Stock Exchange Act are:

- The Ordinance on Stock Exchanges and Securities Trading (Stock Exchange Ordinance);
- The Ordinance of the Swiss Financial Market Supervisory Authority (FINMA) on Stock Exchanges and Securities Trading (Stock Exchange Ordinance-FINMA);
- The Ordinance of the Takeover Board on Public Takeover Offers (Takeover Ordinance);
- The Regulations of the Takeover Board; and

- Several Circulars (Rundschreiben) of FINMA and of the Federal Banking Commission (one of FINMA's predecessors virtually all are taken up by FINMA Circulars).[3]

Based on its self-regulating competence, the SIX Swiss Exchange enacted a number of other self-regulating rules and directives. The most important rules and directives are:

- The Articles of Association of the SIX Swiss Exchange;
- The Rules of Organisation of the SIX Swiss Exchange;
- The Rule Book of the SIX Swiss Exchange;
- The Listing Rules of the SIX Swiss Exchange (Listing Rules);
- The Additional Rules for the Listing of Bonds;
- The Additional Rules for the Listing of Derivatives;
- The Additional Rules for the Listing on Exchange Traded Products;
- The Rules of Procedure of the SIX Swiss Exchange;
- The SIX Swiss Exchange Rules for the Appeals Board (Appeals Board Rules); and
- Several directives, prospectus schemes, and circulars governing the admission of participants, the trading of securities on the SIX, and reporting and disclosure requirements.

Moreover, the legal framework for clearing and settlement of securities transactions as well as for the central securities depository comprises, besides provisions of private law as well as the technical regulations of each system, the Federal Intermediated Securities Act (FISA). FISA came into force on 1 January 2010 and introduced a new category of assets called "intermediated securities" (Bucheffekten), thereby putting electronic book-entry changes which obviate the need for physical movement of securities — a practice which was already successfully used in Switzerland — on a more solid legal footing.

Investment Funds

The Federal Act on Collective Investment Schemes (the 'Collective Investment Schemes Act'), enacted in 2006, regulates the admission, promotion, and activities of Swiss collective investment schemes (i.e., funds whose management is domiciled in Switzerland).

The scope of the Collective Investment Schemes Act covers all forms of collective investments irrespective of their legal status and structure, including collective investment schemes in corporate form (investment companies with variable capital (SICAVs), investment companies with fixed capital (SICAFs), and limited partnerships for collective investments.

3 See http://www.finma.ch/e/regulierung/pages/rundschreiben.aspx.

Moreover, foreign collective investment schemes organised in whatever form (including corporation) under their respective legislation and which are distributed publicly in or from Switzerland also fall within the scope of the Collective Investment Schemes Act and may be authorised to distribute their certificates in Switzerland.

The Collective Investment Schemes Act has recently been revised in order to bring it into line with European Union regulations. Following the revision, which came into force on 1 March 2013, a binding subjection obligation under the Collective Investment Schemes Act for the asset managers of foreign collective investment schemes was introduced;[4] as regards foreign collective investment schemes distributed in or from Switzerland solely to "qualified investors", which were hitherto unregulated, these have now to meet certain conditions, including the appointment of a FINMA licensed representative in Switzerland.[5]

Other Market Participants

The status of the major market participants (apart from the securities dealers) is governed by specific laws. Banking activities are subject to regulations of the Swiss Federal Act on Banks and Savings Institutions of 1934 (Banking Act), as amended, the primary purpose of the Act being to protect depositors, the secondary purpose being the protection of the banking system as such.

Private insurance business in Switzerland is regulated by the Federal Act on the Supervision of Insurance Companies of 2004, as amended, the purpose of the Act being to protect insured persons.

Authorities

The Swiss securities markets and the Swiss banking markets are supervised by FINMA. FINMA has a management structure with a Board of Directors and an Executive Board. The Board of Directors of FINMA is composed of seven to nine members, all experts in the relevant subjects and independent from the market participants. FINMA is staffed with approximately 350 qualified professionals; formally, FINMA is constituted as an independent regulatory agency (öffentlich-rechtliche Anstalt), and it is not part of the general administration of the government.

The SIX Swiss Exchange is incorporated as a joint stock company in accordance with articles 620 et seq. of the Code of Obligations; its management and supervision structure follows general company law rules. The shareholders of its holding company, SIX Group Ltd, are banks and securities dealers. A special supervisory authority, the 'Disclosure Office', dealing with the reporting obligations under the rules on disclosure of shareholdings, has been established.[6]

4 Collective Investment Schemes Act, art 2, al 1.
5 Collective Investment Schemes Act, art 120, al 4, and 123, al 1.
6 Stock Exchange Act, art 20, al 5; Stock Exchange Ordinance-FINMA, art 25; Rules for the Disclosure Office.

The tender offer rules are supervised by another special supervisory authority, the Takeover Board;[7] the Takeover Board has the task and function to examine, in each case, whether the concerned offeror or other relevant market participants are acting in compliance with the applicable regulations.

The Takeover Board is composed of (part-time) experts active in the capital market field. It enacts in the form of legally binding decisions, which can be challenged before FINMA. Furthermore, the offering prospectus of the offeror must be examined prior to its publication by a special auditor approved by FINMA or a securities dealer.[8]

Procedures

The procedural framework depends on the matter and the authority involved. The procedures for actions before the Takeover Board are with a few exceptions governed by the applicable procedural rules of the Federal Act on Administrative Procedure.[9]

Decisions by the Takeover Board can be challenged before FINMA within five trading days. Decisions by FINMA can be appealed to the Swiss Federal Administrative Court.[10] A further appeal to the Swiss Federal Supreme Court is, subject to certain limited exceptions, no longer possible.[11] Thus, the decision by the Federal Administrative Court is final.

The SIX Swiss Exchange and its regulatory bodies apply their own rules (Rules of Procedure; Appeals Board Rules); in the case of the Appeals Board, if there are no applicable special rules, the Federal Act on Administrative Procedure will be applied analogously.[12]

Disputes with the SIX Swiss Exchange and its regulatory bodies, in particular those concerning sanctions that have been imposed by the Swiss Exchange Regulation, are decided solely and finally by the Board of Arbitration based in Zurich, and only once internal remedies available at the SIX Swiss Exchange (Sanction Commission, Appeals Board) have been exhausted.[13] already licensed and admitted as banks; in such case, the banking licence is automatically extended to the securities business.

Domestic Exchanges. The operation of a stock exchange is subject to an authorisation by FINMA.[14] The authorisation is granted to legal entities that fulfil the legal requirements and undertake to ensure an appropriate organisation with respect to their activity.

The SIX Swiss Exchange in Zurich and the BX Berne eXchange have been granted a licence to operate a stock exchange under the Stock Exchange Act. The BX Berne eXchange is an electronic stock exchange on which some 40 mostly mid-size or real estate companies are currently listed. Legal entities controlled by foreign persons or organised under foreign law may be admitted to operate a stock exchange in Switzerland, provided that the principle of reciprocity is respected.[15]

Organisation. The organisation of the stock exchanges is governed by the principle of self-regulation as stated in article 4 of the Stock Exchange Act. The respective provisions (e.g., organisational rules and listing requirements) have been enacted by the SIX Swiss Exchange (see text, above).

Functions. The SIX Swiss Exchange has issued regulations regarding the admission, duties, and exclusion of securities dealers; according to article 7 of the Stock Exchange Act, these regulations must reflect the principle of equal treatment of the market participants.

Before admitting foreign securities dealers, the SIX Swiss Exchange must inform FINMA. Since Switzerland ratified the Fifth Protocol to the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS) in 1998, the admission of foreign securities dealers has been simplified (see text, below).

The SIX Swiss Exchange has established an internal supervisory and controlling body for complaints raised by securities dealers.[16] The SIX Swiss Exchange issued regulations on the listing of securities (the Listing Rules) that contain provisions relating to:[17]

- The admission and trading of securities;
- The information to be provided by the listed companies to the investors; and
- The internationally recognised accounting standards that must be complied with by the listed companies.

These Listing Rules have been amended several times, particularly in 2000 and 2009, to harmonise them with the prevailing European standards. The current version dates from November 2010. There are additional listing rules with respect to the listing of bonds, the listing of derivatives, and the listing of exchange traded products.

The SIX Swiss Exchange also has issued regulations that are designed to organise the market to achieve efficiency and transparency. Furthermore, the very detailed rules of FINMA on the disclosure of acquisition or sale of important participations (disclosure of shareholdings) are particularly noteworthy.

Supervision. An internal supervisory and controlling body, composed of experts in financial market matters, has been established to allow the market participants to file a complaint against actions and decisions rendered by the management of the SIX Swiss Exchange. The final supervision lies with FINMA, with the possibility to appeal certain decisions at the Swiss Federal Supreme Court.

Transnational Electronic Trading Systems. The SIX Swiss Exchange has entered into transnational trading system co-operations, each with its own regulations. SCOACH is a joint venture by the SIX Swiss Exchange and Deutsche Börse AG for the trading of structured products. SIX Swiss Exchange, however, exited another such transnational trading system when in 2011 it sold its stake in the EUREX derivatives exchange to its joint venture partner, Deutsche Börse AG.

Trading in Other "Goods". Other "goods" not normally associated with capital markets are also amenable to being traded on an exchange or other established marketplace. One such example is the electronic platform called "Swiss-Flex" for trading carbon dioxide emission credits, which was created under the purview of the Federal Office for the Environment. Moreover, regarding the relatively new field of power derivatives, these are mostly traded on exchanges domiciled outside of Switzerland (such as EEX) which, pursuant to the Stock Exchange Ordinance, fall under the scope of FINMA in as much as they provide securities dealers in Switzerland access to their facilities.[18]

Furthermore, the Stock Exchange Act specifically empowers the Federal Council to set up rules concerning the trading of electricity on a stock exchange.[19]

Off-Market Transactions. Swiss law does not specifically regulate off-market transactions. However, it must be borne in mind that the Stock Exchange Act states certain minimum levels as to the purchase price of securities within a compulsory takeover action for the acquisition of the outstanding securities.

In particular, the price offered must be at least as high as the stock exchange price and may not be lower than the highest price paid by the offeror for shares of the target company in the preceding 12 months.[20] Therefore, the off-market purchases of shares prior to a takeover bid should not be made at prices that do not reflect the market situation.

Banks and Securities Dealers. By legal definition, the business of a bank consists of accepting deposits from the public and extending loans on its own account and risk to third parties/entities to earn its income from the spread between the interest paid to the depositors and the interest received by the debtors.

Irrespective of the fact that banks have been pursuing activities in many other areas of the financial sector (i.e., asset management, private equity, and investment banking) for a long time, no separation has existed under Swiss law between the commercial banking and the investment banking business. Consequently, as outlined above, most securities dealers in Switzerland are banks. Banking activity is subject to authorisation and supervision by FINMA. The licence is granted if the conditions set forth in the Banking Act are met, in particular:

- Organisational requirements — Swiss banks must have a place of business in Switzerland, a fully paid-in capital of at least CHF 10 million, a clearly defined scope of business in the articles of incorporation and, in the by-laws, an adequate internal organisation, appropriate risk management procedures, and an effective internal control system (internal inspectorate).[21]
- Directors, managers, and qualifying shareholders — The Banking Act explicitly requires that the directors and the managing officers of a Swiss bank must have a good reputation and offer assurance of a proper business conduct.[22] When interpreting the term 'proper business conduct', FINMA exercises a high degree of discretion. Likewise, so-called qualifying shareholders of a bank holding 10 per cent or more of the capital or the voting rights also are (similar to the regulations of the European Union) subject to the test of 'proper business conduct'. The Banking Act relies on the principle of strict separation between the management and the board of directors, thus aiming at a supervision of the management within the corporate organisation.
- Particularities for banks controlled by foreign shareholders — A bank domiciled in Switzerland is considered to be under foreign control if one or more foreigners directly or indirectly hold qualifying shareholdings exceeding 50 per cent of the voting rights or if foreigners exercise a controlling influence on the bank otherwise.[23] The Banking Act makes it clear that a foreign bank incorporating a subsidiary in Switzerland needs to be aware of the fact that such subsidiary is subject to the Swiss banking supervisory rules. In particular, the licence will be granted to a foreign-controlled subsidiary if the home country of the foreign bank grants reciprocal treatment to Swiss banks establishing banking operations under its jurisdiction, the foreign-controlled bank is not choosing a corporate name suggesting that the bank is controlled by Swiss persons, the foreign-controlled bank is complying with the information rules of the Swiss National Bank and, in the case of a financial conglomerate, an adequate supervision on a consolidated basis is ensured. Special rules apply if a foreign bank envisages to establish a branch or a representative office in Switzerland. In particular, FINMA will look at the supervision of such bank in its home country and the existence of reasonable internal rules defining the organisation and the scope of business of the entity in Switzerland. It also is important to note that the Banking Act, with regard to international consolidated supervision, now allows foreign supervision agencies to operate controls in loco over Swiss subsidiaries of foreign banks that are subject to their jurisdiction. The Banking Act also allows foreign-controlled banks in Switzerland to make data available to the foreign parent company without violating Swiss banking secrecy rules, to the extent that such disclosure is strictly necessary for the purposes of a consolidated supervision.

- Financial Soundness Rules/Accounting and Auditing — Swiss banks must provide for an adequate proportion between their equity and their total liabilities and their liquid assets and easily marketable assets and their short-term liabilities. In this respect, the Banking Ordinance and the Capital Adequacy Ordinance provide for detailed capital adequacy requirements which are mainly the result of negotiations within the Basle Committee on Banking Supervision, as well as for detailed accounting and consolidation rules that apply in addition to the accounting and consolidation rules set forth under Swiss corporate law. The new international rules on bank capital — known as Basel III — have been adopted into the Capital Adequacy Ordinance (and accompanying FINMA circulars) and entered into force on 1 January 2013 with transitional deadlines in line with the international framework. Moreover, enhanced capital, liquidity, and organisational requirements applicable to systemically important banks have been introduced.[24] The financial statements of a bank are subject to specific reviews by qualified auditors who are requested by law to assist FINMA in its supervisory activity. Therefore, the auditors' reports for banks are generally much more detailed than those for other corporations. However, this system may lead to potential conflicts of interest, the auditors having a duty of faithful and careful performance of the auditing mandate towards their client. Effective as of 1 September 2012, FINMA's competencies which concern the supervision of financial audits of listed banks have shifted to the Federal Audit Oversight Authority.

The ordinance to the Stock Exchange Act defines categories of securities dealers, namely:

- Underwriters (making primary offerings of securities to the public on a professional basis);
- Derivative houses (creating and offering derivatives to the public on a professional basis); and
- Broker-dealers, constituting three sub-categories, these being dealers trading on their own account, market makers, and brokers buying and selling in their own name but for the account of third parties.

24 Banking Act, arts 7 et seq.

To achieve an equal treatment among the market participants, the requirements for obtaining the securities dealer licence are similar to those for obtaining a banking licence. However, the law provides for some differences. The minimum capital requirement of securities dealers amounts to CHF 1.5 million (instead of CHF 10 million for banks).

Furthermore, securities dealers must observe the rules of conduct issued by the Swiss Banker's Association with regard to the duties of information, of due diligence, and of loyalty towards the customer. Even though the Stock Exchange Act does not specifically require strict separation between the board of directors and management, FINMA has established a practice making this separation necessary, unless the organisation is so small that a separation is not feasible.

Securities

Listing Rules and Additional Rules. The admission of securities to the trading on the SIX Swiss Exchange is governed by the Listing Rules of the SIX Swiss Exchange and its supplementary provisions. There are additional listing rules with respect to the listing of bonds, the listing of derivatives, and the listing of exchange-traded products.

In addition, there are specific rules concerning the admission of equity securities to trading in the SIX Swiss Exchange-Sponsored Segment, the admission of international bonds to trading on the SIX Swiss Exchange, and for the trading in delisted bonds on the SIX Swiss Exchange.

Regulatory Standards. On the SIX Swiss Exchange, the following regulatory standards can be distinguished (source: SIX Exchange Regulation):

Main Standard. The Main Standard is used for listing of equity securities. The respective listing requirements are set out in the Listing Rules and the Additional Rules. Foremost among these are requirements regarding the size and liquidity of issuers and stringent transparency requirements with which issuers must comply.

Domestic Standard. The Domestic Standard serves as a means for listing equity securities of companies that — due to their investor base, corporate history, capitalisation, or equity securities distribution — do not, or do not yet, qualify for listing according to another standard. In particular, this standard accommodates companies with local significance or a limited circle of investors, such as family-owned enterprises and certain international companies.[25]

Standard for Investment Companies. Equity securities issued by investment companies are listed according to their own regulatory standard. Investment companies are joint-stock companies whose main purpose is the investment in collective investment schemes and thus earning yields and/or capital gains. They do not perform a commercial activity in the literal sense. Such companies can be compared with investment funds in regards to their investment strategy, but they are organised under company law.[26]

Standard for Real Estate Companies. Real estate companies are governed by their own regulatory standard. A company qualifies as a real estate company if it continually draws at least two-thirds of its revenue from real estate-related activities, specifically from rental income, income from revaluations or sales, and from real estate services.[27]

Standard for Collective Investment Schemes. The listing of units (or shares) of domestic or foreign collective investment schemes that, pursuant to the Federal Act on Collective Investment Schemes (CISA), are subject to the supervision of FINMA is governed by articles 105 et seq. Listing Rules.

Standard for Global Depository Receipts. The standard for global depository receipts serves as a means for listing global depository receipts ("GDRs"). GDRs are tradable certificates which are issued in lieu of deposited equity securities and enable the (indirect) exercise of the membership and proprietary rights attached to such deposited equity securities (the "underlying equities").[28]

Standard for Bonds. Bonds (including conversion and warrant bonds) are listed in accordance with the Standard for Bonds.[29] In conjunction with the listing of bonds, the issuer has the option to make use of the procedure for provisional admission.

Standard for Derivatives. The Derivatives Standard serves as a means for listing derivatives.[30] Generally speaking, derivatives are financial instruments, the value of which is based on the price of the underlying securities or reference rates. Similar to bonds, derivatives may first be provisionally admitted to trading before being listed and the respective applications are submitted via Internet Based Listing ("IBL").

Standard for Exchange Traded Products. The Standard for Exchange Traded Products serves the listing of collateralised, non-interest-paying bearer debt securities (debentures), which are issued as securities and are sold and redeemed in the same structure and denominations on a continuous basis.[31] In addition, Exchange Traded Products replicate the price trend of an underlying instrument, either unchanged or leveraged (tracker certificate).

Admission and Maintenance Criteria. Depending on the regulatory standard, differing criteria with regard to admission and maintenance of listing must be

In the following descriptions of the Issuer and Securities Requirements, the focus is on the requirements for equity securities listed under the Main Standard.

National Treatment and Reciprocity. The Listing Rules do not make any substantial distinction as to whether the issuer of securities is a domestic or a foreign entity.

The foreign issuer must only provide documentary evidence that it is validly organised and existing under its own legislation and that the securities to be traded have validly been issued under the applicable law.

Issuer Requirements. The Listing Rules establish minimum requirements for the issue of securities on the SIX Swiss Exchange listed under the Main Standard. The issuer must have existed as a company for a minimum of three years and presented its annual accounts for the three complete financial years that precede the submission of the listing application.[32] This requirement is intended to show to the investors whether the course of business of the issuing company is stable or its business results are subject to large unforeseen fluctuations from year to year.

However, the SIX Swiss Exchange allows exceptions to this rule, if such exception is in the interest of the issuer or the investors and if the issuer represents that the investors have been provided with all information necessary to form a well-founded decision on the investment.

In this context, the SIX Swiss Exchange may require that additional information be included in the listing particulars. Provided the above-mentioned conditions are fulfilled, the SIX Swiss Exchange may grant an exemption from the 'Three Years Rule' to banks or securities dealers subject to the supervision of FINMA or an equivalent foreign supervisory authority.

The net equity of the issuer must amount to at least CHF 25 million. If the issuer is the parent company of a group, this requirement refers to consolidated capital resources. The SIX Swiss Exchange may establish stricter requirements for issuers of derivatives, particularly with respect to supervision by the authorities, as well as to capital resources and the evidence thereof.

If the issuer is a state, a municipality, or any other public sector body, the requirements must be fulfilled by analogy. It is possible that a third party fulfils certain listing requirements in lieu of the issuer if such third party provides a guarantee commitment with respect to the obligations associated with the securities. In such case, the listing prospectus must also contain information about the guarantor.[33]

The SIX Swiss Exchange has established special rules for certain categories of issuers. Investment companies (i.e., companies with the purpose, either exclusively or at least as their principal activity, of generating yields and/or capital gains, without pursuing active entrepreneurial activities) are exempted from complying with the requirements to have been in existence, and to present annual accounts, for at least three years.

Investment companies incorporated abroad which do not apply for an authorisation to trade under the Swiss Investment Fund Act must show that investors are able to similarly exercise their participation and property rights as under Swiss company law. Real estate companies (companies which earn at least two-thirds of their income from real estate activities, i.e., from rental or lease income or from real estate services) also are exempted from complying with the 'Three Years Rule'.

32 Listing Rules, arts 10 et seq.; Directive on Exemptions regarding Duration of Existence of the Issuer (Track Record); Directive on Financial Reporting; Directive on the Presentation of a Complex Financial History in the Listing Prospectus.

33 Directive on Guarantee Commitments.

Companies listed on the SIX Swiss Exchange under the special provisions for young companies are characterised by their purpose of opening up new markets for their products, utilising innovative technologies, or developing new products or services. These companies must produce audited financial accounts for a minimum of one full fiscal year.

The applicant must provide evidence that he himself and any of his shareholders, including members of management, who, prior to the placement of their securities, directly own more than two percent of the outstanding share capital or control more than two percent of the voting rights of the issuer, jointly and severally agree not to sell any of their equity securities within a time period of at least six months subsequent to the first trading day of the securities being placed (lock-up undertaking).

Securities Requirements. Equity securities listed under the Main Standard must be issued in accordance with the law to which the issuer is subject to and correspond to the provisions validly applicable on the issue of such securities.[34] The SIX Swiss Exchange issued provisions with respect to the applicable law and the place of jurisdiction of debt securities and derivatives to be listed on the SIX Swiss Exchange, thus taking account of the practice on international markets.

Under the provisions, debt securities and option conditions must no longer be subject to Swiss law and it is no longer required that investors have the right to sue the issuer in Switzerland with respect to this contractual relationship. However, the issuers must provide for an alternative place of jurisdiction in the country the laws of which govern the securities. The requirement of a place of jurisdiction in the country to whose law the terms of the securities are subject can be derogated in the case of securities issued by public sector issuers, provided that national law requires a domestic place of jurisdiction for a public sector issuer and the issuer waives its legal immunity in terms of due process and enforcement law in the framework of the applicable.

The fact that the debt securities are subject to foreign law and a foreign place of jurisdiction must be stated in a prominent place in the listing particulars. If these circumstances imply special legal consequences for investors that are different from usual market practice in Switzerland, they need to be clearly disclosed.

Substantive Requirements. Distribution of equity securities listed under the Main Standard among the public ('free float') must, at the latest by the time of listing, have reached a level at which proper market trading can be expected to take place.[35] An adequate level of free float is considered to have been reached if at least 25 per cent of the issuer's outstanding equity securities of the given category are in the hands of the public and the capitalisation of those securities in public ownership amounts to at least CHF 25 million. These provisions apply in the case of equity securities to be listed for the first time. The nominal value of a debt issue must amount to at least CHF 20 million. The minimum capitalisation requirement for derivatives and for exchange-traded products is CHF 1 million.

Tradability and Servicing. Securities must be tradable. Securities which are not fully paid up, as well as securities whose transfer is subject to approval or securities that are subject to sales restrictions, may be listed if their tradability is guaranteed and there is no risk to the fulfilment of a transaction.[36]

The issuer must ensure that services pertaining to dividend, interest, and capital payments, as well as all other normal administrative duties, including the receipt and handling of exercise notices for derivatives, are provided in Switzerland. The issuer may assign these duties to a third party if such party has the required professional and technical capabilities available in Switzerland. The party must be a bank, a securities dealer, or some other institution that is subject to supervision by FINMA or the Swiss National Bank.

Equity securities of an issuer incorporated in a third state which are not listed either in that state or in the state in which a majority of its shares are held may be listed only if it can be proven that the absence of a listing in such state is not due to non-fulfilment of investor protection regulations.

Convertible debt securities may be listed if the equity securities to which they relate have already been admitted to the SIX Swiss Exchange or to another regulated market or are being admitted at the same time. The SIX Swiss Exchange may waive this requirement if it is satisfied that the information necessary for investors to reach an informed assessment of the value of the underlying equity securities is accessible.

Conditions for Listing Foreign Shares. For the listing of foreign original shares, the deliverability in Switzerland of the legally certificated securities must be ensured.[37] For the safekeeping of such securities in the home country of the issuer, the following conditions need to be met to fulfil the 'deliverability' requirement:

The original shares are to be held in safekeeping at the national clearing organisation with which SIX SIS Ltd (formerly SIS Sega-Intersettle Ltd) has direct connections. If no such national clearing organisation exists in the home country, or if a direct connection with SIX SIS Ltd is impossible to be established for other reasons (primarily of a legal or technical nature), the SIX Swiss Exchange will rule on the matter on a case-by-case basis. The individual delivery of original shares to Switzerland must be ensured; the associated costs may not be prohibitively high and delivery time may not be too long.

Prospectus Requirements. The Listing Rules of the SIX Swiss Exchange contain detailed provisions regarding the contents of the prospectus to be published in connection with the issue of equity or debt securities as well as derivative products.[38] These rules have contributed to raise the information standards to the level of the most important European trading places.

In particular, the prospectus must contain information on the issuer, including its annual accounts and auditors' report, and on the guarantor (if any), on its corporate bodies and the business relations therewith (including stock option plans), on its business activity and investment policy, on its capital and the rights attached to the respective securities, on the securities to be issued, and on the persons or companies bearing responsibility for the contents of the listing prospectus. The listing prospectus may not contain inflammatory or promissory representations. Detailed annexes to the Listing Rules (prospectus schemes) show the information to be provided in the prospectus in case of issued equity, debt, derivate securities, and exchange-traded products.

The SIX Swiss Exchange has established special requirements as to the contents of the prospectus for certain types of issuers. For example, investment companies and real estate companies are obliged to include a detailed description of their investment policy.

The listing prospectus may be published in a choice of German, French, Italian, or English and printed in one or more newspapers with nation-wide circulation or made available free of charge by the applicant in printed form at the issuer's head office and at those financial institutions that are placing or selling the securities.

Moreover, the listing prospectus also may be published in electronic form on the issuer's website, in which case investors must still be sent a printed version free of charge on request.

If material changes in the information included in the listing prospectus or in any equivalent document occur between the time of publication and the lodging of such document, these changes also must be published.

Corporate Governance. The Stock Exchange Act and the Banking Act contain certain corporate governance rules (see text, above) that constitute a prerequisite for the granting of the licence.

In addition, general corporate law provides for certain non-transferable duties of the board of directors of Swiss companies, in particular the ultimate management of the company and the organisation of its financial control.[39]

On 3 March 2013, the Swiss decided in a nation-wide vote to amend the Constitution as proposed by a constitutional initiative (the so-called "Minder Initiative"). The Minder Initiative toughens the formal corporate governance regime for listed companies and establishes rules concerning say-on-pay:[40]

- The aggregate compensation of the board of directors and the senior management will be subject to the approval of the general meeting of shareholders;
- Severance payments (golden parachutes), advance payments, and similar extraordinary payments to directors or senior managers, as well as multiple contracts between directors and senior managers and group companies, will be prohibited;
- The articles of association will have to include rules for directors and senior managers on loans, retirement benefits, incentive and participations plans, and the number of positions outside the group;
- The chairman of the board, the board members, the members of the board's compensation committee, as well as the independent proxy will have to be elected annually by the AGM; and
- Companies will no longer be allowed to act as corporate proxies and will need to allow shareholders to cast their votes electronically from a remote location.

As a result of the constitutional amendment, a say-on-pay bill will have to be drafted and passed by the legislator. Before (and subject to) the enactment of the bill into law, the Federal Council has to issue an implementing ordinance so that the new constitutional principles become effective as soon as possible. End of June 2013, the Federal Council published its preliminary draft ordinance on the Minder Initiative. The definitive ordinance is expected to be issued in November 2013 and the Federal Council plans for the definitive ordinance to become effective on 1 January 2014. Assuming no extension is introduced in the definitive version, the rules on the election of the Chairman, the other members of the Board, and of the compensation committee will have to be complied with at the first ordinary general meeting in 2014. The companies' articles and organisational regulations will have to be amended within two years following the entry into force of the definitive ordinance. Proper say-on-pay regimes covering fixed compensations will have to be in place at the second general meeting following the entry into force of the definitive ordinance and say-on-pay for variable compensation will apply for the first business year beginning after the entry into force of the ordinance.

Listing Procedure. The listing procedure in respect of any kind of securities is regulated in the SIX Swiss Exchange Listing Rules.[41]

40 Federal Constitution, art 95, al 3.

41 Listing Rules, arts 42 et seq.; Directive on the Procedures for Equity Securities; Directive on the Procedures for Debt Securities; Directive on the Procedures for Exchange Traded Products.

Listing Application. A listing application must be lodged with the SIX Exchange Regulation (formerly Admission Board) of the SIX Swiss Exchange at least 20 trading days prior to the date scheduled for the listing. This application must be made by a person considered by the Regulatory Board of the SIX Swiss Exchange to be experienced (recognised representative).[42]

If the issuer does not employ a person with sufficient experience, the issuer must be represented by such an experienced person, usually a bank or a law firm. The application must include a short description of the securities, a statement of readiness to pay the listing charges, and a declaration that:

- The responsible bodies of the issuer are in agreement with the listing;
- The listing prospectus and the listing notice (only for equity securities) are complete;
- There has been no material deterioration of the issuer's financial position since the publication of the listing prospectus; and
- The issuer has taken note of the disclosure requirements and the sanctions' system under the Listing Rules and is prepared to subject itself to the procedures and decisions of the regulatory bodies of the SIX Swiss Exchange.

The issuer must sign a separate declaration of consent in which it acknowledges the SIX Swiss Exchange's legal foundations and, specifically, its arbitration clause.[43] Furthermore, the application must be accompanied by several annexes in the prescribed number of copies, namely:

- Listing prospectus;
- Listing notice (only for equity securities);
- Declaration that the printing regulations of SIX SIS Ltd have been maintained (if applicable) or a photocopy of the global certificate;
- Extract from the Commercial Register;
- Articles of incorporation; and
- Declaration by the lead manager of the issuer that the securities are sufficiently distributed among investors.

The SIX Exchange Regulation may require explanatory statements and further information. If the application complies with the Listing Rules, the SIX Swiss Exchange Regulation must approve the application.

Provisional Admission to Trading. Debt securities and derivatives (but not shares) intended for listing may be admitted provisionally to trading. In its application, the issuer must describe the securities and provide an assurance that all listing conditions have been fulfilled, and that a listing application will follow.

43 Listing Rules, art 45 (4); Additional Rules for the Listing of Bonds, art 16 (3); Additional Rules for the Listing of Derivatives, art 23 (3).

If the application for the listing is not lodged within two months, the admission to the provisional trading automatically lapses. Securities admitted provisionally are traded in a separate segment.

Foreign Issuers. For equity securities of foreign issuers which are traded on an official stock exchange with equivalent listing provisions in the home country, the Regulatory Board of the SIX Swiss Exchange has issued in a special directive general exemptions from particular obligations contained in the Listing Rules.[44] Foreign issuers may choose between primary and secondary listings.

Regular, Periodic, and Ad Hoc Disclosure

Regular Reporting Obligations

The stock-exchange laws provide for regular reporting obligations within the context of maintaining a listing.[45] These reporting obligations are intended to ensure that the technical and administrative information on listed securities are made available by the issuer to the SIX Swiss Exchange and the market participants in a timely manner and suitable form.

The SIX Swiss Exchange has issued a circular, which sets out the reporting requirements for equity and debt securities as well as collective investment schemes, in order to make the technical and administrative work involved with the reporting requirements easier for issuers.[46] Since 2009, the SIX Swiss Exchange operates a reporting platform called CONNEXOR. Since 1 April 2013, issuers with primarily listed equity securities are obliged to use CONNEXOR reporting.

Periodic Disclosure

Financial Statements and Accounting Principles. Under Swiss corporate law, listed companies must publish their annual report, including business report and annual financial statements, in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles. If the company is listed on the SIX Swiss Exchange, these documents also must be filed with the SIX Swiss Exchange within four months after the end of every financial year.

In addition, the annual report must be made available in electronic form on the website of the issuer for five years after its publication. Companies listed on the SIX Swiss Exchange must observe IFRS, United States GAAP, or other internationally recognised accounting standards or Swiss GAAP FER for the Domestic Standard (for smaller Swiss companies) and for real estate companies. As a consequence of globalisation of the capital markets, Swiss public companies are more and more applying IFRS or even United States GAAP.

46 Circular Number 1 — Reporting Obligations regarding the Maintenance of Listing.

With regard to the financial reporting of issuers listed on the SIX Swiss Exchange, the SIX Exchange Regulation is responsible for monitoring compliance with the Listing Rules and the recognised accounting standards.[47]

Corporate Governance Report. The SIX Swiss Exchange has issued a directive on corporate governance, which requires all issuers whose equity securities are listed on the SIX Swiss Exchange to disclose important information on their board and senior management (or to give substantial reasons why this information is not disclosed) in a separate section of the annual report.[48]

While maintaining decision-making capability and efficiency at the highest level of a company, these principles are intended to guarantee transparency and a healthy balance of management and control. The Directive on Corporate Governance itself establishes the basic principles.

Details on what information is to be disclosed are indicated in the annex to the directive. The SIX Swiss Exchange has provided guidance to the issuers as to the disclosure requirements under the Directive on Corporate Governance in a commentary.

Swiss public companies are required to disclose detailed information on the compensation of the members of the board and senior management and their shareholdings as well as loans received in the notes to the financial statements.[49] Foreign companies listed on the SIX Swiss Exchange have to disclose information on compensation in the Corporate Governance Report instead.

Interim Statements. Under the SIX Swiss Exchange Listing Rules, issuers of listed equity securities are further obliged to publish an interim financial report.[50] The interim financial report, which needs to be audited, must cover a time frame of six months or less.

The same accounting principles that have been used in the annual financial statement are to be applied in the interim financial report. However, there is no requirement for the interim financial report to be audited.

The interim report must be published within three months after the end of the relevant period and filed with the SIX Swiss Exchange no later than its publication and must be made available in electronic form on the website of the issuer for five years after its publication.

Special Companies. In their semi-annual and annual financial statements, real estate and investment companies must fulfil disclosure requirements that extend beyond the stipulations of the given accounting standard. In justified cases, SIX Swiss Exchange may require the delivery of an interim report at shorter intervals.

The interim report of investment companies comprises the composition of and changes in investments and in current value, as well as supplementary notes (e.g., events of special significance). In addition, investment companies must publish the net asset value of their securities at regular intervals.

Foreign Issuers. The periodic reporting obligations under the SIX Swiss Exchange Listing Rules are not limited to issuers established in Switzerland, but apply to all issuers whose securities are listed on the SIX Swiss Exchange, regardless of their legal incorporation (not so for corporate law disclosure requirements). An exception only exists for issuers whose equity securities are admitted exclusively on the basis of a secondary listing on the SIX Swiss Exchange.

With respect to such secondary listings, the aim is to ensure that all information that an issuer publishes in his home country also is made available to the SIX Swiss Exchange and market participants in Switzerland.

When filing the listing application, the introducing bank must accept the responsibility to forward such information accordingly and provide evidence that the disclosure requirements of the primary stock exchange are substantially equal to those of the SIX Swiss Exchange Listing Rules. In addition, the SIX Swiss Exchange has concluded agreements with individual foreign stock exchanges having the purpose of information exchange.

Ad Hoc Publicity

Price-Sensitive Facts. The SIX Swiss Exchange Listing Rules state an obligation for the issuer to inform the market of any price-sensitive facts which have arisen in its sphere of activity and are not of public knowledge.[51] Price-sensitive facts are facts that, due to their considerable effect on the issuer's assets and liabilities or financial position or on the general course of business, potentially result in substantial movements in the price of the securities.

This disclosure duty was introduced essentially to minimise insider trading and ensure all market participants an equal treatment to the greatest extent possible. Hence, the issuer must see to it that all market participants are informed in the same manner and at the same time. The issuer should structure the contents of the notification in such way that the statement can be instantly assessed by the average market player with regard to the price-sensitive fact.

The SIX Swiss Exchange has issued a directive and a detailed guideline as to the handling of the ad hoc publicity.[52] However, the SIX Swiss Exchange deliberately refrains from defining price sensitivity in percentage terms. The market parameters for the security in question, as well as the investors' expectations and level of information, are decisive factors in determining whether an event has a potential substantial price impact.

Examples of price-sensitive facts are changes in structure (such as mergers, substantial acquisition, and far-reaching organisations), changes in share capital, material changes in earnings situations ('profit warning' in so far as certain profit expectations were announced by the issuer), changes in the course of business (cessation of a main sphere of business, entry into a strategic alliance, or a major case of product liability), and changes in the board and senior management.

Time of Disclosure. The issuer must provide information without delay as soon as it has knowledge of the main points of the price-sensitive facts in question. However, in certain exceptional cases, it may postpone the disclosure of such information if the new facts are based on a plan or decision of the issuer, and its dissemination could negatively affect the legitimate interests of the issuer. In such case, the issuer must guarantee the complete confidentiality of such facts.

Whenever possible, ad hoc disclosures have to be made outside of the ordinary trading hours and 90 minutes before trading commences at the latest. If that is not possible and an intraday announcement is necessary, for example, because of a leak, the disclosure office of the SIX Swiss Exchange has to be notified, which will decide whether to stop trading until the information has disseminated.

The SIX Swiss Exchange may require the issuer to disclose specific information. Should the issuer fail to comply with this requirement, the SIX Swiss Exchange may itself publish such information after having heard the issuer.

Management Transactions. The rules of the SIX Swiss Exchange require the disclosure of management transactions, which imposes on issuers to report transactions concluded by members of their board of directors and executive committee in the given company's equity securities, convertible and purchase rights on the company's shares, and financial instruments whose price is materially dependent on the company's own equity securities.[53]

Members of the board of directors and executive committee must report to their issuing company all transactions that fall within the scope of these regulations within two trading days.

The issuer must submit to the SIX Exchange Regulation through the electronic reporting platform within three further trading days a report that discloses, among other things, the name and function of the individual (i.e., executive member of the board of directors, member of the executive committee, or non-executive member of the board). The SIX Exchange Regulation will then publish the report on its website without the individual's name, however, with an indication of the given individual's function.

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

Offering of Shares. Basically, an offering can be a primary offering or a secondary offering. Primary offerings involve the creation and distribution of newly issued shares, whereas secondary offerings involve the sale of existing shares.

Unless the shares are placed among a determined and small circle of investors (private placement), a prospectus must be made available to the investors in either event. Often, the creation of new shares and their distribution to the public is accompanied by the selling of already existing shares in the market.

The law does not specifically define the concept of private placement. However, under the Banking Act and the Collective Investment Schemes Act, the prevailing view is that offerings made to a maximum of 20 persons is deemed to qualify as a private offering. If more than 20 persons are approached in the context of a promotional action, the offering is likely to be deemed public.[54]

In the context of a public offering outside of the SIX Swiss Exchange, a prospectus according to article 652a of the Code of Obligations must be issued if the new shares are issued and offered publicly. However, the information to be delivered in this prospectus is quite limited (contents of the registration in the commercial register, existing amount and structure of the capital stock, provisions in the articles of incorporation concerning an authorised or a conditional increase of the capital, number of benefits certificates and specification of the rights associated therewith, the last annual financial statements, consolidated financial statements, together with a report of the auditors, dividends paid within the last five years or since the date of incorporation, and resolution concerning the issuance of new shares). If the shares are offered on the SIX Swiss Exchange, the listing and publicity requirements of the Listing Rules and the applicable prospectus schemes apply.[55]

Underwriting Agreement. Usually, the offering of shares involves investment banks subscribing securities on a firm commitment basis, thus assuming the risk of the distribution. The main point to be agreed in the underwriting agreement between the issuer (or selling shareholder) and the investment banks is the offering price, which is not determined until just before the offering takes place since it must be in relation to the current market conditions.

54 Under the draft amendment of the Swiss stock corporation law, which, as of the time of writing, is still pending in Parliament, a prospectus would not be required if the promotional action is solely directed at "qualified investors" as defined pursuant to the Collective Investment Schemes Act (cf. Draft-Code of Obligations, art 652a, al 4).

55 Listing Rules, arts 27 et seq.; Prospectus Scheme A – Equity Securities.

Therefore, the underwriting agreement is usually finalised and signed on the day before the effective date of the offering. Until this point, the relationship between the parties is usually governed by a letter of intent or engagement letter that is for the most part a non-binding agreement. However, parties have started to sometimes attach a standard underwriting agreement to the engagement letter according to which the final agreement will substantially be in line with the attachment.

Deposit and Subscription Agreement. In the event of a primary offering of Swiss shares, the entering into a nominal amount deposit and subscription agreement has become customary. This agreement ensures that the new shares are duly issued under Swiss law and covers the following topics:

- Confirmation that the shareholders' meeting has resolved or will resolve the increase of the share capital by issuing a certain number of shares and that the statutory pre-emption rights have been or will be waived;
- Undertaking of the co-ordinators of the bankers' syndicate to subscribe the new shares and to deposit an amount equivalent to the nominal value of the shares in a blocked bank account;
- Undertaking by the company to procure the registration of the capital increase with the commercial register;
- Undertaking of the co-ordinators to sell the newly created shares in a public offering subject to the conditions of the underwriting agreement; and
- Exit clause for the banks in case the underwriting agreement is not signed or is terminated prior to the closing date.

Offering of Debts Securities. Public offerings of bonds require publication of a prospectus in accordance with article 1156 of the Code of Obligations. If the bonds are listed, additional information must be provided in the listing prospectus as required by the Listing Rules and the applicable prospectus schemes.[56] Notes are usually medium-term papers with a maturity of five to seven years and privately placed, usually with clients of the syndicate banks.

In recent years, medium-term notes programmes have become quite common, allowing an issuer to issue medium-term papers with maturity of up to five years in several tranches and on several stock exchanges. Unless the Listing Rules of the SIX Swiss Exchange apply, the issue and the placement of notes is regulated by Convention XIX of the Swiss Bankers' Association, which provides for particular prospectus information.

Likewise, the offering of bonds and notes are usually purchased by a syndicate of banks that will place them either on the stock exchange or in a closed circle of investors, thus bearing the risk of distribution. The terms of the bonds are quite standard, and they include:

- Form, denomination, printing, and reopening;

56 Listing Rules, arts 27 et seq.; Prospectus Scheme E – Bonds.

- Interest;
- Redemption;
- Transfer of funds by the issuer;
- Taxation;
- Status (pari passu) and negative pledge;
- Repayment in events of default;
- Consolidation, merger, or sale of assets;
- Replacement of debtor;
- Prescription;
- Listing; and
- Sales restrictions.

According to the Additional Rules for the Listing of Bonds and the Additional Rules for the Listing of Derivatives of the SIX Swiss Exchange, it is no longer required that debt securities and derivatives be governed by Swiss law to qualify for the listing on the SIX Swiss Exchange. Debt securities and derivatives may now be subject to the governing law of any Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) country as well as other legal systems recognised by the Regulatory Board of the SIX Swiss Exchange.

Furthermore, it is no longer required that investors must be able to enforce their rights under the debt securities or derivatives in Switzerland. Issuers and the holders of the securities can agree to submit to the courts of any jurisdiction, provided that a place of jurisdiction must be available in the country the laws of which govern the securities. However, the provisions of the SIX Swiss Exchange allow an exemption from this rule with regard to debt securities and derivatives issued by an issuer of the public sector if local law requires a domestic place of jurisdiction for a public sector issuer and the issuer waives its legal immunity in terms of due process and enforcement law in the framework of the applicable legislation.

Offering of Derivatives. Derivative instruments are traded either on EUREX if they are standardised or on Scoach in case of warrants and structured products or over-the-counter market if they are customised. Derivatives may be listed on the SIX Swiss Exchange, provided the issuer is a licensed Swiss bank subject to the Federal Banking Act, a licensed Swiss securities dealer subject to the Stock Exchange Act, or the issuer is subject to a comparable foreign supervision.

The same applies to derivative securities entitling to purchase shares or bonds issued by the issuer of such derivatives. Even though the contents and the documentation of over-the-counter derivatives securities may vary from product to product, the use of international market standards in Switzerland has become more and more common; in particular, the ISDA Master Agreements and the Swiss Master Agreement, together with their respective schedules, are increasingly popular. The main purpose of these agreements is to reduce capital adequacy requirements for the banks, on the one hand, and the counterpart risks, on the other hand, by stating far-reaching netting clauses.

With respect to the enforceability of such clauses in the event of a bankruptcy, the Federal Act on Debt Enforcement and Bankruptcy now provides for automatic termination of all transactions involving financial futures, swaps, and options, which can be valued based on market or stock exchange prices as at the time of the opening of the bankruptcy, thus preventing any 'cherry-picking' by the bankruptcy administration in enforcing individual rights of the bankrupt debtor. However, since the aforementioned Master Agreements are generally subject to English or New York law, the enforceability of their clauses, in particular their netting clauses, under Swiss law must always be checked.

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Holdings

In General. The Stock Exchange Act provides in its articles 20 and 21 for the obligation to have substantial holdings disclosed by their owners and thereafter by the concerned legal entity. The disclosure obligation applies to Swiss companies having at least one class of equity securities listed on a stock exchange in Switzerland and, pursuant to a recent amendment, to companies not domiciled in Switzerland whose equity securities are mainly listed in Switzerland.[57] Further (partial) disclosure rules also exist in other laws. Article 663c of the Code of Obligations requires Swiss corporations having their shares listed on a stock exchange to disclose in the notes to the balance sheets the significant shareholders (owning more than five per cent equity in the corporation), provided the management knows or ought to know of such shareholders; the effects of this provision, however, are limited due to many disadvantages, namely:

- It is difficult to know the shareholders in case of bearer shares;
- The corporation is charged with an inquiry duty not related to company matters; and
- The balance sheets are issued only once a year, hence not providing enough transparency for the capital market.

Furthermore, article 663b of the Code of Obligations provides for disclosure of the material participations in other companies. The Collective Investment Schemes Act and the Banking Act contain similar provisions as to the disclosure of significant shareholders.

Shareholder Duties. Shareholders must report the acquisition and/or disposal of equity participations in a listed legal entity if certain thresholds are met.[58] Disclosure is required if a title owner or a group of title owners acquires or disposes, respectively, of equity participations and thereby reaches, exceeds, or falls below the limits of 3 per cent, 5 per cent, 10 per cent, 15 per cent, 20 per cent, 25 per cent, 33-1/3 per cent, 50 per cent, or 66-2/3 per cent of the voting rights of the concerned company.

57 Pursuant to article 53b, al 1, of the Stock Exchange Ordinance, the equity securities of a company not domiciled in Switzerland are mainly listed in Switzerland when the company must fulfil at least the same duties and maintenance of a listing on a stock exchange in Switzerland as a company domiciled in Switzerland. The list of companies not domiciled in Switzerland that have their main listing on the SIX Swiss Exchange is available at www.six-exchange-regulation.com/obligations/disclosure/foreign_companies_en.html.

Some thresholds correspond to specific minority rights (in particular, 10 per cent of capital stock provide the right to call up a shareholders' meeting, the right to initiate a special audit, and the right to claim for dissolution of the company) or majority quorums respectively (66-2/3 per cent of the votes and absolute majority of the par value present at the shareholders' meeting allow to take important decisions as described in article 704 of the Code of Obligations) under the Swiss stock corporation law. The term 'acquisition and disposal' includes all types of equity transfers including share exchanges, donations, inheritances, conversions of shares, and usufructuary rights. The obligation to notify arises at the time when the respective contract is concluded.

The disclosure obligation concerns equity participations; since most legal entities listed on the SIX Swiss Exchange are stock corporations, in practice all substantial share transactions must be disclosed. The key element is the voting right, not the capital amount; therefore, all transactions that have the effect of conferring the voting right relating to equity securities (e.g., in the business of securities lending and repurchase agreements) are subject to the disclosure obligation.

Furthermore, after long discussions, the legislator has decided that the acquisition and disposal of equity derivatives, such as call options and conversion rights, regardless of whether the terms of the derivatives give the right of physical delivery of the underlying equity securities or allow for cash settlement, are subject to the disclosure obligation. Financial instruments, other than those mentioned, must also be reported if their structure permits an entitled person to acquire equity securities, if these are acquired, sold, or granted (written) in respect to a public takeover offer.

The disclosure obligation in case of an acquisition of equity securities for the own account is obvious. However, the financing of an indirect acquisition also must be reported, meaning that a beneficial owner of equity securities remains as fully responsible for the notification as the formal owner. For example, in the framework of a fiduciary arrangement, the principal (beneficial owner) and the trustee (formal owner) must disclose if any of them exceeds any relevant threshold. Special rules apply in respect of investment funds, trusts, and pension funds: Their management is responsible to deliver the notification since only such body has a proper control of the investments.

Special disclosure events are given if a company increases, restructures, or reduces its capital, if a company buys or sells its own equity securities, and if in-house funds of financial intermediaries buy or sell equity securities.

Recently, the ordinance specifying the disclosure requirements was partially amended. The changes focused on easing the requirements for foreign collective investment schemes to take advantage of the exception regarding the obligation to consolidate with respect to the disclosure requirements.[59] Furthermore, exemptions from the disclosure obligation have been broadened to include circumstances where threshold values are exactly reached.[60]

Organised Groups. Organised groups of equity securities holders and such holders acting in concert have the privilege of complying with the disclosure obligation as a whole.[61]

The privilege applies to groups of companies and companies under common control, to equity securities holders who establish or terminate agreements relating to the exercise of voting rights, and/or to relationships to acquire or dispose of equity securities.

In specific cases, however, it might be debatable whether an 'agreement' or only a loose (not directly discussed) understanding between titleholders exists; the supervisory authority has established some guidelines in the meantime.

The group must report the grand total of its title holdings, the identity of its members, the nature of the arrangement, and the representation of the group. Title transactions within the group, however, are not subject to the disclosure obligation.

Procedural Aspects. A holder of equity securities subject to a disclosure obligation must report the relevant transaction, both to the concerned company and to the stock exchange on which the securities are listed. The details which need to be mentioned in the specific notice are specifically listed in the ordinance to the Stock Exchange Act; special forms for various situations are available on the SIX Swiss Exchange website.

The SIX Swiss Exchange has issued compliance procedures that must be observed by the concerned holders of equity securities. In case of doubt about the scope and contents of the disclosure obligation in respect of a specific transaction, the possibility exists to obtain a preliminary ruling from the competent supervisory authority of the stock exchange that will be given according to a special ordinance.

In special cases, the supervisory authority of the stock exchange also may exempt a holder of equity securities from a reporting requirement. An important reason for such an exemption is given if the relevant threshold is only exceeded for a short time, if the acquirer has no intention to exercise the voting rights of the concerned company, if a securities dealer is building a trading position for several customers, or if the transfer of the equity securities is subject to a condition precedent. To obtain the exemption, the application must be made to the stock exchange in good time, before carrying out the transaction in question.

61 Stock Exchange Act, art 20, al 3.

Company Duties. The company must publish any information it receives relating to changes in the ownership of its voting rights.[62] The details about timing (usually two business days), form, and relevant media are regulated in the ordinance to the Stock Exchange Act. Publication takes place via the electronic publication platform operated by the Disclosure Office and can be accessed on the website of the Disclosure Office.

Article 21 of the Stock Exchange Act refers to the information received by the company. Therefore, the question arises of how the company should react if no information is given by the titleholder, but the fact of having exceeded a threshold has become known to the company otherwise. The legal doctrine is of the opinion that a company is not obliged to inquire into the details of title holdings; however, the company should take up the matter if it has good reasons to assume that a notification must be made.

Insider Trading and Price Manipulation

New Market Abuse Regime. As part of a significant overhaul of the Stock Exchange Act, the regulation of the offences of insider trading and price manipulation has been transferred from the Swiss Criminal Code to the Stock Exchange Act. Both offences will henceforth be prosecuted by the Office of the Attorney General of Switzerland and judged by the Swiss Federal Criminal Court, and no longer by cantonal prosecution authorities.

The new rules in the revised Stock Exchange Act, which came into force on 1 May 2013, provide standards in both criminal and administrative law that sanction market abuse on a broad basis and take account of international standards. The Stock Exchange Act first addresses the administrative law sanctions to be imposed on enterprises and then the criminal law sanctions applied on individuals.

Criminal Law Provisions. The Stock Exchange Act, as amended, has considerably broadened the scope of the insider trading prohibition as it now encompasses the liability of every individual person. It includes several categories of insiders: 1) a body or a member of a managing or supervisory body of an issuer or of a company controlling or controlled by the respective body, or a person who due to his or her holding or activity has legitimate access to insider information (primary insider); 2) whosoever receives insider information disclosed to them by a primary insider or acquired through a crime or a misdemeanour (secondary insider); and 3) whosoever accidentally receives insider information (fortuitous insider). All three groups of insiders are liable if they gain a pecuniary advantage for themselves or for others by exploiting insider information to acquire or sell securities or to use financial instruments derived from such securities. Primary insiders are moreover sanctioned if they gain a pecuniary advantage for themselves or for others by disclosing insider information to others or by exploiting it to recommend to others to acquire or sell securities or to use financial instruments derived from such securities.[63] In this context, insider information means information the publication of which may materially affect the price of securities or financial instruments.

The insider trading prohibition is completed by a further provision which penalises whosoever materially influences the price of securities with the intention of gaining a pecuniary advantage for him- or herself if he or she disseminates false or misleading information contrary their better knowledge as well as effects purchases and sales of such securities directly or indirectly for the benefit of the same person or persons connected for this purpose.[64]

Territorial Link. Both criminal law provisions require that the affected securities are securities admitted to trading on a stock exchange or an institution which is similar to an exchange in Switzerland. This fact corresponds to the intention of the legislator to protect the efficiency and transparency of domestic capital markets.

Swiss criminal law is basically applicable to persons committing a criminal offence in Switzerland. A criminal offence is deemed to have been committed at the place where it has been executed and where the result of the execution has taken place ('Ubiquity Rule'). With regard to the above-mentioned offences, Swiss criminal law will therefore apply if the person committing the offence is acting in Switzerland or if the unjustified gain is realised in Switzerland. If the offender acts from abroad but through an agent in Switzerland (generally, a bank or other securities dealer), the rules of the Swiss criminal law provisions will apply, regardless of whether the agent acted with knowledge of the offence or not.

Several investigations for suspected insider trading had been commenced under the insider trading prohibition pursuant to the Swiss Criminal Code. However, practically none of them resulted in a criminal conviction. The major part of the court decisions concerned cases of international legal assistance requests originating from the United States, France, Germany, and other countries in or outside of Europe, where it had to be decided whether the alleged offence was punishable under Swiss law.

Administrative Law Provisions. The revised Stock Exchange Act has newly introduced into Swiss administrative law specific statutory provisions against market abuse. These new provisions prohibit all market participants (including legal entities) from engaging in insider trading and market manipulation.[65] Prior to this, FINMA and its predecessor, the Federal Banking Commission, could only enforce market conduct rules against supervised market participants. Moreover, market abuse is more broadly defined in this context than under the criminal law provisions.

63 Stock Exchange Act, art 40.
64 Stock Exchange Act, art 40a.
65 Stock Exchange Act, arts 33e and 33f; FINMA is implementing these new provisions as part of its full revision of Circular 08/38 on "Market conduct rules".

Because of the wide scope of application of the new administrative law provisions on market abuse, the revised Stock Exchange Act and its executing Ordinance have set out conduct, which, albeit captured by the new provisions, is allowed in terms of "safe harbours".[66] These "safe harbours", provided that certain preconditions are satisfied, include: repurchase programs for a company's own securities; securities transactions for the purposes of price management and price stabilisation; securities transactions in preparation of a public takeover offer; securities transactions effected by public bodies in connection with their public mandate; and a special legal status on the part of the recipient of the information.

Public Takeover Bids

In General. The legal provisions related to tender offers in Switzerland are contained in articles 22–33d of the Stock Exchange Act.

The law only provides for some (not always coherent) general principles; major parts of the legal sources are contained in ordinances.[67] Furthermore, the case law and circulars of the Takeover Board are of utmost importance.[68]

Territorial Application. The provisions on tender offers apply in respect of equity securities of Swiss companies of which at least one class of equity securities is listed on a Swiss exchange and, pursuant to a recent amendment, of companies not domiciled in Switzerland whose equity securities are mainly listed in Switzerland.[69]

The Stock Exchange Act does not contain any provisions as to the domicile and the nationality of the offeror (bidder); consequently, these elements are not of importance for tender offers in Switzerland. Certain formalities that usually need to be fulfilled (e.g., annual balance sheets) may even be waived by the Takeover Board if the foreign law of the offeror's incorporation place does not know a respective requirement.

Description of Tender Offer. The Stock Exchange Act covers any kind of public tender offers including share buy-backs (public offers by a company to repurchase its own equity securities), except if the transaction does not exceed two per cent of the equity capital or voting rights of the company and the titleholders are treated equally.[70]

The Stock Exchange Act does not exempt restructurings from the scope of application; however, the Takeover Board may release an exemption recommendation for good reasons subject to the given individual circumstances.

70 TOB Circular Number 1: Buyback programmes.

Substantive and Procedural Requirements of Tender Offer. An offeror is obliged to extend equal treatment to all holders of equity securities of the same class.[71] If the tender offer is made for several classes of equity securities, the equal treatment principle generally applies (i.e., the tender offer must be extended to all classes of listed equity securities of the target company), but not to unquoted (private) classes of equity securities.

Furthermore, the best price rule requires from the offeror that the highest price paid from the date of the pre-announcement of the tender offer to any titleholder is offered to all titleholders. The Takeover Board even extends this rule to the six months following the close of the offering period; however, this practice has caused critical remarks in the legal doctrine.

The offer price of a mandatory offer must equal or exceed the stock market value of the target — that is, the volume-weighted average share price of exchange-based transactions over the last 60 trading days prior to the pre-announcement or publication of the offer[72] — and may not differ from the highest price paid by the bidder for equity securities in the target during the 12 months preceding the pre-announcement or publication of the offer (minimum price rule).[73]

Where a voluntary tender offer is launched — that is, where the bidder launches a tender offer before the relevant threshold triggering a mandatory offer has been reached or exceeded — the minimum price rule stated above must nevertheless be complied with, to the extent that the offer is made for a number of equity securities the acquisition of which would reach the applicable threshold triggering a mandatory offer.[74]

The offeror may publish a prior announcement before the publication of an offer prospectus. The prior announcement has to contain the substance of the subsequent tender offer, including particulars of the offeror and of the target company, the equity securities at stake, the offering price, the tentative time table of the tender offer, and its conditions, if any. The prior announcement must be published in at least two Swiss newspapers and in at least two principal electronic media.

The details of the tender offer must be published in a prospectus that is correct and complete containing all relevant information suitable and necessary for the investors to appropriately evaluate the tender offer.[75] The exact contents of the prospectus are described in the ordinance to the Stock Exchange Act; specifically, information on the offeror, the object of the tender offer, the target company, the publication of the announcement, the examination of the review body (auditor), and the filing with the Takeover Board must be provided. Furthermore, the offeror must declare that it is not in possession of information not being available to a potential competing offeror; this statement causes problems if a due diligence review has been done. In such situation, the Takeover Board requests from the target company that a competing offeror should be granted with the possibility to exercise a similar due diligence review.

Instead of the complete offer prospectus, the offeror may arrange for notice of the offer to be published in at least two Swiss newspapers, provided it contains the information as set out in the Takeover Ordinance, such as the exact internet address at which the complete offer prospectus is available as well as information as to where the prospectus may be obtained free of charge.

If the offeror has a legitimate interest, the offer may be made subject to conditions; however, only conditions may be imposed in the offering documentation that cannot be influenced to a significant extent by the offeror. The usual conditions concern the entry of the offeror as titleholder in the stock ledger and the availability of regulatory approvals (competition authority, financial market supervisory authority). If the offeror is publishing a revised offer, the terms must improve the overall position of the titleholders of the target company.

To achieve full transparency, certain holders of equity securities must report all acquisitions and sales of equity securities in the target company, namely the offeror, parties acting in concert with the offeror, the offeree company, and significant shareholders of the target company who have asserted their party status.[76]

The parties to the proceedings are obliged to publish all transactions in equity securities and related instruments of the target company (and of any securities offered in exchange) on a daily basis, allowing the market participants to closely follow their investments.

Moreover, after the announcement of the tender offer, the offeror and its allied parties are restricted from buying equity securities from the target company at a premium (principle of equal treatment; best price rule).

After the publication of a tender offer, a mandatory 'cooling period' applies which shall normally last 10 exchange trading days. This allows the board of directors of the target company to prepare a report to its titleholders and the Takeover Board to examine the offer and to render a decision. The tender must be open during an offer period of not less than 20 and no more than 40 exchange trading days, subject to a special permission by the Takeover Board to the contrary.

At the end of the initial offer period, the offeror must determine and the review body must confirm the preliminary result of the offer. Thereafter, whether conditions of the offer do or do not exist, the offeror is obliged to extend the offer period for another 10 exchange trading days, thereby giving the holders of equity securities of the target company an additional possibility to tender the titles.

76 Stock Exchange Act, art 31; Takeover Ordinance, arts 38 et seq.

In case of competing offers, it is imperative that the holders of the equity securities of the target company are able to choose freely among them and to withdraw from an already given acceptance of a previous tender offer. Therefore, any competing offer must be published not later than the last exchange trading day of the initial offer period. The competing offer must be open for acceptance for as long as the initial offer but not less than 10 exchange trading days, and the initial offer is extended accordingly to synchronise both offers.

If the competing offer expires after the initial offer, the period of the initial offer is automatically extended until the expiry date of the competing offer. In case of a competing offer, the target company's shareholders may revoke their acceptance of the initial offer at any time up to its expiry.

Once a competing offer is made, the initial offeror may not revoke the initial tender offer. However, the initial tender offer may be revised. If several competing offers are made, the target company is obliged to grant equal treatment to all offerors.

A tender offer may be prohibited, by court order or administrative decree, if the terms of the offer or the conduct of any party involved in the offer, including the target company, violate applicable laws. Under these circumstances, holders of equity securities have the right to withdraw their acceptances of the tender offer.[77]

Duties of Target Company. The board of directors of the target company is obliged to issue a report on the tender offer containing all information necessary to allow shareholders to make an informed decision.[78] The report also should contain information about intentions of significant holders of equity securities of the target company and about potential conflicts of interest involving board members and directors.

This topic is very sensitive in practice. If the board is emphasising negative aspects, it is likely that, following a successful tender offer, the members of the board will be immediately replaced; if the board of directors is overestimating the positive aspects, the holders of the equity securities may be misled.

Furthermore, the target company must treat all competing offerors equally. According to the Takeover Board, this principle particularly applies in respect of the possibility of all competing offerors to execute a due diligence review in respect of the non-public (and not specifically protected) information of the target company. However, the report of the board of directors can differentiate in the evaluation of the tender offers, meaning that a better recommendation of an offer, submitted by a 'white knight' offeror, is possible.

The board of directors of the target company is restricted in its ability to introduce defensive measures against tender offers.[79] In particular, from the moment the offer is announced until the publication of the results, the target company may not engage in any transactions that would alter, to a significant extent, the assets or the liabilities of the company.

77 Stock Exchange Act, art 26.
78 Stock Exchange Act, art 29, al 1.
79 Stock Exchange Act, art 29, al 2.

The main examples in practice are the (conditional) sale of important parts of the business (approach of 'scorched earth', 'crown jewel defence', or 'lock-up agreements'), the conclusion of special agreements in favour of management and directors ('golden parachutes'), the conditional increase of the capital with a unilateral allocation of subscription rights ('poison pills'), and the issuance of new shares or convertible debts with exclusion of subscription rights of existing title holders.

Within the legal framework, the 'pac-man' defence and the 'white knight' defence are possible. Notwithstanding the intensive discussion, these legal provisions have not yet gained a substantial practical importance, with the exception of some preventive effects. After the tender offer has been launched, only the shareholders' meeting of the target company may decide on any relevant defensive measures.

Mandatory Offer Obligation. The most-debated provision of the Stock Exchange Act is the so-called mandatory offer obligation: Holders of equity securities with a large investment in a company (33-1/3 per cent or 49 per cent) are legally forced to make an offer to the remaining holders of equity securities.[80] This obligation could make the acquisition of a substantial part of a company expensive since the smaller title holders also have the possibility to sell their investments.

Nevertheless, a Swiss company may dispose of the obligation to be submitted to the mandatory offer obligation in its articles of association (so-called opting-out). An opting-out may be resolved before or after the equity securities of the company are listed on a Swiss stock exchange.[81] Before the listing, a resolution in the meeting of the title holders must be passed by absolute majority. After the listing of the equity securities, such a resolution may not be illegitimately disadvantageous to the existing rights of the title holders.[82]

The mandatory offer obligation is triggered whenever a holder of equity securities or an allied group of holders directly or indirectly acquires equity securities exceeding the threshold of 33-1/3 per cent of the voting rights of the target company.

This relevant threshold may be raised by a resolution of the target company's holders of equity securities to the higher threshold of 49 per cent (so-called 'opting-up'). The mandatory offer obligation is triggered once a transaction in relevant equity securities brings the owner (and subsequent offeror) to the applicable threshold.

The Stock Exchange Act and its ordinances contain a number of exemptions from the mandatory offer obligation, such as the acquisition of voting rights as a result of a donation, of a foreclosure sale, or of a corporate reorganisation. Moreover, the Takeover Board or FINMA, respectively, may grant a discretionary exemption or whitewash from the mandatory offer obligation if this appears to be justified under the given circumstances.

80 Stock Exchange Act, art 32.
81 Stock Exchange Act, art 22, al 2, and 3.
82 Code of Obligations, art 706.

The offeror is obliged to buy all outstanding equity securities of the target company at no less than the stock exchange price. This price is designed as the volume-weighted average price on a Swiss stock exchange for the 60 exchange trading days before the publication of the offer or the advance announcement, as the case may be.

Additionally, if the offeror has purchased equity securities prior to the tender offer, the minimum price for the tendered equity securities must be the higher of the stock exchange price or of the highest price paid by the offeror for equity securities of the target company in the 12 months preceding the announcement of the offer.[83]

The price for the tendered equity securities may vary if the target company has issued several classes of equity securities. Under certain specific circumstances, exceptions from the minimum price rule may apply. The mandatory offer must be published within two months after the owner of equity securities (and subsequent offeror) has crossed the relevant threshold except if the Takeover Board extends this time period for important cause. Basically, the same procedural rules apply in a voluntary tender offer.

An offeror may request a squeeze out (being a buy-out right) of the remaining holders of equity securities if, after the tender offer, it holds more than 98 per cent of the voting rights of the target company, including shares already held prior to the tender offer.[84] The cancellation of equity securities is effected by court order.

Approaches to Jurisdictional Conflicts

Conflicts of Jurisdiction

With the enactment of the revised Stock Exchange Act, several new provisions relating to conflicts of jurisdiction have been introduced resolving, to some extent, the questions that arise when companies are neither subject to Swiss nor to foreign rules (negative conflicts of jurisdiction) or when companies are subject to the laws of both jurisdictions at the same time (positive conflicts of jurisdiction).

First, according to the wording of the newly revised Stock Exchange Act, the provisions of disclosure of substantial acquisition and sale of participations as well as the takeover rules shall not only apply, as hitherto, to Swiss companies, i.e., companies incorporated in Switzerland, but also, as mentioned above, to companies not domiciled in Switzerland whose equity securities are mainly listed in Switzerland. Second, the applicability of the Swiss takeover bid rules may be relinquished if both Swiss law and a foreign law are simultaneously applicable to a public takeover offer, providing that a) the application of Swiss law would lead to a conflict with the foreign law, and b) the protection provided by the foreign law to the investor is equivalent to that provided by Swiss law. [85]

83 Stock Exchange Act, art 32, al 4. Except for companies that have opted out of the mandatory offer requirement, the Stock Exchange Act no longer allows the payment of a control premium.

84 Stock Exchange Act, art 33.

The new conflict rules in the Stock Exchange Act have brought much needed clarity to the question of the Act's applicability on international situations thereby bringing a long-standing evolution of regulatory practice and supporting scholarly debate to a temporary conclusion.

Until 1999, the leading scholars considered that the Swiss domicile was the decisive criteria to establish territorial application of the Stock Exchange Act. However, in 1999, the Federal Banking Commission (now a part of FINMA) overruled a recommendation, issued by the Takeover Board, and stated that the takeover bid made by the French company LVMH Moët Hennessy Louis Vuitton (LVMH) for the shares of TAG Heuer International SA, a company domiciled in Luxembourg, having shares listed on the SWX Swiss Exchange (now the SIX Swiss Exchange), was subject to the Stock Exchange Act and had, therefore, to comply with its provisions.

Although hitherto the Stock Exchange Act's wording clearly restricted the application of the takeover bid rules to 'Swiss companies', the Federal Banking Commission argued that the Luxembourg company, a mere holding company, was actually managed through its Swiss subsidiary (effective management, presentation of the product as a Swiss product). In so doing, the Federal Banking Commission pierced the corporate veil.

This decision has very much been criticised by the legal doctrine which claimed for a new conflict rule in the Stock Exchange Act resolving the question of its applicability on international situations. The place of the first listing and not the domicile of the company should be the decisive criteria for the application of disclosure and takeover bid rules. Some scholars even suggested applying this principle under the present wording, as far as this is needed for the protection of investors.

In a second case, De Beers Centenary AG asked the Takeover Board to state that the takeover bid on all its 'Centenary Linked Units', i.e., all securities traded on the SWX Swiss Exchange (now the SIX Swiss Exchange), would not fall into the application of the Stock Exchange Act. The Takeover Board issued a recommendation according to which, notwithstanding the Swiss domicile of the target company, the transaction was not considered to be subject to the Stock Exchange Act takeover provisions.

In fact, the target company was only a holding company with practically no activity in Switzerland, whereas the main commercial activities of the group were executed in South Africa. Moreover, the affected securities listed on the SWX 85 Stock Exchange Act, art 22, al 1*bis*.

Swiss Exchange (now the SIX Swiss Exchange) were linked to securities of foreign, in particular South African, companies. This recommendation, however, was issued under the condition that the South African Exchange would recognise its competence and the takeover bid, as well as its result be published in the Swiss media. In this way, the goal of the Stock Exchange Act, i.e., the protection of shareholders of the target company in Switzerland, was fulfilled.

Multilateral Approaches

Substantive Law Solutions

Harmonisation. For many decades, Switzerland has actively participated in the efforts of international harmonisation in the field of securities and banking law. Switzerland is a member of the Basle Committee under the auspices of the Bank for International Settlement (BIS). The Committee released the Basle Capital Accord in 1988 (now amended and again in revision) and the Market Risk Accord in 1995. The new 'Basel III' rules have entered into force as per 1 January 2013.

Furthermore, Switzerland has adhered to the Core Principles of the Basle Committee of 1997 (revised in 2006) for the Surveillance of Banking and Financial Systems. In general, Switzerland is taking up the international principles in its own legislation.

Switzerland is actively engaged in the preparation of harmonisation principles in the securities markets under the auspices of the International Organisation of Securities Commissions (IOSCO); the respective guidelines concern the trading of securities and the establishment of collective investment schemes being transferred into the national legislation.

Switzerland is a member of the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering (FATF); having a substantial finance and banking market, Switzerland has a major interest in avoiding money laundering and criminal activities in capital markets.

Under the GATS, each World Trade Organisation (WTO) member state, such as Switzerland, is required to accord most-favoured-nation treatment to services and service suppliers of other WTO members. The GATS specifically applies to financial services. Moreover, the member states of the WTO have negotiated additional protocols to GATS in respect of the financial services; the key document is the Fifth Protocol on Financial Services of 12 December 1997, together with the annexed Schedules of Specific Commitments and Exemption Lists, brought into force in Switzerland on 1 March 1999. Switzerland has signed the Fifth Protocol and adjusted, to the extent necessary, its internal legislation.

Previous policies, applying the approach of measured reciprocity and thereby introducing limited access to home markets for foreign financial products and financial institutions, have now been overruled by the Fifth Protocol; apart from specific restrictions on trading services, the reciprocal approach has lost its importance.

Recognition. According to article 37 of the Stock Exchange Act, authorisation of a foreign stock exchange or of a stock exchange controlled by foreign persons may be refused if the countries in which the foreign stock exchange has its registered office, or the controlling foreign persons are domiciled, do not provide Swiss stock exchanges genuine access to their markets and do not offer them the same competitive opportunities as they do to the local stock exchanges.

This reciprocity requirement is not anymore applied in respect of enterprises originating in countries being members of the WTO and having ratified the Fifth Protocol on Financial Services. With regard to other countries, the practical application by FINMA is quite liberal.

The same rules also apply in respect of the authorisation and supervision of securities dealers. However, since Switzerland is not a member state of the European Union (EU), the single passport principle does not directly apply; therefore, the administrative application must be made by a foreign enterprise.

Procedural Solutions

FINMA is actively engaged in administrative legal assistance related to supervisory authorities in other countries.[86] In particular, publicly inaccessible information and documents can be delivered to foreign supervisory authorities under certain conditions.

The Federal Court usually dismisses complaints against administrative legal assistance in the light of the necessity that supervisory authorities need to get a crossborder view of international financial conglomerates.

Introduction

In General

During the 1950s, an extensive over-the-counter market developed in Taiwan.[1] By 1954, more than 60 brokerages were trading shares in state-owned companies issued to landowners whose land had been expropriated by the state to further land reform. In 1962, the Ministry of Economic Affairs set up the Taiwan Stock Exchange (TWSE). After a wave of speculation in sugar and margin trading led to a crash in 1964, Taiwan's Legislature enacted legislation in 1968 that formed the basis for modern securities regulation in Taiwan.

During the 1970s and 1980s, Taiwan industrialized and its export-oriented economy grew an average of nine per cent a year in a pattern that has now been repeated (on a vastly greater scale) in neighboring China. This led to many new listings on the TWSE and a remarkably high rate of participation in the stock market by domestic investors during a period when Taiwan's capital markets were essentially closed to foreign investment. By the end of 1990, Taiwan's 22 million people had opened more than 5 million accounts and were trading up to NT $200 billion in shares a day.

On 10 February 1990, the TAIEX reached 12,495.34 from which it fell to 2,560.47 by 1 October of the same year. During the following 10 years, Taiwan restructured its securities regulation regime to protect investors and to rebuild after the crash of 1990 by attracting foreign investment. As a result, Taiwan's capital markets were gradually opened to foreign investment and growth was driven by the rise of Taiwan's dynamic IT manufacturing industry.

Legal Sources

In General

Taiwan has a complex regulatory system governing the issuance and sale of securities. The official website for securities laws in Taiwan lists more than 1,400 laws and regulations.

Securities and Exchange Act

Enacted in 1968, the Securities and Exchange Act regulates issuers of securities and securities trading. The Act has been amended 18 times, most recently in 2012. The Securities and Exchange Act's twin purposes are development of the national economy and investor protection.

The Act comprises eight chapters: General Principals; Offering, Issuing, Private Placement, and Trading of Securities; Securities Firms; Securities Dealers Association; Stock Exchange; Arbitration; Penal Provisions; and Supplementary Provisions. To achieve these purposes, the Act grants the Financial Supervisory Commission under the Executive Yuan powers to regulate and supervise the public offering, issuing, and trading of securities. The Securities and Exchange Act is especially concerned with the regulation of public companies.

The Securities and Exchange Act also authorizes the Financial Supervisory Commission, the TWSE, and the GreTai Securities Market (GTSM) to issue regulations governing the public offering of securities. These regulations cover diverse matters including fundraising, underwriting, shareholder business, internal controls, and disclosure of information.

Company Act

The Securities and Exchange Act expressly provides that the Company Act governs matters not provided for within the Securities and Exchange Act. Under the purview of the Company Act are matters such as the establishment of companies limited by shares and their organization, operation, and winding-down.

Securities Investor and Futures Trader Protection Act

The Securities Investor and Futures Trader Protection Act, which became operative in 2002, establishes and funds the Securities Investor and Futures Investor Protection Center, which has special powers to bring class action securities claims against issuers of securities.

The Center has been active: judgments have been issued in the first instance in 22 of the 76 securities cases filed. Approximately half of these judgments have been favorable to the claimant.

Act for Investment by Foreign Nationals

The Act for Investment By Foreign Nationals governs matters relating to domestic investment by foreign nationals, and the protection, restrictions on, and administration of such investments. As authorized under the Act, the Executive Yuan issued the Regulations Governing Investment in Securities by Overseas Chinese and Foreign Nationals in 1983.

Authorities

In General

Taiwan's securities markets are primarily regulated by the Securities and Futures Bureau under the Executive Yuan's Financial Supervisory Commission. The Central Bank also regulates aspects of the securities market that involve foreign currencies and exchange rates. In addition, the Bureau monitors trading on the centralized securities exchange markets and the over-the-counter market through the TWSE and the GTSM.

This monitoring ensures that security firms that have entered into market participation contracts comply with the regulations and charters of the TWSE and the GTSM in keeping with their contractual obligations. The Taiwan Depository & Clearing Corporation supports the Bureau on custody and clearing operations, while the Taiwan Securities Association assists with supervision of securities firms.

Financial Supervisory Commission

The Legislature created the Financial Supervisory Commission in 2004 as an integrated agency regulating insurance, securities, and other financial services. The Commission has four subordinate bureaus: the Banking Bureau, the Securities and Futures Bureau, the Insurance Bureau, and the Financial Examination Bureau.

The Commission is an independent agency acting directly under the Executive Yuan, Taiwan's highest executive agency. The premier nominates the nine commissioners to four-year terms. The president confirms the premier's nominations.

Securities and Futures Bureau

The Securities and Futures Bureau is responsible for:

- Supervision and regulation of public companies, public offering and issuance of securities, listings, and the trading of securities through securities firms;
- Supervision and regulation of the securities business;
- Supervision and regulation of foreign investment in Taiwan's capital markets;
- Supervision and regulation of the Taiwan Securities Association and related organizations;
- Supervision and regulation of securities investment trust funds and margin transactions;
- Supervision and regulation of the auditing and attesting of financial reports by certified public accountants;
- Protection of investors in securities; and
- Follow-up on and checking of inspection reports of relevant financial institutions.

Taiwan Stock Exchange.

The Taiwan Stock Exchange TWSE is Taiwan's largest and most prestigious exchange with 794 listed companies and market capitalization of approximately US $640 billion at the end of 2012. The TWSE was established as a company limited by shares in 1961 pursuant to the Securities and Exchange Act and related regulations.

Investors open accounts and place orders to buy or sell shares with licensed securities firms in person, over the phone, or online. Securities firms are licensed by the Securities and Futures Bureau to operate as brokers, dealers, or broker-dealers.

Duly licensed securities firms are qualified to enter into a contract with the TWSE to participate in the market. Foreign securities firms cannot become members of the market unless they establish a branch or subsidiary in Taiwan and obtain a securities firm license from the Securities and Futures Bureau.

After receiving orders from investors, the securities firm executes the order electronically on the market. Trading is automated and computerized, and there is no floor trading. In addition to serving as a centralized exchange for the trading of securities, the TWSE sets criteria for listing on the exchange and vets applications by public companies, supervises the disclosure of financial and business information of publicly traded companies, and monitors trades for compliance with trading laws and regulations. The TWSE may employ certain disciplinary measures for violations such as financial penalties, halting trading of a listed security, and modifying how a listed security can be traded or delivered.

GreTai Securities Market

The GreTai Securities Market (GTSM) is a public-interest foundation established in 1994 offering centralized and over-the-counter trading mechanisms. Although "GreTai" is a romanization for the Chinese characters meaning "over-the-counter", like the larger TWSE, the GTSM offers a wide-range of financial products issued and traded through the GTSM. In addition to trading of shares listed on the GTSM, the GTSM also administers trading of shares through the Emerging Market Board (an OTC trading mechanism), and trading of governmental and corporate bonds and derivative products.

Primary duties of the GTSM include the review and registration of shares and derivative products, the supervision and regulation of securities issuers, the management and supervision of the GTSM's member securities firms, the payment settlement operations for securities traded over the counter, and sanctioning securities issuers in the event of a breach. Sanctions include financial penalties, halting trading of a GTSM-listed security, and modifying how a GTSM listed security can be traded or delivered.

Emerging Market Board

The Emerging Market Board was established in 2002 to offer a trading mechanism for the securities of public companies that have not yet been listed on the TWSE or GTSM.

The Emerging Market Board is operated by the GTSM. A substantive review is not required for applications for emerging market board securities registration. In general, a foreign company seeking primary listing on the TWSE or GTSM must have its securities traded on the Emerging Market Board for at least six months, with some exceptions.

Taiwan Depository and Clearing Corporation.

The Taiwan Depository and Clearing Corporation has acted as a central register for all securities listed on the TWSE, the GTSM, and the Emerging Market Board since 1990. The Taiwan Depository and Clearing Corporation's primarily roles include the registration of dematerialized securities, custody of securities, book-entry transfer, and clearing and settlement. The Financial Supervisory Commission also may authorize the Taiwan Depository and Clearing Corporation to conduct review of shareholders services of an issuing company.

Taiwan Securities Association

The Taiwan Securities Association is authorized by the Securities and Futures Bureau, under powers delegated to the Bureau by the Securities and Exchange Act, to draft regulations or self-regulator rules for member firms, including brokering, underwriting, and taking orders to buy and sell foreign securities.

New members also sign a self-governing compact on their admission that requires the members to comply with the Association's self-governing rules and charter including, for example, the Association's charter, self governing compact, regulations for the management of advertisements, and some 70 other sets of regulations. Through the Association, member securities firms are urged to impose discipline upon themselves.

The Association also proactively mediates between its members and investors. When securities members engage in predatory pricing, or disputes over willful poaching of employees arise, the Association will attempt to mediate or transfer the matter to the appropriate committee board for an initial ruling. Based on a review of the internal ruling, the member will be urged to discipline itself or be turned over to the Disciplinary Committee to handle the matter in accordance with the self-governing compact. The Committee then passes its decisions on to the Association's Board of Directors for a final decision. In serious cases, the member can be fined NT $500,000 to NT $10 million.

Legal Order and Regulatory Interests

Admission

Market Participants

Foreign investors are welcomed in the Taiwan securities market. The status of foreign investment in public companies, especially TWSE and GTSM listed companies, counts heavily among the various reference factors that local investors look at to guide their own investment decisions.

Foreign investors were first allowed to directly enter the Taiwan securities market as qualified foreign institutional investors[2] in 1991. Five years later the market was opened more widely to foreign institutional investors in general. In 2003, further deregulation opened the market to the current four categories of foreign investor:

- Offshore foreign institutional investors (FINI);
- Offshore foreign individual investors (FIDI);
- Onshore foreign institutional investors; and
- Onshore overseas Chinese and foreign natural persons.

Taiwan's government recognizes that the ongoing liberalization of foreign investment is an important measure to expedite financial reform and extend the scale and internationalization of Taiwan's securities market.

Securities

National Treatment and Reciprocity

The Financial Supervisory Commission has authority to enter into treaties and agreements with foreign governments or institutions based on the principle of reciprocity. The treaty or agreement may be for the purpose of information exchange, technical cooperation, or investigation assistance.

Article 21-1.2 was promulgated in 2006. Its purpose was to promote international cooperation between financial authorities in Taiwan and in other countries in compliance with the International Organization of Securities Commissions' Multilateral Memorandum of Understanding concerning Consultation, Cooperation and the Exchange of Information (MMoU) requirements for an A-level signatory.

The drafters looked to legislation in Hong Kong and the United Kingdom and added a second paragraph in this article authorizing the regulatory authority to share information with its overseas counterparts regarding institutions, legal persons, organizations, and natural persons.

2 In 1990, qualified foreign institutional investors were limited to foreign banks, insurance companies, and fund management enterprises.

Taiwan's Financial Supervisory Commission has signed a number of memorandums of understanding and exchanges of letters with its counterpart regulatory authorities in foreign governments with a view to improving cooperation on information exchange, technical cooperation, and investigation support. It has signed such documents with close to 30 countries to date.[3]

To support these international efforts, the Commission has the power to compel organizations or persons in Taiwan who have been involved in securities trading to present their books or documents or to explain their involvement to the Commission in cases where an investigation or litigation of securities trading is proceeding in a foreign jurisdiction and the authorities request assistance from the Commission. Failure to comply can result in fines of up to NT $2.4 million that can be imposed repeatedly until compliance is achieved.

Issuer Requirements

In General. Between 2004 and 2011, Taiwan continued to introduce sweeping changes to its system for review of market listings. In 2008, as an inducement to capital raising in Taiwan, Taiwan for the first time allowed primary listings for foreign enterprises on the Taiwan market. A foreign issuer must meet the following eligibility requirements in order to obtain a primary listing on the TWSE:

- There must be an operational track record of three years or longer;
- Company boards must comprise at least five member directors, among which at least two must be independent directors, and at least one of the independent directors must be domiciled in Taiwan;[4]
- There must be paid-in capital or shareholders' equity of NT $600 million or higher, or market capitalization of NT $1.6 billion or higher;
- Cumulative pre-tax income for the most recent three fiscal years must have been NT $250 million or higher, with pre-tax income for the most recent fiscal year of NT $120 million or higher, with no accumulated deficit;
- The number of shareholders of record must be 1,000 or more, and the number of shareholders (excluding insiders of the foreign issuer and juristic persons of which such insiders own over 50 per cent of the shareholding) must be no less than 500, and their total shareholdings must constitute 20 per cent or more of the total issued shares or not less than 10 million shares;

3 These countries include Singapore (1993), the United Kingdom (1993), France (1994), Argentina (1995), Australia (1995), Hong Kong (1996), Kenya (1996), South Africa (1996), Thailand (1996), Brazil (1997), Germany (1997), Malaysia (1997), Rome (1997), Spain (1997), Sweden (1997), Chile (1998), Salvador (2000), South Korea (2006), the Netherlands (2006), Turkey (2006), India (2007), Jordan (2007), the Philippines (2007), Dubai (2008), the United States (2008), and China (2009). Some memorandums of understanding and exchanges of letters have also been signed by Taiwan's Ministry of Justice for anti-money-laundering purposes.

4 A foreign issuer must additionally establish either an audit committee or a supervisor. The audit committee must be chosen from among the full number of directors, and must comprise no less than three persons. Foreign issuers also must establish a compensation committee.

- The number of shares planned to be listed and traded must exceed 50 per cent of the total number of the applicant company's issued shares;
- When applying for a primary listing on the TWSE, the issuer must first receive advisory guidance from the lead underwriter, or register its stock as emerging stock for trading through the GTSM, for a period of at least six months; and
- The applicant company must be recommended in writing by two or more securities underwriters.

Under the current Act Governing Relations between the People of the Taiwan Area and the Mainland Area, foreign issuers applying for a primary listing may not include companies established under the law of the PRC; a foreign issuer in which more than a 30 per cent equity stake is either directly or indirectly held by a PRC entity; a foreign issuer in which a PRC entity or entities have a controlling influence in management; or a foreign issuer with investment in China exceeding a certain ratio of its net worth.[5]

Different standards and eligibility requirements apply in cases of foreign issuers that are part of special industries, including technical companies and construction businesses, as described below.

Technical Companies. A "technical company"[6] is defined as a company so designated by the Industrial Development Bureau, Ministry of Economic Affairs, or a TWSE-designated professional institution, indicating that the company is a technology enterprise and has successfully developed products or technology and those products or technology are moreover marketable. If the foreign applicant company or a company controlled by it that accounts for 50 per cent of its overall operating revenue is a technical company, the following looser requirements will apply:

- At the time of application for listing, the applicant company or the subordinate technical company must have had a record of operation for one full fiscal year or more;
- The company must have paid-in capital of NT $300 million or more, or market value of NT $800 million or more;
- The net worth on the most current financial report audited and attested by a certified public accountant may not be lower than two-thirds of the capital stock, with proof that the company has operating capital sufficient for 12 months of operation following the listing; and

5 Taiwan Stock Exchange Corporation Rules Governing Review of Securities Listings, art 28-1.

6 Taiwan Stock Exchange Corporation Rules Governing Review of Securities Listings, art 28-1.2.

- The number of shareholders of record must be 500 or more, and the total shareholdings of the shareholders of record (excluding insiders of the foreign issuer and juristic persons of which such insiders own more than 50 per cent of the shareholding) must constitute 20 per cent or more of the total issued shares or not less than 5 million shares.

An example of a company in this category would be a biotechnology company that has already received approval from the regulatory authority to undertake human clinical trials or field trials, and has already manufactured and sold biotechnology or medical or health-care products or has provided related technical services.

The procedures to be followed are given in the Ministry of Economic Affairs Industrial Development Bureau's Directions for Contracted Provision of Assessment Opinions Regarding the Successful Development and Marketability of Products Under Application by Technology Enterprises.

Construction Businesses. The issuer requirements are rather stricter if the company applying for listing is a Taiwan construction company.[7] And a foreign issuer that is a construction company (meaning that 20 per cent or more of its operating revenue during the preceding two fiscal years was derived from construction business, or that 20 per cent or more of its gross profits during the preceding two fiscal years were derived from construction business) must meet the same standards.

For example, the company must have been established for at least eight full fiscal years. In addition, its net worth before distribution of earnings in its most recent financial report and for the most recent fiscal year must be 30 per cent or more of the total value of its assets.

Taiwan Depositary Receipts and Secondary Listings. A foreign issuer that wishes to apply to issue Taiwan Depositary Receipts (TDRs)[8] in Taiwan or obtain a secondary listing[9] for its shares on the TWSE must meet the following eligibility requirements:

- The foreign stock must be already been listed on the main board of a stock exchange or securities market approved by the Financial Supervisory Commission;
- The listing must be for 20 million units of TDRs (or shares) or more, or market value of NT $300 million or more; provided that the listed units may not exceed 50 per cent of the total number of shares issued by the foreign issuer;

7 Taiwan Stock Exchange Corporation Rules Governing Review of Securities Listings, art 28-1.3.

8 Taiwan Stock Exchange Corporation Rules Governing Review of Securities Listings, art 26.

9 Taiwan Stock Exchange Corporation Rules Governing Review of Securities Listings, art 27.

- The shareholders' equity stated on the financial report audited and attested by a certified public accountant for the most recent period may not be less than the equivalent of NT $600 million;
- The number of holders of the TDRs or shares in Taiwan must reach at least 1,000 persons, and the total number of units held by the holders (excluding insiders of the foreign issuer and juristic persons of which such insiders own over 50 per cent of the shareholding) must reach 20 per cent of the total units issued, or 10 million units or more;
- The applicant company may not have had accumulated deficit in the most recent fiscal year and must meet one of the following criteria:
- The pre-tax income for the most recent two years must represent not less than six per cent of the shareholders' equity;
- The ratio of pre-tax income to shareholders' equity in the final accounting for each of the past two fiscal years must be three per cent or higher, or the average must be at least three per cent, and the profitability in the most recent fiscal year must be better year-on-year than in the preceding year; and
- The income before tax for each of the most recent two years must be NT $250 million or more.

Bonds. In general, only a primary or secondary (TWSE or GTSM) listed foreign issuer may offer and issue bonds (including straight corporate bonds, convertible bonds, or corporate bonds with warrants), with certain exceptions. The exceptions include, for example, a foreign issuer of Emerging Board stock who files to offer and issue straight corporate bonds denominated in New Taiwan Dollars. A foreign issuer applying to issue bonds must obtain a credit rating from a bond rating institution recognized by the Financial Supervisory Commission indicating that its credit worthiness meets a specific required rating. Nonetheless, for issues of convertible bonds or corporate bonds with warrants, the issuer may be exempted from the credit-rating requirement if all the following conditions are met:

- For secured corporate bonds, convertible corporate bonds, or corporate bonds with warrants, the total amount of those bonds issued may not exceed 200 per cent of the foreign issuer's total assets less total liabilities; and
- The foreign issuer may not issue unsecured corporate bonds under any of the following circumstances: (a) the issuer has done any act in breach of contract, or has been in default of payment of principal or interest, in respect of previously issued corporate bonds or other debts, even if the debt is now settled or (b) the issuer's average annual net profit, after tax, for the most recent three years or, if the issuer has been in operation for less than three years, for the years the issuer has been in operation, does not reach 150 per cent of the total amount of interest payable on the corporate bonds intended to be issued.

A foreign issuer applicant may not issue corporate bonds if the issuer has done any act in breach of contract, or has been in default of payment of principal or interest, in respect of previously issued corporate bonds or other debts, and this circumstance still exists or the issuer's average annual net profit, after tax, for the most recent three years or, if the issuer has been in operation for less than three years, for the years the issuer has been in operation, does not reach 100 per cent of the total amount of interest payable on the corporate bonds intended to be issued; however, corporate bonds issued under a bank guarantee will not be restricted by this.

GTSM Listing. The requirements for primary and secondary GTSM listings (including GTSM listings of TDRs) are similar to, but generally somewhat lighter than, those for primary and secondary TWSE listings.

Securities Requirements

Foreign issuers seeking to raise funds in the Taiwan securities market for corporate finance purposes do so primarily through TDRs, shares, and bonds. The following restrictions apply to TDRs:

- There must be no restriction on the transfer of stock, or securities representing stock, represented by the TDRs;
- The rights and obligations of the holders of stock, or securities representing stock, represented by the TDRs must be identical with those of other stock, or securities representing stock, of the same class issued at the same time.
- The TDRs must be issued in uncertificated (dematerialized) form unless the laws or regulations of the applicant company's country of registration contain a provision to the contrary, and the TDRs must be registered with the Taiwan Depositary and Clearing Corporation; and
- There must have been no abnormal fluctuation in the price of the stock represented by the TDRs during the three months immediately prior to the approval of the listing agreement for TDRs. [10]

Shares must be issued in uncertificated (dematerialized) form unless the laws or regulations of the applicant company's country provide otherwise, and must be registered with the Taiwan Depository and Clearing Corporation. If the laws require physical share certificates, the share certificates must be delivered to the central securities depository. The following types of bonds may be issued in Taiwan:

- Government bonds issued by foreign governments and bonds issued by international organizations;[11]

10 Taiwan Stock Exchange Corporation Rules Governing Review of Securities Listings, arts 2-1, and 26.

11 Taiwan Stock Exchange Corporation Rules Governing Review of Securities Listings, art 25.

- Straight corporate bonds; and
- Convertible bonds and bonds with warrants.[12]

Prospectus Requirements

Like domestic issuers, a foreign issuer must compile a prospectus before securities may be issued. A TWSE or GTSM primary listed company that offers and issues stock must prepare a prospectus. The content must:[13]

- Comply, mutatis mutandis, with the Regulations Governing Information to be Published in Public Offering and Issuance Prospectuses (ie, comply with the same prospectus requirements as for domestic securities); and
- Comply with the Regulations Governing the Offering and Issuance of Securities by Foreign Issuers.

According to the Regulations Governing Information to Be Published in Public Offering and Issuance Prospectuses, a prospectus must include:

- A brief description of the company, its risks, company organization (including compensation status and relationship between the compensation and operational performance of the company's directors, supervisors, general manager, and vice general managers), capital and shares, status of issue of corporate bonds, preferred shares, overseas depositary receipts, employee stock warrants, mergers and acquisitions, and assignments of shares of other companies.
- A description of the operation of the company (including legal compliance regarding environmental protection, e.g., permits for installing anti-pollution facilities or any pollution dispute), fixed assets, real property, other companies that it has invested in, important contracts, and any other items required to be described or supplemented;
- Analysis of the fund utilization plan for any previous cash capital increase, merger or acquisition, assignment of another company's shares, or issue of corporate bonds; analysis of the fund application plan for the current cash capital increase or issue of corporate bonds; and status of any current issue of new shares in connection with assignment of another company's shares, or current issue of new shares in connection with a merger or acquisition;
- A summary financial data for the most recent five years, financial statements, a financial summary, as well as review and analysis of financial condition and operating results;

12 Bonds can be denominated in New Taiwan Dollars or in foreign currencies with the exception of the Chinese Yuan. On 1 January 2012, Taiwan ended its requirement that the par value of foreign shares issued in Taiwan be NT $10 per share. This means that foreign securities can be issued without a par value or with a par value other than NT $10 per share.

13 Regulations Governing the Offering and Issuance of Securities by Foreign Issuers, art 17.2.

- Information on the state of corporate governance; and
- Information on important board and shareholder resolutions in relation to the offering and issuance.

If the foreign issuer is a regulated financial venture such as a bank, bill financer, securities firm, futures house, insurance company, financial holding company, or investment trust, it also must comply with any additional applicable rules in the preparation of its prospectus. In addition to meeting the requirements for prospectuses compiled by domestic issuers, a foreign issuer's prospectus must comply with or include:

- A prospectus prepared in the Chinese language or a Chinese-English bilingual format, provided that, if the English-Chinese bilingual format is used and there is any discrepancy in meaning, the Chinese version will prevail;
- A company introduction and the structure of the group;
- An explanation of any material differences between the rules of the foreign jurisdiction and Taiwan regarding the protection of shareholder equity;
- The consolidated financial statements audited and attested by a certified public accountant, and the audit report, for the most recent two fiscal years as of the time of the filing for the offering and issuance of stock.[14]

A TWSE or GTSM primary listed company or emerging stock company offering and issuing stock must deliver the prospectus to subscribers in advance.

A prospectus for the offering and issuance of TWSE or GTSM secondary listed securities or TDRs[15] must be prepared in accordance with the laws and regulations of the foreign issuer's country of registration and the country where its securities are listed. The prospectus also must be prepared in accordance with the Regulations Governing the Offering and Issuance of Securities by Foreign Issuers. Its content must specify:

- Any matters requiring attention in connection with restrictions, if any, on securities transactions by foreigner nationals, tax burdens, and tax payment procedures, of the foreign issuer's country of registration and country in which its shares are listed;
- The highest, lowest, and average market price of the foreign stock (or original stock represented by TDRs) for the most recent six months on any securities trading market on which it is listed;

14 If the filing date falls more than 75 days after the end of the business half-year, the consolidated financial statement for the first half-year reviewed by a certified public accountant, and the review report, must additionally be submitted. If, before the printing of the prospectus, there is any more recent financial statement audited by a certified public accountant, it also must be disclosed. Regulations Governing the Offering and Issuance of Securities by Foreign Issuers, art 17.

15 Regulations Governing the Offering and Issuance of Securities by Foreign Issuers, arts 22 and 34.

- The method for exercise of shareholder rights; and
- A company overview, operation overview, issuance plan and implementation status, and financial overview, with the disclosure requirements somewhat lighter for a secondary listed issuer than those for a primary listed issuer.

A prospectus also must be delivered to the offerees in advance for any issue of TWSE or GTSM secondary listed shares or TDRs.[16] A prospectus also must be prepared for any offering and issue of corporate bonds.[17] The prospectus must comply with the laws of the foreign issuer's country of registration or the country where its shares are listed, and must include the following specifics:

- Offering plan;
- Concluding opinion of the evaluation report of the securities underwriter (not applicable in the case of an issue of straight corporate bonds);
- Credit rating certificate issued by a credit rating institution;
- Other outstanding bonds;
- Trustee agreement;
- Agency agreement for payment, conversion, or subscription;
- Letter of creation of security interest or provision of guarantee (if any);
- Any matters requiring attention in connection with restrictions on securities transactions by foreign nationals, tax burdens, and tax payment procedures, of the foreign issuer's country of registration and country in which its shares are listed;
- Highest, lowest, and average market prices for the most recent six months of the securities that are issuable upon the conversion of convertible bonds or upon the exercise of warrants attached to corporate bonds, on the stock exchange where the issuer's stocks are listed; and
- Other important matters agreed upon by the parties or that the Financial Supervisory Commission requires.

The content of the prospectus must be detailed, truthful, clear and unambiguous, easy to understand, and free of false information and omissions.[18] Should there be any violation, the issuer, its responsible persons, underwriters, and any officers, certified pubic accounts, lawyers, engineers, and any other professionals or technical persons who sign the prospectus to confirm part or all of the content will be subject to criminal liability of up to seven years' imprisonment[19] and civil liability to compensate any damage sustained by bona fide trading counterparties.

Corporate Governance

In General. The TWSE and the GTSM have jointly issued the Corporate Governance Best-Practice Principles for TWSE/GTSM Listed Companies to guide companies listed on those markets in establishing their corporate governance systems.

Important principles include those on internal controls,[20] shareholder rights and interests and their involvement in corporate governance,[21] corporate governance with respect to an affiliate business,[22] improvement of board function (including board structure, election, independent directors, subordinate board committees, including the audit committee and compensation committee, board resolutions, loyalty, and fiduciary duties),[23] interested persons, and information disclosure. Companies listed on the TWSE or GTSM also must include a corporate governance report in their annual reports.[24] The corporate governance report must detail compliance with the principles listed above.[25]

In 1998, Taiwan established internal controls for public companies based on the "COSO Report Internal Control-Integrated Framework", issued by the Treadway Commission. The system has been amended several times, and is now detailed in the Regulations Governing Establishment of Internal Control Systems by Public Companies.

Internal Controls for Primary TWSE and Primary GTSM Listed Companies. Foreign issuers in Taiwan must have the following internal controls:

- Internal controls that comply with the requirements of the jurisdiction in which the issuer is registered; and

19 Securities and Exchange Act, art 174.
20 Corporate Governance Best-Practice Principles for TWSE/GTSM Listed Companies, art 3.
21 Corporate Governance Best-Practice Principles for TWSE/GTSM Listed Companies, ch 2, arts 4–13.
22 Corporate Governance Best-Practice Principles for TWSE/GTSM Listed Companies, ch 3, arts 14–19.
23 Corporate Governance Best-Practice Principles for TWSE/GTSM Listed Companies, ch 4, arts 20–43.
24 Regulations Governing Information to be Published in Annual Reports of Public Companies, art 7.
25 Regulations Governing Information to be Published in Annual Reports of Public Companies, art 10.

- Internal controls that comply with Taiwan's Regulations Governing Establishment of Internal Control Systems by Public Companies, ie, meet the same requirements applicable to a domestic issuer.[26]

If a foreign issuer listing in Taiwan cannot comply with Taiwan's Regulations Governing Establishment of Internal Control Systems by Public Companies, the TWSE can require the foreign issuer to provide the original statutory context precluding its compliance, a Chinese translation, and a professional opinion by a lawyer or other legal expert.[27] Nonetheless, Taiwan's Regulations Governing Establishment of Internal Control Systems by Public Companies have been relaxed in certain respects for foreign issuers. For example, the required qualifications for internal auditors and continuous training requirements do not apply to foreign issuers. Issuers with secondary listings in Taiwan or TDRs must include details of corporate governance in the prospectus before issuance.[28]

Registration of Public Offerings

With the exception of government bonds or other securities exempted by the Financial Supervisory Commission, any public offering or issue of securities without an effective registration with the Financial Supervisory Commission is prohibited.[29] Once all required documents have been filed, registration of a security normally takes 12 business days. The effective registration period can be shortened to seven business days if the foreign issuer falls into one of the cases listed below:

- A public offering and issue of straight corporate bonds, or issue by a primary TWSE or GTSM listed company or emerging stock company of employee stock warrants;
- A foreign issuer that has already duly issued stock and files, through the TWSE or GTSM, a primary listing contract with the Financial Supervisory Commission for its stock, and subsequently conducts a public sale of new shares issued to effect a cash capital increase before the initial TWSE or GTSM listing;
- A foreign issuer that files, through the TWSE or GTSM, a listing contract with the Financial Supervisory Commission for its sponsored issue of Taiwan depositary receipts, and subsequently conducts a public sale of Taiwan depositary receipts before the initial TWSE or GTSM listing;
- A company with a secondary listing on the TWSE or GTSM that makes a domestic seasoned offering of stock or sponsored issue of Taiwan depositary receipts using shares that have already been issued and are held by shareholders;

- A case of an emerging stock company issuing new shares for a cash capital increase without conducting a public issue; and
- A foreign issuer that has obtained, within the most recent year, a credit rating report of a certain rating or higher from a credit rating institution approved or recognized by the Financial Supervisory Commission for domestically offered and issued securities.

Registration of Private Placements

The term "private placement" under the Securities and Exchange Act means the offering of securities by a public company (which may be a foreign issuer) to specific persons, other than through a public offering, and pursuant to certain statutory requirements. A public company conducting a private placement is merely required to file a recordation of the placement.[30] Nonetheless, a private placement must meet the following requirements:

- A resolution by the board of directors; and
- A shareholder resolution passed by a super majority, where proper prior notice was given to shareholders of the basis and rationale for the setting of the price, the means of selecting the specific persons (where the placees have already been arranged, the relationship between the placees and the company also must be described), and the reasons necessitating the private placement.

For a private placement, the following matters must be periodically disclosed through the online Market Observation Post System (the designated website for required public disclosures of issuer information in Taiwan), including within two days from the board resolution and within 15 days from the time the price of the shares or subscription has been paid up in full. The private placement also must be disclosed in the annual report.

A private placement may not be conducted through general advertisements or public inducements.[31] If this rule is violated, it will be deemed a public offering to the general public. The placees of a private placement must qualify under one of the following categories:

- Banks, bills finance enterprises, trust enterprises, insurance enterprises, securities enterprises, or other juristic persons or institutions approved by the regulatory authority;
- Natural persons, juristic persons, or funds meeting the conditions prescribed by the regulatory authority; and

30 Securities and Exchange Act, arts 14-3, 43-6, and 43-7.
31 Securities and Exchange Act, art 43-7.

- Directors, supervisors, and managerial officers of the company or its affiliated enterprises.[32]

The total number of placees under the latter two categories above may not exceed 35 persons. The resale of securities sold through a private placement also is regulated. Violation of statutory restrictions on a private placement may be subject to criminal liability of up to two years' imprisonment and fines of up to NT $2.4 million.[33]

Disclosure Obligations

Periodic Report

Financial Reports

Annual Financial Report. An annual financial report must be made within three months after the close of each fiscal year. The annual financial report must be publicly announced on the online Market Observation Post System and registered with the Financial Supervisory Commission.

Financial reports must be duly audited and attested by a certified public accountant, approved by the board of directors, and recognized by the supervisors.

First, Second, and Third Quarter Financial Report. Within 45 days after the end of the first, second, and third quarters of each fiscal year, an issuer must publicly announce on the online Market Observation Post System and register with the Financial Supervisory Commission financial reports duly reviewed by a certified public accountant and approved by the board of directors.[34] Corrections to financial reports must be made within the specific time period set by the Financial Supervisory Commission under the following circumstances:

- If the total adjustment to the after-tax profit or loss is equivalent to NT $10 million or more and reaches one per cent of the originally audited operating revenue or five per cent or more of the paid-in capital of the company, the financial reports must be remade and publicly disclosed on the online Market Observation Post System with a statement of the reasons for the correction and the main differences with the original financial report; or
- If the total adjustment to the after-tax profit or loss does not reach the level specified above, the financial report does not need to be remade, but the adjusted sum must be stated in a correction to the amount of the retained earnings.

32 Securities and Exchange Act, art 43-6.
33 Securities and Exchange Act, arts 175 and 178.1.2.
34 Securities and Exchange Act (2012 Amendment), art 36.

Annual Report to Shareholders

The annual report must be distributed to all shareholders[35] prior to or at the annual meeting of shareholders. For securities listed on the TWSE or listed on or traded through the GTSM, copies of the annual report also must be sent respectively to the exchanges and other designated institutions and made available for review by the public.

Operation Status

Within the first 10 days of each calendar month, the issuer must publicly announce and register with the Financial Supervisory Commission the operating status[36] for the preceding month. The operation status report must include the following items:

- The total monetary amount of invoices issued and the total operating income;
- The total monetary amount of endorsements and guarantees provided for third parties; and
- Other items prescribed by the regulator.

Shareholding by Insiders

Upon registering the public issuance of its shares, a company must report the class and numbers of all shares held by its directors, supervisors, managerial officers, and shareholders holding more than 10 per cent of the total shares of the company and report these holdings publicly.

These insiders must report to the issuer each month any changes in the number of shares they held during the preceding month. The issuer must compile these reports and file them with the regulatory authority. If it deems necessary, the authority can order an issuer to announce these changes publicly. If an insider pledges shares, the insider must immediately report the pledge to the issuer. In turn, the issuer must report the pledges to the Financial Supervisory Commission and publicly disclose the pledge on the online Market Observation Post System within five days.

Shareholder Meeting Announcements

Thirty days before a company convenes a regular shareholder meeting or 15 days before a special shareholder meeting, the company must prepare electronic files of the meeting announcement, proxy form, explanatory materials relating to proposals for ratification, matters for deliberation, election or dismissal of directors or supervisors, and other matters on the shareholder meeting agenda, and upload them to the online Market Observation Post System.

35 Securities and Exchange Act, art 36.3.

36 Securities and Exchange Act, art 36.1.4; Securities and Exchange Act Enforcement Rules, r 5.

If voting powers at a shareholder meeting are to be exercised in writing, a print version of the materials referred to in the preceding paragraph and a printed ballot also must be sent to the shareholders.

Internal Control and Internal Auditing

A company preparing for an initial public offering is required to conduct annual self-inspection of the design and operating effectiveness of its internal control systems, and publicly announce and report its Internal Control System Statement on the websites designated by the Financial Supervisory Commission within four months from the end of each fiscal year in the prescribed format.

An Internal Control System Statement and any amendments to it must be approved by a board resolution. An Internal Control System Statement must be published in the company's annual report and in any prospectus.

Immediate Disclosure

Material Information

Material information is any event that has a material impact on shareholders' equity or share prices. Any event involving material information must be publicly announced on the online Market Observation Post System and registered with the Financial Supervisory Commission within two days from the date of occurrence of the event. The following events constitute material information under article 7 of the Securities and Exchange Act Enforcement Rules:

- The dishonoring of a negotiable instrument due to insufficient deposit, refusal to transact by a bank, or other events that result in the loss of good credit standing;
- Any litigation, non-litigious proceeding, administrative disposition, administrative dispute, security procedure, or compulsory execution with a significant impact on the financial status or business of the company;
- A serious drop in the output, complete or partial suspension of work, lease of the company factory or its main facilities, or complete or partial pledge of material assets, with a significant impact on the company business;
- A significant change in operational policies and strategies;
- A judicial decision to prohibit the transfer of the company's shares prior to the company's reorganization granted by a court;
- A change in the chairman of the board, general manager, or more than one-third of the directors of the company;
- A change in the certified public accountant;
- The execution, amendment, termination, or rescission of important contracts, business plans, strategic alliances, new product development, merger or acquisition, or acquisition or assignment of intellectual property rights, with a major effect on the finances or business of the company; and

- Other important events with significant impact on the continuation of company operations.

The TWSE has listed no less than 49 sub-events within the nine categories of material information listed above.

Discrepancies in Financial Reports

An issuer also must publicly report any inconsistencies in annual financial reports approved by the regular shareholder meeting if such reports are inconsistent with the annual financial report that has been announced to the public and filed with the regulatory authority.

Other Specified Events under the Securities and Exchange Act

Any other major financial or operational actions of public companies such as acquisition or disposal of assets, engaging in derivatives trading, provision of monetary loans to others, endorsements or guarantees for others, and disclosure of financial projections also are subject to disclosure requirements under separate regulations.

Disclosure for Foreign Securities

In General

Like Taiwanese securities, foreign securities listed in Taiwan are subject to disclosure requirements, including duties to make public announcements and to register with the regulatory authority.

Periodic Disclosures

Liquidity Status. After the issuance of stocks, a TWSE or GTSM listed company or emerging stock company must within 10 days after the end of each month submit to the Central Bank a report regarding the liquidity status of its stocks issued in Taiwan.

Insider Shareholding Status. Insiders include a listed company's directors, supervisors, corporate officers, and major shareholders (defined as holding at least a 10 per cent equity stake). Insiders also include these persons' immediate family members and their "nominee shareholders". A nominee shareholder is one created by a person who:

- Directly or indirectly provides shares, or a fund to purchase shares, to the nominee;
- Has the power to control, use, or dispose of the shares under the name of the nominee; and
- Is identified as the ultimate beneficiary of the shares.

Any change in insider shareholding requires advance reporting of the change and follow-up reporting of the resulting change in equity holdings (including any pledges). The issuer must report the insider shareholding status on a monthly basis through the online Market Observation Post System. The issuer company is held liable for any damage caused by incorrect or false information in the insider shareholding report.

Financial Statements

In General. Categories of financial report and filing date are:

- An annual financial report, published and filed within four months following the end of each business year;[37] and
- First, second, or third quarter financial reports, published and filed within 45 days following the end of each first, second, or third quarter of the business year.

Audit Requirements. The annual financial report of a public company must be accompanied by an audit and attestation report issued by two domestic certified public accountants. No certified public accountant audit or review is required for the first, second, or third quarter financial report.

The financial reports must be prepared in accordance with the financial reporting standards adopted in Taiwan, the United States, or otherwise in accordance with international financial reporting standards. The accompanying notes included in financial reports must include an indication of the specific accounting principles used, and, if the financial reports are not prepared under the financial reporting standards of Taiwan, a disclosure of any differences between the applied financial reporting standards and Taiwan's financial reporting standards is required.

The financial reports must be prepared using the New Taiwan Dollar (NTD) as the reporting currency. Each financial report, annual report to shareholders, and related materials must be prepared in Chinese, but an English version also may be included. The financial reports must all bear the signatures or seals of the chairperson and managerial and accounting officers. These persons are also required to issue a statement that the financial reports contain no misrepresentations or nondisclosures.

The TWSE may review the financial reports of primary listed companies either substantively or on a pro forma basis. If a pro forma review by the TWSE reveals that the documentation submitted by a primary listed company is incomplete, or that the certified public accountant audit report contains an opinion other than an unqualified opinion and thus has a significant effect on the financial report of the primary listed company, the TWSE may require the primary listed company to explain specified matters and submit a regulatory filing of the explanatory matters on the online Market Observation Post System and, where necessary, may require the primary listed company to hold an informational press conference.

The TWSE conducts substantive reviews of foreign issuers selected at random. If any material irregularity is found through a substantive review, the TWSE may require the primary listed company or its auditing certified public accountants or lead underwriter, or agent for litigious and non-litigious matters in Taiwan, or independent director(s) to give explanatory information on specified matters and may, in consideration of the actual situation, require the primary listed company to submit a regulatory filing of the explanatory matters on the online Market Observation Post System. Where necessary, the TWSE may require the primary listed company to hold an informational press conference.

The annual report to shareholders must be transmitted to the Market Observation Post System before the regular shareholder meeting. Two hard copies of the annual report also must be sent to the TWSE 30 days before the meeting. If this is not done, the TWSE can notify the foreign primary listed company to file a hard copy with the TWSE, and publicly disclose the failure by alerting investors of an occurrence of an event with material impact on investor interests.

A foreign primary listed company's internal control system must comply with Taiwan's Regulations Governing Establishment of Internal Control Systems by Public Companies except where the laws of the jurisdiction in which it is registered conflict. In the year in which a foreign company completes its IPO in Taiwan and in the next two accounting years, the company is required to file a review report by a certified public accountant on internal controls when filing its annual report.

By the tenth day of each month, a foreign primary listed company also is required to announce on the online Market Observation Post System and report each previous month's loan balances of its head office and subsidiaries and any endorsements made by itself and its subsidiaries.

Material Information and Press Conferences. When there occurs any material event requiring immediate announcement under the securities laws and regulations of the country where the foreign securities are listed or the rules of the listing securities exchange, the information must simultaneously be input to the online Market Observation Post System. This also applies to any event voluntarily announced by the foreign issuer.

Foreign primary listed companies are required to release material information and hold a press conference in compliance with Taiwan Stock Exchange Corporation procedures.[38] The term "material information" for this purpose generally comports with the statutory definition of the same term in article 7 of the Securities and Exchange Act Enforcement Rules.

A foreign issuer is required to call a press conference when there occurs any of the 25 events defined in Article 2 of the Taiwan Stock Exchange Corporation Procedures for Press Conferences Concerning Material Information of Listed Companies.

Before announcing a press conference regarding material information, a listed company must file a report with the TWSE. The TWSE has the power to order the company to delay a press conference. In general, an explanatory press conference should be held before the trading day next following the occurrence of any event or broadcast media report that triggers the need for a press conference. If a foreign primary listed company is required by foreign law to report sooner in the foreign jurisdiction, it may do so simultaneously in Taiwan. Foreign companies also may send a spokesperson or representative to hold a press conference. Press conferences may not be held as videoconferences. Under some exceptional circumstances, a press conference may be held after material information is released.

Penalties. To ensure the accuracy of and general access to relevant information, a listed company may not externally announce any material information prior to inputting the content of the relevant event into the online Market Observation Post System or holding a press conference concerning material information.

If any of the following circumstances applies to a primary or secondary TWSE or GTSM listed company, the TWSE or GTSM may impose on a case-by-case basis a penalty of NT $30,000. However, if the cumulative number of penalties imposed within the most recent year reaches two or more (inclusive of the current penalty), or if the circumstances in an individual case are due to intent or material negligence, or have a material impact on shareholder equity or securities prices, the TWSE or GTSM may impose a penalty of from NT $50,000 to NT $1 million:

- The primary or secondary listed company violates the regulations regarding verification and disclosure of material information;
- The company arbitrarily publishes unconfirmed news or discloses information that diverges from fact; and
- The company fails to submit relevant sampling check materials as required within the time limit set by the TWSE or GTSM.

The TWSE or GTSM may order the violating company to remake the public disclosure within two business days. If, after receiving notice from the TWSE or the GTSM requiring it to hold a press conference, a listed company still fails to do so and the circumstances of the specific case are serious, the TWSE or the GTSM may alter the method of trading, or suspend trading, of the securities of the listed company.

Acquisition and Disposition of Assets

With respect to the acquisition and disposition of company assets, the primary listed company must comply both with the applicable laws and regulations of the foreign listed company's country of registration, and with the Regulations Governing the Acquisition and Disposal of Assets by Public Companies followed by domestic public companies. A public company is required to formulate procedures for the acquisition or disposal of assets and submit the procedures for approval by the supervisors and the shareholders' meeting. Under any of the following circumstances, any acquisition or disposition of assets must be publicly announced on the online Market Observation Post System and reported within two days from the day of occurrence of the event:

- Acquisition of real property from a related party;
- Investment in the PRC;
- Merger, acquisition, or transfer of shares;
- Losses from derivatives trading reaching the limits on aggregate losses or losses on individual contracts set out in the procedures adopted by the company;
- Asset transaction reaching 20 per cent or more of paid-in capital or NT $300 million, but with certain exclusions (eg, trading of government bonds) allowed by regulations.[39]
- Acquisition or disposal by a public company in the construction business of real property for construction use, where the trading counterparty is not a related party, and the transaction amount is less than NT $500 million; and
- Acquisition of land under an arrangement for commissioned construction on self-owned land, joint construction and allocation of housing units, joint construction and allocation of ownership percentages, or joint construction and separate sale, where the amount the company expects to invest in the transaction is less than NT $500 million.

Any error or omission in information that has been publicly announced and registered is required to be corrected.

Loans and Endorsements

A foreign company whose loans of funds reach one of the following levels must announce and report such event within two days from its occurrence:

- The aggregate balance of loans to others by the company and its subsidiaries reaches 20 per cent or more of the company's net worth as stated in its latest financial statement;

39 Regulations Governing the Acquisition and Disposal of Assets by Public Companies, art 30.

- The balance of loans by the company and its subsidiaries to a single enterprise reaches 10 per cent or more of the company's net worth as stated in its latest financial statement; or
- The amount of new loans of funds by the company or its subsidiaries reaches NT $10 million or more, and reaches two per cent or more of the company's net worth as stated in its latest financial statement.

A foreign company whose loans of endorsement reach one of the following levels must announce and report such event within two days from its occurrence:

- The aggregate balance of endorsements by the company and its subsidiaries for other enterprises reaches 50 per cent or more of the company's net worth as stated in its latest financial statement;
- The balance of endorsements by the company and its subsidiaries for a single enterprise reaches 20 per cent or more of the company's net worth as stated in its latest financial statement;
- The balance of endorsements by the company and its subsidiaries for a single enterprise reaches NT $10 million or more and the aggregate amount of all endorsements for, long-term investment in, and balance of loans to, such enterprise reaches 30 per cent or more of the public company's net worth as stated in its latest financial statement; or
- The amount of new endorsements made by the company or its subsidiaries reaches NT $30 million or more and reaches five per cent or more of the company's net worth as stated in its latest financial statement.

Foreign Issuer's Buyback of Outstanding Securities

When a foreign security is repurchased by its foreign issuer, the buyback information must be published on the online Market Observation Post System and in newspapers.

Trading Rules

Insider Trading

In General

Taiwan's Financial Supervisory Commission is generally quite aggressive about controlling insider trading. The Commission has issued detailed guidelines on what constitutes material information. In addition, the Commission proactively steps in when it discovers suspected insider trading. If it believes that illegal acts have been committed, the Commission will turn the case over to law enforcement agencies for investigation. When an investigation results in facts sufficient to indict, the Prosecutor will bring a criminal action against the offenders.

The Securities and Futures Investors Protection Center also may step in to bring a civil class action on behalf of investors who have suffered losses. Where the Center prevails in such an action, any damages awarded, less necessary costs paid by the Center, are allocated proportionally to investors. The Center will not charge the investors joining the class action for court fees or any expenses if it loses the case. Since court fees are calculated as a percentage of the claim (usually approximately one per cent for the first instance) and the loser must pay, court fees can be a significant barrier to civil litigation in Taiwan. In years prior to 2004, convictions were rare in cases of suspected insider trading, and sentences were usually less than one year. However, in 2004, the minimum sentence for insider trading was increased to seven years for illegal trading resulting in profits of NT $100 million or more. In line with this legislative change, insider trading also is now dealt with quite severely by the courts in practice.

Insiders

Insiders are defined as:

- A director, supervisor, or managerial officer of the company, or any natural person designated to exercise powers as a representative of the company;
- A shareholder holding more than 10 per cent of the shares of the company;
- A person who learns of material information in the course of employment or because the person controls operations or personnel of the company;
- A person listed above within six months of having left his insider role; and
- A person who learns of material information from a person listed above.

Prohibited Trading

It is prohibited, upon actually knowing of any material information of the issuing company, after the information is precise, and prior to the public disclosure of the information or within 18 hours after its public disclosure, for an insider to purchase or sell, in the person's own name or in the name of another, any shares, equity-type securities or corporate bonds of the company that are listed on an exchange or over-the-counter market.

For equity-type securities (including shares), the term “material information” means any information that will have a material impact on the price of the securities. This includes information such as that relating to the issuer’s finances or businesses, supply and demand of the securities on the market, or a tender offer for the securities, the specific content of which information will have a material impact on the price of the securities, or will have a material impact on the investment decisions of a reasonably prudent investor.

For corporate bonds, the term “material information” means any information that will have a material impact on the ability of the issuing company to pay principal or interest on the bonds.

Material Information

Material information is that which would have a material impact on the price of the securities or on the investment decisions of a reasonably prudent investor.[40]

Civil Liability

Persons in violation of insider trading restrictions will be held liable, to trading counterparts who on the day of the violation undertook the opposite-side trade with bona fide intent, for damages in the amount of the difference between the buy or sell price and the average closing price for 10 business days after the date of public disclosure. The court also may, upon the request of the counterpart trading in good faith, treble the damages payable by the violator if the violation is of a severe nature. The court may reduce the damages where the violation is minor.

Any person who acts on information learned from an insider(s) will be held jointly and severally liable for damages along with the insider who provided the information. However, if the insider who provided the information had reasonable cause to believe the information had already been publicly disclosed, that insider will not be liable for damages.

The default rule under the Code of Civil Procedure is that civil proceedings must be brought against a defendant in the place where the defendant is domiciled or resident.[41] However, article 15 of the Code carves out an exception for torts: "In matters relating to torts, an action may be initiated in the court for the location where the tortious act occurred."

Since insider trading is an act that gives rise to a tort claim, a foreign insider who trades on such information on the Taiwan securities markets can be sued in Taiwan even if the insider is not domiciled in Taiwan. If the trade is placed through a Taiwan-registered securities firm and executed on the computers of the TWSE or the GTSM, and the conduct and the resulting losses to investors occur in Taiwan, the Taiwan court will have jurisdiction.

Moreover, Taiwan's courts can exercise jurisdiction over insider trading claims even if the insider trading takes place outside of Taiwan if the trading produces substantial effects on Taiwanese markets or investors, as the Taiwan Supreme Court has held that tortious conduct in article 15 means not only the act itself, but also the resulting injury. The amendments to the Securities and Exchange Act adopted in 2012 also expressly provide that a foreign company that lists in Taiwan, whether as a primary or a secondary listing, is subject to the same regulations and supervision as listed domestic companies. Consequently, Taiwan's civil laws on compensation for damages apply to the shares of foreign companies traded in Taiwan.

Criminal Liability

Insider trading is punishable by three to 10 years' imprisonment and fines of from NT $10 million to NT $200 million or greater fines in cases of aggravated insider trading. The Legislature has provided for increased penalties for certain types of aggravated insider trading.

Public Tender Offers

In General

In 1988, the Legislature enacted a new section of the Securities and Exchange Act entitled "Purchase of Securities" and dividing the purchase of securities into market purchase and off-market tender offers. When a purchaser on the TWSE or the GTSM purchases a certain proportion of the shares of a company, the purchaser must report the purchase.

If the purchaser does not purchase the shares on the exchange, the purchaser must follow procedures set up by the Financial Supervisory Commission. These procedures were not issued until 1995 when the regulator at the time released its Regulations Governing Public Tender Offers for Securities of Public Companies.

In general, foreign bidders attempting to take over Taiwanese domestic targets are treated the same as domestic bidders except that they must receive approval for the investment from the Investment Commission under the Ministry of Economics Affairs.

The Investment Commission also acts to protect the interests of Taiwanese investors when it believes that a public tender offer is contrary to those interests. In 2011, for example, the Investment Commission rejected an application to launch a public tender offer for shares in a Taiwan listed technology company because the application came from a joint venture between a private equity fund and the listed company's management team. The investment commission rejected this application because it believed that the private equity fund was too highly leveraged and because the Investment Commission, in consultation with the Financial Supervisory Commission, believed that the offered price lacked transparency. Failure to comply with the requirements relating to public tender offers may give rise to a fine of NT $240,000 to NT $2,400,000. If a juristic person commits the violation, the individual person responsible for the act will be punished.[42]

Normal Public Tender Offers

"Public tender offer" is defined in article 2.1 of the Regulations Governing Public Tender Offers for Securities of Public Companies as a public offer to purchase securities directly from investors, bypassing the TWSE and the GTSM, by a method such as public announcements, letters, electronic media, or the Internet. A securities firm or bank must be retained to deliver the prospectus to offerees, to take delivery of the securities, and to make payments to the selling shareholders. The offer must include the number of shares, the price, and the period of the offer.

Before a public tender offer is made, the offeror is required to publicly announce the offer and file forms and documents relating to the offer with the Financial Supervisory Commission. These filings include the Public Tender Offer Report Form and the prospectus. Once the offeror has acquired the number of shares sought, the offeror must publicly announce that the offer has ended and make a regulatory filing with the Financial Supervisory Commission.

Similarly, the offeror must make a public announcement and regulatory filings with the Financial Supervisory Commission within two days following the public offer expires.

If the tender offer set down the condition that the number of shares sold must reach the number of shares intended to be acquired, the announcement must specify whether that condition has been satisfied. A public company whose securities are being acquired through a public tender offer also must disclose:

- The types, number, and amount of shares currently held by the current directors and supervisors and any shareholders with more than 10 per cent of the company's stocks;
- The recommendation made to the company's shareholders on such tender offer purchase, specifying the names and reasons of every dissenting director;
- Whether there have been any major changes in the company's financial conditions after the delivery of its most recent financial statements, and the content of any such changes; and
- The types, number, and amount of shares of the offeror or its affiliated enterprises held by the current directors, supervisors, or the major shareholders having more than 10 per cent of the shareholding of the target company.

An important policy principle that runs throughout this section is that all investors should be treated fairly during takeovers or acquisitions of substantial minority positions. An offeror must adopt uniform acquisition conditions in the public tender offer and may not make any of the following modifications to the acquisition conditions:

- Lower the public tender offer price;
- Lower the proposed number of securities to be acquired through the public tender offer; and
- Shorten the public tender offer period.[43]

43 The length public tender offer period may not be less than 10 days or more than 50 days. The original offeror may report to the Financial Supervisory Commission and

The offeror may not enter into an agreement or covenant with any specific shareholder of the subject company entitling the shareholder to obtain any special rights after the shareholder's participation in the tender through an offer to sell, so that there might exist any discrepancy in the substantial acquisition conditions among shareholders.[44]

If the number of shares to be sold has exceeded the projected number of shares to be acquired, the offeror must purchase the shares pro rata from all the tenderers, and return to the original tenderers those shares that have been deposited but not yet transacted.[45]

From the date of filing and public announcement until the date of expiration of the public tender offer period, the public tender offeror and its related parties may not purchase the same class of securities of the public company through the centralized securities exchange, on over-the-counter markets, or any other markets, or by any other means.[46]

Simplified Public Tender Offer

In the following situations, the public tender is less likely to result in a change of management control. Consequently, there is less need to protect investors and the duty to report to the regulator and give public notice is obviated. Nonetheless, the other rules for a public tender offer must be followed:

- The number of securities proposed for public tender offer by the offeror plus the total number of securities of the public company already obtained by the offeror and its related parties do not exceed 5 per cent of the total number of voting shares issued by the public company; and
- The securities purchased by the offeror through the public tender offer are securities of a company of which the offeror holds more than 50 per cent of the issued voting shares.

Mandatory Public Tender Offer

In General

In 2002, the Securities and Exchange Act was amended to add regulations on mandatory public tender offers with reference to United Kingdom law. The purpose of the amendment was to avoid large tender offers that would disrupt the market. The amendments also authorized the regulator to decide the number or percentage of shares to be purchased in mandatory public tender offer cases.

make a public announcement of an extension public tender offer period. However, the extension period(s) may not exceed a total of 30 days.

44 Securities and Exchange Act, art 43-2; Regulations Governing Public Tender Offers for Securities of Public Companies, art 7-1.

45 Regulations Governing Public Tender Offers for Securities of Public Companies, art 23.

46 Securities and Exchange Act, art 43-3.

If a person independently or jointly with any other persons proposes to acquire a certain percentage of the total issued shares of a public company, the acquisition must be made by means of a public tender offer, unless certain conditions are satisfied.[47]

Article 11 of the Regulations Governing Public Tender Offers for Securities of Public Companies provides that any person who individually or jointly with any other persons intends to acquire within 50 days shares accounting for 20 per cent or more of the total issued shares of a public company must employ a public tender offer to do so.

Although Taiwan considered United Kingdom precedents in making this rule, it also obviously departed from its model. In particular, mandatory public tender offers in Taiwan do not require the purchaser to buy all the shares tendered. But, if the number of shares tendered by all offerees exceeds the number of shares specified in the tender offer, the purchaser must buy from each offeree in proportion to the size of their tender.

Exemptions

There are several exemptions to the mandatory public tender offer rules, including:

- Transfer of shares between affiliates;
- Shares obtained through auction under the Taiwan Stock Exchange Corporation Regulations Governing Auction of Listed Securities by Consignment;
- Shares obtained through on-market tender offer (reverse auction) under the Taiwan Stock Exchange Corporation Rules Governing Purchase of Listed Securities by On-Market Tender Offer or under the GreTai Securities Market Rules Governing Purchase of OTC Securities by On-market Tender Offer;
- Shares obtained from a public company's director, supervisor, manager, or a shareholder holding 10 per cent of outstanding shares under Article 22-2.1.3 of the Securities and Exchange Act; and
- Implementing a share exchange in which new shares are issued to serve as the consideration for acquiring the shares of another public company.

Civil Liability

Duty of Impartiality

A public tender offeror that breaches the duty to offer all investors the same terms is liable for damages to the tenderer up to the amount of the difference between the highest price paid under the public tender offer and the price paid to the tenderer, multiplied by the number of shares purchased.[48]

47 Securities and Exchange Act art, 43-1.3.
48 Securities and Exchange Act art, 43-2.2.

Duty to Acquire Shares Only through Public Offer

A public tender offeror who breaches the duty not to acquire shares during the public offering period by means other than those specified in the public offer (ie, on the market) must be liable to the tendering investors for damages up to the amount of the difference between the price paid for the securities purchased through other means and the price under the public tender offer, multiplied by the number of shares subscribed.[49]

False Information or Omission

A public tender offeror who fails to deliver the prospectus to the tenderer or the prospectus contains false information or omissions in its material contents will be held liable for the compensation of damages sustained by any bona fide counterpart.[50]

Criminal Liability

False Information or Omission

If a public tender offeror make false statements in account books, forms/statements, vouchers, financial reports, or any other business documents as required to be produced for compliance purposes, the public offeror can be fined up to NT $20 million and a sentence of one to seven years can be imposed on the responsible person(s).[51]

Failure to Deliver Prospectus

Failure to deliver a prospectus to the tenderers also is a criminal offense and can be punished by imprisonment for up to one year, detention, and/or a fine of up to NT $1.2 million.

Other Violations

Failure to comply with regulations relating to public tender offers as specified below is punishable by imprisonment for up to two years, detention, and/or a fine of up to NT $1.8 million:

- Failure to report to the Financial Supervisory Commission and make a public announcement as required by regulations prior to the public tender offer;
- Failure to employ a public tender offer if any person independently or jointly with any other persons plans within 50 days to acquire 20 per cent of the total issued shares of a public company; and
- Failure to comply with the orders from the regulator if, to protect the public interest, the regulator orders the public tender offeror to change matters set out in the public tender announcement and to re-file and re-publish the public notice thereof.[52]

49 Securities and Exchange Act art, 43-3.2.
50 Securities and Exchange Act, art 43-4.3.
51 Securities and Exchange Act, art 175.1.5.

Foreign purchasers employing public tender offers are also subject to applicable civil and criminal liability under Taiwan law. Any form of public announcement, whether by advertisement, radio broadcast, telecommunication, letter, telephone, presentation, explanation, or delivery, is considered to be a public offer if most of the offerees are in the territory of Taiwan.

Conclusion

Taiwan's securities regulations will continue to liberalize and be open to increased internationalization over time. The government regularly refers to the law and practice in other leading jurisdictions in revising Taiwan's laws and regulations.

The pace of this trend, however, has been deliberately moderate, as the regulators want to ensure that the interests of individual investors, and the securities market as a whole, are protected. In light of the recent financial crisis that has swept many securities markets around the world over the past few years, it is unlikely that the pace of liberalization of Taiwan's securities regulations will increase in the short term.

Introduction

The purpose of this chapter is to provide the reader with a view of the regulatory system relating to securities in England. Everything in this chapter relates equally to Wales, and most of what is set out also will apply to Northern Ireland and Scotland, although there are differences which are not dealt with here.

The English regulatory system is undergoing a period of considerable change with the introduction of the Financial Services Authority (FSA) to replace the Securities and Investment Board. The scale of change is apparent from the fact that the Financial Services Authority will take over from the Bank of England responsibility for supervising banks, listed money market institutions, and related clearing houses.

The area covered by this chapter is large. In a sophisticated and developed market which is the English securities market, any subject heading in this chapter could alone be the subject of a book and, indeed, most of them have been. Accordingly, the authors have sought to focus on the principal rules, regulations, and practices relating to them.

The New Regulatory Regime

In General

The draft Financial Services and Markets Bill, introduced into Parliament in June 1999, is a substantial piece of legislation. It sets out a framework for market regulation, leaving much of the detailed substantive provisions to secondary legislation.

The draft Bill will establish a single regulatory regime for all kinds of financial services and a single statutory regulatory, the FSA, to replace the existing financial services regulators, including the self-regulatory organisations.

The draft Bill controls regulated activities. Carrying on any regulated activity without authorisation or exemption will be a criminal offence, and contracts entered into without authorisation or exemption will be unenforceable by the financial services provider.

Once authorised status is granted, a firm will obtain permission to engage in one or more regulated activities. A firm carrying on regulated activities for which it has no permission will be subject to disciplinary action, and it may lose its authorisation.

There is a new regime in the draft Bill for marketing, advertising, and cold-calling. The draft Bill proposes that all kinds of financial preparation be subject to a single regime so that advertising, solicited calls, and unsolicited calls will all be regulated together. It will be a criminal offence for an unauthorised person to issue a communication which contains an invitation or inducement to engage in regulated activities unless that communication is approved by an authorised person.

The draft Bill will broadly continue the regime for recognised investment exchanges and clearing houses under the Financial Services Act 1986, although the FSA's powers under the draft Bill will be widened as compared with those under the current legislation. The FSA will have powers to regulate the Lloyds Insurance market and powers of direction over the Council of Lloyds, although the latter will retain its responsibilities under the Lloyds Act for the superintendents and governors of the society of Lloyds.

The recognised professional bodies regime under the FSA Act 1986 will not continue. The draft Bill gives the FSA a wide range of enforcement powers for breach of its rule.

Steps Taken

Since the government announced its proposals to introduce legislation to reform the regulation of financial services in May 1997, steps have been taken to transfer responsibility for regulation to the FSA.[1]

In other cases, the FSA has entered into contracts with the relevant bodies to perform regulatory functions on their behalf. For example, the Treasury has contracted with the FSA for the performance of certain functions under the Insurance Companies Act 1982. Many relevant staff have become employers of the FSA in the meantime and relocated to the FSA Headquarters. This process of integration will be completed when the Bill is enacted.

United Kingdom Regulatory System

In General

Overview of Financial Services Act 1986

The Financial Services Act 1986 created a new and comprehensive system for the regulation of investment business in the United Kingdom. The Financial Services Act 1986, as amended by the Companies Act 1989, lays down a regulatory scheme by which a person may be permitted to carry on investment business in the United Kingdom. Section 3 of the Financial Services Act 1986 provides that no person may carry on or purport to carry on 'investment business' in the United Kingdom unless he is an 'authorised person' under chapter III or an 'exempted person' under chapter IV of Part 1 of the Financial Services Act 1986. Investments covered by the Financial Services Act 1986 include:

- Shares;
- Debentures;

1 Certain functions under the Banking Act 1987 have been transferred by the Bank of England 1998.

- Government and public securities;
- Instruments entitling the holder to shares or securities;
- Certificates representing securities;
- Units in a collective investment scheme; and
- Options, futures, contracts for difference, long-term insurance contracts, and rights and interests in investments.

Investment business activities include:

- Dealing or arranging deals in investments;
- Managing investments;
- Giving investment advice; and
- Establishing and operating collective investment schemes.

Regulatory Framework

Securities and Investments Board. The Financial Services Act 1986 gives almost all its powers of regulation to HM Treasury and the Secretary of State. Most of the Secretary of State's functions have been transferred to the Securities and Investments Board as his 'designated agency'. The Securities and Investments Board is the overseer of the regulatory structure established under the Financial Services Act 1986 and issues rules on the standards of conduct of investment business, financial supervision, and the protection of client money. The Securities and Investments Board has a status and powers under the Financial Services Act 1986 that make it comparable with the Securities Exchange Commission in the United States.

Securities and Investments Board Principles. The first tier of the Securities and Investments Board's regulation is set out in the Statements of Principle, a broadly worded set of principles concerning the conduct of business and financial standards. They are directly binding on all authorised persons, and they are enforceable only by the self-regulating organisations (see text, below) only, not by the investors. They require an authorised firm to:

- Observe high standards of integrity and fair dealing;
- Act with due skill, care, and diligence;
- Observe high standards of market conduct;
- Seek any information from its customers about the circumstances and investment objectives of such customers that might be relevant in enabling it to fulfil its responsibilities to them;
- Take reasonable steps to give customers comprehensive and timely information;
- Avoid conflicts of interest;
- Arrange proper protection for customers' assets;
- Maintain adequate financial resources to meet its investment business commitments;
- Organise and control its internal affairs in a responsible manner; and

- Deal with its regulator in an open and co-operative manner and keep the regulator promptly informed of anything concerning the firm which might reasonably be expected to be disclosed to the regulator.

Securities and Investments Board Core Rules. The next tier of regulation is the Securities and Investments Board's designated rules (including the Core Conduct of Business Rules and the Client Money Regulations).

Conduct of Business Rules and the Financial Regulations. The third and most complex tier of regulation comprises the conduct of business rules and financial regulations. The Securities and Investments Board has written rules and regulations that apply to directly regulated firms. Broadly, the rules cover the conduct of investment business (eg, the contents of investor agreements, fair dealing, marketing of investments, unsolicited calling, compliance arrangements, and record-keeping). There also are rules covering client money and financial resources requirements. In fixing minimum financial resources requirements, the regulators have divided businesses into different categories, which reflect the risk relating to the particular business activity. The regulations also reflect the minimum capital requirements set out in the European Community (EC) Investment Services Directive.

In addition to maintaining minimum capital requirements, firms must submit regular financial statements to their regulator. These consist of annual audited statements and, depending on the regulator, mid-year, quarterly, and monthly reports. The Securities and Investments Board also has written rules that have general application covering unsolicited calls, cooling-off periods for life assurance policies, and the marketing of unregulated funds.

Securities and Investments Board Register. The Securities and Investments Board maintains a central register that contains details of authorised persons. The register can be accessed by telephone or through Prestel.

Self-Regulating Organisations

In General. As stated above, the Financial Services Act 1986 creates tiers of regulation, and beneath the Securities and Investments Board are a number of self-regulating organisations. The self-regulating organisations consist of the following non-state-funded private companies:

- The Securities and Futures Authority;
- The Personal Investment Authority; and
- The Investment Management Regulatory Organisation.

To become a self-regulating organisation, a company must meet the requirements of Schedule 2 of the Financial Services Act 1986. Broadly, a self-regulating organisation must have rules and practices to ensure that its members will be honest, competent, solvent, and 'fit and proper' persons to carry on the investment business that it regulates. The following is a summary of the Schedule 2 requirements:

- Fair and reasonable rules for admission and expulsion of members together with disciplinary procedures;
- Rules ensuring an adequate level of investor protection;
- Adequate arrangements and resources to ensure compliance with its rules; and
- Effective arrangements for investigating complaints against its members.

A self-regulating organisation also must promote and maintain high standards of integrity and fair dealing in the carrying on of investment business and be prepared to co-operate with other regulators. Each self-regulating organisation regulates a different area of investment business, although there are some areas of overlap. Although membership of a single self-regulating organisation confers the status of 'authorised person' under the Financial Services Act 1986, each self-regulating organisation has rules prohibiting its members from doing any investment business other than that for which they are regulated by that self-regulating organisation, unless they are members of another self-regulating organisation which regulates that other business (or are directly authorised by the Securities and Investments Board).

Self-regulating organisations operate like members' clubs; the relationship with their members is contractual. Under the contract, each member agrees to comply with the rules of the self-regulating organisations (eg, rules covering conduct of business, client money, and financial arrangements).

Securities and Futures Authority. The Securities and Futures Authority regulates most types of investment business within the meaning of the Financial Services Act 1986. Its regulatory scope includes:

- Dealing, arranging deals, and advising on deals in investments;
- Managing investment accounts and portfolios; and
- Corporate finance activities.

Members of the Securities and Futures Authority typically include banks, securities and derivatives brokers, and clearing firms.

Personal Investment Authority. The Personal Investment Authority is the single regulator of the retail financial sector. It regulates independent intermediaries and the marketing of insurance and pension products by product providers. The types of activity regulated by the Personal Investment Authority include dealing, arranging deals in, managing, and advising on the following types of investments:

- Shares, warrants, and debt instruments (with exceptions, including those that are not readily realisable);
- Units in collective investment schemes;

- Life policies, pensions, and annuity contracts (falling within paragraph 10 of Schedule 1 of the Financial Services Act 1986); and
- Certain derivatives (eg, where used for the purposes of efficiently managing a portfolio of securities).

Investment Management Regulatory Organisation. The Investment Management Regulatory Organisation is principally concerned with the regulation of persons who manage the investments of others. Members typically include investment managers of institutional customers, pension fund managers (and trustees to the extent that the pension fund needs authorisation), and managers and trustees of collective investment schemes (eg, unit trusts). However, those persons who provide discretionary management services to retail customers can join the Personal Investment Authority or, where the investments are options, futures, or contracts for differences, the Securities and Futures Authority.

Recognised Professional Bodies, Investment Exchanges, and Clearing Houses

Certain professional bodies which have been recognised under the Financial Services Act 1986 ('recognised professional bodies') also are involved in the regulatory process. These bodies regulate investment business carried out by their members, thus the Law Society regulates solicitors. The exchanges and clearing houses recognised under the Financial Services Act 1986 are called recognised investment exchanges and recognised clearing houses, both of which also carry out certain regulatory functions.

These include the London Stock Exchange and the United Kingdom futures and options exchanges. The Chicago Mercantile Exchange and NASDAQ are examples of overseas exchanges which are recognised investment exchanges. CREST (the electronic paperless settlement system) is regulated as a recognised clearing house.

Identity of Authorised and Exempted Persons

The following are 'authorised persons' under the Financial Services Act 1986:

- Members of self-regulating organisations;
- Members of a recognised professional body, having an appropriate certificate from it;
- Persons directly authorised by the Securities and Investments Board;
- Insurance companies authorised to do investment business under the Insurance Companies Act 1982;
- Certain operators and trustees of European Union (EU) collective investment schemes;
- Certain persons authorised in the European Economic Area (EEA); and
- Certain persons authorised by the Secretary of State.

The following are the principal exempted persons:

- The Bank of England;
- Recognised investment exchanges;
- Recognised clearing houses;

- Recognised overseas investment exchanges and clearing houses;
- Society of Lloyd's and Lloyd's underwriters;
- Listed wholesale money market institutions; and
- Appointed representatives.

Current Review of Regulatory System

Shortly after the current government assumed office, the Chancellor, Gordon Brown, announced a simplification and reform of the regulatory structure on 20 May 1997. He commented that the division of responsibility between the Securities and Investments Board and the self-regulating organisations was inefficient and confusing and that there was a lack of accountability and clear allocation of responsibilities. The object of the reform was to have a new single regulator. Mr Brown also stated that the responsibility for banking regulation would be moved to the new regulator so that banking regulation would be combined with financial services regulation.

The new single regulator is the Financial Services Authority. The Financial Services Authority, which in corporate and legal terms is the Securities and Investments Board renamed, is a company limited by guarantee. It will acquire its full range of responsibilities in two stages, following the enactment of the necessary two pieces of legislation.

First, the Bank of England Bill will transfer to the Financial Services Authority responsibility for supervising banks, listed money market institutions, and related clearing houses. It was expected that the Financial Services Authority would acquire its new powers to supervise banks in April 1998. Second, the proposed financial regulatory reform Bill will create a new statutory regime under which the Financial Services Authority, in broad terms, will acquire the regulatory and registration functions currently exercised by the self-regulating organisations, the Department of Trade and Industry Insurance Directorate, the Building Societies Commission, the Friendly Societies Commission, and the Registry of Friendly Societies. The Financial Services Authority also will be given responsibility for the authorisation of firms currently authorised to do investment business by virtue of their membership of a recognised professional body. The government has indicated its intention to publish this Bill in draft, for consultation, in the summer of 1998 which might lead to enactment in 1999.

The financial regulatory reform Bill will set out a framework designed to deliver the government's aim of creating a regulator that is clearly accountable to the government and to parliament and that will provide a rationalisation of existing requirements and arrangements. An important element in these arrangements will be the inclusion in the legislation of statutory objectives for the Financial Services Authority in five main areas, namely:

- Sustaining confidence in the United Kingdom financial sector and markets;
- Protecting consumers by ensuring that firms are competent and financially sound and give their customers confidence in their integrity, while recognising consumers' own responsibility for their financial decisions;

- Promoting improvement in public understanding of the benefits and risk associated with financial products;
- Monitoring, detecting, and preventing financial crime; and
- Pursuing its objectives in a way which (a) is efficient and economic and ensures that costs and restrictions on firms are proportionate to the benefits of regulation, (b) facilitates innovation in financial services, and (c) takes account of the international nature of financial regulation and the financial services business.

It is envisaged that the legislation will deal with such matters as the requirements for authorisation to conduct regulated business, sanctions for conducting financial business without the necessary authorisation, and arrangements for firms that are currently authorised.

Foreign Perspective

In General

As a result of United Kingdom regulations implementing the EC Second Banking Co-ordination Directive and the Investment Services Directive, certain European credit institutions and investment firms do not require authorisation under the Financial Services Act 1986, as they have 'passports' conferred by these Directives. European institutions and firms are entitled to such 'passports' where they carry on the activities specified in the Annexes to the Directives in the United Kingdom, either through a branch or on a crossborder basis.

However, a European credit institution or investment firm carrying on such activities in the United Kingdom must comply with the notification procedures set out in the relevant Directive. These procedures involve notifying the firm's home state regulator, which then passes on the notification to the relevant United Kingdom authority, whether or not another exemption or exclusion would have been available to it in respect of those activities. A European institution or investment firm may still need to become an authorised or exempted person under the Financial Services Act 1986 if its activities go beyond those covered by the passport. Thus, it may still be subject to United Kingdom conduct of business and other rules in relation to its United Kingdom investment business.

United Kingdom investment firms also have the benefit of the 'passport' regime for business done by them in other member states of the EEA. United Kingdom-incorporated, authorised, or exempted persons providing 'core investment services' will generally be investment firms under the Investment Services Directive. They will be able to conduct the activities listed in the Annexes to the Investment Services Directive in other member states (via a branch or on a crossborder basis) without being required to obtain a local authorisation, although they may be subject to local conduct of business and other rules. Authorised or exempted persons who conduct listed activities in another member state of the EEA will usually be required to notify the relevant United Kingdom authority before commencing such business.

Under the New Regime

The Financial Services Authority will continue to apply the passporting procedures under the Directives relating to branches of institutions from countries in the EEA. The Financial Services Authority states that it will play an active role in international regulatory co-operation and policy development. It will participate in relevant international regulatory organisations and forums, with a view to enhancing its ability to carry out its functions in the increasingly international environment in which its regulated firms operate. The Financial Services Authority will develop and maintain an economic research capacity covering both the United Kingdom and overseas economies.

The constituent bodies that will make up the Financial Services Authority already have established arrangements for dealing with overseas counterparts on authorisation, supervision, enforcement, and policy matters. The Financial Services Authority will seek to build on and strengthen these arrangements. Work is currently under way to transfer to the Financial Services Authority at the date which it acquires its powers to supervise banks, the memoranda of understanding concerning supervisory matters which the Bank of England has with banking and other authorities around the world. By the time that the Financial Services Authority acquires its full range of powers under the financial regulatory reform Bill, it also will aim to replace the numerous memoranda of understanding and other co-operative arrangements that currently exist between the constituent organisations and their international counterparts with corresponding arrangements.

Legal Sources

In General

The principal market for the listing of securities in the United Kingdom is the London Stock Exchange. The statutory regime governing the listing of securities on the London Stock Exchange has evolved over many years. In particular, it has been altered recently in response to various EC Directives. The relevant EC Directives are:

- The Admissions Directive;
- The Listing Particulars Directive;
- The Interim Reports Directive; and
- The Public Offer Directive.

The first three Directives were implemented by the Financial Securities Act 1986, Part IV, and the Public Offer Directive was implemented by the Public Offer of Securities Regulations 1995. Any public offer of securities on the London Stock Exchange, therefore, is governed by the Public Offer of Securities Regulations, the Financial Services Act 1986, or the Listing Rules which are issued by the London Stock Exchange itself.

If an offer is of investments that are neither listed nor the subject of an application for listing, then it will be governed partly by the Public Offer of Securities Regulations and partly by the Financial Services Act 1986. If an offer is of investments that are listed or are the subject of an application for listing, then it will be governed by the Financial Services Act 1986 and the Listing Rules. Securities listed on the Alternative Investment Market are subject to the Public Offer of Securities Regulations.

The Regulations require that the offer document or prospectus must be filed with the Registrar of Companies and then published. It must contain sufficient detailed information on the company and its securities to enable a potential investor to make an informed assessment as to whether or not to subscribe for securities in the company.

The three Directives were implemented to ensure minimum requirements throughout the EU, both as to the conditions to be met to obtain a listing on any exchange within any member state and as to the continuing obligations of the issuer following admission. EU member states nevertheless may impose more stringent or additional requirements such that securities may be listed in one member state but still be refused listing in another.

Listing Rules

Each member state is required to nominate an authority that is competent to regulate the admission of securities for listing. For the United Kingdom, this is the London Stock Exchange, and the majority of rules governing listing are found in the Listing Rules of the London Stock Exchange in its capacity as the competent authority. The Listing Rules are given force of law by Part IV of the Financial Services Act 1986, and they are found in the 'Yellow Book' issued by the London Stock Exchange. The guiding principles of the Listing Rules, as set out in the introduction to the Yellow Book, are as follows:

- The London Stock Exchange seeks a balance between providing issuers with ready access to the market for their security and protecting investors;
- Securities will be admitted to listing only if the London Stock Exchange is satisfied that the applicant is suitable and it is appropriate for the security to be publicly held and traded;
- Securities should be brought to the market in a way that is appropriate to their nature and number and will facilitate an open and sufficient market for trading in those securities;
- An issuer must make full and timely disclosure about itself and its listing securities, both at the time of listing and subsequently;
- The Listing Rules, and in particular the continuing obligations therein, should promote investor confidence in the standard of disclosure, the conduct of listed companies' affairs, and in the market as a whole; and
- Shareholders should be given adequate opportunity to consider in advance and vote on major changes in the company's business operations and matters of importance concerning the company's management and constitution.

Public Offer

Schedule 11A of the Financial Services Act 1986, inserted by the Public Offer of Securities Regulations, defines what is meant by an offer of securities to the public in the United Kingdom, and it requires that a prospectus be issued by the issuer of the securities whether or not they are issued on the Official List of the London Stock Exchange or on the Alternative Investment Market.

A prospectus produced outside the United Kingdom will be recognised in the United Kingdom if the document in question is approved by the competent authority of another member state and is to be used in the United Kingdom. Equally, reciprocal arrangements apply to prospectuses produced in the United Kingdom; if approved by the London Stock Exchange, they will be recognised for use in relation to the issue of securities in any other member state.

Legal Order and Regulatory Interests

Market Participants

London Stock Exchange

In General. From its inception, the primary objective of the London Stock Exchange has been to provide facilities for buying, selling, and dealing in securities.[2] It continues to have a pre-eminent role in the equity marketplace, both as a dominant force in the cash market trades of United Kingdom equities and as the leading international exchange for the trading of foreign shares.

> Today's equity market is more sophisticated and diverse than ever before. For any equity risk there are now many different ways of dealing — not only through the traditional cash markets, but through American Depositary Receipts, warrants, convertible bonds, single equity and index futures and options and through contracts for differences. Moreover, investors can often choose where they deal and whether they deal on exchange or over the counter.[3]

Admissions to Listings. The London Stock Exchange has a statutory duty under both the Financial Services Act 1986 and the EC Directives to maintain orderly markets and to require issuers to provide information to ensure the smooth operation of the markets.

As 'competent authority' under the Financial Services Act 1986, the London Stock Exchange has responsibility for admitting to listing those securities ('the Part IV Securities') to its Official List that are covered by Part IV of the Financial Services Act 1986 (as amended by the Public Office of Securities Regulations 1995). The Listing Rules of the London Stock Exchange govern admissions to listing, the continuing obligations of issuers, the enforcement of those obligations, and the suspension and cancellation of the listings. The Financial Services Act 1986 provides that no Part IV Securities can be admitted to the Official List of the London Stock Exchange except in accordance with the provisions of Part IV. This gives statutory authority to the Listing Rules. The Rules reflect:

- Requirements that are mandatory under the EC Directives;
- Additional requirements of the London Stock Exchange under its powers as competent authority in relation to Part IV Securities; and
- Corresponding requirements in relation to other securities admitted to listing.

3 Securities Investment Board, 'Regulation of the United Kingdom Equity Markets', United Kingdom Equity Markets Regulation Reports.

The London Stock Exchange also may admit to listing certain securities to which Part IV does not apply, principally gilt-edged securities, ie, the government-issued bonds. These admissions are on a non-statutory basis. Part IV does not apply to securities which, rather than being listed, are dealt in on the Alternative Investment Market of the London Stock Exchange or on Trade-Point, or which are listed or quoted on an overseas stock exchange rather than in London. The headquarters of the London Stock Exchange are at the Stock Exchange Building, London, EC2N 1HP. There are trading floors operating in London, Birmingham, Dublin, Glasgow, and Liverpool.

Compliance with Directives. The Council of the London Stock Exchange is the competent authority for the purposes of ensuring compliance with certain EC Directives relating to listed securities.[4]

Representation. All applicants for listing must be represented by a securities house that sponsors the listing and provides the formal link between the company and the London Stock Exchange. The sponsor takes a leading role in presenting the company's case to the Stock Exchange and in arranging for the marketing of shares, underwriting, and sub-underwriting when necessary. It will provide an ongoing service to assist the company in meeting its continuing obligations as outlined in the Listing Rules.

Alternative Investment Market

The Alternative Investment Market is a market operated by the London Stock Exchange designed to serve small, young, and growing companies. It enables businesses to raise capital by gaining access to public finance, even though the company may not be ready to, or wish to, join the London Stock Exchange's Official List.

The company does not need to be a particular size or demonstrate a particular trading history. Nor is it a requirement that a certain percentage of its shares be held by the public. The market, however, is regulated by the London Stock Exchange and, although the process of admission has been simplified, there are conditions that must be satisfied at all times, including a Model Code restricting dealing in the company's shares by directors and employees at certain times.

Other Domestic and Overseas Exchanges

Exchanges

The Financial Services Act 1986 allows any corporate or unincorporated body to apply to the Securities and Investments Board for recognition as an 'investment exchange'.[5] The following are recognised investment exchanges:

- The International Petroleum Exchange;
- The London International Financial Futures and Options Exchange;

4 Stock Exchange Listing Regulations 1984, regs 2(1) and 4(1).
5 Financial Services Act 1986, s 37.

- The London Metals Exchange;
- The London Securities and Derivatives Exchange;
- The London Stock Exchange; and
- Trade-Point Financial Networks PLC, an exchange providing an order-driven dealing service in securities.

Clearing Houses

A clearing house has the function of providing clearing services in respect of transactions effected on an investment exchange. The Securities and Investments Board has recognised the following clearing houses:

- The London Clearing House; and
- CrestCo Ltd.

Overseas Investment Exchanges and Clearing Houses

As stated earlier, overseas investment exchanges and clearing houses may be recognised by the Treasury under the Financial Services Act 1986. The investment exchanges that have been recognised include:

- The Belgian Futures and Options Exchange;
- The Chicago Board of Trade;
- The Chicago Mercantile Exchange;
- Delta Government Options Corp;
- France's MATIF and MONEP;
- Spain's MEFF Renta Fija and MEFF Renta Variable;
- The National Association of Securities Dealers Automated Quotations Inc (NASDAQ);
- The New York Mercantile Exchange;
- The Paris Stock Exchange;
- The Stockholm Stock Exchange; and
- The Sydney Futures Exchange.

Designated Overseas Exchanges

The Securities and Investments Board has a list of 'designated' overseas exchanges that are considered by the Securities and Investments Board to provide protection for investors of an equivalent standard to that of the recognised investment exchanges. Transactions on these exchanges are regarded as if they had taken place on a recognised exchange for the purpose of the Securities and Investments Board Conduct of Business Rules. There are several dozen such exchanges set out in a schedule, which varies from time to time.

Electronic Trading Systems

In General. Electronic information and dealing systems have changed the character and operation of the securities markets to a significant extent.

Stock Exchange Automated Quotations Systems. Stock Exchange Automated Quotations Systems was introduced in October 1986. This established a computerised price quotation system along the same lines as the NASDAQ system in the United States.

Stock Exchange Automated Quotations Systems is not in itself a dealing system, but only an information system. Prices are displayed on a continuously updated basis and transactions are executed by telephone, on the floor of the Exchange, or through the electronic dealing system, CREST.

Stock Exchange Automated Quotations System International. Stock Exchange Automated Quotations Systems International is a screen-based quotation, price collection, and distribution system in non-United Kingdom equity securities which is operated by the London Stock Exchange. Since its inception in June 1985, Stock Exchange Automated Quotations Systems International has grown to be the world's largest market for international securities.

A listing in London is not a requirement for a non-United Kingdom security to be quoted on Stock Exchange Automated Quotations Systems International. However, the majority of the most actively traded stocks on Stock Exchange Automated Quotations Systems International are listed in London, as it is by virtue of listing that a company enters into a continuing direct relationship with the London Stock Exchange. Once listed, the non-United Kingdom company will provide company information to the marketplace through the London Stock Exchange Regulatory News Service.

Stock Exchange Automated Quotations Systems Automatic Execution Facility. The Stock Exchange Automated Quotations Systems Automatic Execution Facility was introduced in 1989. It allows the dealing of small orders in a limited number of shares by means of a computer terminal without having to telephone the market-maker. A stock broker enters the deal on a terminal link with Stock Exchange Automated Quotations Systems, and it is executed at the touch price with the market-maker who is quoting the price.

London Stock Exchange Electronic Trading System. The London Stock Exchange Electronic Trading System is the sometimes referred to as the 'Order Book'. It was introduced on 20 October 1997. It provides an order-driven service for listed securities in The Financial Times Stock Exchange 100 Index ('FTSE 100'). It has replaced the quote-driven market system, and it is now the central trading mechanism for those securities. Large transactions (ie, those involving 1,000 or more shares, or at least 500 shares worth more than £5 each) are processed through London Stock Exchange Electronic Trading System.

Orders are entered onto the system with details as to the spread of prices at which the firm is prepared to buy or sell, as the case may be, and the system automatically matches the orders. If there is no match, the order remains on the system until it is either matched or returned to the ordering firm. Reuters, Bloomberg, and ITV provide links to the system for approximately 200 brokers. The securities of listed companies outside the FTSE 100 will continue to be dealt with through the quote-driven system, with market-makers who are obliged to quote two-way prices.

Regulatory News Service. The Regulatory News Service is the London Stock Exchange's mechanism for the receipt and dissemination to the market of regulated announcements provided by companies in accordance with the Listing Rules. The key features of this service for companies are:

- The London Stock Exchange's computer-readable feed, which provides simultaneous dissemination of the full text of announcements to all subscribers to the Regulatory News Service;
- A computerised system to validate the source of announcements; and
- The provision by the London Stock Exchange of telephone confirmation of the release of an announcement.

CREST. 'CREST' is a computerised book-entry settlement system established by CRESTCo under the aegis of the Bank of England which can be extended to gilts and other markets. Book-entry systems work best if the securities are dematerialised (ie, not in paper form), but this is optional for investors, as is joining CREST for quoted companies.

CREST acts as a settlement system for both United Kingdom and Irish securities. It allows members to take advantage of the effective delivery versus payment provided by CREST in sterling and in Irish pounds. From the end of September 1997, CREST has provided a new facility for the settlement of CREST securities (and residuals) in United States dollars.[6]

CREST is proposing to develop links with other European securities depositories to enable participants to hold and settle foreign securities (ie, other than securities of Ireland, the United Kingdom, and the Isle of Man). The introduction of a monetary union in the EU in 1999 is expected to enable participants to increase crossborder activity in securities trading and to heighten the need for efficient cross border facilities for the holding and settlement of securities. CREST has proposals to make it as easy for members to settle foreign securities as domestic securities. Initially, crossborder movements will be on a free-of-payment basis only (although transactions within CREST will be able to use the full range of facilities). CREST is designing crossborder links so that they can also operate on a delivery versus payment basis in the future.[7]

6 CREST, Settlement of Dollars in CREST (June,1998).
7 CREST, Crossborder Settlement (December 1997).

International Market Association. The International Market Association (ISMA) plans to introduce a 24-hour, electronic, order-driven trading service for international fixed-income securities. The new system, named Coredeal, is expected to be operational at the end of 1998. It will enable international bonds, warrants, and global depository receipts to be traded without the identity of the participants being revealed.

The service will include the advertising and matching of orders and the execution of trades. It also will allow users to negotiate prices and amend the advertised details of the deal and will provide for automatic reporting to TRAX (ISMA's confirmation, risk-management, and regulatory system).[8]

Internet Foreign Exchange Trading Company

Since 1 March 1996, firms providing speculative currency services have had to gain authorisation if their activities fall within the definition of 'investment business' in the Financial Services Act 1986.

As an example, Currency Management Corp is the ninth company to be authorised by the Securities and Futures Authority to provide foreign exchange services. The firm's customers access its Internet site using a personal computer and a modem. The site displays market prices for currencies. together with the price offered by Currency Management Corp. Customers place orders by clicking on the selected Currency Management Corp price.

The firm is not authorised to trade for private investors. Individuals wanting to trade must satisfy the firm that they have the requisite experience and expertise. In addition, a minimum US $20,000 margin deposit is required for opening an account.[9]

Effect of European Monetary Union

London Stock Exchange. The London Stock Exchange has published proposals for trading in the United Kingdom's equity and fixed interest markets under the European Monetary Union. The London Stock Exchange's proposals include:

- A parallel euro order book facility for the most liquid stocks traded on the London Stock Exchange electronic trading service (ie, the London Stock Exchange Electronic Trading System) so that trading can take place in sterling or euros;[10]
- Price quotations on Stock Exchange Automated Quotations Systems International in euros for securities from countries participating in the European Monetary Union; and
- Facilities to trade fixed interest securities in either sterling or euros.[11]

8 ISMA News Release 98/1 (22 January 1998).
9 The Financial Times (24 March 1997).
10 All other United Kingdom securities will be quoted in sterling until the United Kingdom enters the European Monetary Union or investors demand changes.
11 London Stock Exchange News Release 2/98 (13 February 1998); London Stock Exchange, Consultation Paper: Economic and Monetary Union — Proposals for the Equity Markets.

CREST. CREST acts as a settlement system for both United Kingdom and Irish securities. Therefore, it must plan for the introduction of the euro for both a participating country (Ireland) and a non-participating country (the United Kingdom). When the euro becomes legal tender on 1 January 1999, participating countries will lock their conversion rates and enter into a single monetary policy. CREST will be affected in two areas, ie, payments and securities.

CREST already settles against payment in more than one currency (ie, sterling, Irish pounds, and United States dollars), and thus envisages no difficulty. CREST is involved in discussions with the Association for Payment Clearing Services and the Irish Banking Federation on certain technical issues, such as the length of the euro settlement day.

During the three-year transitional period from the start of stage three of the European Monetary Union, issuers in both participating and non-participating countries will be able to choose whether or not to redenominate or renominalise their securities in euros. Redenomination means the exact conversion of a national currency unit into a euro unit. This does not alter the economic fundamentals of a security. Renominalisation means changing a security's nominal value to create a more convenient nominal amount.

Towards the end of 1998, CREST will be able to transform automatically transactions that remain open across a redenomination date where the redenomination itself affects the quantity of units in which securities are transferred.[12]

Off-Market Transactions

Primary and Secondary Markets. There is no requirement for a company to list its shares on the London Stock Exchange to raise funds. Companies can, and do, issue shares directly to the public to raise the finance they require. If a company chooses not to have its shares quoted, then any transactions are private and between individual shareholders at a negotiated price.

Shareholders may subscribe to a company's shares directly through responding to a prospectus. This is called the 'primary' market. The shares that are listed and available on the London Stock Exchange are regarded as the 'secondary' market. In the secondary market, shares are traded on an open but regulated market and the prices may vary throughout the day and from transaction to transaction.

Securities

In General

It is important, for the purposes of this section, to remember the distinctions set out above in relation to 'Admission to Listings'.

12 CREST Newsletter, Issue 47 (January 1998).

London Stock Exchange

Conditions Relating to Issuers. Before an issuer will be admitted to listing on the London Stock Exchange, it must comply with the requirements contained in paragraphs 3.2–3.13 of the Listing Rules.

Incorporation. An applicant must be duly incorporated or validly established in its country of incorporation or establishment, and it must be acting within the powers contained in its constitutional documents. A United Kingdom company having limited rather than public status may not be an issuer on the London Stock Exchange.[13]

Accounts. An applicant which is a company must have published or filed independently audited accounts covering at least three years and prepared in accordance with both the applicant's national law and prevailing United Kingdom standards. The London Stock Exchange, on application, may allow for a shorter period.[14]

Nature and Duration of Business. An applicant company must as its main activity be carrying on an independent revenue-generating business, and must have been doing so for the period covered by its accounts.[15]

Management Responsibility. The management of a new applicant company must include persons who have had appropriate responsibility for the company's major businesses during the period covered by the company's accounts.[16]

Directors. The directors of an applicant company must collectively have sufficient expertise to manage its business. The company must ensure that there is no conflict of interest between its directors' private interests and their duties to the company. The company must contact the London Stock Exchange promptly about any potential conflicts of interest.[17]

Working Capital. An issuer preparing listing particulars must include a statement to the effect that it is satisfied that there is sufficient working capital for its present requirements. The London Stock Exchange may not require a working capital statement from a company whose principal business is banking.[18]

Controlling Shareholder. An applicant company must be able at all times to carry on its business independently of any controlling shareholder. A controlling shareholder is one who controls either 30 per cent or more of the voting rights at a general meeting of shareholders, or the appointment of directors able to exercise a majority of votes at board meetings.[19]

Conditions Relating to Securities. Securities in a listed company must comply with paragraphs 3.14–3.26 of the Listing Rules.

Validity. Securities must conform with the law of the applicant's place of incorporation, must be authorised under the applicant's constitutional documents, and must have any necessary statutory or other consents.[20]

Transferability. Securities must be freely transferable. Partly paid securities will only fulfil this criterion if the London Stock Exchange is satisfied that their transferability is not restricted and that all relevant information has been given to investors.[21]

Market Capitalisation. The expected total market value must be at least £700,000 for shares and £200,000 for debt securities, or lower if the London Stock Exchange is satisfied that there will be an adequate market for the securities.[22]

Shares in Public Hands. At least 25 per cent of any shares for which an application for admission has been made must be in the hands of the public no later than the time of admission. A lower percentage may be acceptable if there are sufficient numbers of shares in public hands to ensure that the market will continue to operate properly. Listing may be cancelled or suspended where the percentage of shares in public hands falls below 25, or such lower percentage as previously authorised by the London Stock Exchange.[23]

Whole Class to be Listed. An application must be made in respect of all securities of the class to be listed, or all further securities of that class where there are already securities in issue.[24]

Warrants or Options to Subscribe. The issue of warrants or options must not exceed 20 per cent of the issued equity share capital, other than in exceptional circumstances. The conditions for listing are the same as those applying to securities.[25]

Convertible Securities. Convertible securities may be admitted only if the securities into which they are convertible are or will become listed securities or securities on a recognised open market.[26]

Prospectus Requirements. The information that must be included in the prospectus of a company applying for listing in respect of shares is contained in paragraphs 6A–6G of the Listing Rules.

Persons Responsible for the Prospectus. There must be a declaration by the applicant's directors that they accept responsibility for the contents of the prospectus. The prospectus also must contain the names and addresses of the company's directors, auditors, bankers, legal advisors, and any other experts to whom a statement in the prospectus has been attributed, eg, a statement by the auditors that the company's accounts have been audited.[27]

Shares for Which Application Is Being Made. There must be a statement that an application for listing has been made to the London Stock Exchange and that a copy of the prospectus has been delivered to the Registrar of Companies.[28] The prospectus must give extensive details of the nature and number of shares to be offered, including the rights attaching to the shares, any tax withheld in relation to the shares, and the issue price of the offer.

Issuer and Its Capital. Details must be given of the issuer's incorporation and principal objects, together with full details of its capital composition and any recent changes therein. The prospectus must give details of those persons who exercise control of the issuer and any person interested in 3 per cent or more of the issuer's capital, to the extent that such information is known.[29]

Group's Activities. If the applicant is part of a group, there must be a description of the group's main activities and any significant new developments. There also must be a breakdown of net turnover by category of activity, a description of the group's main investments, and details of the average number of employees.[30]

Issuer's Financial Position. The requirements relating to the issuer's financial position are equivalent to those governing the preparation of the issuer's annual accounts and report. Full and detailed information concerning the issuer's assets and liabilities and profits and losses must be included.[31]

Management. The full name, business address, and function of those people involved in the management of the issuer must be given, together with a description of their other relevant business interests. The aggregate of remuneration paid to directors must be disclosed, as must any directors' interests disclosed to the issuer under the Companies Act 1985.[32]

Recent Development and Prospects of the Group. General information on the trend of the group's business since the end of the period covered by the last accounts and information on the group's prospects for at least the current financial year must be given.[33]

Alternative Investment Market

In General. The Alternative Investment Market admission rules are contained in the Rules of the London Stock Exchange, which are not to be confused with the Listing Rules, or Yellow Book. In keeping with the reason for the Alternative Investment Market's creation, the requirements governing issuers and securities on the Alternative Investment Market are less complex and demanding than those of the London Stock Exchange, although they do broadly mirror the same underlying principles. The principal rules governing eligibility and admission are outlined below.

Issuer and Securities Requirements. A company wishing to have its securities admitted to the Alternative Investment Market must make a written application that conforms with the requirements of the Public Offer of Securities Regulations and certain additional requirements of the Alternative Investment Market rules. Prior to admission, and at all times thereafter, the following conditions must be satisfied:

- The issuer must be duly incorporated or otherwise validly established;[34]
- The securities must be freely transferable;
- There must be no securities in issue of the class that are admitted to the Alternative Investment Market; and
- The issuer must have both a nominated adviser and a nominated broker, which may be the same firm, whose roles are to ensure compliance by the issuer with its obligations under the Alternative Investment Market Rules and to make a market in the issuer's shares on the Alternative Investment Market.

The issuer's published accounts must conform with its national law and the United Kingdom, United States, or International Accounting Standards. The issuer must ensure that transfers of its securities are registered within 14 days of receipt. The London Stock Exchange may make admission to the Alternative Investment Market subject to any additional special conditions which it deems appropriate for the protection of investors, provided that the applicant is notified of these conditions.

Prospectus Requirements. Where an the Alternative Investment Market or prospective Alternative Investment Market company is issuing shares, the rules governing the form and content of its prospectus are contained in Regulation eight of the Public Offer of Securities Regulations, which states that a prospectus must contain the information 33 London Stock Exchange Listing Rules, para 6G.

34 If it is a United Kingdom company, it must be a public company; otherwise, its relevant law must permit it to issue shares to the public. A public company must have a minimum share capital of £50,000 of which at least one-quarter must be paid up before it can trade.

required in Parts II– X of Schedule 1, which closely mirrors the prospectus requirements of the Listing Rules. The Public Offer of Securities Regulations also impose two further requirements on the content of prospectuses.

Regulation 9. A prospectus must contain 'all such information as investors would reasonably require, and reasonably expect to find there, for the purpose of making an informed assessment' of the issuer's financial position and prospects and the rights attaching to the securities.

Regulation 10. Where a prospectus under which securities are still available has been registered pursuant to the Public Offer of Securities Regulations and there is a significant change affecting matters included within it, or there arises a significant new matter that would have had to be included in it, then the offeror must publish a supplementary prospectus containing particulars of the change or new matter. Where there is a significant inaccuracy in a prospectus, this must be corrected by way of a supplementary prospectus.

Non-Listed Companies

Where there is an offer of shares to the public (see text, below, relating to 'Trading Rules') by a company, the Public Offer of Securities Regulations apply, and they must be complied with. The prospectus requirements are as referred to above.

The prospectus must be issued with the authority of an authorised person. Most solicitors authorised to carry on investment business are so authorised. As such prospectuses usually contain financial information by way of cost projections or performance projections, it is customary for a firm of accountants also to be involved.

Transactions Outside the Scope of the Public Offer of Securities Regulations

In certain limited circumstances, shares may be offered without the need to issue a prospectus. The most common of such circumstances are offers of securities to fewer than 50 people or on offer to persons who habitually deal in shares. Such offers are nevertheless still capable, in certain circumstances, of comprising investment advertisements as defined by section 147 of the Financial Services Act 1986.

Investment advertisements also must be approved by an authorised person before dissemination. The process of approval involves verification of the accuracy of facts and statements set out in the investment advertisement.

Corporate Governance

Corporate Governance Committees. Over the past six years, there have been three committees that have issued reports on corporate governance, namely:

- The Committee on the Financial Aspects of Corporate Governance (under the chairmanship of Sir Adrian Cadbury), which reported in 1992;

- The Committee on Directors Remuneration (under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Greenbury), which reported in 1995; and
- The Corporate Governance Committee (under the chairmanship of Sir Ronald Hampel), whose final report was published on 28 January 1998.

Each of the committees was established following scandal and public disquiet about the role of corporations and about aspects of corporate governance. The Cadbury Report followed the somewhat self-indulgent 1980s and the unexpected collapse of several major companies. The Greenbury Committee reported in 1995 on directors' remuneration following considerable public disquiet over large pay increases and large gains by directors of the public utilities that had recently been privatised. The third, under Sir Ronald Hampel, reviewed progress.

Each of these committees was under the chairmanship of acting or former chief executives of large corporations and each made recommendations to fill perceived gaps in the existing statutory framework. None of the three reports had any weight in law; they laid down 'best practice' recommendations which largely reflected the thinking of a number of City institutions.

The reports of the first two committees, however, have been extremely influential, and the indications are that the report of the third also will be. City institutions, to a greater or lesser extent, must have already observed most of the practices contained in the reports. Institutional investors used the recommendations as best practice yardsticks to assess the management of companies. Various business and legal commentators wrote extensively about the reports. The example of the large corporations, the pressures exerted by institutional investors, the generally favourable response of commentators, and the general ripple effect have combined to such an extent that the recommendations might soon be regarded as standard practice, which is a very short step away from law.

Indeed, certain of the recommendations became law through the back door. For example, in the Cadbury Report, a central recommendation was that listed companies should comply with a Code of Good Practice as outlined. Following the Cadbury Report, the London Stock Exchange adopted a Listing Rule requiring listed United Kingdom companies to publish a statement in their annual reports as to the extent of their compliance in the relevant year with the Code and to provide an explanation of any failure to comply.

The London Stock Exchange also made a number of amendments to the Listing Rules in response to the Greenbury Report. For example, listed companies were required to make a statement about the company's compliance with aspects of the Code relating to directors' remuneration, and to furnish an explanation for any deviation.

Cadbury Committee Recommendations. The following are examples of specific recommendations of the Cadbury Committee:

- The board of a company should meet regularly, retain full control over the company, and monitor the executive management;

- There should be a clearly accepted division of responsibilities at the head of a company to ensure a balance of power and authority, such that no one individual has unfettered powers of decision;
- The board should include non-executive directors of sufficient calibre and number for their views to carry weight in the board's decisions;
- Non-executive directors should be appointed for specified periods and re-appointment should not be automatic;
- It is the board's duty to present a balanced and understandable assessment of the company's position; and
- The board should ensure that an objective and professional relationship is maintained with its auditors.

Greenbury Committee Recommendations. The following are examples of specific recommendations of the Greenbury Committee:

- The board should establish a remuneration committee of non-executive directors to determine on their behalf, and on behalf of the shareholders, within agreed terms of reference, the company's policy on remuneration and specific remuneration packages for each of the executive directors, including pension rights and any compensation payments; and
- The remuneration committee should: (a) make a report each year to the shareholders on behalf of the board, (b) provide the packages needed to attract retain and motivate directors of the quality required but should avoid paying more than is necessary, (c) be sensitive to the wider scene, including pay and conditions elsewhere in the company, especially when determining annual salary increases, and (d) take a robust line on payment of compensation where performance has been unsatisfactory and on reducing compensation to reflect a departing director's obligations to mitigate damages by earning money elsewhere.

Present and Future

In General. The law and rules applicable to companies can be found in any of the following:

- A company's own Memorandum and articles of association;
- The Companies Acts 1985 and 1989 and related legislation;
- The Financial Services Act 1986, the Public Offer of Securities Regulations, and the Listing Rules;
- Other legislation in the form of statutes, and statutory instruments, including European legislation;
- Case law;
- Codes of practice; and
- Standards of practice.

The Future. The Green Paper entitled 'Modern Company Law For A Competitive Economy', issued in March 1998 by Margaret Beckett, the President of the Board of Trade, is a Consultation Paper. Margaret Beckett introduces the paper by emphasising the reactive and essentially haphazard approach of twentieth century company law. She points out that the current framework of company law is constructed on foundations that were put in place by the Victorians in the middle of the nineteenth century.

Since then, there have been numerous additions, amendments, and consolidations, leading to layer on layer of sometimes contradictory laws, regulations, rules, and self-regulatory provisions, in a patchwork of a regulatory framework that is immensely complex and seriously unwieldy, particularly for small and medium-sized businesses. The structure became all the more unwieldy following amendments after 1972 as a result of the need to reflect EC Directives.

In 1985, legislation was consolidated in the form of the Companies Act 1985. This was quickly followed by the Insolvency Acts of 1985 and 1986 and by the Financial Services Act 1986. The latter Acts removed insolvency law and securities regulation from companies legislation, and they may be said to represent a major structural change in establishing these areas as distinct areas of law. The Green Paper points out that this may be said to be the only major simplification of companies legislation this century. However, it queries whether or not even this is actually a simplification.

A further Companies Act was passed in 1989. Its main aim was to implement the Seventh Company Law Directive on Consolidated Accounts, and the Eighth Company Law Directive on Audits. There also were certain domestic reforms.

Company Law and Corporate Governance. The Companies Act 1985 and various rules and regulations have much to say about corporate governance. In spite of this, there are many cases in the law reports of disputes that have ended in court as a result of confusion arising about the right way to direct and control companies. Certain of the principles established in these cases have been noted by the legislators and have been taken into legislation, but most remain as case law.

Complexity. Some commentators say that the tension between legislation, the body of case law, and the informal lawmaking by the various committees has become unmanageable. The body of law that governs corporate conduct has been pruned here and stretched there, and has had elements grafted on, to a degree that has made it unrecognisable within the framework of the Companies Act.

For example, commentators refer to 'non-executive directors'. Non-executive directors are well established on boards, and they play a significant role in the direction and control of companies, but there is no reference to a 'non-executive director' in the Companies Acts or other legislation. Indeed, no one can say definitively what exactly a non-executive director is supposed to be or do. Thousands of hours have been spent, and pages written, by committees and others in grappling with this concept. In spite of this, the concept of two kinds of directors (ie, executive and non-executive) within a single board has become the corporate norm.

Commentators also raise the series of recommendations by the committees on disclosure, some of which have become law through the Listing Rules, and others of which have become standard practice. These 'rules' are in addition to, and in some aspects a contradiction of, existing disclosure provisions in the Companies Act.

Reform. The Green Paper concludes that the history of company law since the last century has been a series of additions to the existing legal framework resulting from the need to tackle perceived deficiencies and shortcomings. It goes on to say that the framework has become obsolete and that piecemeal reform cannot significantly reduce the amount and complexity of current arrangements.

Review. Margaret Beckett states that the regulatory structure does not merely require tidying up but is sorely in need of a complete overhaul, particularly if it is to support commerce into the next century. The review is to be a 'thorough and wide ranging review of core company law', and it is to consider the correct structure for regulation so as to 'ensure that we have a framework of company law which is up to date, competitive and designed for the next century, a framework which facilitates enterprise and promotes transparency and fair dealing'.

Timetable. The March 1998 Consultation Paper represents the starting point of the process of review. A Steering Group and Consultative Committee will start work shortly thereafter, and the first Working Group also will start on its task. By March 2001, the final report will be published in conjunction with a White Paper. The resulting legislation will fall to the next parliament.

Periodic Disclosure

Disclosure Obligations

In General. Chapters 9–16 of the Listing Rules impose ongoing obligations on listed companies to disclose information in certain situations. Where such an obligation arises, the company must generally notify the Company Announcements Office of the London Stock Exchange without delay. The relevant Listing Rules themselves are summarised below. However, it is worth noting that, behind these rules, there are just two overriding principles, namely:

- Disclosure of information; and
- Equal treatment for shareholders.

These principles are designed to achieve an orderly market by ensuring that all users of the market have simultaneous access to the same information.[35]

35 Button and Bolton (eds), A Practitioner's Guide to the London Stock Exchange Yellow Book, at p 140.

Specific Provisions of Chapter 9 of the Listing Rules. Paragraphs 9.1–9.38 of chapter 9 of the Listing Rules relate to disclosure obligations.

General Obligation of Disclosure for Companies. Under paragraph 9.1 of the Listing Rules, where there is a major development in a company's sphere of activity that is not public knowledge and may substantially affect the price of its listed securities, the company must notify the Company Announcements Office without delay. Under paragraph 9.2, where the directors of a listed company are aware of a change in either a company's financial condition or the performance of its business or the company's expectations of its performance, and where general knowledge of this would be likely to lead to a substantial movement in the price of its listed securities, the company must notify the Company Announcements Office.

The London Stock Exchange may exceptionally release a company from its above obligations where disclosure of such information might prejudice the company's legitimate interests. Where a potential development is still under negotiation, a company may inform certain parties, such as its financial advisers and representatives of its employees, without first informing the Company Announcements Office.[36] The company, however, must be satisfied that any parties so informed know that they must not deal in the company's securities until the information has been made public.

Where a company intends to announce information at a shareholders' meeting that may lead to substantial movement in the price of its listed securities, the company must ensure that such information will be released to the public no later than the time of the meeting.

Notification Relating to Capital. The Company Announcements Office must be informed of any proposed changes to a company's capital structure, including the structure of any listed debt securities.[37] Any change in the rights attached to any class of listed securities and any new issue of debt securities also must be announced, as must the basis of allotment of listed securities offered generally to the public or openly to shareholders. The results of any new issues must likewise be given to the Company Announcements Office.

Notification of Major Interests in Shares. There are certain circumstances in which the Companies Act 1985 obliges a company's shareholders to notify it of their interest in shares of the company. Where such notification is in fact made to the company, the company is required by the Listing Rules to inform the Company Announcements Office of any details received without delay. Companies not subject to the Companies Act 1985 must inform the Company Announcements Office of any equivalent information.[38]

Notification When the Company Announcements Office Is Closed. Where a company is required to disclose information at a time when the Company Announcements Office is closed, it also must disclose the information to at least two national newspapers and two newswire services in the United Kingdom.[39]

36 London Stock Exchange Listing Rules, para 9.4.
37 London Stock Exchange Listing Rules, para 9.10.
38 London Stock Exchange Listing Rules, paras 9.11–9.14.

Communication with Shareholders. A company must ensure that there are sufficient facilities and information available to enable the holders of its securities to exercise their rights. Thus, the company must inform the holders of its securities of any meetings that they are entitled to attend, and enable them to exercise any right to vote either in person or by proxy.[40]

The company also must publish notices or distribute circulars with information on the distribution of any dividends, the issue of new securities, and the redemption or repayment of securities. Where a company needs to communicate with the holders of bearer shares, it must advertise in at least one national newspaper in each relevant territory.

9.33–9.38 Miscellaneous Obligations. A company must disclose to the Company Announcements Office decisions made by the board of directors concerning dividends, profits, and other matters.[41] Disclosure must be made no later than 8:30 a.m. on the next business day after the decision is made. A company must notify the London Stock Exchange immediately it becomes aware that the percentage of a class of securities in public hands has fallen below 25 or any lower percentage previously agreed by the London Stock Exchange.

Chapter 10 of the Listing Rules. Transactions involving acquisitions and disposals by a listed company are divided into four classes, each with progressively more detailed disclosure requirements. A full explanation of the criteria for establishing the class into which a given transaction may fall is beyond the scope of this chapter.

However, in general, the larger the size of the subject company relative to the company dealing in its securities, the more detailed the disclosure requirements regarding the transaction, and the more involved the process. Larger transactions will require circulars and also must be ratified by shareholders in a general meeting.

Chapter 11 of the Listing Rules. Where a listed company proposes to enter into a transaction with a related party, it must notify the Company Announcements Office of the details of the transaction and send a circular containing full particulars to the shareholders, who must approve the transaction.

For the purposes of chapter 11, a 'related party' is defined as a substantial shareholder or any person who is a director of the company or any subsidiary. Certain parties connected to a related party (eg, the spouse or children of an individual or the subsidiary of a company) are themselves considered related parties.

41 London Stock Exchange Listing Rules, paras 9.33–9.38.

Chapter 12 of the Listing Rules. All listed companies are required to issue an annual report and accounts.[42] The following information about the company's financial affairs and its management must be included in accordance with paragraph 12.43 of the Listing Rules (12.43(a) has been deleted):

Commentary on Forecasts. An explanation must be given where the actual results of the company differ by more than 10 per cent from its forecast.[43]

Interest Capitalised. A statement must be provided as to the amount of interest capitalised and the treatment of any tax relief.[44]

Waiver of Emoluments. Details must be given as to any arrangement whereby a director has waived or will waive any emoluments from the company.[45]

Waiver of Dividends. Details must be provided as to any arrangement whereby a shareholder has waived or will waive any dividend.[46]

Non-Executive Directors. The identity and a brief biographical note of each non-executive director must be given.[47]

Financial Aspects of Corporate Governance. In the case of United Kingdom companies, a statement regarding the extent of the company's compliance with the Code of Best Practice must be provided.[48]

Directors' Interests in Shares. In the case of United Kingdom companies, a statement must be given, showing the extent to which any director or any member of a director's family is a shareholder in the company.[49]

Major Interests in Shares. In the case of United Kingdom companies, disclosure of certain major interests must be made.[50]

42 Listed companies also are required to issue a report on the company's activities and financial affairs for the first six months of each of their financial years. Under paragraphs 12.52–12.59, this report must contain an abbreviated profit-and-loss account, together with any necessary explanatory statements.

Purchase by Company of Its Own Shares. In the case of a United Kingdom company, details of any shareholders' authority for the company to purchase its own shares must be provided.[51]

Allotments for Cash. Details must be given as to any allotments that are not made in accordance with pre-emption provisions and that have not been specifically authorised by the company's shareholders.[52]

Parent Undertaking Participation in a Placing. Where a company is a subsidiary, details of any participation by its parent company in a placing must be given.[53]

Interest in Contracts. Details of any contract of significance (defined in paragraph 12.44 of the Listing Rules) as a contract involving one per cent or more of a given transaction or annual sales, as appropriate) or any contract to which the company or a subsidiary is party and in which a director is or was materially interested must be given.[54]

Contracts of Significance. Details must be given as to any contract of significance between the company or a subsidiary and a controlling shareholder or any contract of services which are not the controlling shareholder's principal business.[55]

Small Related-Party Transactions. Details relating to small related-party transactions and amendments to any contractual arrangements with a controlling shareholder must be given.[56]

Long-Term Incentive Schemes. Details of any long-term incentive schemes and employees' share schemes must be given.[57]

Going Concern. In the case of United Kingdom companies, a directors' statement that the company is a going concern must be provided.[58]

Directors' Remuneration. In the case of United Kingdom companies, a statement on compliance with the best practice provisions and a report detailing the company's policy on directors' remuneration and all directors' remuneration packages must be given.[59]

Chapters 13 and 14 of the Listing Rules. Chapters 13 and 14 set out the London Stock Exchange's requirements for the form and content of certain documents and circulars that the Listing Rules and the Companies Act 1985 require listed companies to publish. Unless such documents and circulars comply with the requirements of these chapters, a detailed description of which is beyond the scope of this chapter, they must first be submitted in draft to the London Stock Exchange for approval.

Chapter 15 of the Listing Rules. A company may not purchase its own securities at any time when its directors or employees are prohibited by the Model Code from dealing in the company's securities (see text, below, relating to chapter 16 of the Listing Rules). Where the board decides to submit to shareholders a proposal that the company be authorised to purchase its own shares, it must notify the Company Announcements Office of this proposal without delay unless it relates simply to the renewal of an existing authority.

Chapter 16 of the Listing Rules. A company is required to disclose certain information about its directors and their dealings in the company's securities. New applicant companies must submit a formal declaration by each of their directors as to their past and present business activities to the Securities and Futures Authority. Declarations in respect of new directors to a listed company also must be submitted, as must updated declarations where appropriate.

A company must notify the Company Announcements Office without delay where there is any change to the membership of the board of directors or where any material functions or responsibilities of a director are changed. It also must notify the Company Announcements Office of any information it receives relating to a director's interest in the company's securities.

Annexed to Chapter 16 is a Model Code, which prescribes the times when and conditions under which the directors and employees of a company may or may not deal in its securities. Under paragraph 16.18 of the Listing Rules, companies must require their directors and employees to comply with the Model Code, which ensures that they do not take unfair advantage of their position within the company to benefit through trading in its securities. In particular, they are prohibited from dealing in the company's securities within two months prior to the publication of its annual results or when they are in possession of unpublished information that may affect the value of the company's securities.

Chapter 17 of the Listing Rules. Overseas companies listed or seeking a listing on the London Stock Exchange must comply with all relevant Listing Rules generally, or as modified by paragraph 17. Certain modifications apply to all such overseas companies, while the application of others will depend on whether the company has (or will have) a 'primary' or 'secondary' listing. A company's 'primary listing' will normally be determined by its country of incorporation or first listing or by the country in which a majority of the securities are held.

Where an overseas company seeking a listing on the London Stock Exchange has been listed in another member state of the EU for not less than three years, the London Stock Exchange may exempt it from the obligation to publish listing particulars. If this happens, the company will be required to publish certain limited information in an 'exempt listing document' instead of listing particulars. The modifications applicable to all overseas companies are contained in paragraphs 17.2–17.10 of the Listing Rules.

Conditions for Listing. In general, the shares of a company incorporated in a non-EU state must already be listed either in its country of incorporation or in the country in which most of its shares are held.[60] Where the company's accounts have been prepared in a different format to those prescribed by the Listing Rules, the London Stock Exchange may nonetheless accept those accounts if it is satisfied that they have been prepared to an appropriate standard. The company should consult the London Stock Exchange at an early stage to discuss this possibility.

Listing Particulars. Certain documents already prepared by a company pursuant to any public reporting and filing obligations in its country of incorporation (or primary listing) may be incorporated in English translation in its listing particulars.[61] The omission of certain information, as permitted by paragraph 5.18, also may apply to overseas countries.

Half-Yearly Reports. A company incorporated in a non-EU state, with the London Stock Exchange's permission, may publish an English translation of the half-yearly report published in its country of incorporation to comply with its obligations under the Listing Rules.[62]

Pre-Emption Rights. Overseas companies are not required to comply with the requirements regarding pre-emption rights in paragraphs 9.18–9.23 of the Listing Rules.[63]

English Language. All information required by the Listing Rules must be given in English translation.[64]

Overseas Companies with or Seeking Primary Listing. Additional modifications applying only to overseas companies with primary listing are contained in paragraphs 17.11–17.13. These paragraphs essentially reformulate certain Listing Rules that refer to English legislation in terms that are applicable to overseas companies. Particular reference is made to a company's duty to inform the Company Announcements Office of any information received related to directors' interests in the company.

Overseas Companies with or Seeking Secondary Listing. Overseas companies with or seeking secondary listing need not comply with chapters 9, 10, 11, 14, and 15 or the continuing obligations regarding financial information and directors' disclosure.

60 London Stock Exchange Listing Rules, paras 17.2–17.4.
61 London Stock Exchange Listing Rules, paras 17.5 and 17.6.
62 London Stock Exchange Listing Rules, para 17.7.
63 London Stock Exchange Listing Rules, paras 17.8 and 17.9.
64 London Stock Exchange Listing Rules, para 17.10.

However, many of the requirements contained in these chapters are reproduced in a simplified form in paragraphs 17.22–17.67 of the Listing Rules, with which companies with or seeking a secondary listing must comply. Where there is any doubt as to whether an ongoing obligation applies, the London Stock Exchange should be consulted.

Disclosure Rules on the Alternative Investment Market. The disclosure rules on the Alternative Investment Market also are contained in the Rules of the London Stock Exchange. The Alternative Investment Market disclosure rules are essentially a much simplified version of the Listing Rules requirements discussed above.

American Depositary Receipts Disclosure

Global Depositary Receipts and American Depositary Receipts. The development of the global securities market has brought with it a need for investors to be able to deal in securities in currencies with which they are familiar. The United States market response to this in relation to securities in overseas companies was to create the American Depositary Receipt. This is now increasingly used on a global basis in the form of a Global Depositary Receipt to facilitate offerings, particularly in American market securities. A Global Depositary Receipt is a 'bundle' of shares which, because it is not a share itself, can be traded and settled in the international markets without the need to comply with the laws of the country of incorporation of the issuer of the underlying shares.

Global Depositary Receipts are usually represented by a single certificate, known as a Master Global Depositary Receipt Certificate and issued by a bank acting as a depositary of the shares concerned. Each Global Depositary Receipt Certificate represents the relevant number of underlying shares held by the bank on deposit. The Certificate is evidence of ownership of the underlying shares, and each holder may request that they be issued with an individual Global Depositary Receipt representing a specific number of shares. These individuals' Global Depositary Receipts may then be traded as negotiable instruments.

A Global Depositary Receipt is, for all intents and purposes, the same as an American Depositary Receipt. Global Depositary Receipts are recognised in the United States markets as a familiar instrument and, indeed, Global Depositary Receipts are normally denominated in United States dollars and, therefore, enable international investors to hold securities in the currency with which they are familiar and with which they feel secure. Any dividends payable on the underlying shares in local currency are converted into United States dollars at a cost borne by the holder of the Global Depositary Receipt.

The United Kingdom. In relation to the London Stock Exchange, Global Depositary Receipts and American Depositary Receipts are defined as 'specialist certificates representing shares', and they are governed by paragraph 23.45 of the Listing Rules. The issuer of the underlying shares, if an overseas company, also must comply with paragraph 17.19(a) of the Listing Rules.

In the case of specialist certificates representing shares, the issue of the shares is subject only to the continuing obligations set out in paragraphs 23.58–23.87 of the Yellow Book, which are essentially a simplified version of the continuing obligations discussed above. The issuer, if any of its securities are listed on the London Stock Exchange or on any other stock exchange, must ensure that any disclosure of information is made simultaneously to the market at the London Stock Exchange and at each such other stock exchange. In the case of issuers situated or operating in a non-EU state, information equivalent to that notified to the market of the non-member state need only be notified to the Company Announcements Office if such information may be of importance.

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

Offer. Under section 5 of the Public Offer of Securities Regulations:

> A person is to be regarded as offering securities if, as principal:
> (a) he makes an offer which, if accepted, would give rise to a contract for the issue or sale of the securities by him or by another person with whom he has made arrangements for the issue or sale of the securities; or
> (b) he invites a person to make such an offer;
> but not otherwise; and, except where the context otherwise requires, in this Part of these Regulations, 'offer' and 'offeror' shall be construed accordingly.

Public. Under section 6 of the Public Offer of Securities Regulations:

> A person offers securities to the public in the United Kingdom if, to the extent that the offer is made to persons in the United Kingdom, it is made to the public; and, for this purpose, an offer which is made to any section of the public whether selected as members or debenture holders of a body corporate, or as clients of the person making the offer, or in any other manner, is to be regarded as made to the public.

Under section 7 of the Public Offer of Securities Regulations, 21 situations that would otherwise fall within the somewhat broad ambit of sections 6 and 7 are deemed not to constitute 'offers to the public'. It is beyond the scope of this work to list all 21 such exceptions; however, the following are the most important in the context of listed securities:

- Offers to persons whose ordinary activity involves them in dealing with investments for the purpose of their business, or who would reasonably be expected to deal with investments;[65]
- Offers to 50 or fewer persons;[66]

65 Public Offer of Securities Regulations, s 7(a).
66 Public Offer of Securities Regulations, s 7(b).

- Offers to a restricted circle of persons who the offeror reasonably believes to be sufficiently knowledgeable to understand the risks involved in accepting the offer;[67]
- Offers made in connection with a bona fide invitation to enter into an underwriting agreement;[68]
- Offers in connection with a take-over offer;[69] and
- Offers in connection with a merger within the meaning of Directive 78/885/EEC.[70]

Disclosure of Substantial Holdings

Shareholder Duties. Substantial Acquisition Rules are issued by the Panel on Take-Overs and Mergers, the non-statutory body that regulates take-over activity through the application of the City Code. The aim of the Substantial Acquisition Rules is to limit the speed and secrecy with which a shareholder can increase its stake in the company within the stakeholding band ranging from 15 to 30 per cent of the issued share capital. The Substantial Acquisition Rules are only relevant to transactions in shares of companies listed on the London Stock Exchange or the Alternative Investment Market companies resident in the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, and the Republic of Ireland.

Substantial Acquisition Rules, Rule 1. A person may not, in any period of seven days, acquire shares carrying voting rights in a company, or rights over such shares (eg, options), representing 10 per cent or more of the total voting right in that company, if such acquisition would result in an aggregate holding of more than 15 per cent but less than 30 per cent of the total voting rights in that company.

In other words, if a person is about to make an acquisition of shares, then any acquisitions made by them in the previous six days will be taken into account. If the total acquired in that period is less than 10 per cent of the total voting equity, then the acquisition can be made without restriction. If the total acquired is 10 per cent or more of the voting rights and would result in the overall holding by that shareholder falling within the 15 to 30 per cent range, then the acquisition is prohibited unless one of the specific exceptions applies.

Note that, if the acquisition results in a shareholder holding 30 per cent or more of the voting rights, then the Substantial Acquisition Rules do not apply at all. Instead, rule 5 of the City Code becomes relevant and the shareholder must make a mandatory offer for the entire issued share capital of the company in question.

Substantial Acquisition Rules, Rule 2. Rule 2 sets out the exceptions noted in rule 1 of the Substantial Acquisition Rules, which includes an acquisition from a single shareholder if it is the only such acquisition within any period of seven days. It also includes any acquisition immediately before the announcement of an offer, provided that the offer

67 Public Offer of Securities Regulations, s 7(c).
68 Public Offer of Securities Regulations, s 7(d).
69 Public Offer of Securities Regulations, s 7(e).
70 Public Offer of Securities Regulations, s 7(f).

will be recommended or approved by the board of the company and in either case that the acquisition is conditional on the announcement of that offer.

Substantial Acquisition Rules, Rule 3. Rule 3 requires a person to give notice of an acquisition of voting shares both to the company itself and to the London Stock Exchange. Notification must be in the form prescribed by the Panel on Take-Overs and Mergers. The acquiring shareholder must give details of its total shareholding, and notification must take place by midday on the business day following the date of the acquisition. This obligation arises in two circumstances, namely:

- Where, as a result of the acquisition, the shareholder holds shares in aggregate representing 15 per cent or more of the voting rights in the company; and
- Where his shareholding already representing 15 per cent or more of the voting rights is increased to or beyond any whole percentage figure as a result of an acquisition.

Under the Substantial Acquisition Rules, persons acting together are treated as a single shareholder having an aggregate shareholding equal to their combined separate shareholdings. Each person must comply with any obligations arising under the Substantial Acquisition Rules.

Companies Act 1985, Sections 198–220. In addition to the Substantial Acquisition Rules, above, a person who has an interest in voting shares in a public company must in certain circumstances notify the company of that interest under sections 198–220 of the Companies Act 1985. This obligation will arise in one of three situations, these being if a person:

- Knowingly acquires an interest (or knowingly ceases to be interested) in shares comprised in the company's relevant share capital;
- Becomes aware of an acquisition of an interest in such shares or ceases to be interested in such shares by a person with whom he is acting in concert (see text, below); or
- Becomes aware of anything that results in him having a 'notifiable interest' which he did not have before.

Notifiable Interest. The obligation to disclose a shareholder's interest is triggered by certain changes in the percentage of the relevant share capital which that person has or had an interest in. The 'notifiable percentage' is three per cent, and the obligation to disclose arises where there is a change from a holding below this notifiable percentage to above it or vice versa or where the percentage holding is at (or above) the notifiable percentage, both before and after the change, but the percentage level changes.

The 'percentage level' is defined as the percentage figure found by expressing the nominal value of all the shares in which the person has an interest as a percentage of the nominal value of the whole of the issued share capital of the company (rounded down).

Notification. Notification to the company must:

- Be made in writing within two days following the day on which the obligation notified arose;

- Give the name and address of the person notifying and, if he or she is a director, state that the notification complies with sections 198–202 of the Companies Act;
- Specify the share capital to which the notification relates;
- State the number of shares held by the person notifying; and
- Identify each registered holder of shares to which the notification relates and the number of shares held by each such person.

Interest in Shares. The obligation to notify arises only if the person has an 'interest in shares'. However, this is widely defined, and it includes the following situations:

- Where the shares are held on trust;
- Where there is a contract to buy the shares;
- Where there are 'put' or 'call' options over the shares; and
- Where the shares are held by a nominee.

In addition, the person can have an 'interest by attribution'. This includes the following:

- Any shares in which a person's spouse or infant child or step-child has an interest;
- Any shares in a company of which that person is a director or controls one-third or more of the voting rights at general meetings, or controls one-third of any holding company; and
- Any shares in which another person is interested, if the two parties are acting in concert (see text, below).

Parties Acting in Concert. Sections 204–207 of the Companies Act 1985 provide that, if persons are acting in concert in connection with the acquisition of shares in a particular public company, for the purposes of the obligation to disclose, the interest of any one of those parties in the shares of that company is attributable to the other parties and vice versa. For these provisions to apply:

- There must be an agreement between two or more persons which provides for the acquisition by any of them of an interest in shares and which imposes obligations or restrictions on at least one of the parties relating to the use, retention, or disposal of their interests acquired pursuant to that agreement; and
- There must be an acquisition of an interest in shares pursuant to the above agreement.

It should be noted that there are criminal penalties for failing to fulfil an obligation to disclose under these provisions.

Insider Dealing

In General. The Criminal Justice Act 1993 was enacted in July 1993, and it came into effect before the end of 1993. Part V of the Criminal Justice Act is designed to implement provisions of the EC Directive 89/592/EEC and to amend and restate the law relating to insider dealing in securities in the United Kingdom. The intention of the Directive is to ensure that all member states make insider dealing illegal by adopting a common approach, as well as to introduce minimum standards throughout the EU and to facilitate crossborder policing and enforcement. The result is that a number of EU member states have enacted insider dealing legislation for the first time.

In addition to the Criminal Justice Act, insider dealing also is prohibited under the Financial Services Act 1986 (and by the various self-regulating organisations set up under the Financial Services Act 1986) as a result of which civil liability can attach to investment firms that fail to take precautions to prevent their staff engaging in insider dealing. Prohibitions on insider dealing also are contained in the Model Code of the London Stock Exchange and in the Take-Over Code of the Panel on Take-Overs and Mergers.

Criminal Justice Act 1993. The offence of insider dealing, as set out in section 52 of the Criminal Justice Act 1993, essentially occurs in one of three forms, namely, where an individual who has inside information:

- Deals in securities that are price-affected securities in relation to that information ('insider dealing');
- Encourages another person to deal in securities that are price-affected securities in relation to that information ('insider encouragement'); or
- Discloses that information to another person otherwise than in the proper performance of his employment, office, or profession ('insider disclosure').

It should be noted that only an individual can commit an offence under section 52. Therefore, there is no possibility of a company itself committing an offence, although the individuals responsible will themselves potentially fall within section 52. The benefit of excluding companies from those persons who are able to commit an offence under section 52 is that it enables companies to continue to trade in securities by the establishment of 'Chinese Walls'. A 'Chinese Wall' is an internal arrangement which is designed to prevent information being communicated from one part of a company's business to another part of the same company's business.

Insider Dealing. The basic prohibition on insider dealing is contained in section 52(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1993, which provides that:

> An individual who has information as an insider is guilty of insider dealing if, in the circumstances mentioned in sub-section (3), he deals in securities that are price-affected securities in relation to the information.

Section 52(3) states that the circumstances referred to in section 52(1) are:

> . . . that the acquisition or disposal in question occurs on a regulated market, or that the person dealing relies on a professional intermediary or is himself acting as a professional intermediary.

From the above, it can be seen that there are essentially three requirements that need to be established before an offence has been committed. These are:

- An individual has information as an insider;
- The individual deals in securities that are price-affected securities; and
- Dealing occurs on a regulated market or in reliance on a professional intermediary (or the individual concerned deals while acting as a professional intermediary).

Information as Insider. Section 57(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 states that:

> . . . a person has information as an insider if and only if: -
> (a) it is, and he knows that it is, inside information; and
> (b) he has it, and knows that he has it, from an inside source.

It is clear from section 57 that, in order for an individual to be found guilty of an insider dealing offence, he must both have and know that he has inside information from an inside source. Therefore, an individual is provided with a defence if he dealt in securities of a company on the basis of inside information if he can show that he did not know that the information was inside information. Alternatively, an individual may deal in securities on the basis of inside information if he is unaware that such information came from an inside source.

Under section 56(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1993, in order for information to be inside information, it must be information that:

> Relates to particular securities or to a particular issuer of securities or to particular issuers of securities and not to securities generally or to issuers of securities generally;
> Is specific or precise;
> Has not been made public; and
> If it were made public, it would be likely to have a significant effect on the price of any securities.

Section 57(2) of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 states that:

> A person has information from an inside source if and only if:
> (a) he has it through:
> (i) being a director, employee or shareholder of an issuer of securities; or
> (ii) having access to the information by virtue of his employment, office or profession; or

Section 57(2)(ii) of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 establishes that there must be a connection between a person's employment, office, or profession and access to such inside information. This ensures that an analyst who receives information from a company as a result of his employment will be treated as having received information from an inside source and, subject to the nature of the information received, is likely to be an insider. In addition to analysts, lawyers or merchant bankers who act for a bidder in respect of a take-over will have access to information in relation to the target company and, therefore, will be insiders in relation to that company.

Deals in Securities Which are Price-Affected Securities.

Section 55(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 states that:

> A person deals in securities if:
> (a) he acquires or disposes of the securities (whether as principal or agent); or
> (b) he procures, directly or indirectly, an acquisition or disposal of the securities by any other person.

Article 4 of the Insider Dealing Order states that, for a security to be covered by the insider-dealing legislation, it must be 'dealt in or under the rules of, or have its price quoted on, a regulated market'.

Section 56(2) of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 states that securities are price-affected securities 'if and only if the information would, if made public, be likely to have a significant effect on the price of securities'.

It should be noted that the wording in section 56(2) mirrors the wording in section 56(1)(d), except that the information must be likely to have a significant effect on the price (or value) of the securities in which dealings take place. Therefore, it is clear that an individual who has inside information, but who deals in securities which do not relate to that inside information, will not be guilty of an offence of insider dealing.

Insider Encouragement. Section 52(2)(a) of the Criminal Justice Act states that:

> An individual who has information as an insider also is guilty of insider dealing if he encourages another person to deal in securities that are (whether or not that other knows it) price-affected securities in relation to the information, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the dealing would take place in the circumstances mentioned in sub-section (3).

Section 52(2)(a) is essentially an anti-avoidance measure which prohibits encouraging someone to deal in circumstances where he has not actually been given inside information.

Insider Disclosure. Section 52(2)(b) of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 states that:

> An individual who has information as an insider also is guilty of insider dealing if he discloses the information, otherwise than in the proper performance of the functions of his employment, office, or profession, to another person.

Section 52(2)(b) also is an anti-avoidance measure which prohibits disclosure of information that could be used for insider dealing. Section 62(2)(b) does not apply to an individual who discloses information in the proper performance of the functions of his employment, office, or profession.

Defences

Section 53 of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 provides the following three defences where an individual is prima facie guilty of insider dealing or encouraging, but can show that:

> . . . he did not at the time expect the dealing to result in a profit attributable to the fact that the information in question was price-sensitive information in relation to the securities.[71]
> . . . at the time he believed on reasonable grounds that the information had been disclosed widely enough to ensure that none of those taking part in the dealing would be prejudiced by not having the information.[72]
> . . . he would have done what he did even if he had not had the information.

In addition, Schedule 1 sets out a further four defences which fall within the categories of market maker, market information, and price stabilisation. Neither these, nor the above defences, provide any defence to a charge of insider disclosure. The burden of proof is on the individual to show that he falls within one of the defences in section 53 or in Schedule 1 to the Criminal Justice Act.

Penalties for Insider Dealing

Section 61 of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 provides that an individual who is convicted on indictment of the offence of insider dealing will be liable to a term of imprisonment of up to seven years and/or an unspecified fine. On summary conviction, an individual will be liable to a term of imprisonment of up to six months and/or a £5,000 fine. Proceedings in England and Wales for insider dealing offences may not be instituted without the consent of either the Secretary of State or Director of Public Prosecutions. Section 63(2) adds that no transaction will be void or voidable by reason only of an offence under section 52.

Territorial Scope of Offence of Insider Dealing

Section 62(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 states that an individual is not guilty of an offence of insider dealing under section 52(1) (dealing in securities) unless:

- He was in the United Kingdom at the time when he is alleged to have done any act constituting or forming part of the alleged dealing;

71 The defence may apply where a person sold shares while in possession of information which he expected to receive a favourable reaction from the market.

72 This defence applies where the parties to a transaction are both in possession of inside information.

- The regulated market on which the dealing is alleged to have occurred is a United Kingdom regulated market (eg, the London Stock Exchange or LIFFE); or
- Any professional intermediary was in the United Kingdom at the time when an individual is alleged to have committed an act giving rise to the alleged offence.

Therefore, there must be at least a marginal territorial link between the actions giving rise to the offence and the United Kingdom. However, by virtue of section 62(1), it is not necessary for the dealing to have occurred in the United Kingdom or for the shares to be listed in London.

Section 62(2) of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 states that an individual is not guilty of an offence of insider dealing under section 52(2) (encouraging another or disclosing) unless:

- The individual was in the United Kingdom at the time when he is alleged to have disclosed the inside information or encouraged the dealing; or
- The alleged recipient of the information or encouragement was in the United Kingdom at the time when he is alleged to have received the information or encouragement.

Again, there must be a territorial link with the United Kingdom, namely, that either the insider or recipient was in the United Kingdom at the time of disclosure or encouragement. Section 62 is designed to provide an effective framework against insider dealing which has a significant United Kingdom component. This, together with provisions in other EU member states, should ensure that any insider dealing activity that takes place within the EU or on an EU-regulated market will be caught.

Public Take-Over Bids

Territorial Application (Foreign Bidder and Domestic Target)

The first point of reference for anyone involved with a public take-over in the United Kingdom is the City Code on Take-Overs and Mergers, which is controlled by the Panel on Take-Overs and Mergers (the 'Panel'). The Code provides an orderly framework within which take-overs are conducted. The Code applies to directors of companies that are subject to the Code and are involved with a potential take-over. It also applies to groups of people attempting to control such companies or who participate in, or are connected with, transactions to which the Code applies, eg, professional advisers.

All listed and unlisted public companies considered by the Panel to be resident in the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, or the Isle of Man are controlled by the Panel, as are companies resident in the Irish Republic if their shares are listed on the London Stock Exchange. A company will normally be regarded as resident only if both its place of incorporation and its central management are in one of these jurisdictions. Therefore, if its central management moves, for example, to the United States or Spain, the Code's protection will end as regards that company even if it is still a United Kingdom company listed on the London Stock Exchange.

Furthermore, even if the directors of the company wish to continue to be controlled by the Code or incorporate a reference to the Code in the company's articles of association, the Panel will normally refuse to accept jurisdiction.[73] In this and other situations in which there is a foreign element, the proposed take-over will be subject to an overseas take-over regulator. Therefore, it would be necessary to consult the Panel to resolve any conflicts that may arise.

The fundamental aim of the Panel and the Code is to ensure that shareholders receive fair and equal treatment in connection with any actual or proposed take-over. To this end, a number of the Panel's members come from a wide selection of organisations including the Confederation of British Industry and the Association of British Insurers. The Chairman and Deputy Chairman are appointed by the Governor of the Bank of England.

The Panel and the Code do not consider all issues relating to take-overs. Matters of competition, for example, are dealt with by national legislation, case law and EU law. The Code is non-statutory and, as such, it does not have the benefit of being directly enforceable by law. Yet, the government and other city regulatory bodies have stressed the need for any take-over to comply with the Code's rules, and it has been considered by judges as setting appropriate standards and practices.[74]

The European Court of Justice insists on Directives being implemented by EU member states in such a way that they are legally enforceable. As the Code is non statutory, it may be deemed insufficient. The Panel is against changing its status, as this would destroy what it regards as its greatest advantages, ie, the speed, informality, and flexibly of its actions and its ability to meet the needs of unusual circumstances. However, it has been suggested that a carefully worded statute could continue the same approach.

The Panel also is concerned that the requirements of EU law will make it easier for those dissatisfied with its rulings to challenge them in the courts and to do so in the course of a bid itself. This might affect the Panel's record of giving binding rulings on the meaning of the Code during even the most hostile circumstances, which has prevented the need for the American pattern of regular resort to courts of law in similar circumstances.[75]

Connecting Factors and International Private Law Aspects

In General. As previously mentioned, the Panel does not address all issues in relation to a proposed public take-over. Perhaps the most important area outside its control relates to competition, ie, in this context, the need to avoid the creation of monopoly situations. In the United Kingdom, competition is controlled by both domestic and EU law.

United Kingdom Law. As far back as 1614, in the Ipswich Tailors case, English case law found that it was against public policy for any person or group of persons to secure the sole exercise of any known trade throughout the country. Today, the prevention of monopolies is under the control of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission has wide powers to investigate and report on companies where there appears to be a monopoly situation or a risk of one arising.

The Monopolies and Mergers Commission is obliged to investigate and report on any question referred to it under the Fair Trading Act 1973, including the creation or possible creation of a merger situation qualifying for investigation.[76] For a merger to be successfully referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, at least one of the enterprises involved must be carried on in the United Kingdom or be a company incorporated in the United Kingdom.

European Law. As regards European competition law, the principal provisions are found in articles 85 and 86 of the Treaty of Rome (likely to be incorporated specifically into English law soon). As with all articles in the Treaty, these are very wide-ranging and purposive.

Article 85(1) states that all arrangements between undertakings that may affect trade between member states of the EU, and that have as their object or effect the prevention, restriction, or distortion of competition within the Common Market, are prohibited. In 1996, the European Commission published a Memorandum on the Concentration of Enterprises in the Common Market. This stated that article 85 was not applicable to agreements whose purpose was the acquisition of all or part of a company. However, article 86 targets abuse of a dominant position and, therefore, it may be relevant to large take-overs and their consequences.

In 1989, the Council of Ministers adopted the EC Merger Regulation.[77] From an international perspective, perhaps the most interesting feature of the Regulation is that the European Commission will investigate mergers that have a Community dimension. A Mergers Task Force is charged with the responsibility of applying the Regulation.

Article 21 of the Regulation states that mergers having a Community dimension should be investigated only by the Commission and that member states cannot apply their national competition legislation to such mergers. It follows that the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in such cases would not act.

Procedural Requirements

The Code is made up of 10 General Principles and 38 Rules. The General Principles describe the Panel's views in broad terms, and they should be interpreted to achieve their underlying purpose. They are aimed particularly at the need for fairness to shareholders. The Rules are more specific, although it also may be necessary to apply a wider approach to them. The Panel is keen to stress that the Panel's Executive should be approached at any time by anyone connected with a take-over if they are unsure about their proposed course of action. The Panel firmly believes that an immediate consultation will minimise the risk of a breach of the Code.

76 Fair Trading Act 1973, s 5(1)(c).

In such circumstances, the general procedure is that the Executive will give a ruling. However, if the matter is particularly complex, it may be referred to the Panel for consideration. If either undertaking in the proposed take-over is listed on the London Stock Exchange, there are further procedural requirements which can be found in the Listing Rules.

A strict timetable must be followed, which includes the requirement that a notification of mergers be made not more than one week after the conclusion of an agreement, the announcement of a bid, or the acquisition of a controlling interest.

Recognition of Foreign Take-Over Regulation

It has been argued that, for the take-over of a company whose securities are traded in more than one country, one should apply the regulations of the main market of the target company The Code urges early consultation with the Executive in such circumstances so that guidance may be provided as to how any conflicts of law may be resolved (see text, below).

Jurisdictional Conflicts

In General

What Is 'Conflict of Laws'?

Wherever there is international trading, 'conflict of laws' becomes relevant. This is because contracts where the subject matter of the contract is international, or where the parties to the contract are in different jurisdictions, may become subject to the laws of more than one country. Those laws may sometimes conflict.

When they do, it is necessary to consider which law applies. It also is necessary and equally important to consider which jurisdiction is relevant for the purpose of determining the conflict of laws.

Countries for Purposes of Conflict of Laws

For the purposes of conflict of laws, France and Italy are examples of countries where the law is the same throughout; however, for these purposes, England, Scotland, and Northern Ireland are each regarded as separate countries, as are each of the Australian and American states and each Canadian province. Of course, this does not prevent certain laws from applying throughout the United Kingdom (England, Wales, Scotland, and Northern Ireland) or the entire United States or Canada.

Therefore, this section will distinguish between countries, so that references to England include England and Wales and references to the United Kingdom include England, Wales, Scotland, and Northern Ireland.

77 European Community Regulation 4064/89, OJ [1989] L 395/1.

Jurisdiction and Choice of Law

When a conflict of laws arises it is necessary to consider whether the English court has jurisdiction to entertain a case and, if it does, which law is to be applied to the dispute. On the basis that an English court will generally first consider whether it has jurisdiction, the jurisdictional issue will usually take precedence at the outset over establishing which country's law is to apply.

Securities-Related Issues

An owner of shares in an English company, whether that company is listed on a recognised exchange or not, will primarily be governed as regards the rights which those shares confer, by the articles of association of the company concerned. As is clear from other parts of this chapter, there are other sources of rules governing shares in a company (eg, the Companies Act and the Yellow Book for listed companies) and how they may be dealt with, but it is the articles of association that comprise the contract amongst the company and its shareholders and set out the rights and obligations of the shareholders.

The articles of association of an English company are subject to English law, and they will be governed by English law. Any action that a shareholder takes in his capacity as shareholder should always be in accordance with the provisions of the articles of association or his action may be invalid. For example, transfers of shares should always follow the procedures set out in the articles of association or they are likely to be invalid. This applies whether the shareholder is English or not; for example, a transfer of shares in an English company by an Italian shareholder will not be valid simply because the transfer has been completed in accordance with the laws of Italy.

Disputes governing English company procedural and constitutional matters, therefore, are inevitably to be determined by the English courts, and the issue of a 'conflict of laws' does not arise.

Of course, disputes where the subject matter of the dispute happens to be securities (eg, between two parties, one of whom is not English, and relating to the question of whether the sale of certain securities took place or not) may well require a consideration of the conflict of laws. An English court will usually enforce a contract which is valid under its governing law, even if it is unenforceable under English law (eg, for failure of consideration). However, English courts will not enforce:

- Rights or duties imposed by foreign laws which are contrary to a fundamental policy of English law;
- A foreign penal law;
- A foreign revenue law; or
- The public law of a foreign country.

Determination of Jurisdiction

The determination of jurisdiction in an action in personam depends on the issuing of proceedings against a defendant. If the defendant is in the English jurisdiction, proceedings can usually be served on the defendant in England. It is irrelevant that his presence in the jurisdiction is brief or that the dispute has no real connection with England. If he is outside the jurisdiction, leave to serve out of the jurisdiction needs to be applied for.

The United Kingdom is party to two conventions in this area, ie, the Lugano Convention and the Brussels Convention. These provide for the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters. The Brussels Convention applies to all member states of the EU. It follows that the European Court of Justice has the power to rule on the interpretation of the Convention and to deal with referrals from courts of member states. Under the Lugano Convention, all signatories agree to take account of the principles laid down by the courts of the other contracting states. Where a country is a member of the EU this will, of necessity, involve the principles set out in the Brussels Convention.

Although not strictly relevant to a chapter concerning securities, the Brussels and Lugano Conventions do not apply to the status or legal capacity of an individual's rights in property arising from wills, succession or marriage, bankruptcy, liquidation, judicial arrangement proceedings, social security, and arbitration, in which cases national law applies.

Any person can agree to submit to a certain jurisdiction and choice of law, which agreement it would be difficult to displace particularly if recorded in writing or otherwise clearly evidenced. Courts will usually give effect to such agreements on the basis that the parties have submitted to a jurisdiction and law of their choice. The general rule in the absence of express agreement under the Conventions is that a person domiciled in a contracting state must be sued in the courts of that state, whether or not the person in question is a national of that state. An individual is domiciled in the United Kingdom if he is resident in the United Kingdom and the nature and circumstances of his residence indicate a substantial connection with the United Kingdom.

Under the Brussels Convention and the Lugano Convention, the registered office of a company is to be treated as its domicile. There are a number of exceptions to these general rules where exclusive jurisdiction is conferred on courts of a particular contracting state, regardless of domicile. For example:

- Article 16, paragraph 2, of both the Brussels Convention and the Lugano Convention confers exclusive jurisdiction on the courts of the country in which a company has its registered office in relation to proceedings which have as their object the validity of the constitution, the nullity or the dissolution of companies, or the decisions of its organs (ie, board and shareholders' meetings);
- In proceedings regarding the validity of entries in public registers, exclusive jurisdiction is conferred on the contracting state in which the register is kept; and
- In proceedings regarding the enforcement of judgments, exclusive jurisdiction is conferred on the courts of the contracting state in which the judgment is to be, or has been, enforced.

Determination of Governing Law

The question of which law is to govern a contract is determined by reference to the rules of the Rome Convention, signed by the United Kingdom on 7 December 1981 and relevant to contracts made after 1 April 1991. The Rome Convention applies generally, although most of the categories of cases excluded for the purposes of determining jurisdiction (see text, above) are excluded from the scope of the Convention. In addition, the Rome Convention does not apply to the personal liability of officers and members for the obligations of a company, evidence and procedure, obligations arising under bills of exchange, cheques and promissory notes, and other negotiable instruments to the extent that the obligations arise from their negotiable character.

Under the Rome Convention, a contract will be governed by the law chosen by the parties. Such choice may be express or must be capable of being ascertained by the terms of the contract or the circumstances of the case. Where no choice of law is made, the contract will be governed by the law of the country most closely connected to the contract. It is presumed that the contract is most closely connected with the country where the party who is to effect the performance which is characteristic of the contract has, if an individual, his habitual residence or, if a company, its central administration. If the contract is entered into in the course of that party's trade or profession, the relevant country will be the country in which the principal place of business is situated or, in the case of a contract which specifies a business in another country as the provider of the services, that country will be the relevant country.

If characteristic performance cannot be determined, the presumption will not apply. The same is true if the contract as a whole is more closely connected with another country. It should be noted that, if a contractual provision is unenforceable under English law, as being contrary to public policy or void or illegal according to the applicable law, it will not be enforced in the English courts.

If the Rome Convention does not apply, the proper law of the contract will govern the contract. The proper law will be determined in one of three ways, namely:

- By express choice of the parties;
- By inferred selection from the circumstances (eg, if a jurisdiction is chosen, it is likely that the court will decide that the law of that jurisdiction should also apply); and
- By judicial determination of the system of law with which the transaction has the closest and most real connection.

Regulatory System

In General

In response to the stock market crash of 1929 and the Great Depression that followed, the United States Congress enacted a number of statutes that form the basis for the regulation of securities in the United States. These statutes are the cornerstone of the modern United States federal securities regulatory system.[1]

The securities laws are intended to assist in facilitating capital formation by issuers (entities that issue securities to investors), while emphasising the need to provide full and fair disclosure to potential investors and existing shareholders. The basic tenet of the United States securities laws is not to directly control or prevent investment or to substitute the judgment and values of the government for market forces. Rather, the legislation mandates disclosure standards and patterns of behaviour so that information made available by issuers accurately reflects the business operations, risks, and benefits of a new investment or existing operation.

The objective is to make readily available sufficient accurate information so that potential investors can make a fully informed decision whether to buy, to continue to hold, or to sell a security. The United States securities laws also provide severe penalties to deter misrepresentation, deceit, and other fraudulent behaviour and to penalise persons or entities that act outside the law and regulations.

Securities transactions in the United States are subject to regulation at both the federal and the state level. However, the primary regulation of securities laws is on the federal level. Federal pre-emption, over competing state interests, stems from the Interstate Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution.[2] Federal securities laws preserve the right of the various states to enact laws to regulate securities transactions, so long as such enactments do not conflict with the federal law.[3]

Those transactions that are wholly within a state, or which do not affect interstate commerce, are those primarily regulated by state securities laws, although the impact or applicability of state securities laws should be considered and evaluated on all transactions. Known as 'blue sky' laws, the state laws regulate activities within each state, such as registration or exemption of securities transactions within the state and registration of brokers and dealers who operate within the state. Administration within a state is left to state securities law commissions which promulgate rules and regulations for securities transactions within those state borders.

This chapter focuses on the United States federal law with regard to international securities transactions. It is intended to provide an overview of federal securities law as applied to international transactions.

The chapter has been updated from previous releases to include recent changes regarding a harmonised international disclosure standard. While the chapter outlines the impact these changes are intended to have, there will undoubtedly be ramifications and other developments that have been anticipated. Practitioners should continue to track and monitor these developments.

Federal Law

From 1933 to 1940, the United States Congress enacted a number of statutes that form the basis for the securities regulation in the United States. These statutes, and the rules and regulations promulgated under the authority granted to the United States Securities and Exchange Commission as part of the applicable law, form the cornerstone of the modern federal securities regulatory system. These Acts[4] are as follows:

- The Securities Act of 1933,[5] commonly known as the 'Securities Act' or the '1933 Act', regulates the activities of the issuers of securities and the offer and sale of securities;
- The Securities and Exchange Act of 1934,[6] commonly known as the 'Exchange Act' or the '1934 Act', established the United States Securities and Exchange Commission and regulates the trading of securities;
- The Investment Company Act of 1940,[7] commonly known as the 'Investment Company Act', regulates the activities of investment companies; and

3 See, eg, National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996, Public Law Number 104-290 (1996).

4 In addition, two other significant laws were enacted during this era which still have applicability to certain United States securities law issues, ie, the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, 15 United States Code, ss 79 et seq, and the Trust Indenture Act of 1939, 15 United States Code, ss 77a et seq; however, these Acts are outside the scope of this chapter.

Securities and Exchange Commission

The United States Securities and Exchange Commission was formed under the Exchange Act,[10] and it is charged with the administration and enforcement of the United States securities laws. The Securities and Exchange Commission has broad rule-making authority to accomplish its goals to provide protection for investors. Its primary focus is to ensure that securities markets are fair and honest. Rules and regulations promulgated by the Securities and Exchange Commission affect all aspects of the United States capital markets, including the issuance and after-market trading of securities, and the registration of brokers and dealers, investment companies, and investment advisors.[11]

Part of the authority of the Securities and Exchange Commission is carried out through management and oversight of self-regulatory organisations, which today include the major United States securities exchanges, and the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc (NASD). Whether the issue is the sale of securities, the trading of securities, the organisation of stock exchanges, the role of underwriters or broker-dealers, the availability of credit for stock transactions, or the use of investment companies or advisors, it is primarily the Securities and Exchange Commission that proscribes behaviour, monitors activities, and penalises wrongdoers. The Securities and Exchange Commission also serves as an adviser to the United States federal courts in corporate reorganisation proceedings under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, as amended.[12]

The Securities and Exchange Commission consists of five commissioners appointed by the President and confirmed by the United States Senate (each a 'Commissioner' and, collectively, the 'Commissioners'). The Securities and Exchange Commissioners serve staggered five-year terms.[13] To ensure that the Securities and Exchange Commission remains non-partisan, no more than three Commissioners may belong to the same political party. The Securities and Exchange Commission headquarters are in Washington, DC, although the Securities and Exchange Commission has numerous field offices throughout 9 Generally, those investment advisers who (a) have more than US $25 million of assets under management, or (b) are advisers to a registered investment company under the Investment Company Act, or (c) are required to register as investment advisers in 30 or more states, are required to register as 'Investment Advisers' with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Investment advisers who do not meet these thresholds are prohibited from registering with the Securities and Exchange Commission, and are governed in accordance with the applicable state investment adviser statutes. the United States. The staff of the Securities and Exchange Commission is organised into divisions and offices with specific areas of responsibilities. The major divisions are:

- The Division of Corporation Finance, which is responsible for ensuring that disclosure requirements are met by publicly held companies whose securities are registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission;
- The Division of Market Regulation, which is responsible for registration and regulation of broker-dealers and oversight of the nation's stock exchanges, transfer agents, and clearing organisations;
- The Division of Investment Management, which is responsible for administering investment companies and investment advisers; and
- The Division of Enforcement, which is responsible for enforcing the federal securities laws and regulations.

In addition, the Office of the Chief Accountant has the responsibility for advising the Securities and Exchange Commission on accounting and auditing matters while creating policies to achieve compliance with accounting and financial disclosure standards. This office oversees private sector efforts at the Financial Accounting Standards Board and the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants to improve financial and auditing standards and financial disclosure.

The Office of International Affairs of the Securities and Exchange Commission has primary responsibility for the international enforcement of United States securities laws and regulatory co-operation among international securities regulators. Its duties include the investigation of suspected unlawful conduct, market surveillance, and the oversight of regulated entities in cross border transactions. The Office of International Legislative Affairs also assists with international litigation matters, including:

- Service of process;
- Gathering of evidence; and
- Enforcing of judgments abroad.

In addition to its enforcement activities, staff members engage in ongoing discussions with their non-United States counterparts, including the International Organisation of Securities Commissions (IOSCO) and the Council of Securities Regulators of the Americas, to facilitate cross border transactions, and to assist other countries and their regulatory bodies in developing policies to provide for investor protection, education, and confidence.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has the pre-eminent role in the regulation of United States securities matters, including cross border securities matters. It has power to:

- Make rules;
- Examine and inspect regulated entities to determine compliance with law;
- Interpret and provide guidance on the securities laws;
- Investigate complaints and indications of possible law violations; and

- Provide statutory sanctions and enforce the securities laws and rules by administrative action, conduct civil litigation, and refer criminal conduct for potential prosecution.

The Securities and Exchange Commission will exercise its prosecutorial powers to safeguard the integrity of the markets. The manifestation of these prosecutorial powers is evidenced by the fact that, in 1999, the Securities and Exchange Commission's investigations and actions resulted in court orders requiring non-compliant parties to disgorge illegal profits of approximately US $650 million. Civil penalties authorised by the Securities Enforcement Remedies and Penny Stock Reform Act of 1990, the Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1984, and the Insider Trading and Securities Fraud Enforcement Act of 1988 totalled more than US $191 million.[14]

Conspicuously absent from its duties and authority listed above is the ability of the Securities and Exchange Commission to approve, disapprove, or guarantee the value or merit of any security. Moreover, the Securities and Exchange Commission will not bar from sale any security, even if the security has questionable value, although it may halt trading in securities that are the subject of illegal market manipulation activities. That is because the Securities and Exchange Commission's role is to ensure that issuers and market participants fully comply with securities laws and provide full and fair disclosure. The ultimate investment decision is left for the investor to make.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Securities and Exchange Commission does not pass on the merits of any security, the testimonial as to the issuer's belief and faith in the United States market is revealed in the following statistics:

- Securities filings reached US $2.1 trillion in 1999;
- Common stock offerings of almost US $1.18 trillion were filed for registration in 1999; and
- Offerings filed by the first time registrants (IPOs) totalled approximately US $118 billion.

As further evidence of the United States market's strength, non-United States companies' participation in the United States public market continued to show strong growth in 1999. During 1998, nearly 164 foreign companies from 34 countries entered United States public markets for the first time. At year-end 1999, there were nearly 1,200 non-United States companies from 57 countries filing reports with the Securities and Exchange Commission. More than US $244 billion was registered in 1999 by non-United States companies for public offerings which set a record for an amount registered in a single year.[15]

State Law

Although federal law applies to securities transactions that take place across state borders, many states also have enacted their own state securities laws, commonly known as state

14 Securities and Exchange Commission, 1999 Annual Report.
15 Securities and Exchange Commission, 1997 Annual Report.

blue sky laws, to cover the offer and sale of securities, registration of broker-dealers, and trading of securities by citizens within a state's boundaries. In addition, securities transactions that occur in many states (which is common place for a large offering or an IPO) will be subject to the blue sky laws in each of those states.

Some of these blue sky laws, however, have now been specifically pre-empted under the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996.[16] For example, states may no longer regulate the availability or the substance of an offering of securities that is exempt from registration under rule 506 of Regulation D promulgated under the Securities Act. Rather, they may only require that a notice filing, along with a filing fee, be delivered to their state securities commissioner. If, however, the state suspects securities fraud, it may request additional information and review the offering materials.

These statutes also cover 'intrastate' transactions in securities that are exempt from federal law by reason of the issue being offered and sold only to persons resident within a particular state or territory, where the issuer of the security is a person resident and doing business or, if a corporation, incorporated by and doing business, within such state or territory.[17] Typically, these laws also have enforcement mechanisms which provide for penalties and sanctions for omissions or misrepresentations or other fraudulent behaviour.

In addition to any applicable blue sky laws, individuals who act as 'investment advisers' and are not otherwise registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission under the Investment Advisers Act may be subject to certain state investment adviser statutes and regulations. Practitioners should consult the rules and regulations of the applicable state to insure compliance with these directives.

Extraterritorial Reach of United States Securities Laws

In General

Increasingly, world financial markets have become more integrated and internationalised. Listings of non-United States issuers on United States exchanges and markets have surged and the consolidation of industry and commerce among international conglomerates with United States ties has increased the jurisdictional reach of the United States securities laws. This trend has focused attention on the extraterritorial reach of the United States securities laws.

More than 20 years ago, it was observed that '[w]ith increasing frequency foreigners are becoming concerned with the extraterritorial reach of the United States securities laws'.[18] As financial markets have developed and integrated, what was once an observation of an infant trend is now an every day occurrence. A practitioner analysing the extraterritorial reach of the United States securities law must first identify the specific United States securities laws at issue and then analyse the specific facts and circumstances involved to determine whether United States securities law concepts apply.

Registration

In the case of the registration of securities under the Securities Act, the law is clear as to extraterritoriality. The Securities and Exchange Commission has noted:

> . . . [u]nder the Securities Act, any issuer that seeks to offer or sell its securities publicly in the United States must register the offer and sale of those securities with the [Commission]. This requirement applies equally to securities issued by either United States or [non-United States] companies, including mutual funds.[19]

In 1990, the Securities and Exchange Commission adopted Regulation S to clarify the extraterritorial application of the registration provisions of United States securities laws.[20] Regulation S employs a territorial approach, by which any offer or sale of a security that is deemed to occur within the United States is subject to the registration provisions of United States securities laws, while any offer or sale of a security that is not deemed to occur within the United States is not subject to the registration provisions of United States securities laws.[21]

Regulation S is not an exemption from registration under United States securities laws; rather, it provides that offers and sales occurring outside of the United States are not subject to the registration requirements of United States securities laws.[22]

Antifraud Provisions

When it comes to the application of the antifraud provisions of the 1934 Act, however, the law is not as clear.

Section 10b of the 1934 Act, and more specifically rule 10b-5 promulgated thereunder, constitutes the primary 'Antifraud Provisions' of the United States securities laws. They serve the purpose of protecting investors, registrants, and the markets from unethical and manipulative practices. These broadly drawn provisions are a 'catch-all' provision whose breadth is necessary to police and ensure fair dealings in the securities markets.

22 A full description of Regulation S and its applicability is discussed later in this chapter.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has recently adopted Regulation FD in an effort to further promote full and fair disclosure of information by issuers. Simultaneous with the adoption of Regulation FD, the Committee also adopted rules 10b5-1[23] and 105b-2,[24] which clarify and enhance the policing of prohibited insider trading activities.[25]

As a general canon of construction:

> . . . legislation of Congress, unless a contrary intent appears, is meant to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States which is based on the assumption that Congress is primarily concerned with domestic conditions.[26]

Nonetheless, the United States federal courts have established a two-level test — an 'effects test' and a 'conduct test' — under which they will determine whether or not subject matter jurisdiction exists and, if it does, it will extend the antifraud provisions of the 1934 Act extraterritorially.[27]

Existence of Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Generally, a United States federal court will have jurisdiction over the subject matter of a claim, despite the fact that the conduct in question occurred outside the United States, if such conduct produces substantial effects on United States markets or United States investors. This is known as the 'effects test'. This test was first enumerated by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in Schoenbaum v Firstbrook.[28] In that case, it was held that s 10(b)[29] and rule 10b-5[30] applied to the conduct of a Canadian corporation that sold shares of its common stock to a French purchaser at a price substantially higher than that paid by the Canadian corporation's joint venture partner, another Canadian corporation.

The court came to this conclusion despite the fact that all of the parties involved were non-United States entities. The reasoning of the case focused on the fact that the Canadian issuer was listed on the American Stock Exchange, which is located in the United States, and had, among others, United States shareholders. It said:

> [T]he antifraud provision of s 10(b), which enables the [Commission] to prescribe rules "necessary or appropriate" in the public interest or for the protection of investors' reaches beyond the territorial limits of the United States > and applies when a violation of the rules [promulgated under section 10(b)] is injurious to United States investors.[31]

If, on the other hand, there is no effect on United States investors or the United States securities markets, the courts may still find that subject matter jurisdiction exists when conduct inside the United States directly caused the losses suffered by investors outside of the United States, ie, the 'conduct test'. It is important to note that, although the trend is to find subject matter jurisdiction in an increasing number of situations, the United States federal courts have split in regard to the level of conduct that will cause them to have jurisdiction.

For example, the Courts of Appeal for the Second, Fifth, and Seventh Circuits and the District of Columbia Circuit have held that jurisdiction will lie in the American courts only where the conduct is not merely preparatory to the alleged fraud, but rather comprises all the elements of a defendant's conduct necessary to establish a violation of s 10(b) or rule 10b-5; for example, the fraudulent statements or misrepresentations must originate in the United States, must be made with scienter in connection with the sale or purchase of securities, and must cause the harm to those who claim to be defrauded, even though the actual reliance and damages may occur elsewhere.[32]

The Third, Eighth, and Ninth Circuits, conversely, have applied a less strict standard, holding that subject matter jurisdiction will exist when the conduct in question merely 'was in furtherance of a fraudulent scheme and was significant with respect to its accomplishment'.[33] Thus, it is essential for a practitioner to review the holdings of the Federal Circuit Court in the geographic area where the activity took place prior to initiating any action in the United States based on alleged fraudulent conduct of a non-United States entity or person.

United States Markets and Market Listing Requirements

In General

In the United States, there are two basic types of stock markets or exchange on which a company, an 'issuer', can elect to have its securities trade. The first type is a centralised or fixed stock exchange where shares are traded in one central location through specialists that auction or execute buy and sell orders at the best available price. The best known examples of a centralised, specialist-based, physical stock exchange are the New York Stock Exchange[34] and the American Stock Exchange.[35]

In addition to the New York Stock Exchange and the American Stock Exchange, there are a number of smaller regional exchanges that often specialise in certain defined types of activities, such as the Chicago Board Options Exchange which specialised in the trading of options, or which focus on a certain geographic area, such as the Pacific Stock Exchange.[36]

The second type of stock market or exchange is an over-the counter market where securities are traded by a system that links brokers and dealers who buy and sell securities for clients without physical proximity but instead interact through computer networks. The NASDAQ is an example of an over-the counter market. This over-the counter market is regulated by the National Association of Securities Dealers. The NASDAQ Stock Market is comprised of:

- The NASDAQ National Market for larger companies; and
- The NASDAQ SmallCap Market for emerging growth companies that are generally smaller, less seasoned issuers.[37]

Some of the world's largest technology companies, including Microsoft, Oracle, Sun Microsystems, and Cisco, trade on the NASDAQ.

34 The most prestigious national securities exchange in the United States is the New York Stock Exchange. The New York Stock Exchange provides a liquid, tightly regulated market for the most seasoned of issuers. More information about the New York Stock Exchange can be found at the New York Stock Exchange web site, www.nyse.com, which is an excellent source of information.

35 The National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc, is the largest securities-industry, self-regulatory organisation in the United States. It is the parent organisation of the American Stock Exchange, LLC, NASD Regulation, Inc, and NASD Dispute Resolution, Inc. For more information about the NASD and its subsidiaries, see the following Web sites: www.nasd.com, www.nasdaq.com, the NASDAQ Newsroom at www.nasdaqnews.com, www.amex.com, www.nasdr.com, or www.nasdadr.com. The NASDAQ Stock Market Inc (the 'NASDAQ') was previously a wholly owned subsidiary of the National Association of Securities Dealers. However, under a recent reorganisation and recapitalisation of NASDAQ, the National Association of Securities Dealers has reduced its ownership stake in the NASDAQ with the ultimate goal being to create an independent investor-owned NASDAQ, which would permit the National Association of Securities Dealers to focus on tough, fair, and efficient regulation. The American Stock Exchange continues to operate as a separate specialist-based auction market, like the New York Stock Exchange. Historically, the American Stock Exchange was the market for smaller companies than those listed on the New York Stock Exchange but, in recent years, its market and the number of its listed companies has eroded due to the success of the New York Stock Exchange in the fixed, physical location specialist-based auction market favoured by 'blue chip' companies and the success of the NASDAQ in the computer-based trading market favoured by 'technology' companies. As a result of these defections and filing tendencies, the American Stock Exchange has evolved to become a leader in offering markets for option trading and other derivative products.

36 Other active registered securities exchanges include regional exchanges such as the Boston Stock Exchange, the Cincinnati Stock Exchange, the Chicago Stock Exchange, and the Philadelphia Stock Exchange.

37 The NASDAQ Stock Market also includes among its subsidiaries NASDAQ International, which is 'the trans-Atlantic extension of the NASDAQ Stock Market' that operates during the London and European trading hours.

Another group, Pink Sheets LLC, which was formerly known as the National Quotation Bureau (NQB), provides lists of securities, commonly known as the 'Pink Sheets', reporting trades for relatively thinly traded over-the-counter (OTC) securities. This name was derived from the fact the original pink sheets, listing these over-the-counter transactions, were printed on pink paper. They are now tracked both electronically and via print products.

Due to an increase in the number of issuers delisted or dropped by the OTC Bulletin Board, Pink Sheets has expanded its quotation service and has recently introduced real-time pricing. It is anticipated that these services will bring more liquidity and more transparency to these markets.[38]

In addition, brokers-dealers can report trades for small, less widely traded securities on the OTC Bulletin Board. The OTC Bulletin Board is not an actual stock exchange but merely an electronic bulletin board service.

Non-United States entities seeking to list on a United States stock exchange or market must adhere not only to the requirements of the Securities and Exchange Commission, but to those of the stock exchange or market where the securities are listed or intend to be listed. Whether the issue is the sale of securities, the trading of securities, the organisation of stock exchanges, the role of underwriters or broker-dealers, the availability of credit for stock transaction, or the use of investment companies or advisors, it is primarily the Securities and Exchange Commission that proscribes behaviour, monitors activities, and penalises wrongdoers.

In addition to the Securities and Exchange Commission's regulations, the exchanges are self-regulatory organisations that maintain their own qualitative listing requirements for issuers, beyond those mandates imposed by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Each of these major stock exchanges and markets outline their specific compulsory listing requirements in their respective listing markets.

Recent technological developments and the worldwide growth of the Internet may provide another alternative for trading securities. In 1996, several small, development-stage companies began to make a market for their own shares through the facilities of the world wide web. The Securities and Exchange Commission is closely monitoring developments on the Internet, and it has interceded aggressively to halt behaviour deemed detrimental to investors. The Securities and Exchange Commission has since issued a 'no-action letter' that permitted a company to make a market in its own shares using the Internet under certain circumstances.[39]

Non-United States entities are welcome and encouraged to exclusively list their securities on all the available exchanges and markets. Non-United States entities that are evaluating listing on an exchange or market, or moving from one exchange to another, need to carefully weigh the requirements and benefits of each choice in hopes of having its securities actively traded where shareholders are provided liquidity in good markets and bad, and where the quantitative and qualitative disclosure requirements are not unduly burdensome. Often representatives from the exchange and the issuer will meet to discuss and evaluate the prospects for a successful listing.

American Depository Receipts

Foreign entities have the option of directly listing their shares on an exchange or to create a new security, known as an American Depository Receipt (ADR). An American Depository Receipt is a negotiable instrument issued by a third party depositary, usually a United States bank or its foreign affiliate, and it represents a specified number of shares or units of the underlying issuer which are held by the depository on behalf of the American Depository Receipt holders.

Trades in the United States on United States exchanges and markets are affected in the American Depository Receipt and not in the underlying securities. Often, an American Depository Receipt is used so that securities traded in the United States are denominated in United States dollars and can meet the minimum price requirements of the listing exchange or market.[40]

Major Exchanges and Markets

New York Stock Exchange

In General. The most prestigious national securities exchange in the United States is the New York Stock Exchange. The New York Stock Exchange provides a liquid, tightly regulated market for the most seasoned of issuers. More than 3,025 of the world's leading companies list on the New York Stock Exchange. Of these, more than 434 non-United States entities are listed, representing 49 countries.[41] One reason for the prestige of this exchange is its exacting listing requirements. By executing a New York Stock Exchange listing agreement, a company agrees not only to strictly abide by the United States securities law, but also to conform to a demanding series of requirements and obligations which are required to continue to enjoy listing privileges on the New York Stock Exchange.

These requirements go beyond quantitative criteria for initial or continuing listing, such as the value of the company, the public float, and the number of shareholders, and include corporate governance criteria that require the company to take actions that would not otherwise be required or to refrain from actions which the company might otherwise be entitled to take. In addition, the New York Stock Exchange reviews the degree of national interest in the company, its relative position and stability in the industry, and whether it is engaged in an expanding industry with the prospect of at least maintaining its relative position.

40 A full description of the use of the American Depository Receipt and its applicability is provided later in this chapter.

41 New York Stock Exchange web site, http://www.nyse.com (1 April 2001).

Listing on the New York Stock Exchange provides the non-United States company with the opportunity to raise capital efficiently and economically in the United States, to enhance the marketability and liquidity for its shares, to develop a broad base of individual and institutional support and following, to facilitate mergers and acquisitions, and to enhance name recognition of the corporation's products and services.

Non-United States issuers may list on the New York Stock Exchange concurrently with their initial entry into the United States capital markets, whether through an offering of securities or not, or by transferring the listing from another United States exchange or stock market.

Non-United States companies have the option of seeking to qualify for listing with the New York Stock Exchange either by the New York Stock Exchange's standard domestic listing criteria or by special listing standards exclusively reserved for non-United States companies. The criteria for non-United States companies focus on the worldwide distribution of shares and they apply where there is a broad, liquid market for a company's shares in its country of origin.

The criteria for domestic companies focuses more on the United States market as the principal market and the minimum distribution of the issuer's stock within that market. Whatever criterion is used, an applicant company must meet or exceed all of the criteria within the standards under which it seeks to qualify for listing.

The listing requirements and procedures for non-United States entities[42] are as follows:

- Non-United States Company Listing Standards — Round-lot holders (holders of 100 or more shares), 5,000 worldwide; public shares (shares not held by insiders or control persons), 2.5 million worldwide; market value of public shares, US $100 million worldwide; net tangible assets, US $100 million worldwide; pre-tax income (aggregate for last three years), US $100 million worldwide; and minimum pre-tax income in each of the two most recent years, US $25 million worldwide.[43]
- United States Company Listing Standards — Alternative 1: round-lot holders, 2,000 United States or total shareholders, 2,200 United States; and minimum average monthly trading volume for the most recent six months, 100,000 shares; or Alternative 2: total shareholders, 500; and minimum average monthly trading volume for the most recent 12 months, 1 million shares.[44]

A third alternative exists which is intended to provide an opportunity for companies that are valued more on the basis of 'cash flow' than reported income to become listed, depending on the outcome of a due diligence review by the New York Stock Exchange. In 42 New York Stock Exchange, Listing Standards and Procedures (1999). The Listing Standards for both United States and non-United States Corporations can be found at the New York Stock Exchange web site. http://www.New York Stock Exchange.com (1 April 2001).

43 If the foreign entity meets all of the financial criteria but, due to the use of bearer shares outside of the United States, has difficulty in demonstrating that it has the required number of shareholders on a worldwide basis, the New York Stock Exchange provides that a New York Stock Exchange member may 'sponsor' the applicant and verify the liquidity and depth of the market for a company's shares.

performing its due diligence analysis, the New York Stock Exchange will consider each company on a case-by-case basis and will examine not only the specifics of the company's business but also will look to its industry, peer group, and other relevant factors.

Non-Numerical Requirements. Beyond numerical criteria, other factors are considered when determining eligibility for listing. The New York Stock Exchange requires that listed United States companies meet certain criteria with respect to outside directors, audit committee composition, voting rights, and related-party transactions. In general, the New York Stock Exchange will accept corporate governance practices of non-United States companies that do not comply with New York Stock Exchange policies to the extent that such practices are not prohibited by the home country law of the non-United States issuer and are accompanied by written certification from independent counsel of the company's country of domicile stating that the company's corporate governance complies with home country law.[45] The following is a summary of these policies.

Corporate Governance Requirements. Corporate governance requirements relate to issues such as outside directors, the audit committee, voting rights, and related-party transactions.

Outside Directors. Since 1956, all United States companies listing on the New York Stock Exchange must have a minimum of two outside directors.[46] For those companies which do not have outside directors at the time their eligibility for listing is approved, the New York Stock Exchange will normally require one outside director to be appointed prior to listing and a second within one year after listing. An outside director is a director who is not:

- An employee, officer, or former officer of the company or a subsidiary or division thereof;
- A relative of a principal executive officer; or
- A person who is an individual member of an organisation acting as an advisor, consultant, or legal counsel who is receiving compensation on a continuing basis from the company in addition to directors' fees.

The New York Stock Exchange encourages discussion with an Exchange representative to clarify any uncertainty with regard to qualification of outside directors.

44 For either Alternative 1 or 2 — minimum public shares, 1.1 million United States; market value of public shares, US $40 million; net tangible assets, US $100 million and one of the following: (a) most recent year pre-tax income, US $2.5 million; each of two preceding years' pre-tax income, US $2 million; or (b) aggregate pre-tax income for the last three years, US $6.5 million; minimum in most recent year pre-tax income, US $4.5 million (all three years must be profitable); or (c) for companies with not less than US $500 million in market capitalisation and US $200 million in revenues in the most recent fiscal year, an aggregate for the three years' adjusted net income, US $25 million (each year must report a positive amount).

Audit Committee. Each United States company seeking to list on the New York Stock Exchange (and each non-United States company electing to qualify for listing under the United States company listing criteria) must have an audit committee comprised solely of directors independent of management and free from any relationship that would interfere with the exercise of independent judgment as a committee member.

Audit Committees in the United States were originally established to protect against abnormally 'cosy' relationships between the board of directors and the issuer. The Securities and Exchange Commission recently adopted rules to further protect against perceived improprieties and to 'improve communications through greater disclosure between management, the Board and outside auditors'.[47] The sum and substance of these changes are the following:

- Requires proxy statement disclosure of whether or not the audit committee has: (a) reviewed the audited financial statements with management; (b) discussed the quality of the company's accounting principals with outside auditors; (c) received evidence as to the independence of the outside auditors; (d) determined if anything has come to its attention that causes it to believe that the audited annual financial reports contain an untrue statement of a material fact or omit to state material facts necessary to make the statements made not misleading;
- Requires proxy statement disclosure of whether or not the audit committee has adopted a written charter (which, if adopted, is to be included in the proxy statement every third year);[48]
- Requires disclosure of whether audit committee members satisfy the New York Stock Exchange, National Association of Securities Dealers, or American Stock Exchange requirements as to independence;
- Creates a safe harbour that the proxy statement disclosure regarding the audit committee requirements is exempt from certain liabilities under the federal securities laws.[49]

In lockstep with these initiatives, the New York Stock Exchange, the National Association of Securities Dealers, and the American Stock Exchange have adopted new rules governing audit committees. These rules include:

- The audit committee is required to adopt formal written charters specifying in detail the scope of the committee's duties;[50] and 48 Not surprisingly, the Securities and Exchange Commission has asked for public comment on whether the audit committee charter should be reprinted in full or summarised in plain English.

- The audit committee must consist of at least three 'independent directors'[51] — each member of the committee must be financially literate, and at least one member must have accounting experience or financial management expertise,[52] and the filer must annually certify that its audit committee is independent and is financially literate.[53]

Voting Rights. The New York Stock Exchange rule with respect to shareholder voting rights states that:

> . . . [v]oting rights of existing shareholders of publicly traded common stock registered under section 12 of the 1934 Act cannot be disparately reduced or restricted through any corporate action or issuance.

In its review of a company's eligibility for listing, the New York Stock Exchange will evaluate any unusual voting provisions associated with a company's securities.

Related-Party Transactions. The New York Stock Exchange believes that the review and oversight of transactions between a company and its officers and directors that might be perceived as conflicts of interest are best left to the discretion of the company.

However, the New York Stock Exchange expects corporations to discharge their responsibility in this area in an appropriate fashion. For this reason, companies applying to list on the New York Stock Exchange will be required to confirm that they will appropriately review and oversee related-party transactions on an ongoing basis. Although no particular method of oversight is dictated, the audit committee or another comparable body would be considered an appropriate forum.

American Stock Exchange

In General. The American Stock Exchange continues to operate as a separate, specialist-based auction market, like the New York Stock Exchange. Historically, the American Stock Exchange was the market for smaller companies than those listed on the New York Stock Exchange but, in recent years, its market and the number of its listed companies have eroded due to the success of the New York Stock Exchange in the fixed, physical location specialist based auction market favoured by 'blue chip' companies, and the success of the NASDAQ in the computer-based trading market favoured by 'technology' companies.

The American Stock Exchange has evolved to become a leader in offering markets for option trading and other derivative products. More than 900 issuers trade on the American Stock Exchange, as well as options on 28 broad-based and sector indexes. The American Stock Exchange also is known for the trading of certain long-term equity anticipation securities (LEAPS) and Exchange Traded Funds (ETFs).[54]

Listing Requirements. To list on the American Stock Exchange, a non-United States company needs to satisfy one of two alternative financial guidelines and one of four distribution guidelines. The listing requirements for non-United States companies are as follows:

- Financial Guidelines — Alternative 1: Pre-tax income, US $750,000 in latest fiscal year or two of most recent three years; market value of public float, US $3 million; minimum price, US $3 per share; and stockholders' equity, US $4 million.
- Financial Guidelines — Alternative 2: Pre-tax income, not applicable; market value of public float, US $15 million; minimum price, US $3 per share; operating history of two years; and stockholders' equity, US $4 million.
- Distribution Guidelines — Alternative 1: Public float, 500,000 shares;[55] public stockholders in United States, 800; and average daily volume, not applicable.
- Distribution Guidelines — Alternative 2: Public float, 1 million shares; public stockholders in United States, 400; and average daily volume, not applicable.
- Distribution Guidelines — Alternative 3: Public float, 500,000 shares; public stockholders in United States, 400; and average daily volume, 2,000 shares.
- Distribution Guidelines — Alternative 4: Public float, 1 million shares; public stockholders, worldwide 800; and average daily volume, not applicable.

National Association of Security Dealers, Inc

In General. The National Association of Securities Dealers is the largest securities industry self-regulatory organisation in the United States, and it operates subject to oversight from the Securities and Exchange Commission. The National Association of Securities Dealers has two primary functions, namely to:

- Register, regulate, and oversee all of the broker-dealers in the United States; and
- Regulate and operate the over-the-counter market.

In 1996, the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc, was formally restructured to create two separate, distinct, wholly owned subsidiaries of the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc. The resulting structure includes National Association of Securities Dealers Regulation, Inc, the entity that is charged with the regulation, registration and oversight of broker-dealers, and the NASDAQ Stock Market, Inc, which is charged with the regulation of the over-the-counter stock markets.

54 American Stock Exchange, Press Release (2 November 1998). Additional information regarding the American Stock Exchange can be found at its web site, http://www.amex.com (1 April 2001).

55 'Public float' is defined as shares that are not held, directly or indirectly, by any officer or director of the issuer, or by any other person who is the beneficial owner of more than 10 per cent of the total shares outstanding.

As mentioned above, the NASDAQ Stock Market, Inc, is the largest electronic, screen-based market in the world. It is not a physical market like the New York Stock Exchange, but rather trades occur over computer systems from remote locations. It handles transactions involving over 1 billion shares a day. More than 4,829 companies are listed on NASDAQ, more than any other market.[56] The NASDAQ has two tiers, namely:

- The NASDAQ National Market System for larger companies; and
- The NASDAQ Smallcap Market for smaller, emerging growth companies.

The National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc, also has created NASDAQ International, a trans-Atlantic extension of NASDAQ that operates during normal London and European trading hours, 3:30 pm to 9 am Eastern Time, to provide trading services for NASDAQ National Market System companies, NASDAQ non-United States securities (except Canadian), American Depository Receipts, and equity securities listed on United States securities exchanges. This office also assists non-United States companies in accessing the United States capital markets and in gaining a listing on NASDAQ.

National Market. To qualify for listing on the NASDAQ National Market, a security of a non-United States issuer, or an American Depository Receipt or similar security issued in respect of a security of a non-United States issuer, must either be already registered and traded on another exchange or market pursuant to the 1934 Act[57] or be a new issue where the offering is conducted on a firm or best-efforts commitment basis. If on a firm-commitment basis, the securities of the issuer will be considered for inclusion on the day that its registration statement is declared effective by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

If on a best-efforts commitment basis, the securities of the issuer will be considered for inclusion on the closing of the offering. If a new issue, qualification will automatically terminate 120 days after the last day of the issuer's fiscal year during which the issuer's registration statement became effective. The three alternative listing requirements for the NASDAQ National Market,[58] which are applicable both to non-United States and United States companies, are as follows:

- Alternative 1: Net tangible assets, US $6 million;[59] pre-tax income, US $ 1 million in latest fiscal year or two of last three fiscal years; public float, 1.1 million shares; market value of public float, US $8 million; minimum bid price, US $5; shareholders (round-lot holders), 400; and market makers, three.[60]
- Alternative 2: Net tangible assets, US $18 million; public float, 1.1 million shares; operating history, two years; market value of public float, US $18 million; minimum bid price, US $5; shareholders (round-lot holders), 400; and market makers, three.

58 National Association of Securities Dealers' Manual, Marketplace rules, rules 4300–4400 et seq.
59 'Net tangible assets' means total assets, excluding goodwill, minus total liabilities.
60 A NASDAQ 'market maker' is a dealer that, with respect to a security, holds itself out as being willing to buy and sell such security for its own account on a regular and continuous basis, and that is registered as such.

- Alternative 3: Market capitalisation, US $75 million; or total assets, US $75 million; and total revenue, US $75 million; public float, 1.1 million shares; market value of public float, US $20 million; minimum bid price, US $5; shareholders (round-lot holders), 400; and market makers, four.

Corporate Governance. Under any of these three alternatives, a corporation applying for listing must agree to certain corporate governance requirements. The listing requirements can be flexible, given the requirements of the local rules under which the corporation operates.

The National Association of Securities Dealers provides that no provision of its listing requirements 'will be construed to require any [non-United States] issuer to do any act that is contrary to a law, rule, or regulation of any public authority exercising jurisdiction over such issuer or that is contrary to generally accepted business practices in the issuer's country of domicile. NASDAQ shall have the ability to provide exemptions from the applicability of these provisions as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out this intent'.[61] This rule particularly applies to the corporate governance provisions where corporate behaviour is mandated.

Distribution of Annual Reports. Each issuer is required to distribute to shareholders copies of an annual report containing audited financial statements of the company and all of its subsidiaries.

The report is required to be distributed to shareholders a reasonable period of time prior to the company's annual meeting of shareholders. The report also must be filed with NASDAQ at the time it is distributed to shareholders.

Distribution of Interim Reports. Each issuer is required to make available copies of quarterly reports, including statements of operating results to shareholders either prior to, or as soon as practicable, following the company's filing of its quarterly report with the Securities and Exchange Commission,[62] except that 'foreign private issuers'[63]

61 National Association of Securities Dealers' Manual, Marketplace rules, rule 4320.

62 Form 10-Q for domestic issuers.

63 The term 'foreign private issuer' is defined as: any foreign issuer other than a foreign government except an issuer meeting the following conditions: (a) More than 50 per cent of the issuer's outstanding voting securities are directly or indirectly held owned of record by residents of the United States; and (b) Any of the following: (i) the majority of the executive officers or directors are United States citizens or residents; (ii) more than 50 per cent of the assets of the issuer are located in the United States; or (iii) the business of the issuer is administered principally in the United States. Instructions to paragraph (c)(1): to determine the percentage of outstanding voting securities held by United States residents: (a) use the method of calculating record ownership in rule 12g3-2(a) under the 1934 Act (section 240.12g3-2(a)); (b) unless information provided by the depositary demonstrates otherwise, count the holders of American Depositary Receipts as United States holders of the underlying securities; and (c) count shares of voting securities beneficially owned by residents of the United States as reported on reports of beneficial ownership provided to you or filed publicly and based on information otherwise provided to you. (Securities Act Release 7745; Exchange Act Release 41936; International Series Release 1205 (October 1999). The reference to rule 12g3-2(a) under the 1934 Act (s 240.12g3-2(a)) requires the issuer to 'look through' the record ownership of brokers, dealers, banks or nominees holding securities for the accounts of their customers to determine the residency of those customers' (International Series Release 1205).

do not need to file quarterly reports with the Securities and Exchange Commission and, therefore, do not need to file interim reports.

Independent Directors. Each issuer is required to maintain a minimum of three independent directors on its board of directors.

Audit Committee. Each issuer is required to establish and maintain an audit committee, a majority of the members of which must be independent directors.[64]

Shareholder Meetings. Each issuer is required to hold an annual meeting of shareholders and must provide advance notice of such meeting to NASDAQ.

Quorum. Each issuer must provide for a quorum as specified in its by-laws for any meeting of the holders of common stock; however, in no case may such quorum be less than one-third of the outstanding shares of the company's common voting stock.

Conflicts of Interest. Each issuer is required to conduct an appropriate review of all related-party transactions on an ongoing basis and to utilise the company's audit committee, or another comparable committee composed of members of the board of directors, for the review of potential conflict of interest situations where appropriate.

Shareholder Approval. Each issuer must require shareholder approval of a plan or arrangement under sub-paragraph (A) below or, prior to the issuance of certain securities, under sub-paragraph (B), (C), or (D) below:

> (A) when a stock option or purchase plan is to be established or other arrangement made pursuant to which stock may be acquired by officers or directors, except for warrants or rights issued generally to security holders of the company or broadly based plans or arrangements including other employees (eg, employee stock ownership plans);[65]
> (B) when the issuance will result in a change of control of the issuer;
> (C) in connection with the acquisition of the stock or assets of another company if: (a) any individual director, officer, or substantial shareholder of the issuer has a five per cent or greater interest (or such persons collectively have a 10 per cent or greater interest), directly or indirectly, in the company or assets to be acquired or in the

64 Like the New York Stock Exchange, companies listing on NASDAQ will be subject to the recently modified regulations regarding audit committees.

65 In a case where the shares are issued to a person not previously employed by the company, as an inducement essential to the individual's entering into an employment contract with the company, shareholder approval will generally not be required. Where the establishment of a plan or arrangement under which the amount of securities which may be issued does not exceed the least of: (a) one per cent of the number of shares of common stock, (b) one per cent of the voting power outstanding, or (c) 25,000 shares, shareholder approval will generally not be required.

consideration to be paid in the transaction, or series of related transactions, and the present or potential issuance of common stock, or securities convertible into or exercisable for common stock, could result in an increase in outstanding common shares or voting power of five per cent or more, or (b) where, due to the present or potential issuance of common stock, or securities convertible into or exercisable for common stock, other than a public offering for cash: (i) the common stock has, or will have on issuance, voting power equal to or in excess of 20 per cent of the voting power outstanding before the issuance of stock or securities convertible into or exercisable for common stock, or (ii) the number of shares of common stock to be issued is or will be equal to or in excess of 20 per cent of the number of shares of common stock outstanding before the issuance of the stock or securities; or

(D) in connection with a transaction other than a public offering involving: (a) the sale or issuance by the issuer of common stock, or securities convertible into or exercisable for common stock, at a price less than the greater of book or market value which together with sales by officers, directors, or substantial shareholders of the company, equals 20 per cent or more of common stock or 20 per cent or more of the voting power outstanding before the issuance, or (b) the sale or issuance by the company of common stock, or securities convertible into or exercisable for common stock, equal to 20 per cent or more of the common stock or 20 per cent or more of the voting power outstanding before the issuance for less than the greater of book or market value of the stock. Exceptions may be made on application to NASDAQ when the delay in securing stockholder approval would seriously jeopardise the financial viability of the enterprise and reliance by the company on this exception is expressly approved by the audit committee or a comparable body of the board of directors.[66]

Voting Rights. A company may not:

- Take corporate action to impose any restriction on the voting power of shares of the common stock of the issuer held by a beneficial or record holder based on the number of shares held by such beneficial or record holder;
- Take corporate action to impose any restriction on the voting power of shares of the common stock of the issuer held by a beneficial or record holder based on the length of time such shares have been held by such beneficial or record holder;
- Make any issuance of securities through an exchange offer by the issuer for shares of an outstanding class of the common stock of the issuer, in which the securities issued have voting rights greater than or less than the per share voting rights of any outstanding class of the common stock of the issuer; or
- Make any issuance of securities pursuant to a stock dividend, or any other type of distribution of stock, in which the securities issued have voting rights greater than the per share voting rights of any outstanding class of the common stock of the issuer.

Listing Agreement. Each issuer must execute a listing agreement in the form designated by NASDAQ.

66 A company relying on this exception must mail to all shareholders not later than 10 days before issuance of the securities a letter alerting them to its omission to seek the shareholder approval that would otherwise be required and indicating that the audit committee of the board or a comparable body has expressly approved the exception.

Peer Review of Accountant. Each issuer must be audited by an independent public accountant that:

- Has received an external quality control review by an independent public accountant that determines whether the auditor's system of quality control is in place and operating effectively and whether established policies and procedures and applicable auditing standards are being followed; or
- Is enrolled in a peer review program and within 18 months receives a peer review that meets acceptable guidelines.

Such guidelines are that:

- The peer review should be comparable to the standards of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants (AICPA) included in 'Standards for Performing on Peer Reviews', codified in the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants Securities and Exchange Commission Practice s Reference Manual;
- The peer review program should be subject to oversight by an independent body comparable to the organisational structure of the Public Oversight Board as codified in the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants Securities and Exchange Commission Practices Reference Manual; and
- The administering entity and the independent oversight body of the peer review program must, as part of their rules of procedure, require the retention of the peer review working papers for 90 days after acceptance of the peer review report and allow NASDAQ access to those working papers.

Solicitation of Proxies. Each issuer is required to solicit proxies and provide proxy statements for all meetings of shareholders and to provide copies of such proxy solicitations to NASDAQ.

For each of the above corporate governance requirements, the non-United States issuer may send a 'request for exemption' to the NASDAQ Listing and Qualification Department, requesting an exemption from a specific requirement, if such requirement is not required in the home country of the issuer.[67] The non-United States company is exempt from the federal regulation of proxy solicitation under section 14 of the 1934 Act by virtue of rule 3a12-3(b).[68]

NASDAQ SmallCap Market Listing. To qualify for listing on the NASDAQ SmallCap Market, a security of a non-United States issuer, an American Depository Receipt, or similar security issued in respect of a security of a non-United States issuer, must either be already registered and traded on another exchange or market pursuant to the 1934 Act[69] or be a new issue where the offering is conducted on a firm-commitment or best-efforts commitment basis.

67 National Association of Securities Dealers' Manual, Marketplace rules, rule 4460(a).
68 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 240.3a12-3.
69 Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, 15 United States Code, s 78l(g).

If on a firm-commitment basis, the securities of the issuer will be considered for inclusion on the day that its registration statement is declared effective by the Securities and Exchange Commission. If on a best-efforts commitment basis, the securities of the issuer will be considered for inclusion on the closing of the offering. If a new issue, qualification for listing will automatically terminate 120 days after the last day of the issuer's fiscal year during which the issuer's registration statement became effective.

The listing requirements for listing on the NASDAQ SmallCap Market[70] are as follows:

- Net tangible assets — US $4 million; or market capitalisation, US $50 million; or net income, US $750,000 in the latest fiscal year or two of the last three fiscal years; and
- Public float — 1 million shares;
- Market value of public float — US $5 million;
- Minimum bid price: US $4;
- Shareholders (round-lot holders) — 300; and
- Market makers — three.

In addition, a corporation with an operating history of less than one year must have a market capitalisation of US $50 million or more.

OTC Bulletin Board

The National Association of Securities Dealers also operates and oversees the OTC Bulletin Board, which is an electronic, screen-based market for securities that are not listed on NASDAQ or any United States stock exchange. The OTC Bulletin Board is an alternative for stocks that cannot meet the listing requirements on an established stock exchange or market or that are very thinly traded. To be listed on the OTC Bulletin Board, a company must be:

- Registered pursuant to the Exchange Act, or otherwise be subject to the requirement to file periodic reports with the Commission; and
- Current in its filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

If the company does not make a timely filing, it will be given 30 or 60 day grace period, depending on the type of company, to file the late reports. If the report is still not filed by the end of the grace period, quotations of the company's securities will not be allowed.

The OTC Bulletin Board captures and displays bid and asked quotations and unpriced indications of interest. All priced quotations on domestic stocks are entered by market makers and must be firm for a minimum size, based on the price of the security. All prices for domestic stocks can be continuously updated. For non-United States stocks and American Depository Receipts, quotations can be updated twice a day.

Pink Sheets

Another alternative for securities of an issuer which do not qualify for listing on an exchange or market, but still have an active market interest, is a quote service provided by Pink Sheets LLC ('Pink Sheets'), which was formerly known as the National Quotation Bureau (NQB), to brokers and dealers. A non-United States issuer may list on the Pink Sheets:

- As a result of not qualifying for an exchange or market;
- Through a lack of resources or insolvency; or
- As a result of being de-listed from an exchange or market.

The Pink Sheets originally listed these over-the-counter transactions on a daily basis and were printed on pink paper. However, they are now tracked both electronically and via print products, on a real-time basis. Due to an increase in the number of issuers delisted or dropped by the OTC Bulletin Board, the Pink Sheets have expanded its quotation service and has recently instituted real-time pricing. It is anticipated that these services will bring more liquidity and more transparency to these markets.

Alternative Trading Systems

In addition, as of April 1999, registered broker-dealers may set up private alternative trading systems, rather than registering as a national securities exchange, so long as they comply with Regulation ATS. If the alternative trading system trades less than five per cent of the trading volume in all securities that it trades, it only needs to file with the Securities and Exchange Commission a notice of operation and quarterly statements and:

- Maintain records, including an audit trail of transactions; and
- Refrain from using the words 'exchange', 'stock market', or other similar terms in its name.

On the other hand, an alternative trading system with five per cent or more of the trading volume of any security that chooses to register as a broker-dealer — instead of as an exchange — must be linked to a national market systems securities exchange and comply with the obligations that govern registered exchanges. Furthermore, any alternative trading system registered as a broker-dealer must meet even more stringent requirements concerning its standards and procedures.

Among these recent developments are regulatory challenges resulting from increased use of, and activity by, Electronic Communication Networks (ECNs). These are private trading systems where the ECN matches two subscribers' orders, and charge each participant a fee for actions as their agent in the transaction. While ECNs certainly enhance the market's liquidity, the Securities and Exchange Commission is currently monitoring and contemplating regulation to address fairness issues and other challenges caused by the applicable fees and accessibility of the ECN markets.[71]

71 Testimony of Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Arthur Levitt concerning market structure issues currently facing the Securities and Exchange Commission, before the United States Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, 27 October 1999.

PORTAL Market

Simultaneously with the adoption of rule 144A,[72] which provides for the resale of certain restricted securities of large companies to qualified institutional buyers, the Securities and Exchange Commission approved the National Association of Securities Dealers' Private Offering, Resale, and Trading Through Automated Linkages (PORTAL) System.[73]

PORTAL is a trading system designed to establish automated trading, clearance, and settlement facilities for primary placements and secondary trading of unregistered securities to qualified institutional buyers through the International Securities Clearing Corporation, Depository Trust Company, and Centrale de Livraison de Valeurs Mobilieres, SA, Luxembourg. PORTAL also provides facilities for primary placements of rule 144A securities.

Public Offerings by Foreign Issuers

In General

The United States has historically been a strong advocate of international commerce and the unfettered international movement of goods, services, and capital. Now, here is the advocacy more apparent than in the accessibility of the growing United States capital markets to non-United States companies. As evidence, non-United States companies' participation in the United States public market continued to show strong growth in 1999.

During 1999, approximately 120 foreign companies from over 26 countries entered the United States public markets for the first time, resulting in more than US $244 billion registered by non-United States companies for public offerings. In total, at year-end 1998, there were nearly 1,200 non-United States companies from 57 countries filing reports with the Securities and Exchange Commission.[74]

To be a participant in these explosive markets, non-United States companies offering their securities to United States persons are generally subject to United States securities laws in the same manner as their counterpart United States domestic issuers[75] except that, in certain circumstances, the domestic disclosure requirements have been altered to fit a typical foreign company profile.[76]

Thus, a non-United States issuer proposing to make a public offering of securities in the United States must register the offering under the 1933 Act,[77] and market trading must be conducted under the 1934 Act,[78] but the disclosure requirements have been altered to fit an international context.

A non-United States issuer proposing to make a public offering of securities in the United States must register the offering under the 1933 Act,[79] and market trading must be conducted under the 1934 Act.[80]

The securities regulatory system in the United States does not register companies; rather, the regulatory system focuses on the type of transaction, regardless of whether it is a private or public transaction, and the actual securities sold or traded. An initial public offering in the United States is a distribution where a once privately owned company transforms itself into a publicly held one by selling its securities to the public. Before selling its securities to the public, the registrant must:

- Register the shares and the distribution by filing a registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission;
- Gain effectiveness for the registration statement; and
- Close the purchase and sale.

Usually, this transaction is conducted through one or more lead underwriters[81] that organise a syndicate of underwriters to sell the securities to the public.

Often, in today's market, there will be a domestic and international offering initiated simultaneously using the same disclosure document. Once an initial public offering has become effective or closed, a trading market in the United States may be commenced by registering such securities under the 1934 Act.[82] In furtherance of the precepts of registration, the 1934 Act promulgates an on-going duty to periodically disclose certain material business and financial information to the broker-dealer community and the investing public.[83]

Foreign issuers must comply with the registration provisions of the federal securities laws, including the presentation of financial statements in accordance with United States generally accepted accounting principles ('United States GAAP').

Foreign private issuers with little or no experience in United States capital markets should be aware of the requirements of the public and private markets in the United States and the advantages and disadvantages related to becoming a publicly traded company in the United States.

Definition of a Foreign Private Issuer

In General

The Securities and Exchange Commission has provided an integrated disclosure system for 'foreign private issuers' that is different from the requirements for domestic issuers. One of the major elements of the recently enacted changes is the amendment to rule 405 under the Securities Act and rule 3b-4 under the Exchange Act to include a revised definition of 'foreign private issuer'. Due to increased prevalence of offshore nominees and custodial accounts, the Securities and Exchange Commission wants to see a clearer picture of a company's ownership. As such a 'foreign private issuer'[84] is now defined as:

> . . . any foreign issuer other than a foreign government except an issuer meeting the following conditions: (1) More than 50 per cent of the issuer's outstanding voting securities are directly owned of record by residents of the United States; and (2) Any of the following: (i) the majority of the executive officers or directors are United States citizens or residents; and (ii) more than 50 per cent of the assets of the issuers are located in the United States; or (iii) the business of the issuer is administered principally in the United States . . . .

Instruction to Paragraph (c)(1)

To determine the percentage of outstanding voting securities held by United States residents:

> (A) Use the method of calculating record ownership in rule 12g3-2 (a) under the 1934 Act (section 240.12g3-2(a)); (B) Unless information provided by the depositary demonstrates otherwise, count the holders of American Depositary Receipts as United States holders of the underlying securities; and (C) Count shares of voting securities beneficially owned by residents of the United States as reported on reports of beneficial ownership provided to you or filed publicly and based on information otherwise provided to you. (Securities Act Release 7745; Exchange Act Release 41936; International Series Release 1205 (28 September 1998)).

The reference to rule 12g3-2(a) under the 1934 Act (section 240.12g3-2(a)) requires the issuer 'to "look through" the record ownership of brokers, dealers, banks, or nominees holding securities for the accounts of their customers to determine the residency of those customers'.[85]

If an issuer is a foreign private issuer, the United States securities laws prescribe a different set of requirements, generally encompassing the following:

- Interim reporting must be on the basis of the foreign private issuer's home country and stock exchange practice; quarterly reports are not mandated for foreign private issuers, as opposed to domestic issuers, except that many foreign private issuers nonetheless provide interim information to comply with their trading obligations on stock exchanges or markets.

84 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.405, or 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 240.3b-4(c).

85 International Series Release 1205.

- Foreign private issuers are exempt from the proxy solicitation requirements of section 14 of the 1934 Act,[86] and the short swing trading restrictions of section 16 of the 1934 Act,[87] and the short swing trading restrictions of section 16 of the 1934 Act applicable to domestic issuers.[88]
- Foreign private issuers are not required to disclose executive compensation on an individual basis, but they may instead disclose on an aggregate if so permitted in a foreign issuer's home country.[89]

Advantages and Disadvantages of Going Public in the United States

Advantages

Access to Capital. One of the main advantages of going public in the United States is access to capital at a potentially attractive evaluation or multiple of earnings based on the type of company, its historical earnings and growth, and its future business plan.

An initial public equity offering can bring considerable proceeds to a company. Subsequently, the public company can return to the market for additional capital through secondary equity offerings.

Listing. In addition, a public offering is one method to provide for the listing of the securities of a non-United States company on a stock exchange or market. The creation of a public market is intended to result in increased liquidity of the holdings of the principal owners, as well as minority shareholders, allowing a sale of shares to quickly be converted to cash.

This is especially true for non-United States issuers who may value the ability to have liquidity outside of their home market in United States dollars.

New Currency. A public offering also results in the establishment of a new currency in the company, which represents the market's perception of the company's value. A company then has increased flexibility to facilitate future financing and merger and acquisition possibilities.

The company whose stock is publicly traded may be in a better position to acquire other companies through a business combination transaction using its own shares as consideration, in lieu of cash, for the shares of the target company.

Sale of Shares. In addition, the company, with the co-operation of the issuer, founders, directors, and officers, may be able to sell its shares, which were acquired in private transactions, as 'selling stockholders' at either the initial public offering stage or in subsequent offerings.

89 Item 6B of Form 20-F.

Moreover, publicly traded stock, as opposed to private company equity interests, may provide shareholders with greater liquidity on death.

Once the public market has been created by the initial primary offering, existing shareholders are able to sell their shares in the liquid trading market subject to Commission rules on sales of restricted securities.[90]

Stock Options. In addition, an issuer may be in a better position to attract employees by offering stock options and an employee stock ownership plan when the underlying stock is publicly traded.

Prestige. Another possible positive by-product of going public in the United States is that the company gains prestige and publicity among the general investing public, thus giving the issuer a more favourable image, increasing good will, and perhaps putting it in a competitive advantage over a privately held competitor who is not required to disclose information to the public. Consumers are able to 'own' the company whose products and services they use.

Disadvantages

Compliance. However, the privilege of access to United States public markets and use of United States markets and exchanges brings with it the obligation to comply with the United States securities laws. Foreign issuers coming into United States markets should appreciate the fact that the Securities and Exchange Commission takes the enforcement of these laws very seriously.

The activism of the Securities and Exchange Commission in promoting fair and full disclosure of information and enforcing penalties and sanctions against fraudulent conduct is a very significant factor in creating investor confidence in United States markets.

Disclosure. Full public disclosure is one of the main burdens of going public. On the effectiveness of its initial registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the issuer becomes subject to the annual and periodic reporting requirements and other requirements of the 1934 Act. The disclosure, accounting, and reporting requirements imposed by the Securities and Exchange Commission are far more stringent than those of other nations.[91]

In addition, as discussed above, the stock exchanges and markets require immediate public disclosure of 'any significant event that could affect an investor's decision to buy, sell, or hold the company's stock'.[92]

The initial prospectus and subsequent Commission filings will reveal a significant amount of material business and financial information about the company that would not be available about a private company. This information provides competitors with a view of the company that they would not otherwise have. Included are descriptions of the issuer's business, business strategies, material contracts, and information on every business subsidiary. This disclosure, including proposed corporate actions, will be subject to the scrutiny of the investment community, shareholders, and security regulators.

Inaccurate or selective disclosure may be a source of litigation. In fact, this topic has become a 'hot button' item for Securities and Exchange Commission rule making, as evidenced by the recent enactment of Regulation FD (Fair Disclosure) which imposes new restrictions on the disclosure of material non-public information.[93] Another result of an offering is the immediate dilution of an existing shareholder's holdings. For those shareholders (or employees or directors) that have invested their time, effort, and money into a growing company, a public offering will dilute or reduce their ownership interest.

Costs. In addition, offering costs required for a public offering of securities — underwriters, legal, accounting, printing, transfer agents, stock exchange listing, and state blue sky fees — may be substantial and will reduce the proceeds of the offering to the company. The company runs the risk that the offering will not be consummated, causing the company to incur all the fees without any guarantee of a result.

Compliance with the reporting requirements under the 1934 Act will be a significant yearly administrative cost and an ongoing onerous task. The task of registration and periodic reports will require a substantial amount of management's time and effort.[94]

Management. Once an issuer has offered its shares to the public, the relationship between the company's managers, directors, and controlling shareholders to its shareholders is altered.

Having publicly traded securities changes the focus of the company, which must thereafter be continually focused on relationships with its shareholders and the public perception of the company, including the disclosure of announcements and responding to the inquires of analysts. As a result of the pressures imposed by market forces, management of a publicly traded company may feel pressure to focus on short-term maximisation of profits at the expense of developing long-term goals.

Litigation Risk. Being a publicly traded company also subjects the company to increased litigation risk. The Securities and Exchange Commission has significant enforcement powers to deter fraudulent behaviour and to enforce compliance with United States law.

In addition, United States law provides for private rights of action to enforce the regulatory system. As a result, the potential for litigation may influence role in the actions of a publicly traded company.

Liquidating Assets. Although an insider's investment in a public company will be more liquid than if the company were still private, control over liquidating that asset may be limited. One may not trade shares when in possession of non-public material information. In addition, there are periods when shares may not be traded due to possession of non-public information, such as at the time of earnings announcements, and periods when shares purchased in the public market may not be resold.

Selling by high-ranking insiders also can adversely affect market confidence in a company while buying sends a positive signal. Stock issued when the company was private may still be 'restricted' under Commission rules, even after the public offering, and thus subject to sale restrictions.[95]

Insider Trading. In recognition of the potential for abuse by people with access to non-public material information, the Securities and Exchange Commission has recently enacted Regulation FD and rules 10b5-1 and 10b5-2.

In response to the growing practice of issuers disclosing important non-public information, such as earnings warnings, to securities analysts or institutional investors before making this information to the general public, the Securities and Exchange Commission enacted Regulation FD. Regulation FD provides that when an issuer, or a person acting on behalf of an issuer, discloses material non-public information to a selective audience (eg, analysts and selective institutional investors), it must make public disclosure of that information, generally by making a filing on Form 8-K.[96]

Rule 10b5-1 of the Exchange Act[97] is intended to clarify the issue of when insider trading liability arises in connection with a trader's 'use' or 'knowing possession' of material non-public information. This rule provides that a person trades 'on the basis of' material non-public information when the person purchases or sells securities while aware of the information.

However, the rule also sets forth several affirmative defences that permit persons to trade in certain circumstances where it is clear that the non-public information was not a factor in the decision to trade.[98]

Rule 10b5-2 of the Exchange Act[99] addresses the issue of when a breach of a family or other non-business relationship may give rise to liability under the misappropriation theory of insider trading. This rule sets forth three non-exclusive bases for determining that a duty of trust or confidence was owed by a person receiving information, and it will provide greater certainty and clarity on this unsettled issue.[100]

Non-United States Issuer Public Offerings in the United States

In General

Non-United States private issuers affecting an initial public offering in the United States must register the offering pursuant to the registration requirements of section 5 of the 1933 Act. Under section 5 of the 1933 Act, it is illegal to offer or sell securities in the United States without a registration statement declared effective by the Securities and Exchange Commission or pursuant to an exemption from registration.

Registration is intended to provide adequate and accurate disclosure of material facts concerning the company and the securities it proposes to sell, so that investors may make a realistic appraisal of the merits of the investment and make an informed investment decision. The Securities and Exchange Commission does not 'approve' or 'disapprove' the offering or exercise any investment judgment on behalf of investors. Any company may register its securities before the Securities and Exchange Commission — no matter the merits of the company, its management, and its prospects.

To this end, the Securities and Exchange Commission mandates registration forms for different types of companies, and it sets compulsory and extensive disclosure requirements and standards. The registration statement includes a prospectus, which is the document that will be provided directly to investors. All registration statements and prospectuses filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission are public documents and are available for inspection and copying at the offices of the Securities and Exchange Commission or through EDGAR, the on-line database of reporting companies and their filings.[101]

Registration Forms

In General. Currently, there are four registration forms (F-1, F-2, F-3, and F-4) that can be used to register the securities of a foreign private issuer for a public offering in the United States under the Securities Act. They essentially parallel Registration Forms S-1 through S-4, which are used by United States companies. In addition, Form F-6 is available to register American Depositary Receipts of non-United States issuers (see text, below).

Certain recent revisions effecting international disclosure standards, specifically those modifications to Form 20-F, which governs certain registration requirements, have impacted the application and caused a revision of those forms used for registration under the 1933 Act.

Effective Dates and Transition Periods. In light of the recent revisions, the Securities and Exchange Commission disallowed any 'grandfathered' exemptions to these revised rules which became effective on 30 September 2000, with certain exemptions.[102] In some cases, as explained below, the date at which a registrant will have to comply with a revised form will depend on that registrant's fiscal year end.

Registration Statements Filed on Form F-1, Form F-4, or Form 20-F. Registrants (those non-United States entities that have registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission) must use revised Form F-1 and revised Form 20-F for registration statements first filed on or after 30 September 2000.

Registrants that are not eligible to incorporate Form F-4 information by reference to a previously filed annual report on Form 20-F also must use revised Form F-4 for registration statements filed on or after 30 September 2000.

Registration Statements Filed on Forms F-2 and F-3 and Form F-4 if It Permits Incorporation by Reference. Forms F-2l, F-3, and Form F-4 permit a registrant to satisfy form requirements by incorporating information from an annual report on Form 20-F. Form F-4 also permits the registrant to incorporate information about the other party to a business combination by referring to that company's annual report.

The revised Forms F-2, F-3, and F-4 do not provide for incorporation of information by reference to 'old' Form 20-F. Accordingly, the revisions to Forms F-2 and F-3 will be effective for registration statements and post-effective amendments filed any time after a registrant is required to file its first annual report on revised Form 20-F. In cases where a Form F-4 permits information about either party to the business combination to be incorporated by reference to an annual report on Form 20-F, the revisions to Form F-4 will be effective for registration statements and post-effective reference is required to file its first annual report on Form 20-F.

Annual Reports Filed on Form 20-F. Revised Form 20-F must be used for annual or transition reports filed with respect to fiscal years ending on or after 30 September 2000.

The following information applies to situations where the registrants make the transition from the old version of a form to the revised version:

- Pre-effective amendments — When, on 30 September 2000, a foreign private issuer has on file at the Securities and Exchange Commission a registration statement on Form F-1, a Form F-4 that does not permit incorporation by reference, or Form 20-F and that registration statement has not been declared effective, the issuer may continue to file pre-effective amendments to that registration statement after 30 September 2000 without modifying those pre-effective amendments to reflect the revisions. This position does not apply to pre-effective amendments to registration statements on Form

102 Securities Act Release Number 7745, Exchange Act Release Number 41936, International Series Release Number 1205 (28 September 1999).

F-2, Form F-3, or a Form F-4 that permit incorporation by reference because registrants will have a lengthy transition period and experience preparing an annual report on revised Form 20-F before they must comply with the revisions to those Securities Act registration statements.

- Post-effective amendments — The revisions to these registration statement forms apply to post-effective amendments filed on or after the effective date given above for a particular form if the post-effective amendment is to include the registrant's latest audited financial statements or to update the prospectus under section 10(a)(3).
- Registration statements and post-effective amendments filed under rule 462(b) and (c) — Registration statements and post-effective amendments filed under rule 462(b) and (c) are effective on filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission. These registration statements and amendments must comply with the registration statement revisions only if the registrant first filed the underlying registration statement on or after the effective date given above for a particular form.
- Prospectus supplements — The revisions to the newly adopted registration statement forms apply to prospectus supplements filed on or after the effective date given above for a particular form. If an issuer filed a base prospectus under rule 415(a)(1)(x) before it was required to comply with revised Form F-3, that base prospectus does not need to be amended, even though subsequent prospectus supplements must comply with the revised form.

Description of Registration Forms

Form F-1. Form F-1 is the basic registration form for public offerings by a foreign private issuer. Forms F-2, F-3, and F-4 are mainly used by non-United States companies to register secondary offerings of securities after the company has registered one or more of its classes of securities and has issued periodic reports pursuant to the 1934 Act. Form F-1 has the same information requirements as Forms F-2 and F-3, except that all information must be included in the document rather than incorporated by reference, thus resulting in a larger, more extensive document.[103]

The majority of first-time foreign private issuer registrants utilise the registration statement on Form F-1, since the issuers generally do not qualify for the other forms due to a lack of history as mandated by the reporting obligations of the 1934 Act. The disclosure requirements under Form F-1 are very similar to the disclosure obligations of a United States issuer on Form S-1. Information required under Form F-1 includes:

- Description of the securities to be offered;
- Pending legal proceedings;
- Risk factors;
- Use of proceeds;
- Determination of offering price;
- Dilution of selling security holders;

103 2 Fed Sec L Rep (CCH), paras 6952 and 6062.

- Plan of distribution;
- General information with respect to the registrant;
- Identity of directors and officers and their remuneration as a group;[104] and
- Audited financial statements prepared under, or reconciled with, United States GAAP.[105]

Unlike its Form S-1 counterpart, Form F-1 currently permits more limited disclosure in certain areas, including disclosure of the compensation and stock ownership of directors and management and transactions between the issuer and its directors and management.[106] In addition, certain disclosure requirements of Form F-1 are unique to the foreign private issuer registering a public offering. These include information regarding:

- The nature and extent of the principal non-United States trading market for the issuer's securities;
- Governmental regulations applicable to the issuer which restrict the import or export of capital or affect the remittance of dividends, interest, or other payments to security holders;
- Limitations on the right to hold or vote securities applicable to persons who are not citizens or residents of the issuer's home country;
- Taxes applicable to United States security holders under the laws of the country in which the issuer is organised and any applicable tax treaty; and
- Exchange rates between United States dollars and the home country currency.[107]

Form F-2. Form F-2, which may be used to register securities to be offered in a transaction other than an exchange offer for securities of another person, is available for a foreign private issuer that:

- Has been subject to 1934 Act reporting obligations for at least 36 months and has timely filed all required 1934 Act reports during the preceding 12 months; or
- Is subject to 1934 Act reporting obligations and has filed at least one annual report; or
- Has timely filed required 1934 Act reports during the last 12 months; and
- Has at least US $75 million in voting stock held by non-affiliates, or is registering non-convertible investment grade debt or preferred securities, or has been subject to 1934 Act reporting obligations for at least 12 months and is registering securities to be offered on exercise of outstanding transferable warrants or rights granted pro rata by the issuer, pursuant to a dividend or interest re-investment plan or, on conversion of outstanding securities, has had no material default on loans or long-term leases or failure to pay a sinking fund instalment or dividend on preferred stock since the end of the last fiscal year covered by certified financial statements in its 1934 Act reports, and no subsidiary of the issuer has had such a default.[108]

Form F-2 requires similar information to the Form F-1. The difference is that the periodic reports must be delivered with the Form F-1 prospectus, while such documents may be incorporated by reference in the Form F-2.

Form F-3. Form F-3, used primarily for non-convertible debt offerings, may be used if the registrant's latest annual report filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission contains financial statements with full reconciliation to United States GAAP, and it is available with a reconciliation if the securities are non-convertible investment grade securities or are to be offered:

- In secondary offerings;
- On exercise of certain outstanding transferable warrants;
- On exercise of rights granted pro rata by the issuer to existing holders of such class;
- Pursuant to a dividend or interest re-investment plan; or
- On conversion of outstanding convertible securities.[109]

To be eligible to use Form F-3, the issuer must have:

- Securities registered under the 1934 Act, section 12(b) or section 12(g), or be required to file reports under the 1934 Act, section 15(d), and have filed at least one annual report;
- Been subject to the 1934 Act reporting obligations and filed all required materials on a timely basis for the last 12 months;
- Had no material default on loans or long-term leases or failure to pay a sinking fund instalment or dividend on preferred stock since the end of the last fiscal year covered by certified financial statements in its 1934 Act reports, and no subsidiary of the issuer may have had such a default; and
- Common stock held by non-affiliates with a market value of at least US $75 million, unless it is registering non-convertible investment grade securities to be offered for cash.[110]

An issuer using Form F-3 must provide a variety of information, including that relating to:

- The terms of the offering, including the use of proceeds;
- The latest and future Exchange Act annual reports and, if appropriate, reports on Form 6-K all of which are incorporated by reference;

110 Form F-3; 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 239.33.

- Any material changes in its affairs since the latest annual report; and
- The financial statements of any business acquired or to be acquired.

Employing the same approach as a United States issuer's Form S-3, Form F-3 incorporates by reference the registrant's latest Form 20-F (see text, below) and otherwise generally requires only transaction-related data.[111]

Form F-4. Form F-4 is available for business combination transactions involving foreign private issuers.[112]

Other Forms. Forms F-7, F-8, F-9, F-10, and F-80 contain the abbreviated disclosure requirements available to qualifying non-United States companies under the multi-jurisdictional disclosure system.[113]

American Depository Receipts

In General

Foreign private issuers raising capital in the United States markets frequently elect to effect the offering utilising American Depository Receipts.[114] As previously described, an American Depository Receipt is a negotiable instrument issued by a third-party depositary, usually a United States bank or its non-United States affiliate, and it represents a specified number of securities of the underlying issuer which are held by the depositary on behalf of the American Depository Receipt holders.

Trades are typically affected in the American Depository Receipts themselves and not in the underlying securities. American Depository Receipts have been developed to alleviate certain legal restrictions and practical problems related to the trading in the underlying issuer of non-United States securities.

First, the American Depository Receipt is transferable on the books of the depositary bank without the need to affect a transfer of the underlying securities on the record books of the issuer. This allows quicker processing of transactions, can eliminate transfer taxes, and can reduce any practical problems with respect to non-United States exchange controls. In addition, the registration of American Depository Receipt holdings eliminates problems associated with non-United States equity securities, such as legal requirements that effectively restrict the ability of holders to vote shares.[115]

The depositary bank acts as the issuer's agent, notifying American Depository Receipt holders of dividend distributions, paying dividends to the American Depository Receipt holders (after converting the dividends to United States currency), and providing to the American Depository Receipt holders other information provided by the issuer to its shareholders, and voting on behalf of the American Depository Receipt holders.

American Depository Receipts may be traded on a United States stock exchange or NASDAQ if registered pursuant to section 12 of the 1934 Act and if they are current with their Securities and Exchange Commission filings. American Depository Receipts also may trade on the OTC Bulletin Board and Pink Sheets, assuming again that they are current with their Securities and Exchange Commission filings.

In most cases, an American Depository Receipt is a superior mechanism for trading the securities of non-United States issuers for the following reasons:

- The American Depository Receipt form of registration is more familiar to the United States investment community;
- The American Depository Receipt is generally easier for United States investors to understand rather than having to deal with the alternative of a foreign share certificate, which may be denominated in a foreign currency or may be in bearer form;
- The American Depository Receipt arrangement enhances transferability of stock certificates by avoiding the legal mandate of multiple jurisdictions, some of which may require an execution of a deed and an acknowledgment before a notary public to transfer securities, and/or might impose stamp or other transfer taxes on share transfers; and
- The American Depository Receipt can be issued in any ratio, such as one American Depository Receipt equals three underlying shares, which could be used to increase the price level of the shares to customary levels of equivalent United States securities or to satisfy minimum price requirements of a United States exchange or market.

Types of American Depositary Receipts

In General. American Depository Receipts generally take two forms, ie, 'unsponsored' and 'sponsored'.

An 'unsponsored' American Depository Receipt is typically created by a depositary bank acting on its own initiative in response to investor interest in a non-United States security. The bank establishes the arrangement, generally with the knowledge, but not the active co-operation, of the non-United States issuer.

Dividend distribution fees and other administrative costs are borne by the American Depository Receipt holders through the bank's retention of a portion of the dividend. The depositary is required to file a registration statement on the relatively simple Form F-6[116] and then may accept deposits of the issuer's securities and commence issuance of receipts against those deposits.

116 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 239.36.

A 'sponsored' American Depository Receipt is created with the consent and assistance of the issuer of the underlying securities. The issuer typically enters into a deposit agreement with the depositary bank, setting forth the rights and obligations of the issuer, the depositary bank, and the holders of American Depository Receipts. The issuer will also sign the F-6 registration statement.[117] In a sponsored arrangement, the issuer typically bears the fees of the depositary.

There are three levels of sponsored American Depository Receipts, each requiring different registration and reporting procedures pursuant to the 1933 Act and the 1934 Act.

Level I American Depository Receipts. Level I American Depository Receipts trade on the OTC Bulletin Board and Pink Sheets, and they do not require the non-United States issuer to comply with United States GAAP or full Commission disclosure requirements, based on the exemption created by rule 12g3-2(c), provided that, to be quoted on the OTC Bulletin Board, the non-United States issuer is registered and current with its filing requirements.

Since Level I American Depository Receipts are not registered under section 12 of the 1934 Act, the issuer is prohibited from raising capital. The issuer of the American Depository Receipt must file on Form F-6, and the American Depository Receipt's underlying security must be registered or exempt from registration under the 1934 Act.

Level II American Depository Receipts. Level II American Depository Receipts are registered under section 12 of the 1934 Act, and thus are eligible to be listed on an exchange or market, but have not been offered to United States investors in a public offering. Level II registration requires filing on Form F-6 as well as on Form 20-F.

Level III American Depository Receipts. The Level III American Depository Receipt requires detailed disclosure about both the issuer and the securities being offered to the public but, unlike a Level II American Depository Receipt, registration of a Level III American Depository Receipt permits an issuer to raise capital through a public offering to United States investors as well as permitting the listing of the American Depository Receipts on a national exchange or market.

Registration of American Depository Receipts

Form F-6 may be used to register the shares evidenced by American Depository Receipts issued against the deposit of the securities of a non-United States issuer, and it may be used only if the issuer is filing periodic reports with the Securities and Exchange Commission under the 1934 Act or the deposited securities are exempt from such reporting by rule 12g3-2(b),[118] if the deposited securities are registered under the 1933 Act or exempt from such registration and if the American Depository Receipt holder is entitled to withdraw the deposited securities at any time, subject only to temporary delays for specified, limited reasons.

117 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 239.36.
118 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 240.12g3-2(b).

A main advantage of an American Depository Receipt is the relative simplicity of Form F-6 and that, pursuant to rule 15d-3,[119] annual and other reports are not required as a result of registering American Depository Receipts on Form F-6. American Depository Receipts also are exempt from registration under section 12(g) of the 1934 Act, pursuant to rule 12g3-2(c).[120]

To become listed on a United States exchange or market, American Depository Receipts must be registered pursuant to section 12 of the 1934 Act,[121] and a registration statement and annual reports must be filed on Form 20-F. Thus, a number of companies decide not to have their American Depository Receipts listed on an exchange or market. Instead they are listed as Level I American Depository Receipts, trading on the Pink Sheets or the OTC Bulletin Board services that provide limited quotation or transaction information but, in the case of the OTC Bulletin Board, still require the issuer to currently file reports with the Securities and Exchange Commission pursuant to section 13 or section 15(d) of the Exchange Act.

In July 1997, the Securities and Exchange Commission adopted rule 12a-8 to exempt American Depository Receipts that are listed on a national securities exchange and registered on Form F-6 from the registration requirements of section 12(b) of the 1934 Act.[122] Nevertheless, the section 12 registration requirements still apply to the class of securities underlying the American Depository Receipts.[123]

Financial Statements

In General. The Securities and Exchange Commission, through the activities of the Office of the Chief Accountant and private sector groups such as the Financial Accounting Standards Board and the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, establishes and maintains stringent accounting standards for companies that avail themselves of the United States capital markets and exchanges.[124]

The Securities and Exchange Commission has recently adopted significant revisions to rules and regulations governing financial disclosure for new non-United States issuers.

Financial Statement Disclosure under Revised United States Disclosure Requirements. The International Organisation of Securities Commissions, of which the Securities and Exchange Commission is a member, developed international disclosure 124 In connection with recent revisions to the rules and regulations governing financial disclosure that are discussed in detail later in this chapter, the Securities and Exchange Commission has issued a recent concept release seeking comments on the necessary elements of an effective, high-quality global financial-reporting framework, specifically, through the work of the International Accounting Standards Committee. standards that facilitate crossborder capital raising and listing by letting companies comply with one set of non-financial disclosure requirements for offerings in several jurisdictions.

The result of these efforts by International Organisation of Securities Commissions is a compilation of international disclosure standards, envisioned as an 'international passport' to the world's capital markets.[125] The International Organisation of Securities Commissions standards were endorsed by International Organisation of Securities Commissions in September 1998. These standards are the basis of the rulemaking revisions currently enacted by the Securities and Exchange Commission.[126]

A major facet of the Securities and Exchange Commission's recent revision is to modify and harmonise international disclosure standards by deleting rule 3-19 of Regulation S-X, replacing it with a new item 8 on Form 20-F. This provision will reduce the current permitted age of reconciled financial statements for foreign private issuers to conform to the proposed International Organisation of Securities Commissions standards.[127]

As mentioned above, the Securities and Exchange Commission has enacted new rules and regulations that significantly change the permitted age of financial statements. The new item 8 of Form 20-F will now mandate that audited financial statements will be no older than 15 months at 'the time of the offering or listing', which means the effective date of the registration statement, rather than the 18 months previously permitted by rule 3-19. For those issuers effecting registration under an initial public offering,[128] the audited financial statements must also be of a date not older than 12 months at the time the offering document is filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission.[129]

State Blue Sky Requirements

Non-United States issuers effecting an offering in the United States must also comply with the securities laws of the individual states in which the offering is conducted. Generally, state securities laws, or 'blue sky' laws, will be complied with by virtue of registration of the offering under the federal securities laws, provided that appropriate notices are filed in the various states.[130]

Following the amendment of certain aspects of the United States federal securities law under the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996,[131] a security which

130 An exception to this exemption from state securities laws is an offering that is exempt from registration pursuant to section 3(a)(10) of the Securities Act. To address a legislative anomaly, securities offered pursuant to this section are no longer deemed as 'covered securities' and as such the securities are not privy to the convenience of the National Securities Markets Improvement Act. Registration Process

In General. Once a company determines to register its shares with the Securities and Exchange Commission, to list the company's securities on the United States stock markets, and/or to raise capital in the United States through an initial public offering, the company should assemble a team of experts to assist with the preparation of a registration statement.

For initial public offerings, the non-United States issuer needs to select an investment banker experienced in this area. The company will formalise its relationship with the underwriter through a 'letter of intent' which outlines fees, ranges for stock price and number of shares, and certain other conditions.

Legal counsel for an entity undertaking an initial public offering should be familiar with the underwriting process and should be accustomed to dealing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the National Association of Securities Dealers, and the state securities commissions regarding the prospectus submission process. The accountants should be certified public accountants whose work conforms to Securities and Exchange Commission Accounting Principles and United States GAAP.

Prospectus. As mentioned above, the prospectus is the key document of the registration document. The prospectus is both a disclosure document, by law, and a selling document, by custom, since it is the only information that the law allows to be disseminated about the offering. Usually, counsel is primarily responsible for drafting the narrative part of the prospectus, while the accounting firm will prepare the financial statements and the investment banker will supply the underwriting details.

Typically, the registration statement goes through many drafts and is extensively reviewed for its accuracy prior to filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission. During this process, counsel typically reviews information regarding the company and its business, its material contracts, its supply and customer relationships, and its management, compensation arrangements, and related-party transactions. Often, counsel will visit the client to review, first hand, its operations and properties. After a registration statement is drafted, it is then reviewed by the underwriter and its counsel.

In an effort to make disclosure more clear, concise, and understandable for investors, the Securities and Exchange Commission has recently adopted a 'Plain English' rule. To avoid extensive comments from the Securities and Exchange Commission, which results in a delaying of the Registration Statement being declared effective, issuers should draft the prospectus with an aim towards compliance with the Plain English mandate.[132]

More information regarding the plain English rule is available in the Securities and Exchange Commission's A Plain English Handbook — How to Create Clear Securities and Exchange Commission Disclosure Documents, which is available at the Securities and Exchange Commission's web site (www.sec.gov) or by calling 1-800-SEC-0330.

Underwriters occupy a unique position in United States securities law, and they must perform 'due diligence' on the company to meet their obligations under the United States securities law.

Once the company, its counsel, accountants, and advisors are satisfied with the registration statement, and the underwriter and its counsel are satisfied as well, the registration statement is filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission and the appropriate fee paid.

Commission Role. The Securities and Exchange Commission's role in the regulation of prospectuses focuses on disclosure. Within the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Division of Corporation Finance reviews the registration statement when it is filed for the accuracy and adequacy of all material facts — information that would affect investment decisions and compliance with the Securities and Exchange Commission's rules and forms. Unlike United States issuers, the Securities and Exchange Commission's Office of Corporate Finance, Division of International Corporate Finance, is willing to review, on a confidential basis, the disclosure documents of the non-United States issuers in draft form on a confidential non-public basis, if requested by the non-United States issuer.

When possible, the Division will provide solutions and comments to the documents, prior to actual filing. The Securities and Exchange Commission has stated that it will, on a day-to-day basis, find solutions to problems non-United States issuers have with registering under the federal securities laws, including rule-making initiatives and meeting with non-United States issuers.[133]

The registration statement must be reviewed, cleared, and declared effective by the Securities and Exchange Commission before sales can be confirmed. It is unlawful to sell securities until the registration statement has been declared effective.[134] To facilitate crossborder offerings and listings, and recognising the particular difficulties of coordinating time schedules for cross-border offerings, the Securities and Exchange Commission staff review process has been tailored to accommodate the special scheduling demands for such offerings.

Generally, first comments are received within 30 days of submission. The Securities and Exchange Commission will respond formally to the registration statement with a 'comment letter', specifying any deficiencies that need to be addressed. The company, in turn, files a letter with the Securities and Exchange Commission responding to requests for information and describing proposed amendments to the prospectus.

Distribution. After the 'preliminary prospectus' (commonly referred to as a 'red herring' because of the red ink printed on the cover, stating that it is not a final prospectus and cannot be used to effect sales) has been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission as part of the registration statement, it may be distributed for circulation among potential investors.

The underwriter will then assemble a syndicate, consisting of additional investment bankers who will place portions of the offering to achieve the desired distribution.

The lead underwriter will begin to accumulate indications of interest solicited through its efforts, as well as the syndicate's, from institutions and brokers that have approached their clients. This gives assurance that the offering is viable and helps to determine the final number of shares to be offered and the allocations to each investor.

The investment banker and the company will then design and perform the 'road show', a series of meetings with potential investors and analysts in various cities. The road show consists of a fairly elaborate formal presentation on the company's operations, financial condition, performance, markets, and products, delivered by the company's top executives, who are then available for questions.[135]

National Association of Securities Dealers Filing. Contemporaneously with filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the registration statement also is filed with the National Association of Securities Dealers, which reviews the underwriting compensation and offering terms. The National Association of Securities Dealers regulates the actions of broker-dealers, including underwriters, and must approve the compensation arrangements prior to the registration statement being declared effective.

While the Securities and Exchange Commission's review focuses on proper disclosure, the National Association of Securities Dealers review focuses on the fairness of underwriting compensation, terms, and arrangements. The National Association of Securities Dealers review is conducted by its Corporate Financing Department according to the National Association of Securities Dealers Corporate Financing Rules and Code of Procedure.[136]

Final Version of Prospectus. After first comments are received from the Securities and Exchange Commission, the issuer will respond to the Securities and Exchange Commission and, if required, amend the registration statement by providing amendments to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Once the staff of the Securities and Exchange Commission believes that the registration conforms to the requirements of the applicable form, the Securities and Exchange Commission will declare the statement effective. The final version of the prospectus can now be printed, and delivered to prospective investors, and the registered securities may be sold.

Integration of Public and Private Offerings

In General. A fundamental issue in securities regulation is the idea of integration. The issue of integration is seminal in determining whether multiple securities transactions should be considered as part of the same offering.

136 National Association of Securities Dealers Publications, Going Public, located at the NASDAQ web site http://www.nasdaq.com.

The integration doctrine prevents an issuer from artificially aggregating multiple offerings into one transaction so as to avoid proper separate registration.

Abandoned Registered Offering. The integration issue is salient when an issuer has decided to switch between a public offering and a private offering when changing market or business conditions dictate such a switch. The manifestation of this problem is when an issuer files a registration statement for a public offering, which the Securities and Exchange Commission historically has deemed to be a general solicitation and subsequently decides to conduct a private offering.

Because the filing of the registration statement has historically been deemed as a general solicitation by the Securities and Exchange Commission that would be integrated into the proposed private offering, the private offering exemption would likely be unavailable to the issuer.[137]

Abandoned Private Offering. In the event that an issuer commences a private offering (but does not sell any securities in this private offering) prior to a registered offering, but then decides to file a registration statement, it is likely that these offerings could be integrated thereby causing a potential violation of section 5(c), which is more commonly known as 'gun jumping'.

To provide clarification on this issue, the Securities and Exchange Commission has adopted new rule 155[138] which provides a safe harbour, based on compliance with certain conditions, for a registered offering following an abandoned private offering or, conversely, a private offering following an abandoned (or failed) registered offering, without integrating the registered and private offerings in either case.[139]

Private Placements by Non-United States Issuers

Exemptions Available to Non-United States Issuers

Exemption from Registration

Section 5(a) of the 1933 Act provides that it is unlawful for a person or entity to use the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce to sell unregistered securities, whether the issuer is a United States or a non-United States person or entity.[140] However, there is a series of statutory provisions, rules, and interpretations that exempt certain transactions from section 5(a), a number of which are available to non-United States issuers offering and selling securities within the United States.[141]

These exemptions relate only to the specified transaction and not to any future sale or transfer. As a result, the resale of the securities must be reviewed on a transaction-by-transaction basis and an exemption found for each resale or transfer. Securities sold in exempt transactions are generally deemed restricted securities, which may be resold only if registered or if another exemption is available.

Certain Exemptions Not Available to Non-United States Issuers

Certain exemptions available for domestic entities are not available for non-United States issuers offering and selling securities within the United States. The first of these is the intrastate exemption set forth in section 3(a)(11) of the 1933 Act. This exemption from registration is available to an issuer organised under the laws of a state or territory of the United States and doing business in that same state or territory.[142]

Similarly, Regulation A, promulgated under section 3(b) of the 1933 Act,[143] which provides for a conditional exemption from registration for public offerings not exceeding US $5 million, will not be available to most non-United States issuers because its use is limited to issuers organised under the laws of the United States or Canada.[144]

Exemptions Applicable to Non-United States Issuers

In General. The 1933 Act provides statutory authority for exemptions from the registration requirements under section 5. Section 3(a)(10) provides an exemption when securities are issued under a plan of exchange approved by a court or another governmental authority. Section 3(b) provides authority for the Securities and Exchange Commission to exempt transactions where registration is deemed not necessary because of the small amount contemplated by the offering, under US $5 million in value, or by the limited character of the offering.[145] Section 4(2) exempts transactions by an issuer not involving a public offering.[146] Section 4(6) exempts transactions with accredited investors.[147]

This patchwork of exemptions in the statute, and the rules and regulations promulgated by the Securities and Exchange Commission thereunder, form the basis for the exemption of certain limited offerings from the registration provisions of the 1933 Act.

Central to the notion of exempt transactions is the concept of integration. If an issuer could selectively sell securities under one or more exemptions in a concerted scheme to evade the registration requirements or in contravention of any particular exemption, the objectives of the regulatory framework would not be met. The Securities and Exchange Commission has identified certain factors to determine whether the various offerings should be integrated, including whether the offerings represent a single plan of financing, are the same class of securities, are made at or about the same time, involve the same consideration, or are being made for the same general purpose. Each transaction and the history of the issuer needs to be reviewed to determine whether any or all of the offerings are integrated for United States securities law purposes.[148]

Regulation D Exemptions. In 1982, the Securities and Exchange Commission adopted Regulation D under the Securities Act to clarify certain statutory exemptions available for the sale of securities by issuers on a private basis.[149] Among other things, these rules clarify the disclosure obligations for certain types of limited offerings, and they set forth clear criteria for integration of previous offerings. There are three exemptions under Regulation D, rules 504, 505, and 506, all of which may be used by non-United States issuers, as follows.

Rule 504 Exemption. Rule 504 provides for an exemption from registration pursuant to section 3(b) of the 1933 Act.[150] This exemption from registration will apply to an offer of securities not exceeding US $1 million during any 12-month period. The exemption is available to any issuer, including a non-United States issuer, so long as it is not subject to the reporting requirements of sections 13 or 15(d) of the 1934 Act and is not an investment company.[151] However, rule 504 is not available for a 'blank check offering' by a development stage company. A blank check offering is an offering where no specific business plan or purpose exists or where a business plan exists to engage in a merger or acquisition with an unidentified company or companies.[152]

Since 1992, when it was last revised, the most attractive aspect of this exemption was the ability to conduct offerings to an unlimited number of investors without regard to their accreditation and the permitted use of general solicitation and advertising to market the offering.[153] However, due to excessive abuse of this exemption and its unique 'freely tradable' characteristics, effective 7 April 1999, the Securities and Exchange Commission revised rule 504 to protect against these abuses.

As such, rule 504 has been modified so that the only circumstances where general solicitation and the freely tradable securities are now permitted is when an offering has been registered under state law requiring public filing and delivery of a disclosure document to investors before sale, or if an offering has been exempted under state law permitting general solicitation and advertising so long as sales are made only to accredited investors.[154] In the event that an offering under rule 504 does not qualify under either one of the above listed exceptions, it may not be made by any general solicitation or advertisement and the securities purchased thereunder will be deemed 'restricted securities',[155] as discussed below.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, the issuer should be aware that, whether or not disclosure requirements exist, the issuer is still subject to the antifraud provisions of the 1933 Act, which may cause the issuer to provide full and complete disclosure in any event.[156]

Rule 505 and Rule 506 Exemptions. Rules 505 and 506 are similar to rule 504, but they permit larger amounts to be offered, subject to stricter requirements. Rule 505 provides an exemption from registration pursuant to section 3(b) of the 1933 Act, and rule 506 provides an exemption under section 4(2) of the 1933 Act. Rule 505 allows an issuer to offer up to US $5 million during a 12-month period.[157] In contrast, rule 506 sets no limitation on the amount that may be offered.[158]

Another restriction is that the number of purchasers in a rule 505 or rule 506 offering is limited to 35 non-accredited investors.[159] For purposes of this numerical limit, a corporation, partnership, or other entity will be deemed to be one purchaser, so long as it was not organised for the purpose of purchasing the securities in question.[160]

In addition, a person and his relative, spouse, or spouse's relative will be deemed to be one investor if they have the same principal residence.[161] Nor does the numerical limit include persons qualifying as 'accredited investors'.[162] The term 'accredited investor' includes:

- Certain financial and investment institutions;
- The directors, officers, and general partners of the issuer; and
- Persons with a net worth, either individually or jointly with a spouse, of US $1 million or an individual income of US $200,000, or US $300,000 joint income with a spouse, during the two most recent years, if he expects to reach the same income level in the current year.[163]

It should be noted that, for purposes of rule 506, all non-accredited investors must possess sufficient knowledge and expertise in financial and business matters so that they are capable of evaluating the merits and risks of the prospective investment.[164] Rule 505 contains no such requirement.

Rule 505 and 506 offerings may be made by any issuer, including non-United States issuers, except, in the case of a rule 505 offering, investment companies and companies meeting certain disqualification, or 'bad boy', provisions for previous improper conduct.[165] Unlike rule 504, neither type of offering, however, may be made by any general solicitation or advertisement under any circumstances.

Unlike rule 504, rules 505 and 506 require that certain disclosure be given to offerees within a reasonable amount of time prior to the sale of the securities in question.[166] While such disclosure is only required to be given to non-accredited investors, it is advisable to give disclosure to all potential investors, even if accredited.[167] The disclosure document generally takes the form of a 'private placement memorandum' that includes information required in rule 502(b)(2). In the case of a reporting issuer, the disclosure requirements may be primarily fulfilled by delivering certain of its 1934 Act filings to the offerees.

As to non-reporting issuers, the non-financial information to be included in the private placement memorandum must be the same kind of information required in Part II of Form 1-A, if the issuer is eligible to use Regulation A, or that required in Part I of a registration statement filed under the 1933 Act on the form that the issuer would be entitled to use for such a statement.[168] As discussed above, most non-United States issuers are not eligible to use Regulation A, since it is available only to United States and Canadian issuers.

Thus, the non-financial information required will be that required in Part I of the registration statement form available to the non-United States issuer, such as Form F-1.[169] Similarly, the financial information that must be included in a private placement memorandum will be that required on the applicable registration statement except that, in general, only a balance sheet dated within 120 days of the start of the offering need be certified by an accountant.

Finally, in offering securities under rules 505 or 506, prior to a purchase, the issuer must give each purchaser a reasonable amount of time to ask questions and receive answers from the issuer's representatives and to obtain additional information. The additional information may be that which the issuer already possesses or which can be acquired without unreasonable effort or expense to verify the accuracy of the information provided.[170]

Although United States securities law provides that certain transactions are exempt from registration and, in certain circumstances, does not mandate specific disclosure requirements, these transactions are still subject to the antifraud provisions of the United States securities laws which provide for civil liability for misleading statements made, or material information omitted, in the offer and sale of securities.[171]

Section 4(6) Exemption. Another exemption from the registration requirements of section 5(a) is set forth in section 4(6) of the 1933 Act.[172]

This exemption from registration is similar to that set forth in rule 505 in that it is available for offers not exceeding US $5 million and requires the filing of Form D with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Section 4(6) contains no numerical limit on offerees, but offers and sales may be made to accredited investors only. In addition, no general solicitation or advertisement may be made.

Filing Requirements. Although the Regulation D and section 4(6) exemptions permit an offer without meeting the registration requirements of section 5(a), issuers taking advantage of such exemptions from registration must still file a document, Form D, with the Securities and Exchange Commission although, for purposes of Regulation D, such filing is not a condition to the availability of an exemption.

Pursuant to rule 503, five copies of Form D, one of which must be manually executed, must be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission within 15 days after the first sale of the securities in question.[173] However, once a Form D is filed, generally, there will be no further periodic filings required.

Section 3(a)(10). Another available limited exemption is found under section 3(a)(10) of the Securities Act. This exemption is available for offers and sales of securities in specific exchange transactions. To rely on this exemption, the following are required:

- The subject securities must be issued in exchange for securities, claims, or property (not cash); and
- The terms and conditions of the transaction must be adjudicated to be fair pursuant to an open, duly noticed, and authorised hearing before a governmental authority or court.[174]

The attractiveness of this option for non-United States issuers is that the Securities and Exchange Commission has interpreted the term 'court' to include courts from foreign jurisdictions that meet certain requirements.[175]

The section 3(a)(10) exemption is available without any action by the Securities and Exchange Commission.[176] If an issuer is unsure as to whether or not this exemption is available, they can request (before the fairness hearing) a 'no-action' position from the Securities and Exchange Commission. Issuers should note that securities issued pursuant to a section 3(a)(10) exemption are not 'covered securities' as contemplated by the National Securities Markets Improvement Act and, as such, they may be subject to various blue sky regulations.[177]

Restrictions on Transfer

Securities sold under rules 504, 505, or 506 or under section 4(6) are deemed to be restricted securities.[178] As such, the securities may be resold only if they are registered or an exemption applies.

As restricted securities, such shares may not be resold unless they are registered or sold under an exemption from registration. The 'safe harbour' exemption set forth in rule 144 provides guidance as to when and how restricted securities can be resold in a transaction exempt from the registration requirements of the United States securities laws.[179] Rule 144 provides that, after restricted securities have been held by a purchaser for more than one year, they may be resold if certain requirements are met, namely:

- There must be available adequate current public information with respect to the issuer of the securities;[180]
- The purchaser may resell only an amount equal to a small percentage of the total outstanding securities of the same class — in general, one per cent — during a three-month period;[181]
- Such sales must be made in a brokers' transaction or through a market maker;[182] and
- If the amount of the securities to be resold by the purchaser during the three-month period exceeds 500 shares or has an aggregate purchase price in excess of US $10,000, the purchaser must file three copies of a notice on Form 144 with the Securities and Exchange Commission and, if the securities are admitted to trading on any national securities exchange, one copy must be filed with the exchange.[183]

However, if the purchaser desiring to resell the securities is not an affiliate of the issuer — generally, an officer, director, or 10 per cent shareholder — and has held the securities for more than two years, these restrictions will not apply.[184]

Rule 144A Restricted Securities

Rule 144A provides a non-exclusive safe harbour exemption from the registration requirements of the 1933 Act for certain resales of restricted securities to certain sophisticated institutional investors, referred to as 'qualified institutional buyers'. Rule 144A defines qualified institutional buyers as institutions that in the aggregate own and invest on a discretionary basis at least US $100 million in securities.[185]

Rule 144A imposes a 'reasonable belief' standard on sellers with respect to the status of buyers as qualified institutional buyers.[186] Rule 144A also imposes an information requirement where the issuer of the securities to be resold in reliance on rule 144A is neither a 1934 Act reporting company nor exempt from reporting requirements pursuant to rule 12g3-2(b). The required information includes:

- A brief statement of the nature of the business of the issuer and the products and services it offers; and

- The issuer's most recent balance sheet and profit-and-loss and retained- earnings statements and similar financial statements for such part of the two preceding fiscal years as the issuer has been in operation.

The financial statements should be audited to the extent reasonably available. However, non-United States issuers who furnish the Securities and Exchange Commission with financial and business information already made public in their home countries pursuant to rule 12g3-2(b) need not comply with this requirement.

If a market for rule 144A securities develops, often the number of United States security holders will increase, subjecting many non-United States issuers to the registration and periodic reporting requirements of the 1934 Act. A rule 144A offering of American Depository Receipts or ordinary shares does not preclude an issuer from subsequently registering the securities with the Securities and Exchange Commission and applying for an exchange or NASDAQ listing. For example, the following non-United States issuers, after conducting rule 144A transactions, entered the United States public market for the first time:

- Telefonos de Mexico;
- Petro-Canada;
- Vitro;
- Micro Focus Group; and
- Enterprise Oil.[187]

Investment Outside the United States and Cross Border Transactions

In General

In 1990, the Securities and Exchange Commission adopted Regulation S to clarify the extraterritorial application of the registration provisions of United States securities laws.[188] Under Regulation S, any offer or sale of a security that is deemed to occur within the United States is subject to the registration provisions of United States securities laws, while any offer or sale of a security that is not deemed to occur within the United States is not subject to the registration provisions of United States securities laws.[189]

Regulation S is not an exemption from registration under United States securities laws; rather, it provides that offers and sales occurring outside of the United States are not subject to the registration requirements of United States securities laws. Regulation S speaks only to the registration provisions of United States securities law, and it does not limit or otherwise restrict application of the antifraud provisions of United States securities laws.[190]

In addition to setting forth the foregoing general principle regarding territorial application of the registration provisions of United States securities laws, Regulation S provides three categories of non-exclusive[191] 'safe harbours'[192] for specified securities transactions. Offers and sales of securities in transactions which meet all of the conditions of any one of the three categories of non-exclusive safe harbours are deemed to occur outside the United States and, therefore, are not subject to the registration requirements of United States securities laws.

The safe harbours may be utilised for initial issuances of securities by an issuer, a distributor, or any of their respective affiliates or persons acting on their behalf and may be utilised for resale transactions by such persons.[193] Regulation S also provides a non-exclusive safe harbour for resale transactions by persons other than an issuer, a distributor, any of their respective affiliates (except officers or directors who are affiliates solely by virtue of holding such position), or persons acting on their behalf.[194]

Equity securities of a United States 'domestic issuer' issued in a transaction which relies on Regulation S to avoid registration under United States securities laws are deemed 'restricted securities' under United States securities laws and may only be resold in a transaction which complies with the registration requirements of United States securities laws or an exemption therefrom, or in a transaction occurring outside the United States in accordance with Regulation S.[195]

Regulation S is not available for any transaction that, although in technical compliance with the provisions of Regulation S, is part of a plan or scheme to evade the registration provisions of United States securities laws.[196] In this regard, subsequent to the adoption of Regulation S in 1990, the Securities and Exchange Commission issued an interpretative release, which identified practices occurring in the context of Regulation S to be abuses.[197] Ultimately, in February 1998, the concerns of the Securities and Exchange Commission expressed in that interpretative release resulted in amendments to Regulation S designed to halt such abuses.[198]

General Principle

Regulation S provides that no offer or sale of a security which occurs outside of the United States will be subject to the registration requirements of United States securities laws.[199] The need for Regulation S stems from the broad extraterritorial reach of the registration provisions of United States securities laws. In the absence of Regulation S, or a comparable administrative interpretation of the provisions of United States securities laws, which require the registration of securities,[200] such provisions literally apply to any offer or sale of a security involving any communication between the United States and any other country.[201]

Regulation S provides safe harbours for specified issuance and resale transactions so that these transactions will be deemed to occur outside the US. These safe harbours are non-exclusive. As a result, transactions not in compliance with a safe harbour may still be deemed to occur outside the United States for purposes of United States securities laws and rule 901.

Due to the lack of guidance on the issue of when offers or sales of a security are deemed to occur outside of the United States in instances where a safe harbour provided by Regulation S is not utilised, rule 901 may be helpful in instances where non-United States issuers may inadvertently or unknowingly trigger the jurisdictional reach of United States securities laws in a transaction that arguably has not occurred in the United States. Otherwise, a Regulation S safe harbour is effectively the only way to ensure availability of the jurisdictional exclusion from application of the registration requirements of United States securities laws.

Safe Harbours for Transactions by Issuers, Distributors, or Affiliates

In General

In General. Regulation S provides three categories of safe harbours for use in transactions by an issuer, a distributor, or any of their respective affiliates or persons acting on their behalf. These safe harbours may be used for transactions in which securities are issued and subsequently resold by such persons.

All three safe harbours require compliance with two general conditions, ie, an offshore transaction with no directed selling efforts, as well as the more specific conditions for each category.

General Conditions. Regulation S requires that the offer or sale be made in an 'offshore transaction'. For purposes of the three safe harbour categories of Regulation S, an offer or sale of securities is made in an offshore transaction if:

- The offer is not made to a person in the United States; and
- Either the buyer is outside the United States at the time the buy order is originated, or the seller and any persons acting on its behalf reasonably believe the buyer is outside the United States or the transaction is executed on an established non-United States securities exchange located outside the United States.[202]

Offers and sales which are specifically targeted at identifiable groups of United States citizens residing abroad, such as United States military personnel, are not deemed to be made in an offshore transaction.[203] However, offers and sales to certain international organisations, such as the International Monetary Fund and the United Nations, and their affiliates are excluded from the definition of United States persons and will be deemed to be made in an offshore transaction.[204]

In addition, offers and sales to persons holding discretionary or similar accounts (other than an estate or trust) held for the benefit of a non-United States person by a dealer or other professional fiduciary organised, incorporated, or resident in the United States also are deemed to be made in an offshore transaction.[205]

Regulation S requires that no 'directed selling efforts' be made in the United States by the issuer, distributor, or any of their respective affiliates or persons acting on their behalf with respect to the offer or sale.[206] 'Directed selling efforts' is defined as any activity undertaken for the purpose, or which can reasonably be expected to have the effect, of conditioning the United States market for such securities.[207]

Directed selling efforts include advertisements placed in a publication with a general circulation in the United States,[208] but they do not include:

- Advertisements required to be published by law, provided the advertisement contains no more information than legally required and contains a statement regarding the restricted nature of such securities pursuant to United States securities laws;
- Contact with persons excluded from the definition of a United States person;[209]
- A tombstone advertisement in a publication with a general circulation in the United States, provided such publication has less than 20 per cent of its circulation in the United States, such advertisement contains a statement regarding the restricted nature of such securities pursuant to United States securities laws, and such advertisement contains only certain limited information about the offering;[210]
- Bona fide visits by prospective investors to the issuer's United States facilities;

- Distribution in the United States of a non-United States broker-dealer's price quotations by a third-party system that distributes such quotes primarily outside the United States, provided transactions cannot be executed through such system with persons in the United States and no impermissible contacts may be initiated with 'United States persons' or persons in the United States;[211]
- Publication by the issuer of a notice containing only certain limited information;[212] and
- Providing journalists with access to press conferences held outside the United States, meetings with the issuer or selling shareholder representatives held outside the United States, or written press-related materials released outside the United States, at or in which a present or proposed offering is discussed, if certain other requirements also are satisfied.[213]

Specific Conditions

Category 1. The Category 1 safe harbour[214] is available for transactions in the following securities, without having to meet any conditions, other than the offer and sale being made in an offshore transaction and no directed selling efforts are made in the United States by the issuer, a distributor, any of their respective affiliates, or any person acting on behalf of any of the foregoing:

- Securities issued by an issuer that is not a domestic issuer[215] which reasonably believes at commencement of the offering that there is no 'substantial United States market interest'[216] in the class or type of securities offered or sold [or issuable on exercise or conversion of the class or type of securities offered or sold], and securities of an issuer that is not a domestic issuer which are offered and sold in an offering that is directed into a single country other than the United States to the residents thereof in accordance with the laws and customary practices of such country;

211 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.902(c)(3)(v)(B).
212 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.902 (c)(3)(vi).
213 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.902(c)(3)(vii).
214 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.903(b)(1).
215 For purposes of Regulation S, a United States 'domestic issuer' is defined as any issuer other than a non-United States government or non-United States issuer, except a non-United States issuer meeting the following conditions: (a) more than 50 per cent of its outstanding voting securities are held of record directly or indirectly by United States residents; and (b) the majority of its directors or executive officers are United States citizens or residents, more than 50 per cent of its assets are located in the United States, or its business is administered principally in the United States. 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.902(e).
216 For purposes of Regulation S, 'substantial United States market interest' exists with respect to a class of equity securities if: (a) securities exchanges and quotation systems in the United States, in the aggregate, constituted the single largest market for such securities for the prior fiscal year or period since the issuer's inception (if there is no prior fiscal year); or (b) 20 per cent or more of all trading in such securities took place in, on, or through securities exchanges and quotations systems in the United States and less than 55 per cent of all trading in such securities took place in, on, or through securities markets of a single country other than the United States (17 Code of Federal Regulations s 230.902(j)(1)). For purposes of Regulation S, 'substantial United States market interest' exists with respect to an issuer's debt securities, other than certain exempt securities (17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.902(j)(3)) if: (a) its debt securities are held of record by 300 or more 'United States persons'; (b) US $1 billion or more of its debt securities are held of record by 'United States persons'; and (c) 20 per cent or more of its debt securities are held of record by 'United States persons'. 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.902(j)(2).

- Non-convertible debt securities of a domestic issuer which are offered and sold in an offering that is directed into a single country other than the United States to the residents thereof in accordance with the laws and customary practices of such country, provided that such securities are non-United States dollar-denominated and are not convertible into United States dollar-denominated or linked to United States dollars (other than through ordinary commercial currency or interest-rate swap transactions) in a manner that in effect makes them United States dollar-denominated securities;
- Securities which are backed by the full faith and credit of a government other than the United States; and
- Securities which are offered and sold to employees of the issuer or its affiliates pursuant to an employee benefit plan established and administered in accordance with the laws and customary practices of a country other than the United States, provided such securities are issued as compensation for bona fide services rendered in connection with the business of such issuer or its affiliates and not in connection with the offer and sale of securities, interests in the plan are not transferable other than on the death of the holder thereof, the issuer takes steps to preclude the offer and sale of interests in the plan or securities under the plan to United States residents other than employees on temporary assignment in the United States, and the plan documentation contains a statement regarding the restricted nature of such securities pursuant to United States securities laws.

Category 2. The Category 2 safe harbour[217] is available for transactions in securities not eligible for the Category 1 safe harbour and that are equity securities of a 'reporting issuer'[218] that is not a United States domestic issuer, debt securities of a reporting issuer, or debt securities of a non-reporting issuer that is not a United States domestic issuer, provided they comply with all of the following conditions in addition to the two general conditions of rule 903(a)(1) and (a)(2), namely:

- 'Offering restrictions'[219] are implemented;

217 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.903(b)(2).

218 For purposes of Regulation S, a 'reporting issuer' is defined as an issuer, other than an investment company, that: (a) has a class of securities registered under United States securities laws or that is required to file periodic reports with the United States Securities and Exchange Commission; and (b) has filed all reports and other material required to be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission for a period of at least 12 months (or such shorter period that the issuer was subject to such filing requirement) immediately preceding the offer or sale of securities made in reliance on Regulation S 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.902(i).

219 For purposes of Regulation S, offering restrictions are implemented if: (a) each distributor agrees in writing that all offers and sales during the applicable distribution compliance period will be made only in accordance with Regulation S, the registration requirements of United States securities laws, or an exemption therefrom and, with respect to offers and sales of equity securities of United States domestic issuers, not to engage in hedging transactions during the applicable 'distribution compliance period' except in compliance with United States securities laws; (b) all offering materials and documents (other than press releases) used during the applicable distribution compliance period include a statement regarding the restricted nature of such securities pursuant to United States securities laws and, with respect to offers and sales of equity securities of domestic issuers, include a statement that hedging transactions may not be conducted except in compliance with United States securities laws and such statements appear on the cover or inside cover of the prospectus or offering circular, in the underwritings of the prospectus or offering circular, and in any advertisements. 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.902(g).

- The offer or sale, if made during a 40-day distribution compliance period,[220] is such that (a) each warrant bears a legend regarding the restricted nature of the warrant and securities issuable on exercise pursuant to United States securities laws and disclosing that the warrant may not be exercised by or on behalf of a United States person except in compliance with the registration requirements of United States securities laws or pursuant to an exemption therefrom, (b) each person exercising a warrant provides written certification that it is not a United States person and that the warrant is not being exercised on behalf of a United States person or provides a written opinion of legal counsel that the warrant and securities issuable on exercise are in compliance with the registration requirements of United States securities laws or exempt therefrom, and (c) procedures have been implemented to ensure that the warrants may not be exercised within the United States and that the securities issuable on exercise may not be delivered within the United States, other than in a transaction which qualifies as an offshore transaction unless, in compliance with the registration requirements of United States securities laws or pursuant to an exemption therefrom,[221] it is not made to a United States person or for the account or benefit of a United States person (other than a distributor); and
- Each distributor selling securities during a 40-day distribution compliance period to a distributor, dealer, or person receiving compensation in respect of the securities sold sends a notice to the purchaser stating that the purchaser is subject to the same restrictions on offers and sales applicable to a 'distributor'.[222]

Category 3. The Category 3 safe harbour[223] is available for transactions in securities not eligible for the Category 1 or Category 2 safe harbours, provided that the offer and sale are being made in an offshore transaction and that no directed selling efforts are made in the United States by the issuer, a distributor, any of their respective affiliates, or any person acting on behalf of any of the foregoing, and they comply with all of the following conditions:

- Offering restrictions are implemented;

220 For purposes of Regulation S, the distribution compliance period is the period that begins the later of the date the securities were first offered to persons other than distributors or the date of closing of the offering and continues until the end of the relevant time period, except that: (a) all offers and sales by a distributor of an unsold allotment are deemed made during the distribution compliance period; (b) in a continuous offering, the distribution compliance period commences on completion of the distribution, as determined and certified by the managing underwriter; (c) in a continuous offering of identifiable tranches of non-convertible debt securities, the distribution compliance period for securities in a tranche commences on completion of the distribution of such tranche, as determined and certified by the managing underwriter; and (d) in a continuous offering of securities to be acquired on the exercise of warrants, the distribution compliance period commences on completion of the distribution of the warrants, as determined and certified by the managing underwriter if the requirements are satisfied. 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.903(b)(5).

221 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.902(f).

222 For purposes of Regulation S, a distributor is defined as any underwriter, dealer, or other person who participates, pursuant to a contractual arrangement, in the distribution of the securities offered or sold. 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.902(d).

223 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 230.903(b)(3).

- In the case of debt securities, the offer or sale, if made during a 40-day distribution compliance period, is not made to a United States person or for the account or benefit of a United States person (other than a distributor) and the securities are represented during the 40-day distribution compliance period by a temporary global security and, for persons other than distributors, until certification of beneficial ownership of the securities by a non-United States person or a United States person who acquired such securities in a transaction not requiring registration under United States securities laws;
- In the case of equity securities, the offer or sale, if made during a one-year distribution compliance period, is not made to a United States person or for the account or benefit of a United States person (other than a distributor), and the offer or sale, if made during a one-year distribution compliance period, is made in compliance with the following conditions: (a) the purchaser (other than a distributor) certifies that it is not a United States person and is not acquiring the securities for the account or benefit of a United States person or that it is a United States person who acquired the securities in a transaction not requiring registration under United States securities laws, (b) the purchaser agrees to resell the securities only in accordance with Regulation S, the registration requirements of United States securities laws, or an exemption therefrom and not to engage in hedging transactions except in compliance with United States securities laws, (c) securities of a domestic issuer are legended to the effect that transfer is prohibited except in accordance with Regulation S, the registration requirements of United States securities laws, or an exemption therefrom and that hedging transactions may not be conducted except in compliance with United States securities laws, and (d) the issuer is required, by contract or a provision in its governing documents, to refuse to register transfers of the securities not made in accordance with Regulation S, the registration requirements of United States securities laws, or an exemption therefrom or, if the securities are in bearer form or non-United States law prevents the issuer from refusing to register securities transfers, other reasonable procedures are implemented to prevent any transfer of the securities not made in accordance with Regulation S; and
- Each distributor selling securities, in the case of debt securities, during a 40-day distribution compliance period or, in the case of equity securities, during a one-year distribution compliance period, to a distributor, dealer, or person receiving compensation in respect of the securities sold sends a notice to the purchaser stating that the purchaser is subject to the same restrictions on offers and sales applicable to a distributor.

Safe Harbour for Resale Transactions by Persons Other than Issuers, Distributors, or Affiliates

Regulation S also provides a safe harbour for resale transactions by persons other than an issuer, a distributor, any of their respective affiliates (except officers or directors who are affiliates solely by virtue of holding such position), or persons acting on their behalf.[224] Rule 904 requires that the offer or sale be made in an offshore transaction, that no directed selling efforts be made in the United States by the seller, its affiliates, or any persons acting on their behalf with respect to the offer or sale, and that the transaction comply with all of the following conditions:

- In the case of an offer or sale during the applicable distribution compliance period by a dealer or person receiving compensation in respect of the securities sold, neither the seller nor any person acting on the seller's behalf knows that the offeree or buyer is a United States person and, if the seller or any person acting on the seller's behalf knows that the purchaser is a dealer or person receiving compensation in respect of the securities sold, the seller or person acting on the seller's behalf sends a notice to the purchaser stating that offers and sales of the securities during the distribution compliance period may be made only in accordance with Regulation S, the registration requirements of United States securities laws, or an exemption therefrom; and
- In the case of an offer or sale by an officer or director of the issuer of the securities who is an affiliate solely by virtue of holding such position, no compensation is paid in respect of the securities sold other than a usual and customary brokerage commission.[225]

Restrictions on Resale

Equity securities of a United States issuer acquired from the issuer, a distributor, or any of their respective affiliates in a transaction which is not subject to the registration requirements of United States securities laws by virtue of the general principle of rule 901 or the safe harbours of rule 903 are deemed restricted securities,[226] as defined in rule 144.[227]

Such restricted securities may only be resold in accordance with Regulation S, the registration requirements of United States securities laws, or an exemption therefrom.[228] Rule 144 provides clear guidance regarding when and how restricted securities may be resold in the United States in a transaction exempt from the registration requirements of United States securities laws.

Subject to the satisfaction of certain current public information, volume limitation, manner of sale, and notice conditions set forth in rule 144, restricted securities may generally be resold in the United States after a one-year holding period. Restricted securities held by non-affiliates of the issuer may generally be freely resold in the United States after a two-year holding period.[229]

Any restricted securities, as defined in rule 144, that are equity securities of a domestic issuer will continue to be deemed restricted securities after any resale transaction pursuant to the general principle of rule 901 or the safe harbour of rule 904 and, therefore, any applicable legend on such securities may not be removed on such a resale.

Crossborder Transactions

In General

One ramification of the extraterritorial application of the registration provisions of the United States securities laws is the negative impact on United States investors in foreign private issuers. Previously, due to the registration provisions, United States shareholders in foreign private issuers would often be excluded from tender and exchange offers, business combinations, and rights offerings so as to avoid the reach of the registration mandates of the United States securities laws.

In an effort to remove this prejudice against United States shareholders, the Securities and Exchange Commission has recently adopted and/or modified rules 800, 801, and 802 to the Securities Act to address these concerns.[230]

Exemptive Rule 801

Under exemptive rule 801 of the Securities Act, equity securities issued in rights offerings by foreign private issuers will be exempt from the registration requirements of the Securities Act if United States securities holders own 10 per cent or less of the issuer's securities that are subject of the rights offering.

Exemptive Rule 802

Under exemptive rule 802 of the Securities Act, equity securities issued in exchange offers for foreign private issuers' securities and securities issued in business combinations involving foreign private issuers rights offerings by foreign private issuers will be exempt from the registration requirements of the Securities Act and the qualification requirements of the Trust Indenture Act, if United States securities holders own 10 per cent or less of the subject class of securities.

Exemption from Rule 14e-5

Tender offers for the securities of foreign private issuers will be exempt from new rule 14e-5 (formerly 10b-13) of the Exchange Act, which prohibits a bidder from purchasing securities other than that pursuant to the tender offer. This exemption will permit purchases outside the tender offer during the offer when United States security holders hold 10 per cent or less of the subject securities.

For those instances where an exchange offer for securities of a foreign private issuer constitutes a tender offer under United States securities laws, thereby invoking certain registration requirements under the Williams Act, the Securities and Exchange Commission has enacted the following companion rules to rule 14D that mimic the modified rules 801 and 802.[231]

Again, it must be noted that the foregoing exemptions do not obviate the application of the United States antifraud and antimanipulation rules or any applicable state securities laws.

Trading of Non-United States Securities

In General

In order for a non-United States issuer to list its securities on a United States exchange or over-the-counter market, it must either register under section 12(b) of the 1934 Act to list on an exchange or under section 12(g) of the 1934 Act to list on the over-the-counter market.[232] Listing is accomplished either contemporaneously with the initial public offering of the non-United States issuer's securities in the United States, or directly without a corresponding financing.

It is unlawful for anyone to execute a trade in a security, other than an exempted security, on a national securities exchange unless the security is registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission pursuant to section 12(b) of the 1934 Act.[233]

Prior to 1964, registration under the 1934 Act was limited to securities of companies listed on a national securities exchange. Because registration under the 1934 Act activated the continuous reporting requirements, many companies purposefully

231 The Securities and Exchange Commission has created a Tier I Exemption and a Tier II Exemption. As to a Tier I Exemption, the recently adopted rules provide that tender offers for the securities of a foreign private issuer will be exempt from most provisions of the Exchange Act and rules governing tender offers when United States security holders hold 10 per cent or less of the subject securities, based on the 'look through' analysis described contained in rule 12(g)3-2(a). In addition to bidders, the subject company, or any officer, director, or other person who otherwise would have an obligation to file Schedule 14D-9 also may rely on the exemption. However, it must be noted that the Tier I Exemption is not available if the target company is an investment company registered or required to be registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940. Rule 14d-1(c)(4), 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 240.14d(c)(4). As to a Tier II Exemption, when United States security holders hold 40 per cent or less of the class of securities of the foreign private issuer sought in the offer, limited tender offer exemptive relief will be available to bidders to eliminate frequent areas of conflict between United States and foreign regulatory requirements. This codification of current exemptive and interpretive positions is now referred to as a Tier II Exemption. However, it must be noted that the Tier II Exemption is not available if the target company is an investment company registered or required to be registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940 unless it is a closed end investment company. In addition, the target company must be a foreign private issuer. Rule 14d-1(d)(1)(i), 17 Code of Federal Regulations, s 240.14d(d)(1)(i). avoided listing on a national exchange to side-step such regulation. As a result, Congress amended section 12(g)(1) to provide that:

> Every issuer who is engaged in interstate commerce, or in a business affecting interstate commerce, or whose securities are traded by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce shall . . .
> (b) within 120 days after the last day of its first fiscal year . . . on which the issuer must have assets exceeding US $10 million and a class of equity security (other than an exempted security) held of record by 500 or more persons.
> . . . register such security by filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission a registration statement . . . with respect to such security containing such information and documents as the Securities and Exchange Commission may specify comparable to that which is required in an application to register a security pursuant to sub-section (b) of this section. Each such registration statement will become effective sixty days after filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission or within such shorter period as the Securities and Exchange Commission may direct. Any issuer may register any class of equity security not required to be registered by filing a registration statement pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph.[234]

The Securities and Exchange Commission has exempted from registration under section 12(g) companies that would otherwise be subject to registration if total assets do not exceed US $10 million.[235] The asset test and the number- of-shareholders test is applied collectively, ie, the issuer must have both total assets of US $10 million or greater and 500 or more shareholders together before it is required to register under the 1934 Act.

Exchange Act Registration

To register the securities of a non-United States company on an exchange or market, the company must either use a simplified registration procedure available on Form 8-A for registrants who have conducted a United States public offering of the class of securities, or file on Form 20-F, which is a more comprehensive disclosure document, for issuers that have not conducted a public offering and rather intend to directly list their securities. Either form of registration enables the company to list on either a stock exchange or market and satisfies the requirements of either section 12(b) or section 12(g) of the 1934 Act.

Form 8-A may be used for a class of securities to be effective on filing with Form 8-A, for non-United States issuers that already have a class of securities registered under the 1934 Act, or to be effective simultaneously with the effectiveness of a concurrent registration statement which is filed pursuant to the 1933 Act.[236] Form 8-A is often used to register classes of securities on an exchange on which other securities of the registrant are registered, such as common shares, preferred shares, or debt instruments. The information required in Form 8-A is:

- A description of the securities to be registered, pursuant to item 202 of Regulation S-K;[237]
- A list of the exhibits to be incorporated by reference or filed as part of the registration statement; and
- The signature of the registrant. Documents filed as part of the concurrent public offering or in prior 1934 Act filings are incorporated by reference.

Form 20-F

In addition to filing a registration statement under the 1933 Act for any public offering of securities, a foreign private issuer must file to register its securities under the 1934 Act. To assist foreign private issuers with the complexities of 1934 Act registration and periodic reports, the Securities and Exchange Commission has created a 'foreign integrated disclosure system', which attempts to balance investor protection with facilitating the free flow of capital among nations.

The foreign integrated disclosure system is limited to issuers who file Form 20-F on an annual basis and are non-Canadian foreign private issuers registering their securities under section 12 of the 1934 Act.[238] There is a different standard for Canadian issuers as the Securities and Exchange Commission has previously distinguished the North American foreign private issuer — those from Canada and Mexico — from other foreign private issuers.[239]

A foreign private issuer is required to register its equity securities under section 12(g) of the 1934 Act if:

- The securities are listed, or are going to be listed, on a United States stock exchange or market; or
- The issuer has more than US $10 million of total assets and more than 500 stockholders of whom more than 300 are United States residents.[240]

In addition, a non-United States issuer that wishes to become listed on a United States exchange is required to register under section 12(b) of the 1934 Act[241] and the non-United States issuer that wishes to become listed on the NASDAQ is required to register under section 12 (g) of the 1934 Act.[242]

242 Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, 15 United States Code, s 78l(g).

The Securities and Exchange Commission adopted the foreign integrated disclosure system for offerings of securities issued by foreign private issuers, based on the theory that a foreign private issuer already furnishing information on a continuous basis under the 1934 Act reporting requirements should be able to use that information when it makes a public offering in the United States.[243] The foreign integrated disclosure system is based on those disclosures required by Form 20-F.[244]

Rather than the two separate documents of Form 10-K and the Annual Report to Shareholders used for United States issuers, the single Form 20-F may be used as the primary 1934 Act registration and annual report form for foreign private issuers. On the cover page of Form 20-F, the issuer notes whether the Form 20-F is being used as an annual report pursuant to section 13 or section 15(d), or in connection with registration pursuant to section 12(b) or section 12(g) of the 1934 Act.

Form 20-F requires the registrant to provide similar information as required by Form F-1. However, Form 20-F calls for specific disclosure concerning:

- A description of property;
- Pending legal proceedings;
- Control of the registrant;
- Nature of the trading market(s) for the securities;
- Exchange controls and other limitations that would affect payments of dividends or interest, or exercise of voting rights;
- Taxation;
- Selected financial data for the last five years;
- Management's discussion and analysis of financial condition and results of operations;
- Derivatives disclosure;
- Directors and officers, and their remuneration as a group;
- Options to purchase securities;
- Material transactions between the issuer and its management;
- If used as a registration form, the securities being registered;
- If used as an annual report form, defaults on senior securities and changes in securities and in security for registered securities;
- A description of business; and
- Audited financial statements under United States GAAP or reconciled with United States GAAP.[245]

When it was initially adopted in 1979, the Securities and Exchange Commission stated that Form 20-F represented a 'significant improvement in the amount of information required of foreign issuers in the United States, placing their required disclosures on a level closer to that required of domestic issuers'.[246] At the same time, in recognition of the 'differences in various national laws and businesses and accounting customs [to be taken] into account when assessing disclosure requirements for foreign issuers', the Securities and Exchange Commission indicated that substantial reductions in the proposed disclosure requirements had been made.[247]

Two major differences between the disclosure system for non-United States and domestic issuers are the disclosures of conflicts of interest and use of proceeds. Currently, items 11–13 of Form 20-F permit non-United States issuers to disclose options to purchase securities in the aggregate, as opposed to requiring disclosure for each individual. Additionally, currently, under Form 20-F, controlling persons need only disclose data concerning material transactions with control persons if such transactions have been made public in reports to shareholders. These requirements significantly compromise the more demanding conflict of interest requirements found in the domestic issuer's Regulation S-K.

Effective as of 30 September 2000, the revised Form 20-F generally incorporates the International Organisation of Securities Commissions standards. These modifications have been undertaken with the expressed intention of creating and promulgating a harmonised international disclosure standard.

However, the revised Form 20-F, specifically items 6 and 7, significantly change these differences. The new item 6 of Form 20-F eliminates the ability to disclose ownership interest of individual directors and management on an aggregate basis. However, if:

> . . . an individual member of management beneficially owns less than one per cent of the outstanding securities that fact may be stated instead of providing the specific number of shares that individual beneficially owns . . . .[248]

One additional significant change is that, under item 7 of the revised Form 20-F, the disclosure threshold for beneficial ownership has been reduced from 10 per cent to five per cent.[249]

Annual Reports

The primary objective of the Exchange Act is to assure the public availability of adequate material information about companies with publicly traded stock. On becoming a reporting company, a non-United States issuer becomes subject to regular reporting requirements under the foreign integrated disclosure system. As discussed above, non-United States companies become reporting companies as a result of registration of a class of securities under the 1934 Act[250] or registration of an offering of securities pursuant to the 1933 Act.[251]

Form 20-F also is the form used by foreign private issuers to file their Annual Report pursuant to section 13 or section 15(d) of the 1934 Act. The annual report on Form 20-F needs to be filed within six months after the end of the fiscal year covered by such report, compared to Form 10-K for domestic issuers, which must be filed within 90 days of the end of the fiscal year.[252]

Interim Reports

Unlike a domestic issuer, foreign private issuers are not required to file quarterly reports on Form 10-Q or current reports on Form 8-K. Instead, the foreign private issuer is required to file with the Securities and Exchange Commission those interim reports that are required to be made public in the issuer's domicile, filed with a stock exchange on which the company's securities are traded, or otherwise distributed to stockholders.[253]

Form 6-K, the interim reporting form used by non-United States issuers, requires non-United States issuers to provide the information with English translations or English versions.[254] Financial statements contained in interim reports on Form 6-K are not required to be prepared under United States GAAP or reconciled to United States GAAP.[255]

Finally, the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange, and NASDAQ require their listed non-United States companies to provide interim reports on at least a semi-annual basis. As a practical matter, many non-United States companies file quarterly reports on Form 10-Q so that current information is available to investors and to permit analysts to track the development of the company on a current basis. Many companies believe that these steps aid in the acceptance of the company in the marketplace and assist the company in managing shareholder relationships.

Proxy Requirements

Securities registered by a foreign private issuer eligible to use Form 20-F are exempt from the proxy requirements of the 1934 Act.[256]

For non-United States issuers who are not foreign private issuers, section 14 of the 1934 Act makes it unlawful for a company registered under section 12 of the 1934 Act to solicit proxies from its shareholders 'in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Securities and Exchange Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors'.[257]

In general, prior to every meeting of its security holders, a company registered under the 1934 Act must furnish each shareholder with a proxy statement containing the information specified in Schedule 14A of the 1934 Act, together with a form of proxy on which the security holder can indicate his or her approval or disapproval of each proposal expected to be presented at the meeting.[258]

When securities are held in the names of brokers, banks, or nominees, the registrant or issuer company must inquire as to the beneficial ownership of the securities, furnish sufficient copies of the proxy statement for distribution to all of the beneficial owners, and pay the reasonable expenses of such distribution.

In connection with any solicitation of a proxy (or other form of consent or authorisation by shareholders) directed to more than 10 persons, a proxy statement and proxy form complying with the proxy rules must be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission if the solicitation pertains to a security registered under the 1934 Act.[259] The annual election of directors for a company whose common stock is registered under the 1934 Act normally gives rise to an obligation to file and use a proxy statement in connection with the solicitation of proxies.[260] The proxy statement sets forth:

- The names of nominees for election to the board;
- The date when they first became directors;
- Their shareholdings; and
- The compensation of and transactions with officers and directors during the past year.

The proxy relating to the election of directors must list the nominees for whom proxies are being solicited and afford shareholders an opportunity to withhold their vote as to all or specified nominees.[261] Moreover, the directives of item 402 of Regulation S-K mandate extensive disclosure related to executive compensation and compensation tables. Additionally, there are disclosure requirements which require:

- A board compensation committee report on executive compensation;
- A performance graph, which must compare the issuer's total shareholder return with certain specified performance indicators;
- An option re-pricing disclosure; and
- Information relating to proxy rule amendments changing the disclosure requirements that apply if shareholder action is being taken with respect to employee benefit plans.

The preliminary proxy statement and proxy must be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission at least 10 calendar days before the definitive proxy statement and proxy are to be distributed in connection with shareholder action. This requirement for

Short-Swing Trading

Securities registered by a foreign private issuer eligible to use Form 20-F are exempt from the short-swing profit provisions of the 1934 Act.[263]

As a result, non-United States persons holding securities in a foreign private issuer are exempt from the provisions of section 16 which require disgorgement of the profits from the purchase and sale, or any sale and purchase, of any equity securities of such issuer within six months and do not need to file Form 3, Form 4, or Form 5 required thereunder to disclose persons with beneficial ownership of more than 10 per cent of any class of securities and the beneficial ownership of officers and directors.[264]

Take-Over Provisions; Disclosure of Beneficial Ownership of United States Issuer

A non-United States person holding securities of a non-United States or United States issuer is required to file notice of the acquisition, directly or indirectly, of the beneficial ownership of more than five per cent of any equity security of a class registered pursuant to section 12 of the 1934 Act, within 10 days after such acquisition.[265] These provisions were enacted to prevent creeping take-overs by undisclosed principals of United States companies with a class of securities listed pursuant to section 12.

The provisions are part of what is commonly referred to as the Williams Act, a series of statutes and rules that regulate the conduct of management, bidders, and broker-dealers in a hostile take-over. For purposes of this rule, a beneficial owner includes any person who, directly or indirectly, through any contract, arrangement, understanding, relationship, or otherwise has or shares:

- Voting power, which includes the power to vote, or to direct the voting of, such security; or
- Investment power, which includes the power to dispose, or to direct the disposition of, such security.[266]

In addition, a person is deemed to be the beneficial owner of a security if that person has the right to acquire such security within 60 days through any option, warrant or right to conversion of a security, pursuant to power to revoke a trust, discretionary account, or similar arrangement, or any automatic termination of a trust, discretionary account, or similar arrangement.[267] All securities held by persons acting as a group are aggregated for purposes of determining whether the five per cent disclosure trigger has been reached. A group is defined as when two or more persons act as a partnership, limited partnership, syndicate, or other group for the purpose of acquiring, holding, or disposing of securities of an issuer.[268]

Multi-Jurisdictional Disclosure System for Canadian Issuers

Based on the close relationship between the United States and Canada, in 1991 the Securities and Exchange Commission adopted the Multi-Jurisdictional Disclosure System, which permits certain Canadian issuers to offer publicly and to sell their securities in the United States using documentation prepared in accordance with the requirements of Canadian law and reviewed by provincial securities regulators.

Likewise, Canadian securities administrators adopted a similar provision that extended the same system for United States issuers.[269] In short, these systems were intended to permit United States and Canadian issuers to comply with their local disclosure requirements and make securities offerings in the other country.[270]

'Substantial' Canadian companies with a three-year reporting history in Canada are permitted to use documents prepared according to Canadian securities laws to register securities with the United States Securities and Exchange Commission and meet the periodic reporting requirements. In addition, under the Multi-Jurisdictional Disclosure System, Canadian companies registered thereunder are exempt from the Securities and Exchange Commission's proxy requirements. Substantial Canadian companies include companies that are incorporated in Canada and have either:

- A total market value for common stock of Cdn $180 million and a public float of US $75 million and are eligible to use the F-9 registration form for investment grade debt and preferred stock offerings; or
- A market value for common stock of Cdn $360 million and a public float of US $75 million and are eligible to use the F-10 registration form for equity offerings.[271]

The Securities and Exchange Commission's willingness to harmonise United States and Canadian requirements was largely based on the similarities between United States and Canadian securities regulations and accounting and auditing standards as well as the existence of a Memorandum of Understanding concerning mutual co-operation in matters relating to the administration and enforcement of United States and Canadian securities laws.[272]

The Multi-Jurisdictional Disclosure System is significant because it represents the first time that the Securities and Exchange Commission has been willing to accept documentation prepared in accordance with securities law requirements of a non-United States jurisdiction for use in registered public offerings made in the United States. This was a precursor to the harmonisation that is intended by the International Organisation of Securities Commissions standards.

Under the Multi-Jurisdictional Disclosure System, eligible issuers can more easily conduct cross border offerings in Canada and the United States because they prepare only one set of registration documents and are allowed to use one offering document in selling securities in both Canada and the United States. Among the forms used for disclosure for Canadian issuers under the 1933 Act are Forms F-7, F-8, F-9, F-10, and F-80.[273]

Jurisdictional Conflicts

Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Just as the United States securities law is comprised of a combination of Congressional Acts and regulations promulgated thereunder by the Securities and Exchange Commission, so are the rules concerning the litigation of disputes under the securities laws. However, prior to determining in which court a dispute under the United States securities laws should be brought, it must be determined if the securities laws will be applicable.

This determination will be based on whether the necessary 'jurisdictional means' have been used directly or indirectly in connection with the securities transaction in question. In general, for purposes of the securities laws, the necessary jurisdictional means include the use of any means or instrumentality of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails.[274]

In addition, sections 9(a) and 10 of the 1934 Act designate the use of the facility of any national securities exchange or market as a bridge to Commission jurisdiction. Due to the broad nature of the necessary jurisdictional means, it is generally not difficult to establish this jurisdictional means, however, this pleading requirement must be alleged and established in every case.

Once it is established that the necessary jurisdictional means have been used, one must then determine the appropriate forum in which to bring the dispute. The question of federal or state jurisdiction is determined by the nature of the claims to be litigated. In certain instances, jurisdiction will lie exclusively with the federal courts.

For example, jurisdiction over any appeal from an administrative decision of the Securities and Exchange Commission will lie exclusively with the federal courts,[275] as will that over criminal proceedings and Securities and Exchange Commission enforcement actions.[276]

Moreover, federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction over all suits in law or equity to enforce claims arising under the 1934 Act and the applicable Commission rules.[277] Thus, any claim under the 1934 Act brought in a state court will be barred.[278] The exclusivity of federal jurisdiction is applicable even if the complaint does not specifically allege violations of the 1934 Act; it merely must allege facts that resemble a 1934 Act claim.

In contrast, jurisdiction over civil actions arising under the 1933 Act will lie concurrently in the federal and the state courts.[279] This rule is taken a step further under the 1933 Act, in that, if an action under the 1933 Act is brought in a state court, the action may not be removed to the federal court level.[280]

One commentator has stated that the justification for this rule is the facilitation of private enforcement by giving the plaintiff an absolute choice of forum; especially since, in many cases, state court litigation may prove less complex and less expensive than suits in federal court.[281]

Procedural Requirements

In General

Although a discussion of all of the procedural requirements involved in the litigation of a securities case is beyond the scope of this chapter, the following is a summary of the major procedures involved in securities litigation.

Venue

The rules as to proper venue (ie, the court in which litigation may be brought, whether it be at the state or the federal level) are set forth in the securities laws. Section 22(a) of the 1933 Act and section 27 of the 1934 Act provide that an action may be brought in the district in which the defendant is found or is an inhabitant or transacts business.

Furthermore, for purposes of an action brought under the 1933 Act, venue is proper in any district in which an offer or sale took place, if the defendant participated therein.[282]

Service of Process

Generally, process may be served on, and personal jurisdiction over the defendant established, by serving the defendant in any district in which he or she is an inhabitant or in which he or she may be found.[283]

However, as various jurisdictions may present certain nuances or other unique requirements, potential parties to any action should consult with local counsel regarding the specifics of that particular jurisdiction relating to personal jurisdiction.

Statutes of Limitation

The securities laws provide specifically for statutes of limitations when express remedies are set forth. However, as to actions brought under rule 10b-5, no specific statute of limitations exists, since the remedy it provides is only an implied remedy for damages in private actions brought by a purchaser or seller of a security. This lack of a statute of limitations led to a significant amount of litigation, with the Federal Circuits split as to what statute of limitations should be applied by analogy.

Finally, the Supreme Court, in Lampf, Leva Lipkind, Prupis and Petigrow v Gilbertson,[284] through a myriad of five different opinions, held that the proper statute of limitations should be one year after discovery, limited by a three-year statute of repose, analogising to the other similar statutes of limitations contained in the securities laws. It should be noted, however, that, after the Supreme Court's decision in Lampf, Congress promulgated section 27A of the 1934 Act to quash any retroactive application of this statute of limitations to cases initiated on or before 19 June 1991, the day before the court's decision.[285]

Damages

As with statutes of limitations, a dichotomy exists as to the provision for damages between the express remedies of the securities laws and the implied remedy in rule 10b-5 promulgated under section 10 of the 1934 Act. For example, if a suit is brought by a person under section 11 of the 1933 Act due to the acquisition of a security through a registration statement containing an untrue statement or omission of material fact, such person's damages are limited to the difference between the amount paid for such security (not exceeding the public offering price) and the price at which it was disposed prior to the initiation of the suit.[286] Similarly, section 12 of the 1933 Act provides a specific limit on damages in the case of violations of sections 3 or 5 of the 1933 Act, namely:

- If the plaintiff has not disposed of the security, the amount paid for the security in question plus interest less any income received thereon, on the tendering of the security; or
- If the security has already been sold, the difference between the purchase price and the amount received on disposition.[287]

In the case of a rule 10b-5 action, the limitation of damages is set forth under the case law. In general, the purchaser in such an action may either rescind the purchase or recover the difference between the purchase price of the security in question and the real value of the security, plus interest.[288] However, if the plaintiff has already disposed of the security, damages will be limited to the difference between the purchase price and the price at which the security was sold.[289]

In the case of a defrauded seller, such seller will be able to recover the difference between the amount received on the sale and the purchase price received by the purchaser on resale.[290] Finally, it should be noted that a plaintiff cannot recover punitive damages under the United States securities laws.[291]

Conclusion

The United States securities laws are a complex set of statutes, rules, regulations, judicial interpretations, and practices that have evolved since modern securities law concepts were first enacted in the 1930s. Underlying the extensive regulation is the goal to protect the investor by mandating adequate and fair disclosure so that appropriate investment decisions can be made.

Over time, the United States securities laws have been adapted for the non-United States issuer, as world financial markets have become more integrated and internationalised. Leading the way has been the Securities and Exchange Commission, which, through various initiatives, has sought to include non-United States issuers within the regulatory framework and has worked to instill in other non-United States markets the concepts of the United States regulatory scheme.

The benefits of the United States markets to non-United States companies, in terms of relatively fair valuations, liquid markets, political stability, and evenly administrated regulatory schemes, are substantial. The enforcement activities of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and self-regulatory organisations, ensure compliance with the law and deter fraudulent conduct. The United States is a leading jurisdiction in attracting non-domestic companies to its capital markets. All indications are that this trend will continue.

Introduction

Regulatory System

Major changes have affected the capital markets area in Venezuela in recent years. The main legal instrument regulating securities and exchange was the Capital Markets Law (Ley de Mercado de Capitales), which was originally enacted in 1973 and amended in 1975 and in 1998[1] (the "Abrogated Law"). The Abrogated Law was replaced in August 2010 by the Securities Market Law (Ley del Mercado de Valores[2]), which was later reprinted to correct "material errors" in November 2010*,* (the "Securities Market Law"),[3] and is currently in force.

In general, the Securities Market Law allows companies to raise funds from the public by means of issuing and placing securities, under the supervision of the National Superintendence of Securities (Superintendencia Nacional de Valores, the "Superintendence"). The Securities Market Law regulates the following:

- The Superintendence and its functions;
- Securities that are to be publicly offered;
- Issuers;
- Brokers;
- Investment advisers; and
- Investor protection.

The Securities Market Law defines securities in a broad manner[4] in article 16, where it states:

> "It will be understood as securities, for the purposes of this law, the financial instruments which represent property or credit rights over the equity of a corporation, short, medium, or long term, issued en masse, which have the same characteristics and grant their holders the same rights within their class. The National Superintendence of Securities, in cases of doubt, shall determine which are the securities regulated by this Law:

". . . derivative instruments, different types of instruments or securities representing a right of option for the purchase or sale of securities and futures contracts on securities, where the parties agree to buy or sell a given amount of securities at a predetermined price and date, and generally any other type of instrument the value of which is determined and fixed by reference to the value of other assets or group of them."

" …securities which represent property rights, warranties and other rights or contracts on agricultural products and supplies."

A public offer is defined in article 17 of the Securities Market Law as "the offer made to the public, to given sectors or groups by any advertising or broadcasting means". This definition is quite vague, so the same article states that, in case of "doubt regarding the nature of the offering", the Superintendence has the power to decide whether it is a public offer or a private offer.[5]

If there is a public offer, an authorization granted by the Superintendence is needed. The granting of this authorization takes time and is subject to meeting certain legal requirements. An individual or corporation that provides investment advice or brokerage services in Venezuela must have a license as an investment adviser or as a securities broker, as the case may be, issued by the Superintendence.

In June 2010, the National Financial System Organic Law (Ley Orgánica del Sistema Financiero Nacional,[6] the "Financial System Law") was enacted and, in December 2010, it was amended in order to correct a "material error". This law created the Superior Organ for the National Financial System (Órgano Superior del Sistema Financiero Nacional, Osfin). Osfin's role is to regulate, supervise, control, and coordinate the national financial system, which comprises:

- The banks and other entities that operate in the banking sector;
- The insurers and other entities that operate in the insurance sector; and
- The brokerage houses and other entities that operate in the capital markets sector.

The Financial System Law, which provides for the creation of Osfin, states that, until Osfin is in a position to assume its role, it will be undertaken by the Ministry of Finance. The Financial System Law further provides that the regulatory agencies for each of those areas, including the Superintendence, shall coexist with and be coordinated by Osfin, which has the power to:

- Issue binding opinions;
- Issue regulations; and
- Establish penalties.

A state-owned stock exchange, the Bicentenary Public Stock Exchange, was created in November 2010 by the Law of the Bicentenary Public Stock Exchange (Ley de la Bolsa Pública de Valores Bicentenaria[7]). The Caracas Stock Exchange, a private forum which started operations in 1947, continues its activities, regulated by the General Regulations of the Caracas Stock Exchange (Reglamento General de la Bolsa de Valores de Caracas, C.A.[8]). However, even though there are now two active stock exchanges in Venezuela, the Venezuelan stock market is very diminished due to political and economic reasons.

The regulation regarding securities, especially from the point of view of international transactions, has been further complicated because, since February 2003 there has been an exchange control system in force, which further regulates and limits the activities of the capital markets actors, whether national or international. In addition, in September 2005, the Law Against Illicit Exchanges (Ley contra los Ilícitos Cambiarios) was passed, criminalizing foreign exchange transactions outside the regulations, and in December 2007 a new Law Against Illicit Exchanges was enacted. The Law Against Illicit Exchanges was modified in February 2008, and a new amendment was approved in May 2010 (the "Illicit Exchanges Law"[9]). The Illicit Exchanges Law was abrogated in February 2014 by the less restrictive Exchange Controls Decree-Law (Decreto Ley del Régimen Cambiario y sus Ilícitos,[10] the "Exchange Controls Decree-Law").

Therefore, legally valid access to foreign currency is severely limited in Venezuela, in accordance with the exchange controls regulations, under the administrative office in charge of exchange control matters, the Centro Nacional de Comercio Exterior ("Cencoex"), created in 2013[11], which in 2014 took over the exchange controls administration, upon the suppression of the Comisión de Administración de Divisas ("Cadivi") by the Exchange Controls Decree-Law.

From 2003 until 2009, there was only one official exchange rate, which varied from time to time. However, from 2005 to 2009, the official exchange rate was kept at the artificially low rate of VEF 2.15 per US dollar.[12] In January 2010, two official exchange rates were established: VEF 2.6 and VEF 4.3. In January 2011, the official exchange rate was unified at VEF 4.3. And, in February 2013, the official exchange rate was raised to VEF 6.3. At the present time, July 2014, in addition to the official exchange rate of VEF 6.30 per USD, which is a fixed rate, there are two other official exchange rates, which vary from day to day: (i) the Sicad rate, of approximately VEF 10 per USD (which was implemented in early 2013, and applies only to very limited transactions); and (ii) the new Sicad II rate of approximately VEF 50 per USD. The Sicad II rate is the result of a new system for the distribution and allocation of foreign currency, the Sistema Cambiario Alternativo (SICAD II), implemented in March 2014 by means of an agreement between the Venezuelan Central Bank and the Ministry of Popular Power for the Economy, Finances and Public Banks, the Convenio Cambiario N° 27[13] (the "Sicad II Regulations"). The Sicad II Regulations theoretically allow the sale and purchase of foreign currency for whatever purposes the buyer wishes. In practice, the internal mechanisms used by the exchange controls authorities to allocate and distribute foreign currency within the Sicad II system, to eventual sellers and buyers, are not clearly defined, so — although a great improvement — the Sicad II rate is not reached by means of a transparent mechanism of exchange. Both the Sicad rate and the Sicad II rate are published daily by the Central Bank. In all cases, except for the Sicad II system (which in practice is of limited and discretional access), foreign currency at the official exchange rates is only available for very specific matters and requires an authorization issued by Cencoex.

Until May 2010, an additional way of legally acquiring foreign currency was the parallel market, or "permuta" market, where individuals and corporations were able to acquire a bond denominated in local currency for a price in local currency, exchange such bond for a bond denominated in foreign currency, and sell the latter bond for a price in foreign currency, or vice versa, by means of transactions made through local brokers and their correspondents abroad, with no restrictions as to the amounts to be sold/acquired or to the origin or destination of the funds. The "permuta" market created a very important segment of work for brokers. However, in the last reform of the Illicit Exchanges Law in 2010, the "permuta" market was forbidden, and brokers were not allowed to participate in exchange controls transactions. In a significant change of course, the Exchange Controls Decree-Law and the Sicad II Regulations now permit the participation of brokers in currency exchange transactions, which include the purchase and sale of bonds.

12 In January 2008, there was a change in the currency of Venezuela, by means of which the former bolívar (Bs) was turned into the bolívar fuerte (BsF, VEF), by dividing it by 1,000. Therefore, from 2005 to 2008, the rate of exchange was Bs 2,150 per US dollar and, from January 2008 to January 2010, the official exchange rate was of VEF 2.15 per US dollar.

Authorities

The regulatory agency under the Securities Market Law is the Superintendence. Under the Abrogated Law, the regulatory agency was the Comisión Nacional de Valores (the "Commission"), now replaced by the Superintendence.

The Superintendence is "coordinated" by Osfin, under article 14 of the Financial Systems Law, which includes among Osfin's competencies "the coordination of the regulating entities of the National Financial System, in order to avoid distortions in the development of the intermediation activities of the supervised entities".[28]

Although not immediately related to the capital markets area, in view of the exchange control in force in Venezuela, one must mention the corresponding administrative authority, Cencoex, as well as the Central Bank of Venezuela, which oversees Sicad and Sicad II.

Procedures

The Securities Market Laws establishes the National Securities Registry (Registro Nacional de Valores), which is defined as follows:

> "Article 15. National Securities Registry.- The files where shall be inscribed or recorded all the acts relative to the persons and securities subject to this Law constitute the National Registry of Securities. The National Securities Superintendence shall dictate the rules for its operation."[29]

Therefore, under the Securities Market Law, securities that are to be publicly offered must be registered, as well as issuers, brokers,[30] investment advisers, stock exchanges, risk-rating agencies, and other entities regulated by the Law.[31] In order to be registered, all of the above must be approved by the Superintendence following procedures that are dictated by the Superintendence. The Securities Market Law has made major changes to the matters under regulation, including significant issues with regard to brokers and investment advisers, among others. In many cases, the Securities Market Law has provided that the Superintendence must issue further rules (normas) to regulate specific matters.

Unfortunately, the Superintendence has not issued the regulations that are needed in order to comply with the terms of the Securities Market Law and, in some cases, such as with investment advisers (see text, below), the magnitude of the changes imposed by the Securities Market Law are such that the previous regulations are no longer applicable; thus, there is a legal vacuum regarding certain procedures. In this chapter, we shall also cover the public take-over bids procedure.

Legal Order and Regulatory Interests

Admission

Market Participants

In General. As expressed above, an individual or corporation that provides investment advice or brokerage services in Venezuela must be licensed by the 28 Financial System Law, art 14.5.

29 Securities Market Law, art 15.

30 Among the changes made by the Securities Market Law is that securities brokers, who were called as such (corredores de valores), now are called "authorized securities operators" (operadores de valores autorizados).

31 Securities Market Law, art 19.

Superintendence as an investment adviser or as a broker. Issuers of securities that are to be publicly offered must also be registered.

Investment Advisers. Investment advisers are regulated in article 22 of the Securities Market Law as follows:

> "Article 22.- Nationals or foreign persons who have studied securities and their issuers, and who express opinions regarding them whether publicly or privately shall be considered investment advisers. Investment advisers are not allowed to receive, directly or indirectly, funds or securities from its clients, except for their fees.
> "Investment advisers must obtain authorization from the National Superintendence of Securities. To that effect, the Superintendence must dictate the regulations regarding the authorization and the activities of the investment advisers."[32]

In general, the wording of the Securities Market Law is deficient. This is very evident in article 22, which regulates investment advisers and makes no distinction between individuals and corporations. The wording "who have studied securities and its issuers" could be taken to mean that only individuals, as opposed to corporations, can be considered investment advisers. However, article 8 of the Securities Market Law, when listing the powers and duties of the Superintendence, provides that it will "dictate the regulations according to which companies incorporated in the Republic, abroad, or individuals dedicated to advising on securities investment may operate within the national territory".[33] Therefore, foreign nationals and corporations incorporated abroad are allowed to be registered as Investment Advisers. There are no exemptions from registration requirements for Investment Advisers already registered in another jurisdiction.

The definition contained in article 22 of the Securities Market Law is very broad, and thus substantially changes the regulations for investment advisers that had been in force in Venezuela. Under the Abrogated Law, investment advisers were required to be licensed by the Commission if their "principal object is to advise the public regarding investment in the capital markets".[34] In addition, article 84 of the Abrogated Law established the following:

> "Persons who intend to habitually perform advisory functions for the acquisition of foreign securities, or serve as a direct or indirect contact with financial intermediaries or public stockbrokers operating abroad, must obtain the respective authorization of the National Commission on Securities, which shall establish the registration regulations for such activities to be carried out in the country."

32 Securities Market Law, art 22.
33 Securities Market Law, art 8(14).
34 Abrogated Law, art 85.

Under the legislation now in force, the Securities Market Law, anyone who provides investment advice in Venezuela, whether publicly or privately, must be licensed by the Superintendence. Indeed, according to the Law, anyone who has studied the subject of securities and its issuers, and expresses an opinion regarding such subjects, must be licensed by the Superintendence. The most important distinction made by the Abrogated Law, that the advice had to be provided "habitually" and that it had to be the "principal object" of the activities of the investment adviser, is no longer valid.

Under the Abrogated Law, the Commission issued the Rules Regarding the Authorization and Registration of Brokers and Investment Advisers (Normas Relativas a la Autorización y Registro de los Corredores Públicos de Valores y Asesores de Inversión,[35] the "Authorization Regulations"). The Authorization Regulations complied with the Abrogated Law, and specifically required that the advice should be provided "habitually".

However, in view of the fact that the Superintendence has yet to issue the rules regarding authorizations under the Securities Market Law, the Authorization Regulations should apply only in those matters that do not contradict the Securities Market Law. For instance, according to the Authorization Regulations, individuals who request an authorization must be over 35 years of age, have a graduate title, take and pass an examination administered by the Commission (now the Superintendence), or obtain a waiver from it based upon their qualifications obtained abroad. This does not contradict the Securities Market Law.

The Abrogated Law established indirectly the acceptance of foreign Investment Advisers, since the functions of the Commission included the following text: "Dictate the rules according to which companies domiciled abroad may operate in the national territory . . .".[36] However, the Authorization Regulations contain no provisions for the authorization of legal entities incorporated abroad. It simply states that companies that are not incorporated or domiciled in Venezuela may not be authorized as investment advisors. In the case of corporations, the Authorization Regulations required that such entities had to be in the form of a Venezuelan sociedad anónima (limited-liability company), and their exclusive object should be solely to provide investment advice.

In contrast, the Securities Market Law expressly accepts foreign Investment Advisers in the article that defines them, which refers to "Nationals or foreign persons who have studied securities and their issuers, and who express opinions regarding them whether publicly or privately". In addition, and similarly to the Abrogated Law, it indicates that the Superintendence shall issue "the regulations according to which companies incorporated in the Republic or abroad . . . may operate within the national territory".[37]

36 Abrogated Law, art 9(8).
37 Securities Market Law, art 8(14).

The Abrogated Law and the Authorization Regulations required that corporations must render their services through individuals who must have been duly authorized as Investment Advisers by the Commission (now the Superintendence); this requirement also is implicit in the wording of the Securities Market Law.

There is a registration fee, which was set by the Superintendence in January 2011, by means of the Regulations Regarding Duties and Contributions, that must be paid by persons under the control of the Superintendence[38] (Normas Relativas a las Tasas y Contribuciones que deben cancelar las Personas sometidas al Control de esta Superintendencia, the "Rules on Fees"). Investment advisers who are individuals must pay 100 tributary units[39] and corporations must pay 200 tributary units.[40] The tributary unit changes yearly, in order to adapt to the inflation rate;[41] as of January 2014, it was set at VEF 127.

In addition, investment advisers must pay a "special yearly contribution" to the Superintendence, as established in the Rules on Fees. If the investment adviser is an individual, the special contribution is of 100 tributary units.[42] If the adviser is a corporation, it must pay 1,000 tributary units.[43] The special contribution must be paid upon registration, and then yearly within the first 15 days of January.

There is no established time frame for the Superintendence to register an investment adviser, or even to reply to its request. In view of the recent changes in legislation, and since no new regulations have been issued to comply with the Securities Market Law, it is difficult to estimate how long registration will now require (under the Abrogated Law and the Authorization Regulations, it took many months).

The Organic Law of Administrative Procedures[44] (Ley Orgánica de Procedimientos Administrativos), which governs procedures not covered by specific laws or regulations, provides that "the processing and resolution of files" may not exceed four months that, in exceptional cases, may be extended for two additional months".[45] However, in practice, the term is not applied by the Superintendence.

As stated above, with regard to foreign individuals or corporations who wish to register as investment advisers, the Securities Market Law provides that the Superintendence must "dictate the regulations according to which companies incorporated in the Republic, abroad, or individuals dedicated to advising on securities investment may operate within the national territory". The Superintendence has yet to comply and there has been no announcement regarding the regulations to be issued. In practice, the Superintendence's website list of registered investment advisers includes 125 individuals[46] and eight corporations.[47] The Superintendence's Annual Report for 2013 has no record of new investment advisers being admitted; whereas it indicates that the inscriptions of eight investment advisers were cancelled.

Brokers. According to the Securities Market Law, brokers (corredores públicos de valores) are now denominated "authorized securities operators" (operadores de valores autorizados). Article 20 of the Securities Market Law defines the concept of brokers as follows:

> "Authorized securities operators: Individuals or corporations who habitually or regularly engage in the performance of activities of intermediation with securities in the primary or secondary securities market, or in the raising of funds or securities for investment in securities regulated by this Law, in their own name and their own account, or on account of a third party, or in the name and account of a third party."[48]

The article further states that brokers may adopt the form of corporations and may be shareholding members of a stock exchange. The Abrogated Law did not define brokers; it only established that persons who engaged in brokerage operations, whether within or outside a stock exchange, had to request authorization from the Commission.

According to the Securities Market Law, all brokers (even those who were previously authorized under the Abrogated Law) must request from the Superintendence an authorization to act as such authorized securities operators within 180 days from the entry into force of the Securities Market Law, which may be prorogued for a further 180 days, during which period they may act as "temporary" brokers.[49]

With regard to non-Venezuelan individual or corporate brokers, the Securities Market Law's definition of brokers does not expressly state that they may be foreign. However, when establishing the functions of the Superintendence, it provides that the latter must issue "the regulations according to which individuals or companies incorporated in the Republic or abroad . . . may operate within the national territory".[50] These regulations have yet to be issued.

The Authorization Regulations, issued under the Abrogated Law, required that corporate brokers had to be in the form of a Venezuelan sociedad anónima

(limited-liability company) and their exclusive object should have been to act solely as securities intermediaries.[51]

Article 20 of the Securities Market Law also establishes that the Superintendence may dictate the norms that will regulate the brokers, regarding not only the authorization to act as brokers, but also all the activities performed as such, the technical requirements of solvency and liquidity, the financial information, and the transfer of shares of broker corporations.

Brokers are supervised by the Superintendence, which must authorize and supervise their acts as provided in article 8(1) of the Securities Market Law that establishes the latter's functions. Among the supervisory faculties of the Superintendence is that it may revoke or suspend the broker's authorization and cancel the inscription in case of a grave violation of the norms that regulate their activities. The law does not specify what it considers to be a grave violation of the norms. The Securities Market Law provides that brokers may not:

- Perform and register simulated operations;
- Execute operations without a transfer of securities;
- Liquidate its operations outside the official site of the stock exchange; or
- Perform intermediacy operations for the banking and insurance sectors.[52]

The Securities Market Law also establishes that brokers may not deal with national public debt bonds.[53] However, after the Securities Market Law was enacted, the following has happened: (i) the Exchange Controls Decree-Law now permits the participation of brokers in exchange operations;[54] (ii) the Sicad II Regulations expressly indicate that Sicad II operations may be transacted through "institutions authorized to act in the securities markets, in accordance with the Securities Market Law";[55] and (iii) the Superintendence has issued the Instructions for the Participation in the Alternative Exchange of Foreign Currency System (SICAD II) of Authorized Securities Operations[56] and a list of brokers so authorized.[57] Therefore, the relevant provision of the Securities Market Law has been abrogated, and brokers are now allowed to participate in exchange transactions, which include national public debt bonds.

As with investment advisers, there is a registration fee, set by the Rules on Fees. Brokers who are individuals must pay 100 tributary units;[58] corporations must pay 200 tributary units.[59]

In addition, brokers must pay a "special yearly contribution" to the Superintendence, as established in the Regulations Regarding Duties and Contributions. If the broker is an individual, the special contribution is 100 tributary units.[60] If the broker is a corporation, it must pay 1,000 tributary units.[61] The special contribution must be paid upon registration, and then yearly with the first 15 days of January.

As with investment advisers, there is no established time frame for the Superintendence to register a broker, or to reply to a request. No new regulations have been issued to comply with the Securities Market Law in this regard; thus, it is difficult to estimate how long registration will take (under the Abrogated Law and the Authorization Regulations, it took many months). As stated above, there is a time limit (four months, which in exceptional cases may be extended only for two additional months), but this is not applied in practice by the Superintendence.

There has been no announcement regarding the regulations that need to be issued. In practice, the Superintendence's website list of brokers includes 239 individuals[62] and 44 corporations[63] (34 of which are allowed to participate in the Sicad II system). The Superintendence's Annual Report for 2013 has no record of new brokers being admitted, whereas it indicates that the inscriptions of nine brokers were cancelled.[64]

Securities

The definition of securities contained in the Securities Market Law is as follows:

> "It will be understood as securities, for the purposes of this law, the financial instruments which represent property or credit rights over the equity of a corporation, short, medium or long term, issued en masse, which have the same characteristics and grant their holders the same rights within their class. The National Superintendence of Securities, in cases of doubt, shall determine which are the securities regulated by this Law.
> ". . . derivative instruments, different types of instruments or securities representing a right of option for the purchase or sale of securities and futures contracts on securities, where the parties agree to buy or sell a given amount of securities at a predetermined price and date, and generally any other type of instrument whose value is determined and fixed by reference to the value of other assets or group of them.

> ". . . securities which represent property rights, warranties and other rights or contracts on agricultural products and supplies."[65]

The treatment of securities in the Securities Market Law differs from the same subject in the Abrogated Law. The latter also established a definition of the securities; however, the definition simply stated that "corporations' shares, obligations and any other securities issued en masse that have the same characteristics and grant their holders the same rights within their class" must be considered securities in accordance with such law.[66] The Abrogated Law then went on to regulate each of the most common securities, establishing their legal regime.

In the Securities Market Law, securities are only defined in general terms. There is no explicit mention of bonds, participation certificates, and commercial papers, and no specific provisions apply to them. The Securities Market Law simply states, in very general terms (when establishing the functions of the Superintendence and within the context of authorizing and registering the public offer of securities), that the Superintendence must issue rules regarding securities.[67]

Only with regard to bonds (obligaciones) has the Superintendence complied with its obligation to issue rules. In January 2011, the Superintendence issued the Rules Regarding the Public Offer and Placement of Securities and the Publicizing of Issues (Normas Relativas a la Oferta Pública y Colocación de Valores y a la Publicación de las Emisiones, the "Public Offer Rules"[68]). The Public Offer Rules contain a chapter dedicated to bonds.

The Securities Market Law does explicitly include derivatives in the definition of securities, and gives them the same treatment as the rights of option for purchase or sale of securities and future contracts of securities. It also explicitly includes securities that represent property rights, warranties, and other rights or contracts on agricultural products and supplies. Issuer requirements in order to make a public offer of securities are contained in the Public Offer Rules that were issued under the Securities Market Law.

Article 2 of the Public Offer Rules establishes as its first requirement that the issuer obtain from the Superintendence authorization to make a public offer. Article 4 provides that such authorization and the registration of the issue in the National Securities Registry are prerequisites for making a public offer of securities.

Periodic Disclosure

In General. Venezuelan capital markets regulations strictly establish the information that its actors must disclose periodically to the Superintendence.

66 Abrogated Law, art 22.
67 Securities Market Law, art 8(2).
68 Official Gazette Number 39.585 of 3 January 2011.

Article 43 of the Securities Market Law establishes that corporations subject to it may notify the Superintendence in advance regarding the following:

- Variations of equity;
- Sale of the main asset;
- Change in the object of the company;
- Merger or transformation of the company; and
- Other actions which the Superintendence may establish.[69]

According to the Rules Regarding the Economic and Financial Information that must be supplied by persons subject to the Control of the National Superintendence of Securities (Normas Relativas a la Información Económica y Financiera que deben suministrar las Personas sometidas al Control de la Superintendencia Nacional de Valores, the "Economic and Financial Disclosure Rules"[70]), the actors regulated by the Superintendence are required to provide certain information periodically. The Economic and Financial Disclosure Rules establish the type of information required depending on the subject entity:

- Issuers;
- Collective investments entities and their administrating corporations;
- Brokers; and
- Transfer agents.

Issuers. In accordance with the Economic and Financial Disclosure Rules, within the seven days following the annual ordinary shareholders' meeting, such companies must deliver to the Superintendence the following documents:

- Approved financial statements;
- Internal auditor's report;
- Certified copy of minutes of the shareholders' meeting;
- Information regarding dividends and the remuneration of the board of directors;
- A report from the board of directors that includes the most important variations, new contracts, new activities, litigation, and any other important new fact that may affect the company;
- List of shareholders;
- Report regarding the compliance with the good corporate government principles established by the Superintendence;

69 Securities Market Law, art 43.
70 Official Gazette Number 39.547 of 15 December 2010.

- Report on the methods and procedures used to prevent money laundering; and
- Most recent income tax declaration.

In addition, every quarter, within 30 days after the accounting closing, issuers must provide the Superintendence with quarterly financial statements, explaining the most significant variations compared to the same quarter from the earlier year. Issuers also must publish monthly the following information:

- Financial statements, compared to the same month of the previous year and adjusted for inflation; and
- Solvency indicators, working capital indicators, long and short-term debt, and return over equity and return over assets.

Issuers also must inform the Superintendence of any economic or financial fact or legal action that may be important for the estimation of the prices or the circulation of the securities. They must also inform about declared dividends and any transactions between the companies and the board of directors or their principal shareholders, or with companies related to either. Issuers must provide notice, with 30 days' anticipation, of any shareholders' meeting to be convened to decide the dissolution of the company, the extension of its term, its merger to another company, the sale of its main asset, or the change of its object.

In the case of meetings to decide the increase or reduction of capital, the issuer must inform the Superintendence with 15 days' anticipation. Issuers who have been authorized by the Superintendence to issue securities through public offers abroad must provide to the Superintendence the information above, as well as any other information requested by the regulatory institution abroad.

Brokers

Brokers also must provide economic and financial information, periodically, to the Superintendence, in accordance with the Economic and Financial Disclosure Rules. Brokers must provide to the Superintendence, in the first five days of each quarter, operations of their own and related portfolio of the previous quarter, including a report on the date of the operation, the issuer of the securities, the type of operation, the conditions, and the quantity.

Annually, within 15 days from each year's closing, brokers must provide a report of the owners of the securities of the related portfolio. Subsequently, if there is any change, they must inform the Superintendence. Corporate brokers must provide the Superintendence, within the next 15 days after the last monthly closing, the following information:

- Financial statements prepared by a public accountant;
- Report of their own portfolio, mentioning issuers, description of the securities, date of acquisition, date of maturity, value, currency, and exchange rate;

- Report of the related portfolio organized by each of the holders of securities related to the broker, mentioning issuers, description of the securities, date of acquisition, date of maturity, value, currency, and exchange rate;
- Report of the administrated portfolio organized by the clients, mentioning each contract and including the securities included in the contract; and
- Report of the portfolio in custody.

The corporate brokers must celebrate the ordinary shareholders' meeting in 90 days following the annual closing. Within eight days following the shareholders' meeting, such companies must deliver to the Superintendence a certified copy of the minutes of the shareholders' meeting. In addition, the corporate brokers must within 30 days following the shareholders' meeting, deliver the registered certified copy of the minutes.

Within 15 days following the closing of each semester, companies must deliver to the Superintendence a report of the operations done during the last semester. Every quarter, within five days after the accounting closing, brokers must, provide to the Superintendence their portfolio operations and the related portfolio operations, mentioning the date, the issuer, type of operation, conditions, amount, price, and custody.

Within 90 days following the semester closing, corporate brokers must deliver to the Superintendence the approved financial statements, a report on the methods and procedures used to prevent money laundering, and the most recent income tax declaration. Corporate brokers must inform the Superintendence of any economic or financial fact or legal action that may affect them. Additionally, they give notice as to litigation, changes in their statutes, changes in bank loans situations, and changes in the board of directors or relevant personnel.

Other Participants

Members or shareholders of a stock exchange must, within 90 days following the semester closing, deliver to the Superintendence financial statements, a report of their operations, and most recent income tax declaration. Brokers who are not members or shareholders of a stock exchange must, within 30 days after the closing of the financial year, deliver to the Superintendence financial statements, a report of their operations, and most recent income tax declaration.

Other participants, such as transfer agents, must disclose information periodically to the Superintendence. Additionally, the Authorization Regulations, issued under the Abrogated Law, provided for the Commission, now the Superintendence, exercise control over investment advisers, such as by:

- Requiring that certain documents be kept by the Investment Adviser or submitted by the Investment Adviser to the Superintendence;[71]

71 "Documents" include correspondence, memoranda, books and other registries (of memoranda of instructions of received fees), invoices, and recommendations.

- Requiring that when the investment adviser renders advice in connection with related corporations, the adviser must previously notify the Superintendence, as well as its clients; and
- Requiring that marketing material related to investment advisory services be previously approved by the Superintendence.

Trading Rules

Securities Offerings

As stated above, the Public Offer Rules provide that the indispensable prerequisites needed in order to make a public offer of securities are the Superintendence's authorization to make a public offer and the registration of the issue in the National Securities Registry.

The primary placement can be done by the Issuer or by a placement agent (who must be a broker or have been expressly authorized as placement agent by special laws). The price of the offer must be mentioned in the prospectus and must be maintained during all the placement period.

The issuer must publish in a national journal and in a local journal a notice publicizing the issue, at least five days before the primary placement takes place. In the notice, the issuer must mention the names, addresses, email addresses, and telephone numbers of the placement agents. In addition, within five days after the end of the placement process, the issuer must publish a notice of the end of the process. The notices must be approved by the Superintendence. Once the primary placement ends, the issuer must deliver to the Superintendence the results, with the identification of buyers and the amount acquired.

Article 8 provides that the issuer must indicate the term during which the placement of the issue will take place. That term will begin at the time published in the public notice and may not exceed six months. The Public Offer Rules require that the issuer and the intermediaries who participate in the primary placement must give preference to small and medium investors to purchase the securities, during the first five days following publication, in accordance with the guidelines established by the Superintendence for each case. These features should be included in the prospectus and in any other publications.[72]

Issuers, placement agents, and distributors must follow the rules established in the prospectus and in the contract of primary placement (which must be approved by the Superintendence). Placement agents can celebrate distribution contracts with brokers or with distribution agents. Issuers, placement agents, and distributors must register operations daily, and the information contained in those registries must be delivered to the Superintendence monthly.

The prospectus must be authorized by the Superintendence. Once the securities are registered in the Superintendence, the issuer must provide the 72 Public Offer Rules, art 19.

Superintendence with the final prospectus in order to begin the public offer. The issuer also must deliver to the Superintendence the placement contracts, common representative contracts, payment agent contract, and custody contract, all notarized. Although the prospectus cannot circulate publicly before the issue is authorized, the issuer can privately deliver it to the agents of placement and distribution. All advertising related to the issue must be authorized by the Superintendence.

Disclosure of Acquisition of Substantial Holdings

Article 18 of the Securities Market Law regulates public take-over bids. Its sole paragraph provides the following with regard to "significant participations", as the law terms it:

> "The person who wishes to acquire in a single or by successive acts a volume of shares listed on a stock exchange that will lead to reaching a significant participation in the capital of a company, or to the ability to control administrative organs thereof, shall make public the information public in the media and within the periods that the National Superintendence of Securities shall determine in the rules that it will dictate to that effect.
> "The person who has not made the notifications referred to in this article may not be able to exercise the rights derived from the acquired securities and the agreements adopted with such person's participation shall be null and void without prejudice to the penalties provided in the Law."[73]

The Rules on Public Offers of Acquisition, Interchange, and Take-Over of Companies That Make Public Offer of Their Stock and Other Securities (Normas sobre Ofertas Públicas de Adquisición, de Intercambio y Toma de Control de Sociedades que hacen Oferta Pública de Acciones y otros Derechos sobre las mismas,[74] the "Take-Over Rules") were issued by the Commission in 2000, under the Abrogated Law, which had a similar article regarding public take-over bids. The Take-Over Rules include a definition of what is called a "participation [which is] reputed significant", as follows:

> "Any participation in the capital of the company which represents, directly or indirectly, by means of ownership, beneficial interest, control rights over the right to vote, business integration agreements or any other manner, which allows the Initiator to obtain control or to increase its participation in more than 10 per cent."

According to the Take-Over Rules, a person who is initiating a public offer bid may notify the Commission, now the Superintendence, within the procedure established for public offer bids (see text, below). In addition, the Abrogated Law established, under article 122, that persons who directly or indirectly, under whatever title, reached ownership or beneficial rights over more than 10 per cent of any kind of shares of an issuer, needed to notify the Commission within two days from the transaction.

73 Securities Market Law, art 18.
74 Official Gazette Number 37.039 of 19 September 2000.

It also established that the administrators of an issuer had to notify the Commission of any acquisition of shares of such issuer made by such administrators, within two days.[75] The Rules Relating to the Transparency of the Capital Markets (Normas Relativas a la Transparencia de los Mercados Capitales, the "Transparency Rules"[76]), issued under the Abrogated Law, develop the provisions of article 122 of the Abrogated Law. The Securities Market Law has no equivalent provision but, since the regulations of the Transparency Rules do not contradict the Securities Market Law, they are applicable.

Privileged Information

Article 38 of the Securities Market Law defines privileged information as follows:

> "Privileged information is that information which is not accessible or available to the public, of a precise character, and which if made public, influences or may influence, in an appreciable manner, the trading of securities. It is not privileged information, that information which may be developed by third parties independently, or which is available to the public otherwise."[77]

The use of privileged information in the securities market in order to obtain an economic benefit is a criminal act, and article 52 of the Securities Market Law provides that it is punished by prison (three months to two years), fines, and disqualification. The Securities Market Law also states that the employees of the Superintendence should not divulge data or confidential or privileged information, under the penalties established above and dismissal.[78]

The wording of the Securities Market Law's definition of privileged information stresses that it influences or may influence trading in an appreciable manner. The law does not specify further. However, the Transparency Rules, which were issued under the Abrogated Law, explain that the terms that "may influence in an appreciative manner the trading of securities" are to be understood as referring to "any fact or event of any nature, such as legal or economic, financial, managerial, technological, natural events, which in the opinion of the issuing company affects or may affect it".[79]

Issuers are obliged to divulge privileged information in accordance with the provisions of the Securities Market Law[80] and the Transparency Rules. Issuers must prepare and deliver "immediately" to the Commission, now the

Superintendence, a report with a succinct summary of the information, including economic, financial, and other details which are "indispensable" for the market to reach a reasonable criterion about the facts, events, or situation provided.[81] Such report must then be delivered "immediately" to at least three national or international news agencies (which provide national coverage), one of which must provide "real time" information.[82]

According to the Abrogated Law, if the issuer considered that the immediate disclosure of the information could be damaging to its legitimate interests or to the interests of the holders of securities issued by the issuer, it should provide the information to the Commission, requesting that the matter remain confidential. If the Commission did not answer within two days, the issuer had to make the information public. This provision was further developed in article 20 of the Transparency Rules, which indicated that it must be a reasoned request which must explain with clarity the motivations of fact or law. The Securities Market Law contains no equivalent provision.

Public Take-Over Bids

In 2000, under the Abrogated Law, the Commission issued the Take-Over Rules. Article 109 of the Abrogated Law stated that the Commission, now the Superintendence, should issue the rules governing the procedure of public take-over bids. The Securities Market Law also contains a similar provision, so the Take-Over Rules continue to apply. The aim sought by the Take-Over Rules, as established in article 2, is to:

- Provide a transparent procedure, in order to prevent erratic fluctuations and deviations in the value of shares and other securities;
- Allow the orderly participation, in conditions of equality, of all shareholders;
- Permit bids by other interested parties, who may wish to equal or improve the offers' conditions; and
- Promote the supply of the information required by the existing shareholders, regarding their decision on whether or not to sell.

The Take-Over Rules cover public offers of acquisition (Ofertas Públicas de Adquisición, OPA), exchange public offers (Ofertas Públicas de Intercambio, OPI), and public take-over offers (Ofertas Públicas de Toma de Control, OPTC).

In the first two cases, the initiator of the offer does not have and seeks to own a "significant participation" (to obtain control or to increase its participation in more than 10 per cent of the capital) with the proviso that the procedure "does not have the effects of a takeover". The difference between OPA (acquisition) and OPI (exchange) regards compensation. In the first case, it is the payment of money; in the second, it is the transfer of securities.

81 Transparency Rules, arts 2 and 3.
82 Transparency Rules, art 4.

A take-over offer (OPTC) is the procedure whereby the initiator seeks to acquire or to complete (by the transfer of money and/or securities) a controlling majority, or to increase its existing share participation by a percentage equivalent to a significant participation. The Take-Over Rules also apply to shareholders who wish to increase their participation by more than 10 per cent or by any percentage, if in a takeover situation, and majority shareholders who wish to increase their participation.

Regarding sellers, the Take-Over Rules apply also to shareholders who offer publicly to sell to the best bidder a significant participation or the majority control (more than 50 per cent or the effective control of the decisions of the shareholders' meeting). The Take-Over Rules establish the common procedure to be complied with, briefly summarized as follows:

- The initiator must file a report before the Superintendence, stating the information relevant to the offer. The duration of the offer must be set by the initiator, within a limit of no less than 20 and no more than 30 stock market working days;
- The Superintendence will then accept or deny the authorization for the release of the report;
- The target company must then consign its observations, including a report from its board of directors, with these observations released to the public, after notifying the Superintendence;
- Any person, including the shareholders of the company involved, may present a competing offer, thus becoming an initiator;
- Initial offers may be modified, subject to the Superintendence's approval of the release of the modified report;
- Offers may be revoked simply by previously notifying the Superintendence provided the revocation is made before the offer becomes effective, with the Superintendence having to approve revocation if made afterwards;
- Acceptance of the offer must be notified to its initiator;[83] and
- The payment due must be made in a stock exchange within five stock market working days following the closing of the offer.

Additionally, certain formalities apply to each of the different types of public offer, such as, in case of take-overs, the filing of a special report with detailed information (including future plans). There also is a simplified procedure that applies if the initiator already owns at least two-thirds of the shares and offers to acquire total control of the company, the offer is limited to 10 per cent of the shares, and the company concerned proceeds to a plan of acquisition of treasury shares.

83 The acceptance also may be revoked, but only in certain cases.

Introduction

The realisation of a Common Market requires as one prerequisite a unified capital market. Harmonised rules for the handling and trading of securities have been identified as an important step towards a common European capital market. The European Union (EU) has issued a set of Directives to accomplish that goal. Particularly the following Directives, partly amended through subsequent Directives, are to be mentioned:

- Council Directive 79/279/EEC of 5 March 1979, co-ordinating the conditions for the admission of securities to official stock exchange listing;
- Council Directive 80/390/EEC of 17 March 1980, co-ordinating the requirements for the drawing up, scrutiny, and distribution of the listing particulars to be published for the admission of securities to official stock exchange listing;
- Council Directive 85/611/EEC of 20 December 1985, on the co-ordination of laws, regulations, and administrative provisions relating to undertakings for collective investment in transferable securities (UCITS);
- Council Directive 82/121/EEC of 15 February 1982, on the information to be published on a regular basis by companies the shares of which have been admitted to official stock exchange listing;
- Council Directive 88/627/EEC of 12 December 1988, on the information to be published when a major holding in a listed company is acquired or disposed of;
- Council Directive 89/298/EEC of 17 April 1989, co-ordinating the requirements for the drawing-up, scrutiny, and distribution of the prospectus to be published and transferable securities offered to the public;
- Council Directive 89/592 EEC of 13 November 1989, co-ordinating regulations on insider dealing; and
- Council Directive 93/22/EEC of 10 May 1993, on investment services in the securities field.

Conditions for Admission of Securities to Listing

In General

As a first step, the European Council introduced Directive 79/279/EEC of 5 March 1979, relating to the conditions for admission to official stock exchange listing. Admission to official listing on stock exchanges of EU member states of securities issued by undertakings had been realised to constitute an important means of access to the capital markets; however, safeguards for the protection of the interests of actual and potential investors were identified as indispensable.[1]

Equivalent protection for investors, facilitated admission to official stock exchange listing for securities from other member states, and multiple listing of such securities on a number of stock exchanges within the EU were declared in the preamble. Legal harmonisation was expected to further the development of a European capital market. In 1979, co-ordination was meant to be only temporarily limited to the establishment of minimum conditions; further harmonisation measures were planned to follow. Neither this Directive nor others issued in this field by the Council or the Commission contain a definition of 'securities' or of 'stock exchanges'.

Applicability of Directive 79/279/EEC

Directive 79/279/EEC applies to securities which are admitted to official listing or which are subject of an application for such admission on a stock exchange in a member state,[2] regardless of the legal status of their issuers, and also applies to non-EU states or their regional or local authorities or international public bodies. At a member state's option, the Directive does not apply[3] to:

- Securities issued by an EU member state or its regional or local authorities; and
- Units issued by collective investment undertakings other than the closed-end type.[4]

Conditions for Admission to Official Listing

In General

Directive 79/279/EEC introduces conditions for admission of securities to official listing in two schedules, namely Schedule A for shares and Schedule B for debt securities.

Schedule A – Conditions for Shares

The company which seeks admission of its shares to official listing must fulfil, among others, the following requirements:

1 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC.
2 Directive 79/279/EEC, art 1, para 1.
3 European Community Directive 79/279/EEC, art 1, para 2.
4 Such units are defined in article 2 of Directive 79/279/EEC as unit trusts and investment companies, the object of which is collective investment of capital provided by the public and which operate on the principle of risk spreading, and the units of which are, at the request of holders, repurchased or redeemed out of the assets of these undertakings. As an alternative to repurchase or redemption, the undertaking could ensure that the stock exchange value of its units does not significantly vary from their net asset value.

- Its legal position as regards both formation and operation must be in conformity with the applicable laws and regulations;
- In general, the foreseeable market capitalisation, respectively capital and reserves, must be at least €1 million; and
- With certain exceptions, the company must have published or filed its annual accounts for the three financial years preceding the application.

The legal position of the shares concerned must be in conformity with the applicable laws and regulations. The shares must be freely negotiable. If shares have been publicly issued before admission to official listing, such listing may be made only when the subscription period has ended. As a further prerequisite for a listing, a 'sufficient' number of shares must be distributed to the public.[5]

An admission for official listing must cover all shares of a certain class, except blocks serving to maintain control or shares not negotiable for a certain term under agreements, provided the public is informed and there is no danger for the interests of the holders. The shares must comply (only) with the physical form requirements for shares in the member state of which the issuer is a national. If shares issued by a national of a non-EU state are not listed, either in the country of origin or in the country in which the major proportion of the shares is held, a listing may be granted only if this is not the case for reasons of investor protection.

Schedule B – Conditions for Debt Securities

Debt Securities Issued by Undertakings. In regard to debt securities issued by an undertaking, the issuing undertaking's legal position must be in conformity with the laws and regulations to which it is subject, as regards both its formation and operation. The legal position of the debt securities must be in conformity with the laws and regulations to which they are subject; they must be freely negotiable.

Except in case of tap issues, if debt securities have been publicly issued before admission to official listing, such listing may be made only when the subscription period has ended. All debt securities ranking pari passu must be covered by the application. The debt securities must comply (only) with the physical form requirements for such securities in the member state of which the issuer is a national; the physical form of debt securities issued in a single member state must conform to the standards in force in that member state. The physical form of debt securities issued by a national of a non-EU state must afford sufficient safeguard for investor protection.

Except in case of tap issues, where the amount is not fixed, the amount of the loan must be at least €200,000, unless the competent authority rules that there will be a sufficient market for the debt securities even though the minimum amount of €200,000 is not reached.

5 In general, a 'sufficient number' is 25 per cent of the subscribed capital represented by the class of the shares concerned.

Convertible or exchangeable debentures and debentures with warrants may be admitted to official listing only if the related shares are already or simultaneously listed on the same stock exchange or on another regulated, regularly operating, recognised open market, unless an EU member state provides for admission to official listing on the basis of a decision by the competent authority that the holders have at their disposal all the information necessary to form an opinion concerning the value of the shares to which these debentures relate.

Debt Securities Issued by State, Regional, or Local Authorities, or Public International Body. In regard to debt securities issued by a state, regional, or local authority, or a public international body, the debt securities must be freely negotiable. Except where the closing date for subscription is not fixed, in case of a public issue preceding admission to official listing, the first listing may be made only after the end of the period during which subscription applications may be submitted.

All debt securities ranking pari passu must be covered by the application. The debt securities must comply (only) with the physical form requirements in the member state in which they are issued; the physical form of debt securities issued by non-EU states or their regional or local authorities or by public international bodies must afford sufficient safeguard for investor protection.

Schedules C and D

In General. The obligations to be met by issuers of securities admitted to official listing are set out in Schedule C (relating to shares) and Schedule D (relating to debt securities).

Schedule C – Obligations of Companies Whose Shares Are Admitted to Official Listing. If issued shares of the same class as already listed shares are not automatically admitted, the company will be required to apply for their admission to the same listing, either not more than a year after their issue or when they become freely negotiable.

The company must ensure equal treatment for all shareholders in the same position. The company must ensure, at least in each member state in which its shares are listed, that all the necessary facilities and information are available to enable shareholders to exercise their rights. It must inform the shareholders of the holding of meetings and enable them to exercise their right to vote, publish notices or distribute circulars concerning the allocation and payment of dividends and the issue of new shares including allotment, subscription, renunciation, and conversion arrangements and, unless the company itself provides financial services, designate as its agent a financial institution through which shareholders may exercise their financial rights.

A company planning an amendment to its instrument of incorporation or its statute must communicate a draft thereof to the competent authorities of the member states in which its shares are listed not later than the calling of the general meeting to decide on the proposed amendment.

The company must make available to the public, as soon as possible, its most recent annual accounts and its last annual report. If the company prepares both annual own and annual consolidated accounts, the competent authorities may authorise the company to make available either only their own or the consolidated accounts, provided the accounts not made available do not contain any significant additional information. More detailed, respectively additional, information must be published, if the annual accounts and reports do not comply with the provisions of Council Directives and if they do not give a true and fair view of the company's assets and liabilities, financial position, and profit or loss.

The company must inform the public as soon as possible in respect of any major new developments in its sphere of activity which are not public knowledge and which, by virtue of their effect on its assets and liabilities or financial position or on the general course of its business, may lead to substantial movements in the prices of its shares. The competent authorities, however, may exempt the company from this requirement if the disclosure of particular information is such as to prejudice the legitimate interests of the company.

The company must inform the public of any changes in the rights attaching to the various classes of shares and of any changes in the structure (shareholders and breakdown of holdings) of the major holdings in its capital as compared with information previously published on that subject.[6] A company which is not subject to Directive 88/627/EEC must inform the public within nine days when it comes to its notice that a person or entity has acquired or disposed of a number of shares such that his or its holding exceeds or falls below one of the thresholds laid down in article 4 of Directive 88/627/EEC.

A company whose shares are officially listed on stock exchanges situated or operating in different member states must ensure that equivalent information is made available to the market at each of these exchanges. If shares are listed in non-EU states as well, the company must make available equivalent information in the member states where the shares are officially listed, if such information may be of importance for the evaluation of the shares.

Schedule D. In respect of debt securities issued by an undertaking, the undertaking must ensure equal treatment for all holders of debt securities ranking pari passu. However, in accordance with national law, offers of early repayment of certain debt securities may be made in derogation from the conditions of issue and in particular in accordance with social priorities.

The undertaking must ensure that at least in each member state where its debt securities are officially listed all the facilities and information necessary to enable holders to exercise their rights are available; in particular, it must publish notices or distribute circulars concerning the holding of meetings of holders of debt securities, the payment of interest, the exercise of any conversion, exchange, subscription or renunciation rights, and repayment and, unless itself provides financial services, must designate as its agent a financial institution through which holders of debt securities may exercise their financial rights.

6 European Community Directive 88/627/EEC of 12 December 1988, on the information to be published when a major holding in a listed company is acquired or disposed of.

An undertaking planning an amendment to its instrument of incorporation or its statutes affecting the rights of holders of debt securities must forward a draft thereof to the competent authorities of the member states in which its debt securities are listed no later than the calling of the meeting of the body which is to decide on the proposed amendment.

The undertaking must make available to the public as soon as possible its most recent annual accounts and its last annual report, the publication of which is required by national law. The competent authority may authorise the undertaking to make available either only their own or the consolidated accounts, provided the accounts not made available do not contain any significant additional information.

More detailed additional information must be published if the annual accounts and reports do not comply with the provisions of Council Directives and if they do not give a true and fair view of the undertaking's assets and liabilities, financial position, and profit or loss. The undertaking must inform the public as soon as possible of any major new developments in its sphere of activity which are not public knowledge and which may significantly affect the undertaking's ability to meet its commitments. The competent authorities, however, may exempt the undertaking from this requirement, if the disclosure of particular information would be such as to prejudice the legitimate interests of the undertaking. The undertaking must inform the public without delay of new loan issues and in particular of any guarantee or security in respect thereof. In the case of officially listed convertible or exchangeable debentures or debentures with warrants, the undertaking must inform the public without delay of any changes in the rights attaching to the various classes of shares to which they relate.

An undertaking, the debt securities of which are officially listed on stock exchanges situated or operating in different member states, must ensure that equivalent information is made available to the market at each of these exchanges. If debt securities are listed in non-EU states as well, the undertaking must also make available equivalent information in the member states where the shares are officially listed, if such information may be of importance for the evaluation of the debt securities.

In respect of debt securities issued by a state or its regional or local authorities or by a public international body, issuers must ensure that all holders of debt securities ranking pari passu are given equal treatment in respect of all the rights attaching to those debt securities. However, early repayment offers may be made in accordance with national law (see text, above). The issuers must ensure the facilities and information necessary to enable holders of debt securities to exercise their rights are available (see text, above).

Subject to the prohibitions provided in Schedules A and B, EU member states are free to introduce more stringent rules for the admission of securities to official listing, provided that such rules apply generally for all issuers or for individual classes of issuer and that they have been published before application for admission of such securities. However, member states may not require as a prerequisite for admission to official listing that such security has been already admitted to official listing on another stock exchange within the EU.

Member states may make the issuers of securities admitted to official listing subject to more stringent rules than those set out in Schedules C and D, provided that these rules apply generally for all issuers or for individual classes of issuer. They may authorise derogations from such more stringent conditions, but any derogations from the conditions to be authorised in accordance with Schedules A and B must apply generally to all issuers where the circumstances justifying them are similar.[7] Member states may require issuers of securities admitted to official listing to inform the public on a regular basis of their financial position and the general course of their business.[8]

The member states must establish authorities competent to decide on the admission of securities to official listing and must inform the European Commission about allocation of duties. Such competent authorities may reject an application for the admission to official listing if, in their opinion, such admission would be detrimental to investors' interests.[9] Solely in the interests of protecting the investors, if thereto authorised by the member state, the competent authorities may subject the admission to any special condition which the competent authorities consider appropriate and of which they have explicitly informed the applicant.[10] The competent authorities may refuse to admit to official listing a security already officially listed in another member state where the issuer fails to comply with the obligations resulting from admission in that member state.[11]

An issuer's failure to comply with the obligations resulting from admission to official listing may be published.[12] The issuer must provide the authorities with all information appropriate in the authorities' opinion to protect investors or ensure the smooth operation of the market.[13]

The authorities may prescribe the publication of information in a form and within time limits appropriate for the protection of investors or smooth operation of the market.[14] The authorities also are authorised to suspend the listing of a security if one of these two objectives is impaired or if they conclude that normal regular dealings in a security are no longer possible.[15]

Decisions refusing the admission of a security to official listing or discontinuing such a listing will be subjected to appeal to the courts.[16] The authority must decide about an application for admission to official listing within six months from the time when an application containing all the relevant information has been filed.[17] If, within six months, no decision has been rendered, this will be deemed a rejection of the application, subject to appeal to court.[18]

The issuer of the certificates representing shares must offer adequate safeguards for the protection of investors.[19] Information to be provided by the issuers is listed in Schedules C and D, to be published in one or more newspapers generally in the official language of the country.[20]

If an application is made for a security already listed on a stock exchange in another EU member state, the authorities must communicate to expedite and simplify the procedure as far as possible. The application must state whether a similar application is being made or has been made or will be made in another member state.[21] A Contact Committee must deliver opinions relating to measures concerning the implementation.[22]

The Council Directive of 3 March 1982 (amending Directive 79/279/EEC, co-ordinating the conditions for the admission of securities to official stock exchange listing, and Directive 80/390/EEC co-ordinating the requirements for the drawing up, scrutiny, and distribution of the listing particulars to be published for the admission of securities to official stock exchange listing) only extended the implementation period for national legislation.

Rules Relating to Listing Particulars

In General

The legal basis for listing particulars is Directive 80/390/EEC.[23] The provision of information is required for the protection of the interests of actual and potential investors. Such information must be sufficient and as objective as possible concerning the financial circumstances of the issuer and particulars of the securities.

Differences in the safeguards between member states, both as regards the contents and the layout of the listing particulars and the handling of such information, made it difficult for undertakings to obtain admission of securities to official listing on stock exchanges of several member states and hindered acquisition by investors residing in other member states. The financing of the undertakings and investment throughout the EU was impaired.

As a system of surveillance did not exist in all member states for securities offerings, the first co-ordination efforts were made concerning the admission of securities to official stock exchange listing. By co-ordinating rules and regulations, Directive 80/390/EEC aims at achieving an adequate degree of equivalence in the safeguards to ensure provision of information is as sufficient and as objective as possible.

Applicability of Directive 80/390/EEC

In General

Directive 80/390/EEC does not apply to units issued by collective investment undertakings, other than the closed-end type and to securities issued by a state or by its regional or local authorities. Publication of an information sheet ('listing particulars') was fixed as conditional for the admission of securities to official listing on a stock exchange situated or operating within the EU.[24]

The listing particulars must contain the information which is necessary to enable investors and their investment advisers to make an informed assessment of the assets and liabilities, financial position, profit and loss, and prospects of the issuer and of the rights attaching to such securities.[25] The Annex to Directive 80/390/EEC contains Schedules A, B, and C, relating to minimum standards of information.

Schedule A

Schedule A relates to shares. Chapter 1 requires information concerning the persons responsible for the listing particulars and the auditing of accounts and the declaration by those persons that, to the best of their knowledge, the information given in that part of the listing particulars for which they are responsible is in accordance with the facts and contains no omissions likely to affect the declaration of the listing particulars, and of the auditors who have audited the company's annual accounts for the preceding three financial years.

Chapter 2 requires information concerning admission to official listing and information concerning the shares for the admission of which the application is made. Chapter 3 requires general information about the issuer and its capital.

Chapter 4 requires information concerning the issuer's activities. Chapter 5 requires information concerning the issuer's assets and liabilities, financial position, and profit and loss. Chapter 6 requires information concerning administration, management, and supervision. Chapter 7 requires information concerning the recent development and prospects of the issuer.

Schedule B

Schedule B lays out listing particulars for debt securities. Chapter 1 requires information concerning those responsible for listing particulars and the auditing of accounts. Chapter 2 requires information concerning loans and the admission of debt securities to official listing.

24 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 3.
25 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 4.

Schedule C

Schedule C concerns listing particulars for certificates representing shares and its chapter 1 requires general information about the issuer; chapter 2 requires information on the certificates.[26] Partial or complete exemption from the obligation to publish listing particulars as a prerequisite for the admission to official listing may be granted in the following cases:

- For securities having been the subject of a public issue or having been issued in connection with a take-over offer or in connection with a merger involving the acquisition of another company or the formation of a new company, the division of a company, the transfer of all or part of an undertaking's assets and liabilities, or as consideration for the transfer of assets other than cash, provided that within 12 months before the admission to official listing, a document, regarded by the competent authorities as containing information equivalent to that of the listing particulars provided for by Directive 80/390/EEC, has been published in the same member state;[27]
- Shares (a) allotted free of charge to holders of shares already listed on the same stock exchange, (b) resulting from the conversion of convertible debt securities or created after an exchange for exchangeable debt securities, if shares of the same company are already listed on the same stock exchange, (c) resulting from the exercise of the rights conferred by warrants, if shares of such a company are already listed on the same stock exchange, or (d) issued in substitution for shares already listed on the same stock exchange if no increase in the company's issued share capital follows from such transaction;
- Shares amounting to less than 10 per cent of the number or of the value of shares of the same class already listed on the same stock exchange;
- Debt securities issued by companies and other legal persons which are nationals of this member state and which benefit from state monopolies and are governed by a special law or whose borrowings are unconditionally and irrevocably guaranteed by a member state or one of such member state's federated states;
- Certain debt securities issued by legal persons, other than companies, which are nationals of a member state and whose activities consist solely in raising funds under state control through the issue of debt securities and financing production by means of the resources which they have raised and resources provided by a member state, and the debt securities of which are considered as debt securities issued or guaranteed by the state;
- Shares allotted to employees, if shares of the same class have already been admitted to official listing on the same stock exchange;
- Securities already admitted to official listing on another stock exchange in the same member state;

26 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 6.

27 In such a case, particulars of any material changes which have occurred meanwhile must be made available to the public as well. The document must be made available to the public at the registered office of the issuer and at the offices of the financial organisations retained to act as paying agents.

- Shares issued in consideration for the partial or total renunciation by the management of a limited partnership with a share capital of its statutory rights over the profits, if shares of the same class have already been admitted to official listing on the same stock exchange; and
- Supplementary certificates representing shares, provided no increase in the company's issued capital is involved and such certificates are already listed on the same exchange.[28]

Omission from the listing particulars of certain information provided for by the Directive may be granted by the competent authorities if such information is of minor importance only and will not influence assessment of the assets and liabilities, financial position, profit and loss, and prospects of the issuer; or disclosure of such information would be contrary to the public interest or seriously detrimental to the issuer, provided that, in the latter case, such omission would not be likely to mislead the public with regard to facts and circumstances, knowledge of which is essential for the assessment of the securities in question.[29]

For securities offered on a pre-emptive basis to shareholders of the issuer whose shares are already listed on the same stock exchange, the competent authorities may limit the information to be provided.[30] Such listing particulars[31] must be accompanied by the annual accounts for the latest financial year.[32] If the issuer prepares both own and consolidated annual accounts, both sets of accounts must be enclosed. The authorities may grant an exemption if no material additional information is concerned. Limited information may be prescribed by the competent authorities for 'pure' debt securities.[33] The information to be provided also may be limited for debt securities normally bought and traded in by a limited number of sophisticated investors (investors particularly knowledgeable in investment matters).[34]

Regarding securities issued by financial institutions (which term for purposes of the Directive must be determined by the member states), the listing particulars must contain at least the information specified in chapters 1, 2, 3, 5, and 6 of Schedules A and B, respectively and, in addition, information adapted of the particular nature of the issuer and at least equivalent to that specified in chapters 4 and 7 of Schedules A and B, respectively.[35] Such rules may be extended[36] to:

- Collective investment undertakings not falling under the exemption of Directive 80/390/EEC, article 1, paragraph 2;

28 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 6.
29 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 7.
30 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 8, paras 1 and 2.
31 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 20.
32 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 8, para3.
33 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 9, para 1.
34 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 10.
35 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 11.
36 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 11, para 3.

- Finance companies engaging exclusively in the raising of capital to make it available to their parent company or affiliates; and
- Licences or patents portfolio holding companies.

With regard to debt securities issued in a continuous or repeated manner by credit institutions which regularly publish their annual accounts and which, within the EU, are set up or governed by a special law or pursuant to such a law or are subject to public supervision designed to protect savings, the listing particulars may continue only limited information, particularly information concerning any events of importance having occurred since the end of the financial year in respect of which the last annual accounts were published.[37]

In case debt securities are guaranteed by a legal person, listing particulars must contain specific information regarding the issuers and the guarantor.[38] If convertible debt securities, exchangeable debt securities, or debt securities with warrants are concerned, the listing particulars must include information regarding to the shares and the conditions of and procedures for conversion, exchange or subscription and details of the situations in which they may be amended.[39]

The document describing the terms and conditions of a merger involving the acquisition of another company or the formation of a new company, the division of a company, the transfer of all or part of an undertaking's assets and liabilities, a take-over offer, or as consideration for the transfer of assets other than cash must be made available for inspection.[40] When the application for admission to official listing relates to certificates representing shares, the listing particulars must contain the information, as regards the shares represented, provided for in Schedule A.

The authorities may relieve the issuer of the certificates representing shares to publish details of its own financial position when the issuer is a credit institution which is a national of a member state and is set up or governed by a special law or pursuant to such law or is subject to public supervision designed to protect sources or is an at least 95 per cent-owned subsidiary of such credit institution, the commitments of which towards the holders of certificates are unconditionally guaranteed by that credit institution and are subject to the same public supervision.[41]

In regard to debt securities where repayment of the loan and the payment of interest is unconditionally and irrevocably guaranteed by a state or one of a state's federated states, the information to be provided may be limited. This also applies to specific companies.[42] Listing particulars must be approved by the competent authorities before they are published. One or more competent authorities are appointed by the member state and notified to the Commission. Liability of such competent authorities is governed solely by national law.[43]

42 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 17.
43 European Community Directive 80/390/EEC, art 18.

Listing particulars may be published either by insertion in newspapers or in the form of a brochure to be made available, free of charge, at the concerned stock exchange, at the registered office of the issuer and at the offices of the paying agents. In addition, the listing particulars or a notice about publication of the listing particulars must be inserted in a publication designated by the member state in which the admission to official listing is sought.[44]

National legislation must provide for a reasonable period for the publication of the listing particulars before the date on which official listing becomes effective. Where the admission is preceded by trading of the pre-emptive subscription rights giving rise to dealings recorded in the official list, the listing particulars must be published within a reasonable period before such trading starts, such period to be determined by the competent authorities.[45]

Under specific circumstances, the authorities may postpone publication of the listing particulars until after the date on which the official listing becomes effective if securities of a class already listed on the same stock exchange issued in consideration of transfers of assets other than cash are concerned or after the date of the opening of trading in pre-emptive subscription rights.

Every significant new factor capable of affecting assessment of the securities which arises between the time when the listing particulars are adopted and the time when stock exchange dealings begin must be covered by a supplement to the listing particulars, scrutinised in the same way as the latter and published in accordance with procedures to be laid down by the competent authorities.[46]

Applications for admission at various stock exchanges will be co-ordinated to the maximum extent possible if an application for admission to official listing is made within six months from previous listing in another member state and if the issuer may be exempted from the preparation of new listing particulars. However, there may be a need for updating or translation or the issue of supplements in accordance with the individual requirements of the member state concerned.[47]

Once approved in accordance with article 24 of Directive 80/390/EEC, listing particulars must be recognised by the other member states. It was realised that co-operation of the competent authorities did not result in a full mutual recognition of listing particulars. If, within a short interval, applications for admission to official listing have been filed in a number of countries, the member state in which the issuer's registered office is situated should take the lead. The listing particulars must be drawn up and approved under this member state's legislation, and the authorities of other member states may require only specific information relating to the income tax system, the financial organisations retained to act as paying agents in that country, the way in which notices to investors are published, and further information specific to that market.

Rules Relating to Prospectus When Transferable Securities Are Offered

In General

In respect of the prospectus to be published when transferable securities are offered, the legal basis is the Council Directive of 17 April 1989, co-ordinating the requirements for the drawing-up, scrutiny, and distribution of the prospectus to be published and transferable securities offered to the public.[48]

To provide the information the investor needs to make an informed assessment of securities offered, only securities admitted to official stock exchange listing were governed by Directive 80/390/EEC. The idea of Directive 89/298/EEC is to require reasonable information but not to burden small and medium-sized issuers unduly. The Directive also is driven by the idea to establish a comparable basis for mutual recognition as laid down in Directive 80/390/EEC for securities to be admitted for official listing.

Applicability of Directive 89/298/EEC

Directive 89/298/EEC includes transferable securities issued by companies or firms governed by the laws of third countries. Prospectuses from third countries will be recognised on a reciprocal basis. The Directive is aimed at transferable securities offered to the public for the first time in an EU member state, but excluding securities listed on a stock exchange situated or operating in that member state.

The Directive does not cover the offer of securities to persons in the context of their trades, professions, or occupations or to a restricted circle of persons or for a selling price as a whole of not more than €40,000 or where the consideration is at least €40,000 per investor.[49] The Directive does not apply to:

- Transferable securities offered in individual denominations of at least €40,000;
- Units issued by collective investment undertakings other than of the closed-end type;
- Transferable securities issued by a state or a regional or local authority or by a public international body of which one or more member states are members;
- Transferable securities offered in connection with a take-over bid or merger;
- Shares allotted free of charge to holders of shares as well as shares or transferable securities equivalent to shares offered in exchange for shares in the same company if no increase in the company's issued share capital follows from such transaction;
- Transferable securities offered for the benefit of present or former employees;
- Transferable securities resulting from conversion or to shares offered in exchange for exchangeable debt securities if the public offer prospectus or listing particulars relating to those convertible or exchangeable securities were published in the same member state;

49 European Community Directive 89/298/EEC, art 2, para 1.

- Transferable securities issued, with a view to their obtaining the means necessary to achieve their disinterested objectives, by recognised non-profit associations;
- Shares or transferable securities equivalent to shares, ownership of which entitles the holder to avail himself of the services rendered by bodies, such as building societies, crédits populaires, genossenschaftsbanken, or industrial and provident societies, or to become a member of such a body; and
- Euro-securities which are not the subject of a generalised campaign of advertising or canvassing.

Any offer of transferable securities to the public falling under the Directive is subject to the publication of a prospectus by the person making the offer.[50] A partial or complete exemption may be granted for debt securities or other equivalent transferable securities issued in a continuous or repeated manner by credit institutions or other equivalent financial institutions which regularly publish their annual accounts and which are governed by a special legal status or are subject to public supervision intended to protect savings.[51]

If a full prospectus has been published, within 12 months, the same issuer in the same member state relating to different transferable securities may indicate only changes likely to influence the value of the securities. However, such prospectus may be made available only accompanied by the full prospectus or by a reference thereto.[52]

Directive 89/298/EEC contains provisions relating to the scrutiny and distribution of the prospectus for transferable securities for which admission to official stock exchange listing is sought. In general, Directive 89/298/EEC refers to Directive 80/390/EEC regarding public offers of securities for which, at the same time, admission to official listing is applied for.[53]

A similar rule applies in cases where a public offer is made in one member state and admission to official listing is sought in another member state, provided the member state where the public offer is made in general provides for prior scrutiny of public offer prospectuses.[54]

The prospectus must be published or made available to the public not later than the time when an offer is made to the public.[55] Directive 89/298/EEC also contains provisions for the prospectus for securities for which admission to official listing is not sought. Such prospectus must contain information to enable the investors to make an informed assessment of the assets and liabilities, financial position, profit and loss and prospects of the issuer, and of the rights attaching to such securities.[56] The prospectus must contain, in a form easily analysable and comprehensible, at least the following information relating to:

- Those responsible for the prospectus;
- The offer to the public and the transferable securities being offered;

- The issuer;
- The issuer's principal activities;
- The issuer's assets and liabilities, financial position, and profit and loss;
- The issuer's administration, management, and supervision; and
- Recent developments in its business and prospects, to the extent that such information would have a significant impact on any assessment that might be made of the issuer.[57]

For an offer relating to debt securities guaranteed by one or more legal persons, information also must be given regarding the guarantor(s).

In the case of convertible debt securities, exchangeable debt securities, or debt securities with warrants, information must also be given with regard to the nature of the shares or debt securities to which they confer entitlement and the conditions of and procedures for conversion, exchange, or subscription, and to an issuer of the shares if he is not the same as the issuer of the debt securities.

Where a class of shares has been admitted to dealing on a stock exchange market, the member states or bodies designated by them may allow a partial or complete exemption from the obligation to publish a prospectus if the number or estimated market value or the nominal value or, in the absence of a nominal value, the accounting par value of the shares offered amounts to less than 10 per cent of the number or of the corresponding value of shares of the same class already admitted to dealing, provided that investors already possess up-to-date information about the issuer equivalent to information otherwise required as a result of stock exchange disclosure requirements.[58]

Member states may provide that the person making a public offer shall have the possibility of drawing up a prospectus the contents of which shall, subject to adaptations appropriate to the circumstances of a public offer, be determined in accordance with Directive 80/390/EEC. Such a prospectus is subject to prior scrutiny by the bodies designated by the member states even in the absence of a request for admission to official stock exchange listing.[59]

The member states or the bodies designated by them may authorise the omission of certain information prescribed, if that information is of minor importance only and is not likely to influence assessment of the issuer's assets and liabilities, financial position, profit and loss, and prospects or if disclosure of that information would be contrary to the public interest or seriously detrimental to the issuer, provided that, in the latter case, omission would not be likely to mislead the public with regard to facts and circumstances essential for assessment of the transferable securities.

If the initiator of an offer is neither the issuer nor a third party acting on the issuer's behalf, omission of certain information which would not normally be in the initiator's possession may be authorised.[60] Partial or complete exemption from the obligation to publish a prospectus may be provided for if the relevant information is available to investors not later than the time when the prospectus must be or should have been published or made available to the public, in the form of documents giving at least equivalent information.

Before its publication the prospectus must be communicated to the authority in each member state in which the transferable securities are offered to the public for the first time.[61]

The prospectus must be published or made available to the public in the member state in which an offer to the public is made in accordance with the procedures laid down by that member state not later than the time when an offer is made to the public.[62] If any significant new factor arises or any significant inaccuracy in a prospectus capable of affecting assessment of the transferable securities is noted before a definitive closure of a public offer, such circumstances must be mentioned and rectified in a supplement to the prospectus to be published in the same form as the original prospectus.[63]

In cases of public offers in two or more member states simultaneously or within a short interval, the authority in the member state where the issuer has its registered office will be competent if the public offer or any application for admission to official listing is made in that member state.[64] If this member state does not provide for the prior scrutiny of public offer prospectuses and if only the public offer or an application for admission to listing is made in that member state, the party making the public offer must choose the supervisory authority from those in the member states in which the public offer is made and which provides in general for the prior scrutiny of public offer prospectuses.[65]

A prospectus, approved in accordance with the provisions mentioned above, subject to translation if required, must be recognised as complying or be deemed to comply with the laws of the other member states in which the same transferable securities are offered to the public simultaneously or within a short interval of one another, without being subject to any form of approval there and without those states being able to require that additional information be included in the prospectus, except that those member states may require that the prospectus includes information specific to the market of the country in which the public offer is made concerning in particular the income tax system, the financial organisations retained to act as paying agents for the issuer in that country, and the way in which notices to investors are published.[66]

A prospectus approved in accordance with article 24a of Directive 80/390/EEC must be recognised even if partial exemption or partial derogation has been granted, provided such exemption or derogation is of a type recognised in the rules of the other member state and the circumstances that justify such exemption or derogation exist in the other member state.[67]

Insider Dealing

In respect of insider dealing, the legal basis is Council Directive 89/592/EEC of 13 November 1989, co-ordinating regulations on insider dealing. It was acknowledged that the secondary market in transferable securities plays an important role in the financing of business and that the smooth operation of that market depends to a large extent on the confidence it inspires in investors. Such confidence is supported by the assurance that investors are treated equally and will be protected against the improper use of inside information.[68]

The Directive was meant to co-ordinate rules which differed considerably in member states. 'Inside information' is defined as information which has not been made public of a precise nature relating to one or several issuers of transferable securities or to one or several transferable securities which, if it were made public, would be likely to have a significant effect on the price of the transferable security or securities in question.[69]

The Directive demands that member states prohibit any person who, by virtue of his membership in the administrative, management, or supervisory bodies of the issuer, by virtue of his holding in the capital of the issuer, or because he has access to such information by virtue of the exercise of his employment, profession, or duties, possesses inside information from taking advantage of that information with full knowledge of the facts by acquiring or disposing of for his own account or for the account of a third party transferable securities to which that information relates.[70] The possessor of inside information is prohibited from:

- Disclosing that inside information to any third party unless such disclosure is made in the normal course of the exercise of his employment, profession, or duties; or
- Recommending or procuring a third party, on the basis of that inside information, to acquire or dispose of transferable securities admitted to trading on its securities markets, which are regulated and supervised by authorities recognised by public bodies, operate regularly, and are accessible, directly or indirectly, to the public.[71]

The prohibition is extended to persons who, with full knowledge of the facts, possess inside information, the direct or indirect source of which could not be other than a person as defined above.[72]
